THE LIBRARIES

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

OF THIS BOOK
THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY COPIES
HAVE BEEN PRINTED ON HOLLAND HAND-MADE PAPER
AND FORTY-TWO ON JAPANESE VELLUM

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

VOLUME FIVE

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

FRONTISPIECE I.

NEW YORK FROM BROOKLYN HEIGHTS, DRAWN BY ARCH

HIBALD ROBERTSON ON AUG. 6, 1778. SEE PP. 994 AND 1072.

VERRAZZANO · HVDSON ·

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

·1498 ✵ 1909·

·COMPILED·FROM·ORIGINAL·SOVRCES·
·AND·ILLVSTRATED·BY·PHOTO-INTAGLIO·
·REPRODVCTIONS·OF·IMPORTANT·
·MAPS·PLANS·VIEWS·AND·DOCVMENTS· ·IN·PVBLIC·AND·PRIVATE·COLLECTIONS·

BY

·I·N·PHELPS·STOKES·

NEW YORK
·ROBERT·H·DODD·
MDCCCCXXVI

·MINVIT· ·NICOLLS·

Reference
R978 N48
St63
v.5

Ref
27-13663 a (cont)
5

Copyright, 1926
By I. N. Phelps Stokes

Sow. 10. 932. F.L.S.

TO

WALTER GILLISS MASTER PRINTER

UNDER WHOSE LOVING CARE

THE FIRST FOUR VOLUMES OF THIS WORK WERE PRINTED

AND TO WHOSE GOOD TASTE AND HIGH IDEALS

THE ART OF FINE BOOK-MAKING IN NEW YORK OWES SO MUCH

THIS VOLUME IS GRATEFULLY

INSCRIBED

FRONTISPIECE II.

NEW YORK FROM MT. PITT, DRAWN BY ARCHIBALD ROB

BERTSON ON APRIL 11, 1779. SEE PP. 994 AND 1084.

INTRODUCTION

THE present volume covers the period extending from the public reading to the Patriot troops in New York of the Declaration of Independence, on July 9th, 1776, to the celebration, in September-October, 1909, of the 300th anniversary of the arrival of Henry Hudson, and completes the Chronology, and the ICONOGRAPHY, with the exception of the Index volume, which will also contain the Bibliography and the Addenda, the latter including reproductions of the more important views, etc., which have come to light since the publication of the earlier volumes, and the completed Landmark Map, showing the original grants above Wall Street and their later sub-division. It is expected that this final volume will be issued early in the Autumn of 1927.

The author is keenly conscious of the many short-comings of his work, of which perhaps the most regrettable is its voluminousness. He realises, alas too late, that, without very serious loss, the material which now fills six almost unwieldy volumes might have been condensed into four volumes of only moderate thickness. The wide extent of the field covered, and his own inexperience, especially in the early stages of the work, explain, although they do not excuse, this prolixity. A modicum of consolation, to both author and reader, is to be found in the fact that this very prolixity may sometimes save the student the labour of consulting a quoted authority, or supply some helpful side-light or some hint which would have been lacking if further condensation or the more drastic elimination of seemingly unimportant details had been insisted upon.

Although many regrettable errors in the earlier volumes have been corrected, and some serious omissions supplied, the author realises that errors still exist, and fears that it will not prove possible to discover and to correct all of them in the final volume. For these, and for all other short-comings, he asks the indulgence of the reader. Doubtless many of the remaining errors could have been corrected by further and more searching proof-reading, but this would have entailed still further delay in the completion of a work that has already been extended to a point which must sorely have taxed the patience of the subscribers.

One further specific apology is due the reader:—The capitalization throughout the Chronology is ragged and often illogical. It is the result of an attempted compromise between conflicting theories, and, like most compromises, has proved unsatisfactory to all concerned.

Before accepting as final statements made in the Chronology, the reader should consult the Addenda, under corresponding dates, for possible corrections.

Perhaps the most important contribution to the present volume is the extensive series of extracts from the William Smith Papers acquired by the New York Public Library in 1915, and comprehensively considered for the first time in connection with this work. These papers contain much new information, and throw many interesting side lights on events in New York, especially during the Revolutionary Period.

The long hoped-for publication, in 1924, of the Van Rappard Documents, under the able editorship of Mr. van Laer, although an event of considerable importance, historically, has not added as much to our knowledge of the early years, just before and just after the settlement, as the titles of those documents gave reason to expect. Nevertheless, their careful examination, in connection with the sequence of events recorded in the Chronology during the years immediately preceding and following 1626, and in that year itself, should convince any open-minded student that houses had been built and farms established on Manhattan Island before the Summer of 1626. Furthermore, the "Instructions for Willem Verhulst" (Document C) show conclusively that a fort was in existence on Noten (Governor's) Island in 1624.[1]

A note added at the end of the "Provisional Regulations" (Document A), which note is lacking in the copy of the "Regulations" in the Rijksarchief, discovered by Dr. Wieder in 1912, clearly establishes the fact that these articles, which were adopted by the Assembly of the Nineteen on March 28, 1624, were intended for the expedition sailing a few days later on the "Nieu Nederlandt."[2] This note reads as follows:—"The foregoing articles having been read to the Colonists going over in the ship 'Nieu Nederlandt,' they took the oath of allegiance this 30th day of March, anno 1624. Underneath was written: Before Dr. Claes Petersz and Gharrard Schaep. Was signed: D. Mostaert." These "Provisional Regulations" also establish the fact that the colonists sailing on the "Nieu Nederlandt" were "bound to remain at the place of their destination with their families for the space of six consecutive years"—or until May, 1630. This fact, taken in connection with Kiliaen van Rensselaer's letter presented to the directors of the West India Company on April 27, 1634, in which he speaks of the six farms on Manhattan Island as having been leased (re-leased) for the term of six years, beginning the first day of May, 1630, is in itself almost conclusive proof that these farms were originally assigned in 1624, and the inference seems clear that work upon them began shortly thereafter. Indeed, we know from Wassenaer (see Chronology under 1624) that "as soon as our people arrived there [New Netherland] they proceeded to clear and plant. Before this vessel [the "Nieu Nederlandt"] had left, the Winter harvest was far advanced."

[1] This fort, as will be shown later, presumably had been established in 1623, by the leaders of the "Mackerel" expedition, although references are found in the early records to a fort on the North River, "Even before the year 1614."

[2] Mr. van Laer is evidently right in thus interpreting the Dutch text, which at first sight seems to read "Nieu Verdriet," which reading, adopted by Dr. Wieder in his catalogue description of the Van Rappard Documents, led the author into confusing complications in treating this period in Vol. IV.

It will be recalled that de Rasière, in his letter to Samuel Blommaert, probably written in the Autumn of 1628, refers to these farms as having at that time been ploughed "at the most eight times"—if we accept Jameson's translation in the Narratives of New Netherland. As two crops were sown each year, this, as pointed out in Vol. IV, would carry the first ploughing back to the Autumn of 1624, a few months after the arrival of the "Nieu Nederlandt." However, it is only fair to state that this translation has been questioned. The original text reads: "dat t' meeste 8 mal geploucht sal sijn." If "t' meeste" is taken to be an abbreviation of ten meeste, the translation "at the most," given in the Narratives, is correct. Such a contraction, however, as Mr. van Laer points out, is very unusual. If het meeste is meant, the meaning would be that most of the 60 morgens had been ploughed eight times, not necessarily twice a year for four years, but perhaps more frequently over a shorter period—to improve the condition of the soil.

In addition to these specific arguments, the whole tenor of Documents A, C, and D indicates that these documents constitute the first official regulations and instructions issued under the charter of the West India Company to colonists going to the Hudson River, and de Rasière's letter of September 23, 1626, (Document F), while tantalizingly deficient in important details, unquestionably depicts a settlement which had been established more than four months.

Although little can be added to the theories regarding the settlement advanced in Vol. IV, the author feels more strongly than ever that serious consideration must be given to the second, more detailed, and evidently carefully revised, statement of Catelina Trico, which statement he still believes can be reconciled more easily with the recorded facts than any theory yet advanced on the subject by historians. The fact that in this second statement the date of the expedition is given as 1623, whereas in the first 1623 or 1624 is given, is not really significant; evidently, the salient fact in Catelina Trico's recollection was that the expedition started during the Winter season of 1623-24. It would not be strange if, in the long interval, she had forgotten whether it sailed before or after January first.

In the light of the new information supplied by the Van Rappard Documents, the outstanding facts and events leading up to the settlement, so far as we now know them, may be restated briefly as follows:—

1609. Hudson explores the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island.

1614. The New Netherland Company is formed, granting to certain merchants of Amsterdam and Hoorn an exclusive charter to make four trading voyages during a period of three years, beginning January 1, 1615, to the region in this document for the first time designated as New Netherland.

1618, January 1. The charter of the New Netherland Company expires. The trading expeditions, however, continued while negotiations were in progress to establish a general West India Company, on the basis of plans which had been advocated by Willem Usselinx since 1592.

1621, June 3. The West India Company charter is granted, for a period of twenty-four years, giving the subscribers a monopoly of trade between Dutch ports and the coasts of North and South America, as well as the West coast of Africa. The main purpose of the Company, however, was to weaken the power of Spain, by capturing her ships and attacking her colonies.

1621, June 9. The States General forbids all private trading within the limits covered by the Company's charter, except to those who shall send out ships before the first of July, to return with their cargoes within one year from that date. In September, however, special permits were issued to a number of traders, on the same condition—that they should return before the 1st of July, 1622. Although this condition was not strictly complied with, private traders gradually withdrew their ships from the territory of the Company.

1623, June 21. The organization of the West India Company is completed; by the Autumn of this year the capital stock amounted to over seven million guilders, of which nearly one half had been furnished by the Amsterdam Chamber.

Toward the end of June, "The Directors of the West India Company, finding that the inhabitants of these lands [the Netherlands], by order of the Lords States, have left the coasts of the West Indies [New Netherland], in order to maintain the continuity of trade, send three ships out of the country, the 'Oranje Boom,' the 'Grypende Arent,' and the 'Liefde,' in the hope of securing the first advantages for the Company, [the organization of] which is not yet consummated." This doubtless means that the subscriptions had not yet been completed.

In marginal notes, Wassenaer states that these were, respectively, the first, second, and third, ships sent out by the West India Company. From the context it seems clear that this expedition did not visit New Netherland.

Other ships followed, and we know from Wassenaer that by November, 1623, fifteen in all had been sent out, of which, so far as we can tell, only one visited New Netherland—the "Mackerel," a yacht of 60 tons.

1623, July 16. The "Mackerel," bound for New Netherland, sails from the Texel, in company with the "Pigeon," which carries Jesse de Forest and his band of Walloons, destined for the Amazon. On September 14 they parted company, near the Madeira Islands. The "Mackerel," setting her course toward New Netherland, reached there on December 12, and was still in the Hudson River when the "Nieu Nederlandt" arrived, in May, 1624. She returned shortly thereafter, reaching Holland probably in August.

Although we have no definite information that colonists were sent on the "Mackerel," from numerous references in the Van Rappard Documents, and elsewhere in the early Dutch records, it seems probable that this yacht was a sort of official scout, and that, in addition to traders, she brought over a few colonists having a semi-official status, perhaps as official observers or prospectors for the West India Company, which would account for a remark in Kiliaen van Rensselaer's "memorial," presented, on Nov. 25, 1634, to the directors of the West India Company, in which he makes the explicit statement that "Sundry Colonists, as early as 1623, had been conveyed thither [to New Netherland] with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to secure all trade" (Van Rensselaer Bowier MSS., page 235), a statement which, as has been recorded in Vol. IV, appears in various forms during the second quarter of the 17th Century.

It seems also a likely supposition that the "Mackerel" on this voyage established the fort at the mouth of the South (Delaware) River, as well as that on Noten (Governor's) Island, both of which, as recorded in Vol. IV, were referred to in numerous documents of the period as having been established in this year.

The "Mackerel" is the only vessel that is known to have visited the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island during the year 1623. The next ship referred to in the surviving Dutch records as having come to these parts was the one on which Krol is said to have sailed, on January 25, 1624. De Laet, in the 1630 edition of his "Nieuwe Wereldt," makes the significant remark that "into New Netherland, and upon both of these rivers [the North and South Rivers] . . . several colonies have been sent by the Directors of the Chartered West India Company from the very commencement of that Company, to wit, from the year 1623, in order to continue possession of those quarters, and to maintain the trade in Peltries."

1623, November 3. Adriaen Jorisz. Thienpont appears before a session of the Assembly of the XIX of the West India Company, and requests "permission to make ready a yacht to trade their merchandise, and bring home their people" from the Rio de Montagne (Hudson River); whereupon it was resolved that a ship be sent "to the Virginias, which shall be equipped by the Chamber of Amsterdam with the necessary cargo to continue the trade, for which purpose they may also take with them 5 or 6 families of the Colonists, in order to make a beginning of settlement there, and on that occasion bring here the goods secured in return for the aforesaid merchandise and people." It seems clear that, as a direct result of this resolution, the "Nieu Nederlandt" expedition was despatched, shortly after March 30, 1624, and in all probability Thienpont accompanied it.

1624, January 25. A note in the "Copie-Boek" of the Church Consistory of Amsterdam informs us that on this date Bastiaen Jansz. Krol (a "comforter of the sick" in the employ of the West India Company) "sailed for the West Indies," from which statement it has been assumed that he went to New Netherland; it is possible, however, that he sailed with the fleet of Admiral Willekens, and visited Manhattan Island on his return voyage. The name of the ship is not given, and no further reference to her has been found, although de Laet states that in 1624 two ships were sent to New Netherland.

Under February of this year, Wassenaer records: "a ship is being fitted out under a commission from the West India Company, and freighted with families to plant a colony among these people." The context shows that New Netherland is meant, and this is evidently a reference to the "Nieu Nederlandt" expedition.

1624, March 30, or shortly thereafter. The "Nieu Nederlandt" expedition sails for New Netherland. We are told by Wassenaer that Cornelis Jacobsz. May of Hoorn was the skipper, and that the "Nieu Nederlandt" carried "a Company of 30 families, mostly Walloons, to plant a Colony there."

We know from Van Rappard Document A that this vessel sailed under instructions known as the "Provisional Regulations for Colonists," which had been adopted by the Assembly of the Nineteen of the West India Company, on March 28.

Although no mention is made of any other ship taking part in this expedition, it seems quite possible that there was a second ship, perhaps the "Eendracht," or "Unity," and that Thienpont was its commander, in which case Catelina Trico's second statement will be seen to coincide very closely with the known facts, and with those which are assumed in this summary, it is believed with reasonable justification. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that the "Nieu Nederlandt," although a ship of 130 lasts (260 tons), could hardly have accommodated 30 families, in addition to their belongings and the crew.

The "Nieu Nederlandt" expedition probably reached the mouth of the Hudson about the middle of May, and we know that she found there the yacht "Mackerel." It seems plausible that, as stated by Catelina Trico, 8 men were left "to take possession" of Manhattan Island, or perhaps they joined the garrison on Noten (Governor's) Island, which, as we have already seen, had been established by 1623.

1624, September 10 and 23. The MS. minutes of the Assembly of the XIX (see Chronology) refer to "the extension of the colon*ies* already established there [New Netherland]," and "the strengthening of the settlement*s* already commenced." The significance of the plural form is apparent.

1624, October. Some time in this month—probably before the 28th—the "Nieu Nederlandt" reached Holland, on her return from the Hudson River.

1625, January 28. A letter bearing this date (erroneously entered under 1624 in the Chronology, Vol. IV), written by the Privy Council to the mayor of Plymouth, authorises the arrest of a Dutch ship "ryding in the haven at Plymouth called the 'Orange Tree' [the "Oranje Boom"] of Amsterdam, being of the burthen of one hundred and fifty tunes, or thereabouts, and bound to a place in America which is comprehended in a grant made by his Ma^{tie} upon just consideration to divers of his subjects." The captain of the ship must exhibit his commission and the "plat which he hath," and in the meantime a "stay of the ship" is commanded.

Wassenaer, commenting on the storms which raged in Northern Europe during January of this year, states: "the ship with the families lay at Plymouth. Getting a favourable wind, it also wished to go to sea, but was visited by the plague in such a way that already eleven persons had died and twenty more were still sick belonging to the families of the Walloons who were to be transported thither to the colony [New Netherland]. The assistant super-cargo had also been sick, but was now getting better."

Buchelius, in his notes on the East and West India Companies, under date of February, says: "It is said that some farmers were [are] to be sent to Virginiam to cultivate the land in some region discovered by our countrymen."

These references are all, doubtless, to the ship on which Krol made his second voyage, which probably did not reach Manhattan Island before April.

It seems clear that Verhulst must have sailed on the "Oranje Boom," and that the "Instructions" issued to him should therefore be dated shortly before January 28, 1625. These "Instructions" provided that Verhulst should "duly distribute over the places that are already occupied the families now going over." It is in this document also that the reference to the fort on Noten Island is found.

1625, end of April. At this time, an "extraordinary shipment" was sent to New Netherland, to strengthen the "colony" there. This was the well-known expedition for which Hulft undertook the responsibility. It sailed on the ships "Macreel," "Paert," "Koe," and "Schaep," and was destined, solely, for the North River, and especially for the immediate neighbourhood of Manhattan Island. This expedition, we now know, was commanded by Gerrit Fongersz., and carried the "Further Instructions" for Wm. Verhulst and the Council in New Netherland, dated April 22, which "Instructions" contained a recommendation that, if the West side of the Hudson, near the mouth, were not found suitable for a settlement, the "hook of the Manattes, north of Noten Island," should next be considered.

We know further from Wassenaer that the cattle were "on their arrival [probably about the end of June, only a couple of months after the arrival of Verhulst on the "Oranje Boom"] first landed on Nut [Noten] Island, three miles up the river, where they remained a day or two. There being no means of pasturing them there they were shipped in sloops and boats to the Manhates, right opposite the said island. Being put out to pasture there they throve well, but afterward full twenty in all died. The opinion is, that they had eaten something bad from uncultivated soil. But they went in the middle of September to meadow grass as good and as long as could be desired."

Referring in another place to the same event, Wassenaer states: "The cattle carried thither were removed upwards to a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture." What could be more natural than to suppose that this refers to the Company's farms, some parts of which, by this time, must have been ready to receive them, for between the arrival of Verhulst on the "Oranje Boom," probably in April or May, and the middle of September, when the cattle were "removed upwards," the "common farmers" who accompanied him were doubtless engaged in clearing the farms assigned to the "head-farmers,"[1] and the first crop was probably sown before the end of the month.

The "head-farmers" were now evidently in full possession of their farms, the leases for which had probably been made out either before they left Holland or immediately after their arrival in April, and dated back to the preceding first of May (1624), May 1 being, then as now, the usual date for the beginning of such leases.

Between the Summer of 1625 and the Spring of 1626, when Minuit returned from Holland and took command of the settlement, Cryn Fredericksz., who probably came over on the Hulft expedition, had doubtless made considerable progress in laying out and constructing Fort Amsterdam and the streets of the little settlement. It is plain that his "instructions" (Van Rappard Document E) could only be carried out in part, as the south end of Manhattan Island, the site finally selected for the settlement, was too narrow to permit of the dwellings being placed within the confines of a large fort, and the distance between the southern portion of the Wickquasgeak trail (later Broadway) and the two rivers was insufficient to allow of the farms being laid out near the fort.

1626, May 4. Peter Minuit arrives on the "Sea-Mew" ("Meeuwken"—literally "Little Seamew"). Some time between this date and the sailing of the "Arms of Amsterdam," on September 23, he bought Manhattan Island from the Indians.

The following additional facts complete the outline of a theory which is perhaps as reasonable as any which has been advanced. At all events, the author believes that enough evidence has now been presented to convince even the most sceptical that the Fongersz.-Hulft expedition, which sailed shortly after April 22, 1625, with the five "head-farmers" and the cattle, settled permanently on Manhattan Island; that Verhulst's expedition, which arrived a few months earlier, brought over the "hired-farmers," and that some of the colonists on the "Nieu Nederlandt" probably settled on Manhattan Island, or in its immediate vicinity. Furthermore, we have seen that there is good reason to believe that some "free persons," or settlers, came over on the "Mackerel," and established themselves on Governor's Island.—The arguments are not conclusive, but the author believes that they are convincing.

[1] Van Tienhoven, in his answer to the Representation of Van der Donck, written in 1650, says: "The following is the mode pursued by the West India Company in the first planting of Bouweries . . . The farmer being conveyed with his family overseas to New Netherland, was granted by the Company for the term of 6 years a Bouwerie, which was fairly cleared, and a good part of which was fit for the plow."

The reference in the "Instructions for Willem Verhulst" to the possible selection of "a still more suitable place than Noten Island for the fortification and the dwelling places of the colonists and farmers" seems to show that no farms had been laid out on Manhattan Island, or even locally assigned, up to the time when the "Nieu Nederlandt" left for Holland, bearing news and letters from the infant colony—probably toward the middle of September, 1624, between which date (but after November 21) and January 28, 1625, these "Instructions" were written. Moreover, we have no record of any ship or news arriving from the Hudson River between the return of the "Nieu Nederlandt," before November first, 1624, and the departure of the so-called "Hulft Expedition," with the "Further Instructions," sometime after April 22, 1625.

The argument here advanced in favour of 1624 as the date of settlement requires the assumption either that the assignment of the "six farms" took place in America, after the departure of the "Nieu Nederlandt" and before the arrival of the "Oranje Boom," or that it took place in Holland, some time after the sailing of the "Nieu Nederlandt," and after the "head-farmers" had been selected, possibly early in 1625, but more likely at the end of 1624. In either case, we must suppose that the leases, in order to conform with the usual practice of the time, were dated back to the preceding May 1, shortly after which date the clearing of the farms on Manhattan Island was probably begun, under the direction of May. Although at first sight this assumption may appear farfetched and unlikely, a careful examination of the various pertinent facts and conditions shows that it is at least a reasonable one, and it is the only way in which all of the known facts can be reconciled with the very explicit statements in the records that the farms, from the beginning, were leased for periods of six years, that the first lease period expired, and the new leases were made, in May, 1630, and that therefore, obviously, the original leases were dated May 1, 1624.

The clause in the "Provisional Regulations" providing that the commander and his council should allot to the colonists the "lands to be cultivated by them" evidently does not refer to the large farms or bouweries to be leased to the "head-farmers," but to the small garden plots to be assigned to the colonists for their individual use.

We know from Baudartius that when "a ship arrived in August," on her return from New Netherland,[1] the colonists there were daily expecting the arrival of cattle, "by the first ships." Furthermore, it is evident that those on Noten Island must have realised that this island was not large enough to accommodate a permanent settlement of importance, and that there was not sufficient pasturage for any considerable number of cattle. Moreover, as has already been recorded, we know from van Tienhoven and others that the Company undertook the first general clearing of the land leased to the farmers. What could be more natural than that, without awaiting further orders from the West India Company, May and his council should have determined that Manhattan Island, which lay so near at hand, was the most suitable place for an important fortified settlement at the mouth of the Hudson River, and that, without further delay, they should have begun to clear land there, while awaiting the arrival of the "head-farmers" and the cattle. Apparently the work had not been completed when these arrived in the Spring, but was finished in September, when the cattle were "removed upwards." Furthermore, it is not an unreasonable assumption that, if the assignment and leases had not already been made in Holland, they were now made, and dated back to May 1, 1624.

[1] The "Mackerel" returned in August, but the reference is perhaps to the "Nieu Nederlandt," which returned late in October.

Whereas the second expedition, under Verhulst, was destined primarily for the South River, the third seems to have been sent directly to the North River. In connection with this expedition, reference is made for the first time to the "head-farmers," which the context clearly shows were those intended to assume direction, under lease, of the Company's farms. The farmers going over with Verhulst were referred to as "common farmers," or "hired farmers;" evidently they were farm labourers.

The original "Instructions" clearly refer to the "hired-farmers and the cattle to be sent thither in the ship 'Den Orangenboom,' and the following ship [ships ?—evidently a reference to the "Paert," "Koe," "Schaep," and "Macreel"]." As this reference occurs in a paragraph dealing specifically with the South River, it seems clear that at the time when these "Instructions" were prepared it was the intention to establish the principal settlement there, and not on the Hudson River. Furthermore, this reference, taken in connection with the fact that neither Wassenaer nor the "Provisional Regulations" refers specifically to farmers or cattle, seems to indicate that the "Nieu Nederlandt" colonists, although they may, and probably did, include some independent farmers, were for the most part composed of artisans, traders, and industrial workers.

The publication of the Van Rappard Documents has but whetted our appetite for more information, while it has strengthened the belief that, sooner or later, other similar records will be found. As yet no thorough examination has been made of the archives of the smaller provinces which once formed part of the Assembly of the XIX, nor has a systematic search been attempted among the family papers preserved in countless private muniment chests throughout the Netherlands. Until these sources have been exhausted, we should not despair of some day drawing aside the veil which has so long obscured the events of those mysterious years which lie between the completion of the organization of the West India company in 1623 and Minuit's arrival, as governor, in 1626.

Despite this exasperating hiatus, to the reader of the ICONOGRAPHY one fact must stand out unchallenged:—The City of New York is to be congratulated on the fullness of the records which remain of its past. Notwithstanding many vicissitudes, and some irreparable losses, there still remains, in its public archives, and in those at Albany and elsewhere, a very considerable part of the original documents which record its history, almost from the beginning. There is perhaps no other city of equal antiquity and importance, certainly no other such American city, whose archives are so complete.

It would indeed be a source of public congratulation, as well as a peculiar gratification to the author, should his work add to the growing interest in all that pertains to the history of our city, and thereby stimulate the movement, already sponsored by many eminent historians and others, to bring about a scientific arrangement of those records in a single archives building, so designed and built, and so situated, as to render them reasonably safe from fire, theft, damage, and deterioration, and as convenient as possible to serious students.

Now that the ICONOGRAPHY has been virtually completed, the many difficulties and disappointments connected with the work are forgotten, and there remains to the author only satisfaction in looking back over those long years of pleasant and intimate association, in a congenial task, with successive little groups of patient and enthusiastic co-workers and correspondents, who have borne the brunt of the fray, and have made his part little more than that of counsellor and critic. To them, far more than to him, belongs whatever there is of value in the work, and he can never adequately express or repay the debt of gratitude which he owes them.

I. N. PHELPS STOKES

New York,
September, 1926.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

		PAGE
INTRODUCTION		ix
CHAPTER III.	THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD (1763-1776-1783) PART II (1776-1783)	991
CHAPTER IV.	PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION; NEW YORK AS THE STATE AND FEDERAL CAPITAL (1783-1811)	1177
CHAPTER V.	A. THE WAR OF 1812 (1812-1815)	1549
	B. PERIOD OF INVENTION, PROSPERITY, AND PROGRESS (1815-1841)	1579
CHAPTER VI.	PERIOD OF INDUSTRIAL AND EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT (1842-1860)	1771
CHAPTER VII.	A. THE CIVIL WAR (1861-1865)	1893
	B. PERIOD OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT (1865-1876)	1917
CHAPTER VIII.	THE MODERN CITY AND ISLAND (1876-1909) .	1961

LIST OF PLATES

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
FRONTISPIECE I	NEW YORK FROM BROOKLYN HEIGHTS; DRAWN BY ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON ON AUG. 6, 1778. . . OWNER: I. N. P. S.	V	994 1072
FRONTISPIECE II	NEW YORK FROM MT. PITT; DRAWN BY ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON ON APRIL 11, 1779. OWNER: HARRIS D. COLT, ESQ.	IX	994 1084
	THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD
PL. 46A	PLAN OF THE BATTERY AND FORT GEORGE, "AS THEY EXISTED BEFORE THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR;" DRAWN BY COL. JOHN VAN DYK IN 1827. OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1006	ADD.
PL. 47-a	WASHINGTON'S PROCLAMATION OF AUG. 17, 1776, ON THE EXPECTED BOMBARDMENT OF NEW YORK CITY. . . OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1038	1001
PL. 47-b	PROCLAMATION OF THE "KING'S COMMISSIONERS FOR RESTORING PEACE" PROMISING PARDON; DATED NOV. 30, 1776. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1038	1038
PL. 48	KIP'S BAY, SHOWING THE BRITISH TROOPS CROSSING THE RIVER ON SEPT. 15, 1776; DRAWN BY ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON ON AUG. 17, 1778, PROBABLY FROM A SKETCH MADE ON THE EARLIER DATE. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY (SPENCER COLLECTION)	1054	994 1011
PL. 48A-a	RIVINGTON'S REPRINT OF THE KING'S PROCLAMATION OF FEB. 14, 1783, TERMINATING THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1070	1156

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
Pl. 48A-b	REPRODUCTION OF RIVINGTON'S BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING THE SIGNING OF PEACE PROTOCOL AT PARIS ON JAN. 20, 1783; DATED MCH. 25, 1783. OWNER: MADE FROM FACSIMILE IN STATE HOUSE MUSEUM, KINGSTON, N. Y. (ORIGINAL NOT FOUND)	1070	1158
Pl. 49-a	BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING THE ORDER OF EVENTS FOR THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRY OF WASHINGTON AND THE AMERICAN ARMY INTO NEW YORK; DATED NOV. 24, 1783. . . OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1102	1173
	PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION
Pl. 49-b	TITLE-PAGE OF THE FIRST NEW YORK CITY DIRECTORY, 1786. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1102	1208
Pl. 50	WASHINGTON'S REPLY TO THE COMMON COUNCIL'S GIFT OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY; UNDATED. . . . OWNER: CITY OF NEW YORK, DEPOSITED IN N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1118	1201
Pl. 51-a	BROADSIDE PUBLISHED BY THE FIRST ESTABLISHED INSURANCE COMPANY IN NEW YORK; DATED MCH. 11, 1788. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1150	1218
Pl. 51-b	PAGE OF CHRISTOPHER COLLES' ROAD-MAP, 1789, SHOWING ROADS ON MANHATTAN ISLAND. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1150	1234
Pl. 52-a	LETTER FROM ALEXANDER HAMILTON TO MAYOR DUANE ADVISING THAT THE COMMON COUNCIL FORMALLY TENDER TO CONGRESS THE USE OF THE CITY HALL; UNDATED (MCH. 3, 1789). OWNER: J. PIERPONT MORGAN, ESQ.	1166	1235
Pl. 52-b	FIRST PAGE OF THE U. S. SENATE JOURNAL UNDER THE CONSTITUTION; DATED MCH. 4, 1789. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1166	1235
Pl. 53-a	BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING PLANS OF CONGRESS FOR THE INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT WASHINGTON; DATED APR. 29, 1789. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY (EMMET COLLECTION)	1214	1242

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
Pl. 53-b	BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING A LOTTERY "SCHEME" TO PAY FOR ALTERING THE CITY HALL FOR THE USE OF CONGRESS; DATED MCH. 6, 1790. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1214	1263
Pl. 54	RESOLUTION ESTABLISHING THE TAMMANY SOCIETY OR COLUMBIAN ORDER; DATED MARCH 9, 1789; BEING PAGE 5 OF THIS SOCIETY'S EARLIEST RECORD BOOK. . . . OWNER: TAMMANY SOCIETY	1230	1236
Pl. 55	THE FIRST FEDERAL THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION; SIGNED BY WASHINGTON IN NEW YORK, OCT. 3, 1789. . OWNER: LIBRARY OF CONGRESS	1278	1255
Pl. 56	VICE PRESIDENT ADAMS' LETTER TO MAYOR VARICK TENDERING TO THE CITY THE FURNITURE USED BY THE U. S. SENATE IN THE OLD CITY HALL; DATED AUG. 12, 1790. OWNER: CITY OF NEW YORK, FILED IN CITY CLERK'S RECORD-ROOM	1294	1272
Pl. 57	LIST OF U. S. POST-OFFICES ESTABLISHED UNDER ACT OF FEB. 20, 1792, ACCOMPANYING "BRADLEY'S MAP OF THE UNITED STATES, EXHIBITING POST-ROADS AND DISTANCES," DATED SEPT. 26, 1796. OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1342	1286 and ADD.
Pl. 58	PAGE OF MS. MINUTES OF THE COMMON COUNCIL CONTAINING ORDINANCE APPOINTING FIRST COMPTROLLER OF THE CITY; DATED SEPT. 6, 1802. OWNER: CITY OF NEW YORK, FILED IN CITY CLERK'S OFFICE	1358	1393
Pl. 59	PAGES FROM McCOMB'S DIARY DESCRIBING LAYING OF CORNER-STONE OF NEW CITY HALL AND THE INSCRIPTIONS ON THE STONE; DATED MAY 26, 1803. . . OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1406	1407
Pl. 60	MS. MINUTES OF ORGANIZATION MEETING OF N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY; DATED NOV. 20, 1804. . . . OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1422	1428
Pl. 61	BROADSIDE ADVERTISEMENT OF "HAERLEM BLOOMINGDALE & NEW-YORK STAGE;" DATED APRIL 5, 1806. . OWNER: MASS. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1470	1445

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
PL. 62	LETTER FROM ROBERT FULTON TO CHANCELLOR LIVINGSTON DESCRIBING PLANS FOR REMODELLING THE "CLERMONT;" DATED NOV. 20, 1807. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1486	1474
PL. 63	PRELIMINARY REPORT OF THE COMMISSION WHICH SURVEYED THE ROUTE OF THE ERIE CANAL; MADE TO THE NEW YORK LEGISLATURE IN FEB., 1811. . . . OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1534	ADD.
	THE WAR OF 1812, AND THE PERIOD OF INVENTION, PROSPERITY AND PROGRESS
PL. 64	PAGE FROM MS. LETTER-BOOK OF CAPT. ISAAC CHAUNCEY REPORTING TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY THE DEPARTURE OF FLEET FROM NEW YORK; DATED JUNE 21, 1812. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1550	1549
PL. 65	FIRST FRANCHISE FOR SUPPLYING NEW YORK CITY WITH GAS; DATED MAY 12, 1823. OWNER: CONSOLIDATED GAS CO.	1598	1629
PL. 66-a	WM. H. BROWN'S ORIGINAL SILHOUETTE DRAWING OF THE "DE WITT CLINTON" ENGINE, BUILT IN NEW YORK CITY IN 1831, ITS TENDER, AND TWO CARS. OWNER: CONN. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	1614	1697
PL. 66-b	EARLIEST KNOWN TIME-TABLE OF NEW YORK & HARLEM RAILROAD; DATED 1848. OWNER: N. Y. CENTRAL RAILROAD	1614	ADD.
PL. 67	CHARTER OF NEW YORK UNIVERSITY; DATED APRIL 18, 1831. OWNER: N. Y. UNIVERSITY	1662	1701
PL. 68	THREE PAGES FROM CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF "NEW YORK UNION SOCIETY OF JOURNEYMAN HOUSE CARPENTERS" —AN EARLY EXAMPLE OF TRADE UNIONISM; DATED NOV. 19, 1833. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1678	ADD.
PL. 69	OFFICIAL MAP OF AREA BURNED BY FIRE OF DEC. 16-17, 1835, SHOWING OLD AND NEW STREET LINES; COMPILED BY JOSEPH F. BRIDGES, CITY SURVEYOR; DATED JAN. 5, 1836. OWNER: CITY OF NEW YORK, FILED IN TOPOGRAPHICAL BUREAU, BOROUGH PRESIDENT'S OFFICE	1726	1735 1737

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
	PERIOD OF INDUSTRIAL AND EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT
PL. 70	CONTRACTORS' BILL FOR BUILDING THE DISTRIBUTING RESERVOIR IN CONNECTION WITH THE CROTON AQUEDUCT; DATED DEC. 16, 1843. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1742	ADD.
PL. 71	PRINTED CATALOGUE OF DESIGNS FOR CENTRAL PARK, SUBMITTED IN COMPETITION; ANNOTATED, PROBABLY BY ONE OF THE PARK COMMISSIONERS, WITH THE NAMES OF THE COMPETITORS; UNDATED. OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1790	1875
PL. 72	FIRST MESSAGE SENT OVER THE ATLANTIC CABLE FROM QUEEN VICTORIA TO PRESIDENT BUCHANAN; DATED AUG. 16, 1858, AND THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY. . . . OWNER: U. S. NATIONAL MUSEUM	1802	1877 and ADD.
	THE CIVIL WAR, AND THE PERIOD OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
PL. 73-a	LETTER FROM PRESIDENT LINCOLN TO HORACE GREELEY ANTICIPATING THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION; DATED MCH. 24, 1862. OWNER: J. PIERPONT MORGAN, ESQ.	1854	1903
PL. 73-b	NEW YORK BROADSIDE OF LINCOLN'S PRELIMINARY EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION ON SEPT. 22, 1862. . . OWNER: N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY	1854	1905
	THE MODERN CITY AND ISLAND
PL. 74	FIRST NEW YORK TELEPHONE DIRECTORY; DATED OCT. 23, 1878. OWNER: N. Y. TELEPHONE CO.	1870	1968
PL. 75-a	ARCH ERECTED ON FIFTH AVE. ABOVE 23D ST. FOR THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION, IN 1889, OF WASHINGTON'S INAUGURATION. OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1918	1999
PL. 75-b	ARCH ERECTED ON FIFTH AVE. BELOW 24TH ST. FOR THE DEWEY RECEPTION, SEPT. 28-30, 1899. OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1918	2038
PL. 76-a	FIRST PAGE OF OFFICIAL FILED COPY OF GREATER NEW YORK CHARTER BILL.	1934

		FACING PAGE	REF. PAGE
Pl. 76-b	MAYOR STRONG'S DISAPPROVAL OF GREATER NEW YORK CHARTER BILL; DATED APRIL 8, 1897.	1934
Pl. 76-c	ENDORSEMENTS SHOWING PASSAGE OF CHARTER BY LEGISLATURE, AND APPROVAL BY GOV. BLACK, MAY 4, 1897. OWNER: STATE OF NEW YORK, FILED IN SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE	1934	2028
Pl. 77	MAYOR McCLELLAN, THE RAPID TRANSIT COMMISSIONERS, AND OTHER GUESTS OF THE CHIEF CONTRACTOR, JOHN B. McDONALD, STARTING ON FIRST INSPECTION TOUR OF THE SUBWAY, JULY 19, 1904. OWNER: WM. C. DOUGLAS, ESQ.	1982	2056
Pl. 78-a	DESIGN FOR N. Y. MUNICIPAL BUILDING, SUBMITTED BY HOWELLS AND STOKES IN COMPETITION, 1908. . . OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1998	2067
Pl. 78-b	DESIGN FOR CHICAGO TRIBUNE BUILDING, SUBMITTED BY I. N. PHELPS STOKES IN COMPETITION, 1922. . . . OWNER: I. N. P. S.	1998	2067
Pl. 79	PETITION TO TRINITY VESTRY ASKING THAT ST. JOHN'S CHAPEL, VARICK ST., BE SPARED. OWNER: TRINITY CORPORATION	2046	2071
Pl. 80	ADDRESS FROM THE NETHERLANDS HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION COMMITTEE PRESENTING A REPLICA OF THE "HALF MOON" TO THE HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION COMMISSION; DATED SEPT. 25, 1909. OWNER: N. Y. HISTORICAL SOCIETY	2062	2077

CHRONOLOGY

1776–1909

CHAPTER III
THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD
1763–1776–1783
PART II
1776–1783

CHAPTER III

THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD

1763-1776-1783

PART II

1776-1783

1776 July 9 — A BRIEF summary of the principal events of the Revolutionary Period, from the destruction of the statue of George III on the night of July 9, 1776, to the evacuation of the city by the British on Nov. 25, 1783, is contained in Vol. I, Chap. III.

" — A British officer writes from Staten Island to a correspondent in London: "Our army consisted of six thousand one hundred and fifty-five effectives, on our embarkation at Halifax; they are now all safe landed here, and our head-quarters are at your late old friend Will Hicks's mansion-house.

"The accounts given of the numbers of the whole army upon the island of New York, vary much; some pronounce them 12, 14, and others from 24, to 30,000 men; but we well know their numbers were very much exaggerated when entrenched before Boston.

"Mr. Washington's head-quarters were lately removed to the City Hall, upon the discovery of a design to seize and deliver his person to Governor Tryon; for which a drummer, who had deserted from the Royal Welch Fusileers, was apprehended and hanged. A pardon and rewards were repeatedly offered to this young lad (not exceeding eighteen years of age) if he would impeach his associates in the enterprize; but he, with a glorious disdain, continued inflexibly secret, and died resolute. The Provincial Convention of New-York have tried and sentenced the Mayor of their city to death, for holding a correspondence with Governor Tryon; and who should this prove to be but the facetious David Matthews. . . . should the sentence be executed, many shocking events of the kind will follow. On our landing we found Colonel De Lancey, Mr. Apthorpe, Major Bayard, Mr. Skinner of Jersey, Mr. Kempe of New York, Mr. Barrow, Paymaster of his Majesty's forces, Mr. Moore, &c. &c. The former of these gentlemen had been employed, at an advanced age, and in infirm state of health, upon the most laborious work in the Provincials entrenchments; he proves from his intimate acquaintance with the disposition of the inhabitants, and his accurate knowledge of the country, a valuable acquisition to our excellent General. . . .

July 9 — "We expect orders to land the army beyond King's Bridge, and make our approach to the city on the rear of the island; in which case Mr. Washington must present his front to us in a fair field, or submit to an alternative, which, in its event, will put an end to this hurly burly about Independence."—Kentish Gaz. (Canterbury), Ag 17–21, 1776.

" — Since June 29 (q. v.), when alarm was created on account of the arrival at Sandy Hook of the fleet from Halifax, having on board the British army under Sir William Howe, "almost all business in town is knocked up." The fleet "now lays verry Quiet at the watering Place [for Robertson's view, see Jl 12], waiting for a Reanforcement from England [which arrived on Aug. 12]. When they say they shall little Regard our Bateries. We as little Regard them, Our men are in high Sperrits and Ready to meet them at any Hour the town swarms with people, I doubt not But our army Consists of at least twenty thousand men, & the Country about us verry Willing to lend us there asestence, . . ."—From letter of Peter Elting to Capt. Richard Varick, in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 99–100.

" — Ensign Caleb Clap records in his diary: "several Frinch Gentlemen have been at the Generals, and have been to the Congress, and are now come back to the General [see Je 20] It is Reported that we may depend on their Assistance by sea. . . .

"their is now several small ones [vessels], that Cruce round here a Nights to watch the movements of the Enemy and see that the Tories do not go aboard. . . . Scarcely a day but what some desert from the Enemy. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 137.

" — Expressing doubt as to the French alliance with England's rebellious colonies (see F 6, 1778), Smith writes: "I dread France—She will be guided only by motives of Interest—No Promises will bind her—She will percieve it more advantageous to her Ambition to ferment animosities, than hastily to plunge into a War—She will 1776 July 9 decieve both Parties that her Ends may be achieved at our Expence. Can she wish to see a new Empire erected formidable to her Islands? Much less asist Great Britain to regain a union that was in the late war so injurious to her ambition, & which in a future Day may fill Europe with Terror."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" "The same Evening [July 9, not 10 as appears by this authority] the Equestrian Statue of George III. erected in the year 1770, was thrown from its Pedestal and broken in Pieces; and we hear the Lead wherewith this Monument was made, is to be run into Bullets."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 15, 1776. The date is confirmed by Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide de camp, who entered in his "Journal" under date of July 10: "Last night the statue of George III. was tumbled down and beheaded. The troops having long had an inclination so to do, thought the time of publishing a declaration of independence, to be a favorable opportunity; for which they received the check in this day's orders."—N. Y. Herald, Ag 28, 1876. See also Jl 10.

The incident was the subject of satire. A letter dated July 11, sent from New York to the Penn. Jour. and published July 17, says: "On Wednesday evening last [error for Tuesday evening] the equestrian statue of George III which tory pride and folly raised in the year 1770, was, by the sons of freedom, laid prostrate in the dirt the just desert of an ungrateful tyrant! The lead wherewith this monument was made, is to be run into bullets, to assimilate with the brain of our infatuated adversaries, who, to gain a peppercorn, have lost an empire. 'Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat.' A gentleman who was present at this ominous fall of leaden Majesty, looking back to the original's hopeful beginning pertinently exclaimed, in the language of the angel to Lucifer, 'if thou be'st he! But ah, how fallen! How chang'd!'" The editor here explains that "Lord Clare in the House of Commons declared that a peppercorn in acknowledgement to Britain's right to tax America, was of more importance than millions without it."—Penn. Eve. Post, Jl 13; Penn. Jour., Jl 17, 1776.

Ebenezer Hazard wrote to Gen. Gates on July 12: "The King of England's arms have been burned in Philadelphia and his statue here has been pulled down to make musket balls of, so that his troops will probably have melted majesty fired at them."—From Gates Papers at N. Y. H. S., cited by Mr. Gibbs in his address, pub. in the society's Proc. (1844), 171.

Lieut. Isaac Bangs wrote, on July 10: "Last night the Statue on the Bowling Green representing George Ghewelph alias George Rex was pulled down by the populace. In it were 4,000 pounds of Lead and a Man undertook to take off 10 oz. of gold from the Superficies, as both Man and Horse were covered with Gold leaf. The Lead we hear is to be run up into musket balls for the use of the Yankees, when it is hoped that the emanations of the Leaden George will make as deep impressions in the Bodies of some of his red coated and Torie Subjects. . . ."—Jour. of Lieut. Isaac Bangs (1890), 75.

A monument marking the grave of "Captain Oliver Brown, of the Artillery of the Massachusetts Line," who died at Wellsburg, Va., Feb. 17, 1846, and was buried there, bears an inscription that he "Commanded the volunteer party that bore off the leaden statue of King George from the Battery of New York, and made it into bullets for the American Army." The story of this exploit, attributed to Brown, is told, without citation of authorities, by Rev. Horace Edwin Hayden in A Biographical Sketch of Capt. Oliver Brown (Wilkes-Barre, Pa., 1882). The Brown epitaph contains at least two errors: The statue was not on the "Battery," and the party of patriots who pulled it down were not the ones who "made it into bullets." The latter fact appears by the following records:

In a memorandum of letters written by Du Simitière, he says, under date of Feb. 22, 1779, that he wrote "a letter to Col. B. Flower, C. G. M. S. in this town [Philadelphia], requesting him to write to his Deputies at Fish Kill, Ridgefield, or Danbury, to inquire of them about the fragments of the King's Statue which was removed from New York under the care of a Col. Hugh Hughes, who resides now at Fish Kill."—From Du Simitière's "Memoranda," MS., Vol. II, in Lib. of Cong.

An authentic record of the melting of the lead into bullets or "cartridges" is contained in a document giving an "account current" of the number of cartridges made from the materials of the statue by the ladies of Litchfield, Conn. This document was (in 1882) preserved among the papers of Gen. (afterwards Gov.) Oliver Wolcott, of Conn., and is in his handwriting. It was brought to the attention of the public by the late Geo. Gibbs, librarian of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., in his address before that society on Oct. 1, 1844, published in the society's Proc. of that year, pp. 172–75. The document, he states, is not dated, nor is mention made by Gen. Wolcott of the fact that the cartridges were made from the statue, but a memorandum added by his son, the last Gov. Wolcott, explains it as follows: "N. B. An equestrian statue of George the Third of Great Britain, was erected in the City of New York on the Bowling Green, at the lower end of Broadway; most of the materials were lead, but richly gilded to resemble gold. At the beginning of the revolution this statue was overthrown. Lead being then scarce and dear, the statue was broken in pieces, and the metal transported to Litchfield as a place of safety. The ladies of this village converted the lead into cartridges, of which the preceding is an account. O. W." Mr. Gibbs gives interesting particulars connected with this enterprise of the people of Litchfield. July 9

The following information, regarding certain fragments of the statue, was published in 1861: "A portion of the statue was taken to Litchfield, Conn., as a place of safety. On its arrival there, a shed was erected in an apple orchard, where Gov. Wolcott chopped a part of it up with a wood axe, and the girls had a frolic in running the bullets and making them into cartridges. A piece of the statue, forming the saddle cloth and cercingle, was carried to Norwalk, about 45 miles up the Sound. When Gov. Tryon was on his marauding expedition through Conn., it was moved with the military stores to Wilton, some six miles from the coast, and deposited at a place called Raymond Corner. On the enemy approaching that place, the inhabitants threw this fragment of the statue together with the military stores into a swamp in the woods. There the lead lay until the winter of 1832–33, when it was discovered by a boy named Comstock, who was crossing the frozen swamp, at other times impassible, and recognized by a Mr. Belden, a Revolutionary pensioner, residing in Wilton, and who had himself borne a conspicuous part in its destruction, as being a portion of the Equestrian statue of George III, erected in New York. The relic was in the possession of the uncle of the finder until the year 1844, when it was purchased by a gentleman of New York, who subsequently disposed of it to the late Thomas Riley, Esq., then proprietor of the Fifth Ward Hotel [see Man. Com. Coun., 1864, pp. 598, 602], where it may still [1861] be seen. There are still many tracings of the original gilding, and the fringe of the saddle cloth is distinctly perceptible. A large iron bullet mould, capable of casting twelve bullets at a time, and which was used in casting some of the lead of the King's statue into bullets, may be seen among the collections of the New York Historical Society."—Jour. of Solomon Nash, ed. by Bushnell (1861), 56–58, citing Woodruff's Hist. of Litchfield, Conn., 42, and N. Y. H. S. Proc. (1844), 168.

Four pieces of the statue of George III, consisting of the tail of the horse and trappings, were plowed up on the farm of Peter S. Colby, at Wilton, Conn., in April, 1871, and were purchased by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. on June 4, 1878.—See MS. of a lecture, entitled "New York in the Pre-Revolutionary Period—1765–1774" delivered Nov. 1, 1910, by the librarian of the society, Robert H. Kelby; N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bull., Jl, 1920, p. 54.

The head of the statue was otherwise disposed of. Capt. John Montresor, in an account of his services, made the following note (without date) in his journal: "My hearing that the Rebels had cut the King's head off the Equestrian Statue (in the Centre of the Ellipps, near the Fort) at New York, which represented George the 3rd in the figure of Marcus Aurelius, and that they had cut the nose off, clipt the laurels that were wreathed round his head, and drove a musket Bullet part of the way through his Head, and otherwise disfigured it, and that it was carried to Moore's tavern, adjoining Fort Washington, on New York Island, in order to be fixed on a Spike on the Truck of that Flagstaff as soon as it could be got ready, I immediately sent Corby through the Rebel Camp in the beginning of September, 1776, to Cox, who kept the Tavern at King's Bridge, to steal it from thence, and to bury it, which was effected, and was dug up on our arrival, and I rewarded the men, and sent the head by the Lady Gage to Lord Townshend, in order to convince them at home of the Infamous Disposition of the Ungrateful people of this distressed Country."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1881), 123–24. That the head reached its destination in England we know from The Diary and Letters of . . . Thomas Hutchinson, compiled by Peter O. Hutchinson (1886), II: 167. Hutchinson entered in his diary under date of Nov. 22, 1777: "Lady Townshend asked me if I had a mind to see an instance of American loyalty? and going to the 1776 July 9 sopha, uncovered a large gilt head, which at once appeared to be that of the King." He explained that, after the surrender of Fort Washington, "Montresor took it into his possession, and sent it to Lord T., which he rec^{d} last night. The nose is wounded and defaced, but the gilding remains fair; and as it is well executed, it retains a striking likeness."

The slab on which the statue stood, on a high pedestal, is now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It is of Portland marble, 5½ feet long, and 4 inches thick, and was brought to America from England when the statue was erected. Openings show where two of the horse's hoofs were fastened. Prior to the British evacuation of New York in 1783, it was appropriated for a tombstone at Paulus Hook (Jersey City), having on one side an inscription:

"In Memory of Major John Smith
of the
XLIInd or Royal Highland Reg
Who died 25 July 1783," etc.

Maj. Smith was buried on a hill near where St. Matthew's Church, in Sussex St., Jersey City, was afterward erected. The hill was levelled in 1804 by Andrew Dey or by the Jersey Associates.

The stone was next used for a door-step. Regarding this, the following account was published in 1861: "John Van Vorst, grandfather of Alderman Van Vorst, took this stone, and laid its inscription downward, in front of the old family mansion, which was a few rods south of the present residence of John Van Vorst.

"In the year 1818, the old Van Vorst mansion was demolished, and the late Cornelius Van Vorst placed it as a stepping stone to the kitchen door of his house on the knoll on the northerly side of Wayne street, near Jersey street. There it remained until that building was demolished, when it was used for the new house on the southerly side of Wayne street, now occupied by the family. In the year 1828, a gentleman from England called upon Mr. Van Vorst, and offered him $500 for this relic, as he wished to take it to England with him, but Mr. Van Vorst declined the offer, and it still [1861] remains in the possession of the family."—Jour. of Solomon Nash, ed. by Bushnell (1861), 57–58, citing Woodruff's Hist. of Litchfield, Conn., 42, and N. Y. H. S. Proc. (1844), 168; Hist. Mag. (1867), 2d ser., II: 381–82, citing The Jersey City Telegraph. The stone was presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. in Oct., 1874, by Cornelius Van Vorst.—See the records of the society, Mr. Kelby's address, already cited, and N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bull., Jl, 1920, p. 53–54.

The pedestal, in 1786, was observed by Chancellor Livingston as "far from being ornamental" and "contracts the appearance of the green."—See Ap 19, 1786. It was mentioned by Lambert in 1808 in his description of the city.—See N, 1807. It was removed in May 1818 (q. v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 19, 1818; Hazelton, The Declaration of Independence (1906), 563, citing the Telegram, Je 16, 1883; cf. L. M. R. K., III: 964. See also descrip. of Pl. 46Aa, I: 356, where the date is erroneously given as July 10.

For Washington's action on the outbreak of July 9, see Jl 10.

10 The following appears in the orders of the day: "Though the General [Washington] doubts not the persons who pulled down and mutilated the statue in the Broadway last night were actuated by zeal in the public cause, yet it has so much the appearance of riot and want of order in the army, that he disapproves the manner, and directs that in future these things shall be avoided by the soldiery, and left to be executed by proper authority."—From the address of Mr. Gibbs on Oct. 1, 1844, before the N. Y. H. S., pub. in the society's Proc. of that year, p. 171, and citing a book of general orders issued by Washington, the original of which is in the society's possession; Glover Corresp. (MS.), 156.

" The "State of New York" receives its official christening. The provincial convention at White Plains resolves "That the style or title of this House be changed from that of 'the Provincial Congress of the Colony of New-York' to that of 'the Convention of the Representatives of the State of New-York'."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 519.

" Capt. Francis Hutcheson, of the British forces, writing from the "Watering Place," Staten Island, to a friend in England, says: "The New Yorkers who are friends to Government are very apprehensive the New England men will set fire to the town, as soon as they find they can no longer keep possession of it. . . . General Washington has taken up his Summer Quarters at your house [doubtless Mr. Mortier's] on Richmond Hill; his town Residence is General Robertsons, on the top of which they display the Continental Colours. . . ."—Battle of Harlem H'ts., 219, citing the Haldimand MSS., Brit. Museum. July 10

An officer under Gen. Howe writes from Staten Island to a correspondent in London: "According to the latest and best Accounts the Provincial Army is not so numerous as we have been taught to believe, and the strong Battery (as they call it) upon Long Island is fortified with only a Parcel of unwieldy Cannon from Ticonderoga, which are chiefly unfit for Service. Our only Fear is, that the Rebels will not choose to hazard a general Action, and our Suspicion on this Head is stronger, as we are told by Deserters, that they have Intrenchments, Ambuscades, Mines, and Forts, for a considerable Way into the Country. If this is really the Case, and they are determined to act upon the Defensive only, and to fire their Cities and Habitations upon the Sea-Coast, when we are upon the Point of possessing them, our Work will never be done; our Lives, on the contrary, will be in perpetual Danger from the innumerable Snares that are laid for them."—St. James's Chron. (London), Ag 20–22, 1776. "

" In Pursuance of the Declaration for Independency, a general Goal Delivery, with respect to Debtors, took place here on Wednesday" (July 10).—N. Y. Merc., Jl 15, 1776. "One of the first fruits of Independency, the oppressed are set free."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 11, 1776.

Capt. Robertson and Capt. Montresor go on a "reconnoitring party" in a whale boat, "supported by two Flat Boats w^{t} 20 Soldiers in each, besides the rowers, of the 43^{d}." Robertson writes of this: "we went a little above Kennedys or Bedlow's Island between it & red Hook where we could discover the Rebel Works pretty distinctly on Gov^{rs} Island Paulus & Red Hooks—They fired two cannon at us over our heads one from Gov^{s} I^{d} & the other from Red Hook also some Musquetry from Bedlows island."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Montresor erroneously records this expedition under August.—Montresor's Jour., 121. See Jl 12. 11

The publication of the Declaration of Independence in the N. Y. Packet, on this day, is its first appearance in a New York newspaper. There is a copy in the N. Y. P. L. For other publications of it, see Jl 4. "

The first draft of the "Articles of confederation and perpetual union," drawn by John Dickinson, is presented to congress for consideration.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 546–54. The articles were adopted in amended form on Nov. 15, 1777 (q. v.). 12

An officer under Gen. Howe writes from Staten Island: "Such strong intrenchments as the rebels have thrown up at New York were never before seen in an enemy's country; according to the best information, they extend miles together, are a considerable height, and have near 30,000 men to defend them. . . ."—Upcott Coll., IV: 373. "

The "Phœnix," the "Rose," and three tenders leave the Watering Place at Staten Island "to pass New York & go up Hudson's River." As soon as they set sail, "6 or 8 Alarm Guns were fired at N. York—The Ships proceeded w^{t} the greatest order & never return'd a Shot untill they got between Paulus Hook & & the Town —at ½ past four they were pass'd every Battery—near the Town. . . . About an hour after We saw the Ships firing at Another Battery about 6 or 8 miles up the River on the E. side."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). "

Kemble's record reads: "About half after 3 in the Afternoon His Majesty's Ship Phenix, Commanded by Capt. Parker, and the Rose, by Capt. Wallace, with the Tryal Schooner and two Tenders, got under sail to pass the Town of New York; in about forty minutes they got a breast of Paulus's Hook, before which time they did not fire a Shot, tho' they received the whole of the Rebels fire from Red Hook, Governors Island, the Battery, and from some Guns in the Town. When they opened Paulus's Hook they began to fire on both sides, on which the Rebels fled from their Works at Paulus's Hook, but returned at intervals to their Guns and fired them; at half past four the Ships were past all the Batteries, and as far as we could judge received little hurt.

"At 7 o'Clock Lord Howe came to Anchor at the landing Place; was Saluted by the Admiral and the rest of the Fleet; at half past 8 the General went on board to see his Brother. Number of Shot fired by the Rebels, 196."—Kemble's Jour. in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 80.

1776 July 12 A newspaper report says that the news having reached New York, that Lord Howe had arrived at Sandy Hook with a large fleet from England, "The army soon took the alarm, and in a few minutes every man was at his station, well provided with all necessaries for a vigorous defence, but as soon as the ships came near Bedlow's Island, they inclined towards the Jersey shore, to avoid our batteries that then began to play upon them from every quarter on both sides of the river, and notwithstanding they must have received considerable damage, they stood their course up Hudson's river firing several broadsides as they went along. . . . A strong southerly Wind, and the Tide of Flood facilitated the Ships getting above the Batteries near the Town, but we hear they were roughly handled about 12 Miles up the River, from whence they have not yet attempted to return, but we hear lay at Tarry-Town, about 30 Miles up the River, on Saturday Evening.

"Several Shot went thro' different Houses in the Town; two into the House of Mr. Verdine Elsworth, at Powlis Hook; three into Capt. Clarke's House at Greenwich; one of which went thro' the Front and lodged in a Brick Wall at the Head of Miss Clarke's Bed, in her Chamber, a Second went thro' the House, and the Third destroyed several Trees before the Door, and took its Course into the Woods.

"A Ball also struck the House of Mr. Daniel Phoenix and from that took its Course to the new Dwelling of Mr. Christopher Smith, in the Opposite Side of the Street."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 15, 1776.

Pastor Shewkirk says that during the firing "Six men were killed; either some or all by ill-managing the cannons; though it is said that a couple were killed by the ship's firing. . . . The six were put this evening into one grave on the Bowling Green. The smoke of the firing drew over like a cloud; and the air was filled with the smell of the powder. This affair caused a great fright in the city. Women, and children, and some with their bundles came from the lower forts, and walked to the Bowery, which was lined with people. . . . Not long after this affair was over, the fleet below fired a Salute, Admiral Howe coming in from England. . . ."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776, part 2, 110–11. This is the only record found of the use of the Bowling Green for a burial place.

Solomon Drowne, M. D., writing on July 13 from the general hospital to his sister, also stated: ". . . we had six fine fellows killed & 4 or five wounded at our Grand Battery, thro' mere Carelessness, or Ignorance. For, neglecting to swab y^e^ Cannon at all, or doing it improperly, the catridges took fire, and y^e^ fatal Accidents ensued.

"The Wounded were brought to y^e^ Hospital. . . . One Ball came into y^e^ Hospital Yard, struck y^e^ ground at a little Distance from us, and bounded thro' y^e^ board fence. I believe it was a 12 pound shott I think our situation as much exposed, as any in the City."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 28–29.

Smith writes of "An Alarm after I was got to Bed, with an account that two Ships had passed the Forts below & anchored in the Bay 12 Miles below us—The men ordered to guard the River & the Women to retire back—at Naick [Nyack] a Detachm^t^ of Col^o^ Hay's Regiment fired upon a Barge in her Approach to the Shore. I suspect they are sent up to recieve Fugitives and Provisions, but the Vigilance & Heat of the Inhabit^s^ will probably disappoint them unless they are strong handed—The Committee resolve to write as I hear to General Washington for Aid. If he orders up Whale Boats to follow the Barges they can do little."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" Robertson says that while the men-of-war and the tenders were proceeding to the Hudson River, "L^d^ Howe in the Eagle—came up the Bay & cast Anchor at 7 ^o^Clock after being saluted by Ad^l^ Shuldham & the rest of the Ships—from this day forward I date the commencement of our Successes."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" This date is found on two sepia views ($18\frac{13}{16}$ in. x $11\frac{8}{8}$ in.) drawn by Archibald Robertson, an engineer in the 47th Regiment of Foot. One is entitled "Taken from the heights above the watering place on Staten Island"—"View of the Bay & Town of New York w^t^ the Phoenix & Rose men of war passing this Battery & going up Hudson's River 12^th^ July 1776," and the other "View of the Narrows between Long Island & Staten Island w^th^ our Fleet at Anchor & [Admiral] Lord Howe coming in [from England]—taken from the height above the Water^s^ Place Staten Island 12^th^ July 1776."

These views are numbered 33 and 34 in a series of 54 American drawings, made by Robertson during the Revolutionary War, most of which are contained in a bound portfolio recently procured for the N. Y. Pub. Library from three descendants of Archibald Robertson in England, together with a series of journals covering the years 1762 and 1775–80, and some loose papers and sketches. This portfolio is an oblong book of fine drawing-paper, in marbled paper covers; the outside of the front cover bears the written name "Captain Robertson, Engineer;" the inside of the same cover, in the same handwriting, bears the inscription: "In case of any accident happening to me, I desire this book of sketches may be sealed up, and sent home by a safe conveyance, to Mr. Henry Robertson, No. 18 George Street, York Buildings, London. Arch Robertson." See also Ja 10, 1777. July 12

The earliest dated view (1762) shows Moro Castle, Havana; those in the later series show Boston and its vicinity, beginning Jan. 4, 1776; Halifax and other points in Nova Scotia, the earliest being dated April 25, 1776; the English fleet en route from Halifax to New York, comprising seven marine views, dated from June 11 to 26, 1776; and views of New York harbour, which are mentioned in the Chronology under the following dates: July 12, Sept. 8 and 9, Oct. 8, 1776; July 2, Aug. 22, Oct. 10, 1777; and Aug. 17, 1778. Still later views were made in Philadelphia. These drawings constitute probably the most important collection of American Revolutionary War views in existence. See also Mr 5, 1776; Ag 6, 1778; Ap 11, 1779.

This Archibald Robertson must not be confused with the painter of the same name, who came to America on Oct. 2, 1791 (q. v.).

The engineer Robertson was born about 1745; entered the army as "practitioner engineer and ensign" on the 17th of March, 1759; served at the siege of Havana in 1762; was closely attached to headquarters troops through most of the land campaigns of the American Revolution from the siege of Boston until 1780, acting as engineer officer and also as deputy quartermaster general. After peace was declared he retired from the army with rank of major on March 23, 1786, and spent the rest of his life on his estate, "Lawers," near Comrie, Perthshire, until his death on Feb. 12, 1813, having reached the rank of lieutenant-general during his retirement.

The N. Y. Pub. Library expects to publish the Robertson journals, probably in 1927.

The views of New York interest are the following:

"View from the height above the Watering place on Staaten Island. View of the Bay & Town of New York w^t^ the Phoenix & Rose Men of War passing their Battery & going up the Hudson's River 12^th^ July 1776"

"View of the Narrows between Long Island & staaten Island w^t^ our Fleet at Anchor & Lord Howe coming in—taken from the height above the Water^s^ place Staaten Island 12^th^ July 1776"

"View of the opening of our Batterys at Hell Gate upon the Rebel Works at Walton's house on the island of N. York 8 Sept^r^ 1776"

"View of Long Island & East River, from my Quarters on N. York Island 18^th^ Sept^r^ 1776"

"View of Part of the Rebel works round Walton's House w^t^ the Situation of our Batterys on long Island—taken from N. York Island 8^th^ Oct^r^ 1776" Also another view of same.

"View of Morisinia Haarlem, Montresor's & Buchannan's Islands w^t^ Part of the sound, taken from our lines near McGowan's house—10 Oct^r^ 1777"

"View from Staten Island 2^d^ July 1777"

"New York from Brooklyn Heights, August 6, 1778" (in the author's collection). See Frontispiece I, Vol. V.

"Keeps's Bay 17^th^ Aug^t^ 1778 where the Troops landed 15^th^ Sept^r^ 1776 [written in ink]. Phoenix 44 Cap^t^ H. Parker Roebuck 44 Hammond, Carisford 28 Fenshaw; Rose 20 J^s^ Wallace 17^th^ Aug^t^ 1778 [written in pencil]."

"View of the North River from a Sloop at anchor a little above Daubbs' Ferry & looking towards New York 4^th^ Dec^r^ 1778"

"View of New York taken from one of the Redouts in the Lines thrown up by the Rebels behind Mount Pitt. 11^th^ April 1779" (in collection of Harris D. Colt, Esq.) See Frontispiece II.

"View of the North River from the Beach near Lispenard's Brewhouse 10^th^ Dec^r^ 1781"

[View of the North River, looking up, south of Fort Washington? Oct. 16, 1781]

[Looking south from the Battery?]

[View across the upper Harlem?]

[View across the lower Harlem?]

1776 July 13 Washington advises the secret committee of the convention of the state of New York that tory prisoners in the gaol of New York should be removed. This committee was appointed expressly with reference to tories, or "disaffected persons." It was now sitting at New York, although the convention was at White Plains.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 245–46; see also p. 274.

" The New York committee of safety resolves that "the members of the different Fire-Engine Companies that remain in this City ought not to be called out on any military duty which the common Militia of this City and County are subject to." The captains of the fire companies are to fill the vacancies of firemen who "are entered in the Continental service, or have removed out of town; and that they pay strict attention to the state of the Engine and publick buckets."—5 Am. Arch., I: 259.

" In his journal, on this day, Solomon Nash refers to being "Employd at the Labeterry."—Jour. of Solomon Nash, ed. by Bushnell (N. Y., 1861), 24. On May 13 he had mentioned "piling up Shot to the Labatery."—Ibid., 14. Again, on Sept. 19, he said: "Being not well Left the Laboratory and Joined our Company."—Ibid., 34. See also his entry of Dec. 4.—Ibid., 42. This place, hitherto unnoticed by historical writers, is referred to in the diary of Jabez Fitch (see O 28) as being near the liberty-pole.

14 "This day A Flag of truce was sent to N. York containg an act of oblivion—but was not received because it was adress'd to George Washington Esq^{r} & ^{ca} & ^{ca} & ^{a} & that they only knew Gen^{l} Washington—A Copy of the same was sent to Amboy & Received for the Congress."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 81.

Referring to the same event, Washington's aide, Col. Webb, records in his journal: "A Flag of Truce from the fleet appeared, on which Col^{o} Reed and myself, went down to meet it, about half way between Governors and Staten Islands. Lieutenant Brown, of the Eagle, offered a Letter from Lord Howe, directed George Washington, Esq^{r}, which on acc^{t} of its direction, we refused to Receive, and Parted with the usual Compliments."—Webb's Correspondence, I : 155 ; cf. Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V, under date of Jl 27.

The newspaper account of this important transaction is as follows: ". . . in the Afternoon [of the 14th] a Barge from the Fleet, appeared in the Bay with a White Flag, which was met by the General's Barge with several Gentlemen of the Army on board. The Flag was sent by Lord Howe, with a Letter to his Excellency General Washington. But as the Letter was improperly directed it was not received though much sollicited by the Officer, who, we hear, said it contained nothing of a hostile Nature,—that Lord Howe came over possessed of unlimited Power, and was much concerned he had not arrived a few Days sooner, which would have effected a Reconciliation, &c . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 22, 1776. See Jl 16 and 17.

" Lord Howe and Gen. Howe issue, from Staten Island, a declaration reciting that they have been appointed "his Majesty's Commissioner and Commissioners, for granting his free and general Pardons to all those, who, in the Tumult and Disorder of the Times, may have deviated from their just Allegiance, and who are willing, by a speedy Return to their Duty, to reap the Benefits of the Royal Favor;" that "due Consideration shall be had to the meritorious Services of all Persons, who shall aid and assist in restoring the public Tranquillity;" and that "Pardons shall be granted, dutiful Representations received, and every suitable Encouragement given, for promoting such Measures as shall be conducive to the Establishment of legal Government and Peace."—N. Y. Merc., S 30, 1776. Another declaration was issued on Sept. 19 (q.v.).

15 "A Flag of Truce came from N. York the Contents Unknown—but I believe they will hear of no Accommodation."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

Kemble says: "A Flag of Truce this day from the Rebels; one from us with Letters from Lord and General Howe, but refused the superscription, not being so honorable as they thought it ought to be. The Guard Sloop lying in the harbour, a fine Vessel, mounting fourteen Carriage Guns. The Rebels have this day brought two Guns, six pounders, and fixed them in the bank directly opposite Brigadier Agnew's Quarters on Staten Island. . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 81.

" The Declaration of Independence is published in Gaine's New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, of this date.

16 A second flag of truce comes from the British fleet and is met "as before" (see Jl 14), but when a letter is offered, it is rejected "for the same Reason as the Former."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 22, 1776. July 16 See Jl 19.

The following extract from the minutes of the committee of safety, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New-York," is published: "Whereas the Convention of the State of New-York did, on the 9th instant, unanimously resolve, that a Declaration of the Independence of the United States of America should be transmitted to the several Committees in the said State of New-York, with orders that it should be by them published with all convenient speed in their several districts," it is therefore resolved and ordered "That at twelve o'clock, on Thursday, at the City-Hall, in this city, the aforesaid Declaration be published; when and where it is hoped every true friend to the rights and liberties of this country will not fail to attend."—5 Am. Arch., I: 374.

Garret Abeel, a member of the provincial congress, writes from White Plains to his wife: "I shall try next week to get permission to come and see you, as the consideration of forming a new government is postponed to the first of next month on account of the multiplicity of other necessary business which has come before the house since they have been here. We have only five New York members here at present, which is the exact number required to represent the city and county in Congress."—Whittemore, The Abeel and Allied Families, 16. "

Congress resolves: "That General Washington, in refusing to receive a letter said to be sent from Lord Howe, addressed to George Washington, Esquire [see Jl 14], acted with a dignity becoming his station; and therefore this Congress do highly approve the same, and do direct that no letter or message, be received on any occasion whatever, from the enemy, by the commander in Chief, or other the Commanders of the American army, but such as shall be directed to them in the characters they respectively sustain."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 29, 1776. 17

Sixteen or seventeen ships, part of the British fleet at Staten Island, "got under way and stood through the Narrows." Their destination was unknown to the patriots at New York.—Penn. Jour., Jl 24, 1776. "

The "Declaration of Independency of the United States of America" is "published at the Court-House [the city hall on Wall St.]; where a Number of People, true Friends to the Rights and Liberties of this Country, attended, and signified their Approbation to it by loud Acclamations. After which the Coat of Arms of his Majesty George III. was tore to Pieces and burnt in the Presence of the Spectators."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 22, 1776. The American flag was hoisted immediately, and "it was proposed that the Bodies of Church shou^{d}, have the Honour of taking down their coat of Arms in their Respective Churches themselves, and if not the People are allow^{d} to proceed in the like manner as this day herd."—From "The Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 248. 18

Rev. Charles Inglis, in his account of the "State of the Anglo-American Church," written on Oct. 31, 1776, states that, not only was the equestrian statue of the king pulled down, but that all the king's arms, even those on the signs of taverns, were destroyed. The committee of safety sent Inglis a message "to have the king's arms taken down in the church (Trinity), or else the mob would do it, and might deface and injure the churches." He complied. He said, further, that he found his vestry "unanimous for shutting up the Churches," choosing rather "to submit to that temporary inconvenience, than, by omitting the prayers for the king, give that mark of disaffection to their sovereign. To have prayed for him had been rash to the last degree—the inevitable consequence had been a demolition of the churches, and the destruction of all who frequented them. The whole rebel force was collected here, and the violent partizans from all parts of the continent. . . . Things being thus situated, I shut up the churches. Even this was attended with great hazard; for it was declaring, in the strongest manner, our disapprobation of independency, and that under the eye of Washington and his army."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 642.

"Two guns fired from Cobble Hill on Long Island are to be a signal that the Enemy have landed on that Island."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 161. "

"A Flag of Truce sent this Evening to New York, but Nothing material passed worth relating."—Kemble's Jour., 82. A news report states it "brought only an open Letter directed to Miss Margaret Moncrieffe" (see S 14).—N. Y. Merc., Jl 22, 1776. 19

Another account relates that another flag of truce (see Jl 16) appeared, and Cols. Webb and Reed again went down the bay to 1776 July 19 meet it. Col. Webb records in his journal under this date: "Aid de Camp to General Howe met us—and said, as there appeared an insurmountable obstacle between the two Generals, by way of Corresponding, General Howe desired his Adjutant General might be admitted to an Interview with his Excellency General Washington —On which Col° Reed, in the name of General Washington, consented; and pledg'd his honor for his being safe returned.—The Aid de Camp said the Adj[t] Gen[l] would meet us tomorrow forenoon" (q.v.).—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, I: 156.

20 Washington takes up his headquarters in the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway.—Kemble's Jour., 82.

" Washington's aide, Col. Webb, records in his journal: "At 12 o'Clock we met the Flagg, took Lieut[t] Col° Paterson, of —— regiment into our Barge and escorted him safely to Town to Col° Knox's Quarters; where his Excellency General Washington attended with his Suit and Life Guards, Received and had an Interview of about an hour with him. We then escorted him back in safety to his own Barge.—In going & comeing, we pass'd in front of the Grand Battery—but did not blind fold him:—Sociable and Chatty all the way."—Corresp. and Jour. of S. B. Webb, I: 156.

The newspaper report states: "Saturday Forenoon our People discovered a fourth Flag of Truce, whereupon the Mechanicks Barge was sent to meet it, and conducted the Officer (said to be Adjutant General of the Forces under the Command of Lord Howe) to the Dwelling of Colonel Knox, in this City, where his Excellency General Washington, attended by his Body Guards, waited his Arrival, which was a little past one o'Clock: The Interview was short, and the Particulars we believe are as yet not made known; . . . at parting much Courtesy was seen to pass between the Gentlemen who bore the Flag, and those of the Continental Forces who had the Honor to be present."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 22, 1776; Penn. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1776. See also Kemble's Jour., 82, where it is stated that Col. Patterson was "received with great Pomp by a Guard, Conducted to Capt. Kennedy's House, where he saw a great Court, Gentlemen well dressed, &c."

What transpired in the interview was made public by order of the continental congress. The official account said: "After usual compliments, in which, as well as through the whole conversation, Col. Patterson addressed General Washington by the title of Excellency, Col. Patterson entered upon the business by saying, that Gen. Howe much regretted the difficulties which had arisen respecting the address of the letters to General Washington [see Jl 14, and 16]; . . . that Lord Howe and Gen. Howe did not mean to derogate from the respect or rank of General Washington; that they held his person and character in the highest esteem; that the direction, with the addition of &c. &c. &c. implied every thing that ought to follow. He then produced a letter which he did not directly offer to General Washington, but observed that it was the same letter which had been sent, and laid it on the table, with a superscription to George Washington, &c. &c. &c. The General declined the letter, and said, that a letter directed to a person in a public character, should have some description or indication of it, otherwise it would appear a mere private letter; that it was true the &c. &c. &c. implied every thing, and they also implied any thing; . . . that he should absolutely decline any letter directed to him as a private person, when it related to his public station. Col. Patterson then said . . . that he would endeavour as well as he could, to recollect General Howe's sentiments on the letter and resolve of Congress, sent him a few days before, respecting the treatment of our prisoners in Canada. 'That the affairs of Canada were in another department, not subject to the controul of General Howe, but that he and Lord Howe utterly disapproved of every infringement on the rights of humanity' . . . and that he (Gen. Washington) was sensible that cruelty was not the characteristic of the British nation. . . . Gen. Washington then mentioned the case of Col. Allen, and the officers who had been confined in Boston gaol. As to the first, Col. Patterson answered that Gen. Howe had no knowledge of it but by information from Gen. Washington, . . . that as to the other prisoners at Boston, when ever the state of the army at Boston admitted it, they were treated with humanity and even indulgence. . . . Col Patterson then proceeded to say, that the goodness and benevolence of the King had induced him to appoint Lord Howe and Gen. Howe his Commissioners to accommodate this unhappy dispute, that they had great powers, and would derive the greatest pleasure from effecting an accommodation and that he (Col. Patterson) wished to have this visit considered as making the first advances to this desirable object. Gen. Washington replied, that he was not vested with any powers on this subject, by those from whom he derived his authority and power. But from what had appeared or transpired on this head, Lord Howe, and Gen. Howe were only to grant pardons; that those who had committed no fault wanted no pardon, that we were only defending what we deemed our indisputable right. Col. Patterson said that would open a very wide field for argument. He then expressed his apprehension that an adherence to forms was likely to obstruct business of the greatest moment and concern. . . . July 20

"Col. Patterson behaved with the greatest attention and politeness during the whole business, expressing strong acknowledgements that the usual ceremony of blinding his eyes had been dispensed with. . . ."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 1, 1776. See also Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 106; Jour. of Cong. (ed. of 1777), II: 269–70; Thacher, Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War (1823), 60–62. In his Campaign of 1776, etc., 96–99, Johnston supplies the supposed words of the several interviews.

"Upwards of 6000 troops have arrived here from Boston, Connecticut etc and more are daily expected. We have now in & near this city a body of 50,000 effective men."—Const. Gaz., Jl 31, 1776. "

Solomon Nash records in his journal: "a vast maney men upon fatique makin Brastworks round the park."—Jour. of Solomon Nash (ed. by Bushnell), 25. 22

The provincial convention being "informed that provisions are very scarce and dear in the City of New-York," but that they nevertheless have been shipped for exportation, and fallen into the hands of the enemy, it is resolved "That no provisions whatever shall be laden for exportation on board of any ship or vessel at the port of New-York, or from any other part of this State, unless for the use of the crew of such ship or vessel, or for the necessary supply of any of the United States of America, until further order; and that the city and county of New-York shall be first applied to for their permission to export any provisions for the purposes aforesaid." For any breach of this regulation, "the vessel and cargo shall be forfeited to the use of this State; and the persons guilty of infringing it, shall be held up as enemies to the United States of America."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 537. 23

The following extracts from Washington's financial accounts from April 25 to July 23, 1776, show something of his exertions for the safety of New York during this period. They were published in the N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 5, 1808, having been copied by Dr. Samuel Mitchill from Washington's original vouchers, then kept in the office of the register of the treasury: "

"April 25. To the expences of myself and party reconnoitering the several landing places etc. on Staten Island £16 " 10s " 0d

"May 11 To expences of a tour on, and reconnoitering Long Island 26 " 8 " 6

"June 26. To expences in reconnoitering the channel and landings on both sides the North river, as high as Tarrytown to fix the defences thereof 10 " 18 " 0

"To a reconnoitre of the East river and along the Sound as far as Mamaroneck 16 " 9 " 4

"July 15. To my own and party's expences, laying out Fort Lee on the Jersey side of the North river. 8 " 15 " 0

"July 23. To the expence of reconnoitering the country as far as Perth Amboy 19 " 10 " 0"

Wm. Smith writes in his diary: "My Expectations of some conciliatory Messages from Lord How[e] now vanish on a Sight of his Letter to the Governors dated at Sea 20 June informing that he and his Brother the General are the Commissioners [see Mr 11] with Power to grant Pardons on Submission—The Congress publish it to frustrate the Hopes of those who expected favorable Terms. 27

"The Inactivity of the Troops at Staten Island may be perhaps owing to their Hopes that this Letter may create a Rising. He will certainly be decieved.

"It is misterious to find L[d] Geo: Germaine's Information of 23 Dec[r] that the Com[n] to treat with the Colonies was then sealed is not true—Perhaps it was suppressed on the News of our Irruption into Canada and the taking of S[t] Johns & the non arrival of Comm[rs] from America before the 4[th] May when Lord Howe left England." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

On this day "A regiment of militia, under the command of Col. "

1776 Jl 27 Holman, arrived from Massachusetts."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 50.

29 "Col. Sargent's regiment of Continental troops arrived at Horn's Hook, from Boston, and Col. Hutchinson's from the Same place. Several British ships arrived and joined the fleet."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 51. Col. Webb records that these British arrivals numbered "about twenty large Ships," and that these with the others which have come in for several days past, have troops on Board and are supposed to be part of Lord Howe's fleet, with the Foreigners."—S. B. Webb's Corresp. and Jour., I: 157. The first division of Hessians did not actually arrive until Aug. 11 (q. v.). The British officer, Capt. Robertson, records that "The Fleet seen yesterday came up the Narrows about 2 °Clock, they are the L. Horse from Halifax & two Transports of Foreigners." —Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Wm. Davidson notifies the public that he has "opened the noted Wind-Mill, near the one Mile Stone in the Bowery-Lane, and will give constant attendance; and will grind Wheat, Corn, Oats, Ginger, &c at the lowest Prices."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 29, 1776. This was the Bayard windmill which had been erected prior to 1755.—L. M. R. K., III: 961. On July 23, 1781 (q. v.), it was offered for sale.

" "Wanted immediately in the General Hospital, a number of women, who can be recommended for their honesty, to act in the capacity of nurses; and a number of faithful men for the same purpose: Any who incline entering the service in this way will meet with good encouragement by making application to the quarter master of the hospital at King's College, New-York."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 29, 1776.

30 Peter Elting, writing from New York to Capt. Richard Varick, says: "You would be surprised to se what Number of Empty houses [t]here are in this place, Verry few of the inhabitants Remain in town that are not ingaged in the Service. . . .

"Great preparations are making here With Shiver de freeses and Vessels to stop up the Channel [see Je 25], & sundry fire ships preparing. two Brigs are Ready, somthing great will Be attempted soon, five or seven Rogallies [row galleys—see Ag 7] are already come down from the Eastward two are built here that will carry one 32 Pounder Each, One of them quite and the other Nearly finished, the fleet Remains Verry Quiet, But the men of the two menwar Up the River have a small brush Once in a While with our Guards long the River."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 103–4.

Summer This summer, the mansion of James de Lancey, in the Bowery Division of the Out Ward (see L. M. R. K., III: 949), is said to have been occupied as a hospital for the American troops. Subsequently, during the war, the British troops occupied it for the same purpose.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. City during the Rev. War, II: 544. No corroboration of this statement has been found.

Aug. — While the English fleet lay above the Narrows, north of Staten Island, Ezra Lee, a sergeant in the American army, attempted to destroy the ships of war by attacking them with a submarine machine, which had been invented and constructed by David Bushnell, a native of Saybrook. Bushnell's device was the first of its kind. The attempts to operate it against hostile ships failed, however, both at that point and later off Bloomingdale in the North River.

Charles Griswold obtained from Lee, some years later, when the latter was a resident of Lyme, Conn., a description of the submarine torpedo and of the attack, and sent it to Prof. Benjamin Silliman, of Yale College, Feb. 21, 1820, under the title "Submarine Navigation." This was published by Silliman in a magazine which he conducted, The Am. Jour. of Science, and Arts (Nov., 1820), II: 94. In view of the interesting light thrown on American mechanical ingenuity at this early date, it appears fitting to reprint in full from this source Griswold's detailed description of the Bushnell machine, which was the unsuccessful pioneer in this mode of warfare. The account is as follows:

"If the idea of submarine warfare had ever occurred to any one, before the epoch of Bushnell's invention, yet it may be safely stated, that no ideas but his own ever came to any practical results. To him, I believe, the whole merit of this invention is unanimously agreed to belong.

". . . all the information contained in the following pages, has been received from the only person in existence possessed of that information, and who was the very same that first embarked in this novel and perilous navigation.

Aug. — "Mr. Ezra Lee, first a sergeant and afterwards an ensign in the revolutionary army, a respectable, worthy, and elderly citizen of this town, is the person to whom I have alluded; to him was committed the first essay for destroying a hostile ship by submarine explosion, and upon his statements an implicit reliance may be placed.

"Considering Bushnell's machine as the first of its kind, I think it will be pronounced to be remarkably complete throughout in its construction, and that such an invention furnishes evidence of those resources and creative powers which must rank him as a mechanical genius of the first order.

.

"Bushnell's machine was composed of several pieces of large oak timber, scooped out and fitted together, and its shape my informer compares to that of a round clam. It was bound around thoroughly with iron bands, the seams were corked, and the whole was smeared with tar, so as to prevent the possibility of the admission of water to the inside.

"It was of a capacity to contain one engineer, who might stand or sit, and enjoy sufficient elbow room for its proper management.

"The top or head was made of a metallic composition, exactly suited to the body, so as to be water-tight; this opened upon hinges, and formed the entrance to the machine. Six small pieces of thick glass were inserted in this head, for the admission of light: in a clear day and clear sea-water, says my informer, he could see to read at the depth of three fathoms. To keep it upright and properly balanced, seven hundred pounds of lead were fastened to the bottom, two hundred pounds of which were so contrived as to be discharged at any moment, to increase the buoyancy of the machine.

"But to enable the navigator when under water, to rise or sink at pleasure, there were two forcing pumps, by which water could be pressed out at the bottom; and also a spring, by applying the foot to which, a passage was formed for the admission of water. If the pumps should get deranged, then resort was had to letting off the lead ballast from the bottom.

"The navigator steered by a rudder, the tiller of which passed through the back of the machine at a water joint, and in one side was fixed a small pocket compass, with two pieces of shining wood, (sometimes called foxfire,) crossed upon its north point, and a single piece upon the last point. In the night, when no light entered through the head, this compass thus lighted, was all that served to guide the helmsman in his course.

"The ingenious inventor also provided a method for determining the depth of water at which the machine might at any time be. This was achieved by means of a glass tube, twelve inches in length, and about four in diameter, which was also attached to the side of the machine: this tube enclosed a piece of cork, that rose with the descent of the machine, and fell with its ascent, and one inch rise of the cork denoted a depth of about one fathom. The principle upon which such a result was produced, and also the mechanical contrivance of this tube, entirely escaped the observation of Mr. Lee, amidst the hurry and constant anxiety attendant upon such perilous navigation.

"But not the least ingenious part of this curious machine, was that by which the horizontal motion was communicated to it. This object was effected by means of two oars or paddles, formed precisely like the arms of a wind-mill, which revolved perpendicularly upon an axletree that projected in front; this axletree passed into the machine at a water joint, and was furnished with a crank, by which it was turned: the navigator being seated inside, with one hand laboured at the crank, and with the other steered with the tiller.

"The effect of paddles so constructed, and turned in the manner stated, by propelling or rather drawing a body after them under water, will readily occur to any one without explanation.

"These paddles were but twelve inches long, and about four wide. Two smaller paddles of the same description, also projected near the head, provided with a crank inside, by which the ascent of the machine could be assisted.

"By vigorous turning of the crank, says my informer, the machine could be propelled at the rate of about three miles an hour in still water. When beyond the reach of danger, or observation of an enemy, the machine was suffered to float with its head just rising from the water's surface, and while in this situation, air was constantly admitted through three small orifices in the head, which were closed when a descent was commenced.

"The efficient part of this machine of devastation, its magazine, 1776 Aug. — remains to be spoken of. This was separate and distinct from the machine. It was shaped like an egg, and like the machine itself, was composed of solid pieces of oak scooped out, and in the same manner fitted together, and secured by iron bands, &c. One hundred and thirty pounds of gun powder, a clock, and a gun lock, provided with a good flint that would not miss fire, were the apparatus which it enclosed. This machine was attached to the back of the machine, a little above the rudder, by means of a screw, one end of which passed quite into the magazine, and there operated as a stop upon the movements of the clock, whilst its other end entered the machine. This screw could be withdrawn from the magazine, by which the latter was immediately detached, and the clock commenced going. The clock was set for running twenty or thirty minutes, at the end of which time, the lock struck, and fired the powder, and in the mean time the adventurer effected his escape.

"But the most difficult point of all to be gained, was to fasten this magazine to the bottom of the ship. Here a difficulty arose, which, and which alone, will appear in the ensuing narrative, defeated the successful operations of this warlike apparatus.

"Mr. Bushnell's contrivance was this—A very sharp iron screw was made to pass out from the top of the machine, communicating inside by a water joint; it was provided with a crank at its lower end, by which the engineer was to force it into the ship's bottom: this screw was next to be disengaged from the machine, and left adhering to the ship's bottom. A line leading from this screw to the magazine, kept the latter in its destined position for blowing up the vessel."

Mr. Griswold then describes "the first attempt that was made to destroy a ship of war, all the facts of which," he repeats, he "received from the bold adventurer himself.

"It was in the month of August, 1776, when Admiral Howe lay with a formidable British fleet in New-York bay, a little above the Narrows, and a numerous British force upon Staten Island, commanded by General Howe, threatened annihilation to the troops under Washington, that Mr. Bushnell requested General Parsons of the American army, to furnish him with two or three men to learn the navigation of his new machine, with a view of destroying some of the enemy's shipping.

"Gen. Parsons immediately sent for Lee, then a sergeant and two others, who had offered their services to go on board of a fire ship; and on Bushnell's request being made known to them, they enlisted themselves under him for this novel piece of service. The party went up into Long Island Sound with the machine, and made various experiments with it in the different harbors along shore, and after having become pretty thoroughly acquainted with the mode of navigating it, they returned through the Sound; but during their absence, the enemy had got possession of Long-Island and Governor's-Island. They therefore had the machine conveyed by land across from New-Rochelle to the Hudson river, and afterwards arrived with it at New-York.

"The British fleet now lay to the north of Staten-Island with a large number of transports, and were the objects against which this new mode of warfare was destined to act; the first serene night was fixed upon for the execution of this perilous enterprise, and sergeant Lee was to be the engineer. After the lapse of a few days, a favorable night arrived, and at 11 o'clock, a party embarked in two or three whale boats, with Bushnell's machine in tow. They rowed down as near the fleet as they dared, when sergeant Lee entered the machine, was cast off, and the boats returned.

"Lee now found the ebb tide rather too strong, and before he was aware, had drifted him down past the men of war; he however immediately got the machine about, and by hard labour at the crank for the space of five glasses by the ship's bells, or two and a half hours, he arrived under the stern of one of the ships at about slack water. Day was now dawned, and by the light of the moon he could see the people on board, and heard their conversation. This was the moment for diving: he accordingly closed up overhead, let in water, and descended under the ship's bottom.

"He now applied the screw, and did all in his power to make it enter, but owing probably in part to the ship's copper, and the want of an adequate pressure, to enable the screw to get a hold upon the bottom, his attempts all failed; at each essay the machine rebounded from the ship's bottom, not having sufficient power to resist the impulse thus given to it. [Footnote: "It yet remains a problem (1820), whether the difficulty here spoken of will ever be fully obviated. Mr. Fulton's torpedoes were never fairly brought to the test of experiment, though he and his friends entertained perfect confidence that they would not be found defective in any of their operations."] Aug. —

"He next paddled along to a different part of her bottom, but in this manoeuvre he made a deviation, and instantly arose to the water's surface on the east side of the ship, exposed to the increasing light of the morning, and in imminent hazard of being discovered. He immediately made another descent, with a view of making one more trial, but the fast approach of day, which would expose him to the enemy's boats, and render his escape difficult, if not impossible, deterred him; and he concluded that the best generalship would be to commence an immediate retreat.

"He now had before him a distance of more than four miles to traverse, but the tide was favourable. At Governor's-Island great danger awaited him, for his compass having got out of order, he was under the necessity of looking out from the top of the machine very frequently to ascertain his course, and at best made a very irregular zig-zag track.

"The soldiers at Governor's-Island espied the machine, and curiosity drew several hundreds upon the parapet to watch its motions. At last a party came down to the beach, shoved off a barge, and rowed towards it. At that moment sergeant Lee thought he saw his certain destruction, and as a last act of defence, let go the magazine, expecting that they would seize that likewise, and thus all would be blown to atoms together.

"Providence however otherwise directed it: the enemy, after approaching within fifty or sixty yards of the machine, and seeing the magazine detached, began to suspect a yankee trick, took alarm and returned to the island.

"Approaching the city, he soon made a signal, the boats came to him and brought him safe and sound to the shore. The magazine in the mean time had drifted past Governor's-Island into the East river, where it exploded with tremendous violence, throwing large columns of water and pieces of wood that composed it high into the air. Gen. Putnam, with many other officers, stood on the shore spectators of this explosion.

"In a few days the American army evacuated New-York, and the machine was taken up the North river. Another attempt was afterwards made by Lee upon a frigate that lay opposite Bloomingdale [see Sept. 5]: his object now was to fasten the magazine to the stern of the ship, close at the water's edge. But while attempting this, the watch discovered him, raised an alarm, and compelled him to abandon his enterprise. He then endeavoured to get under the frigate's bottom, but in this he failed, having descended too deep. This terminated his experiments."—Am. Jour. of Science, and Arts (conducted by Benjamin Silliman, New Haven, Nov., 1820), II: 94–100.

See also the account of Bushnell's torpedo and the attempt against the "Eagle," given by James Thacher, M.D., under date of Oct., 1776, in A Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War (1823), 75–76, 146–50. Thacher also describes later attempts with this invention against British shipping off New London; also the use of kegs charged with powder, set afloat in the Delaware River in Dec., 1777, above the British shipping anchored there. The latter incident was the famous "Battle of the Kegs."

For a brief reference to Bushnell's career, and observations made concerning the "torpedo" by Henry L. Abbot (in charge of the Engineer School of Application at Willett's Point, L. I., in 1882), and by Lieut. F. M. Barber, see Mag. Am. Hist. (1882), VIII: 764–65. Lieut. Barber's comment was that Bushnell's "submarine torpedo" was "the most perfect thing of its kind that has ever been constructed, either before or since the time of Bushnell." See, further, S 5.

"This Morning a Fleet appeared & got in to An Anchor in the Even^{g} where the rest of the Ships are.—it proved to be Gen^{l} Clinton from South Carolina w^{t} 8 Reg^{ts} & 150 Art:^{y}—5 Eng^{rs} join'd us w^{t} that Army."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Winsor, VI: 326. Kemble states that "Lieut. Generals Clinton and Cornwallis, and Major General Vaughan, with seven Regiments from Charles Town, South Carolina," arrived.—Kemble's Jour., 83. 1

On this day "Glover's regiment arrived from the eastward."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 51. 2

The "Convention of the Representatives of the State of New-York," meeting at Harlem, resolves "That the twenty-seventh day of August instant, be kept throughout this State, as a day of fasting humiliation and prayer to Almighty God, for the imploring his "

1776 Aug. 2 divine assistance in the organization and establishment of a form of government for the security and perpetuation of the civil and religious rights and liberties of mankind, and to supplicate his further protection in the war which now rages throughout America." —Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 554.

" The convention also resolves: "That all quit-rents, formerly due and payable to the King of Great-Britain, within this State, are now due and owing to this Convention or such future government as may be hereafter established in this State."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 554.

" The committee of safety passes a resolution "That no lambs be killed and exposed to sale in any market of this city and county." —N. Y. Packet, Ag 2, 1776.

3 Robertson records that the British on Staten Island "heard a firing of Cannon up the North River."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On Aug. 6, he added: "Understand the firing we heard in the North R: the 3d was an Attack made by the Rebels in 5 Gondolas & Arm'd Vessels on the Phœnix & Rose when they were repulsed with loss, two are said to be sunk and that they likewise silenced a Batte ry on the shore & sent some Boats & brought the Cannon off." —Ibid.

Wm. Smith's observation is: "The Phoenix and Rose mean to escape and join the Fleet at Staten Island—The River was nearly obstructed off the North End of N York Island & Preparations made to set them on Fire. The Phoenix got aground in Tappan Bay above Fort Washington."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. See also Kemble's Jour., 83. For the attack on them, and reference to the Atlantic Neptune view of that event, see Aug. 16.

4 Capt. Robertson writes that "about 20 Sail come in, a few Guards, Hessians & Highlanders—Saw sev[l] large hulks in the North River."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

5 "The Post Office Is removed to the House lately occupied by Mrs. Ferrara, in Maiden-Lane, about Midway between the Fly-Market and the Broadway."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 5, 1776. Apparently, it did not long remain here.—See O 6.

" There is stolen "out of Christ Church, (occupied by the German Lutheran congregation in this city,) a red silk damask fringed hanging for the pulpit and communion table," etc. A reward for the discovery of the thief, and recovery of the articles, is offered by the vestry of the church or by David Grim, "at the sign of the Unicorn, the upper end of William Street."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 15, 1776.

6 The provincial convention directs that a letter be sent to John Berrian, chairman of the committee of safety, requesting that he call upon Pres. Moore of "the College of New York" (King's College), or such governour of the college as may have the care of its telescope, and request its delivery to "his Excellency General Washington." In case Berrian does not obtain it, he is requested to "cause the said telescope to be taken out of the City Hall" in the presence of himself and some others of the committee, and to deliver it.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 559. The next day, Berrian and Henry Wilmot wrote to the convention that they had readily obtained the telescope by applying to the Rev. Mr. Inglis, and delivered it to an aide-de-camp whom Washington had appointed to receive it. They also reported that "they had procured all the books and papers belonging to the Receiver General's office, and sent them under a guard by Lieut. Thomas Lawrence."—Ibid., I: 561. A paragraph in a letter of this date from the convention to Washington, drafted by John R. Livingston, states that the telescope would be sent to Washington on a suggestion that it "would be of use in discovering the arrangements and operations of the enemy," and with the "hope that it may in some measure contribute to the furthering your designs."—Ibid., 557–58. The college building having been occupied by the American troops for a hospital, the books, apparatus, etc., had been deposited in the city hall.—See Ap 4, 6, Je 4, 1776.

" Comfort Sands publishes a notice that he is appointed by the convention of the state of New York to be "General Auditor of all accounts against the State," and requests that such demands be sent to Gerard Bancker, "at the House of the Widow McGown's in Harlem."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 12, 1776.

8 This is the second Thursday in August, which was appointed, by the "Rev. Synod of New-York and Philadelphia, at their Meeting in May last," for a "Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer, to Almighty God, by all the Congregations under their Care, on Account of the present oppressed and bleeding State of our Country."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 1, 1776. Aug. 8

9 The building of Fort Washington is commenced, having been "ordered by a council of officers at the earnest solicitation of General Putnam. It was a five-sided earthwork, without casemates or bomb-proofs."—Mag. Am. Hist., VI: 103. Lossing states that Washington assisted in the original survey of it on June 7, 1776.—Pictorial Field Book of the Rev., II: 800. After its capture by the British its name was changed to Fort Knyphausen, which it retained during the remainder of the war.—See Pl. 46, Vol. I.

" Solomon Drowne, M.D., of the general hospital, states, in a letter from New York, that his pay has been increased, in consequence of a petition to congress, to one dollar per day. "The Pay wou'd be no Inducement to stay a moment in this shocking Place, at the Expense of Health. . . . The Air of the whole City seems infected. In almost every street there is a horrid smell."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 104–5.

10 "A very large float was carried from Town to be sunk in the North River, the passage of which the Rebels are endeavouring to stop in such a manner as to oblige our Ships to come nearer their Batteries in their Course up. All accounts concur in saying that the Rebels are very Sickly in the Town of New York. Late Accounts say there are 3,000 Men on Long Island Heights."—Kemble's Jour., 83.

11 "The First division of Hessian Troops under Genl de Heister arrived at Sandy hook, and landed the 16th on Staten Island."—From "Journal of the Operations of the American Army under General Sir William Howe" (transcript in L. of C., from original in Brit. Museum). See also Kemble's Jour., 83–84, which shows Aug. 15, as the date of the landing of the first division at Staten Id. As explained by Lowell (Edw. J.), this first division, about 8,000 strong, was under command of Lieut. Gen. Philip von Heister. After the arrival of the Hessians, the army collected at this rendezvous, under Gen. Sir William Howe, numbered between 25,000 and 30,000 soldiers, supported by the fleet under Vice Admiral Lord Viscount Howe, Sir William's brother.—The Hessians (1884), 58.

Lieut. Hinrich, in a letter of Sept. 18, describes his arrival from Halifax, probably with a later division, thus: "On the 12th of August, we entered the harbor of New York, or Sandy Hook, and cast anchor off Hendrick's Point. All that could be seen in the harbor was a fleet of 450 sail, and also a number of boats which patrolled the enemy's coasts, both to guard against our fleet being set on fire and to intercept deserters. Just imagine to yourself one of the finest of harbors, in which 1000 ships can ride, and also fancy the actual number of vessels all crowded with human beings, and surrounded at the same time with a vigilant enemy! Think also of our enjoying the finest of weather; and all of these troops, bound upon a mission on the success of which depends the welfare not only of England, but of this powerful and proud country; and, again, remember that we are engaged upon an undertaking on which the eyes of the whole world are now fixed. . . ." He describes Staten Island, and Long Island, continuing his narrative with the landing on Aug. 22 (q. v.).—Letters of Brunswick and Hessian Officers (Munsell's Hist. Ser., No. 18), 193–95.

" A British officer writes from Long Island to a friend in Edinburgh: "We have a fine view of New York from this place, which we expect soon to see in flames."—Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 43.

12 "This day The Fleet from England under Sr Chas Hotham—wt the Guards & Forreigners came into the Harbor."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On the 13th, "the 1st & 5th Brigades embarked the Grenadiers took the Qrs of the 1st from Richmond—& the Forreigners encamped where the 5th were."—Ibid.

13 The provincial convention resolves that Gen. Washington be "empowered to apply the following houses, to wit; Mr. Apthorpe's, Oliver Delancey's and Robt. Bayard's, at Bloomingdale; Wm. Bayard's at Greenwich; Mr. Watts's near Kipp's Bay; Robert Murray's on Incklam Bergh; Mr. William Mc Adams and the houses and buildings (occupied by Mr. Watson) near the old glass house; Nichs. Stuyvesandt's, Peter Stuyvesandt's, Mr. Elliot's, Mr. Horsemanden's, commonly called Frogg Hall, widow Leake's near Kipp's Bay; for the use of the general hospital of the American Army."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 568.

" England's attitude on the reception of the news of the Declaration of Independence is shown in a report made on this day by Garnier, the French minister to England. He says (translated):

1776 Aug. 13 "General Howe writes that Congress has declared the independence of the united Colonies. It is known also that Congress has formally declared war on Great Britain, and that this declaration is stated in twenty three articles in which the reasons are deduced which have determined them to adopt this course. But the Government has not thought it necessary to take notice of it, and indeed I do not see that this uprising [levée de bouclier] causes any sensation here [London]."—Doniol, Participation de la France à l'Etablissement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, I: 561.

" A London news item reads: "The People of New York, we are told, have in vain endeavoured to lay a Chain across the River, to prevent Vessels coming up to that City; for the Tide runs so strong there, that no Buoy could float the Weight of Iron which a proper Chain would require; they have therefore laid aside that Design, and have planted Batteries at the Entrance of both the Rivers to answer that Purpose."—St. James's Chron., Ag 10–13, 1776.

14 Tryon, still on the "Dutchess of Gordon," off Staten Island, writes to Lord Germain: "The confederate Colonies have declared themselves independent States: Enclosed is a printed copy of their Declaration of Independency, which was published through the streets of New York the middle of last month, where the King's Statue has been demolished, as well as the King's Arms in the City Hall, the established churches shut up, & every Vistage of Royalty, as far as has been in the power of the Rebels, done away. The persons of the Mayors of the Cities of York and Albany, Judges, Counsellors, Magistrates and principal gentlemen of the Country that are not in rebellion seized and secured, and even down to the meanest planters persecuted and tyrannized over.

"The whole armament destined for this part of America, except the last division of the Hessians, being now assembled here, I expect, by the courage and strength of this noble Army, tyranny will be crushed and legal government restored."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 683–84.

" Kemble records: "Lord Dunmore arrived. Lord William Campbell also arrived about the same time, or the day or two before."—Kemble's Jour., 84.

16 Garnier writes from London to the count of Vergennes (translated): "I have the honor to send you, My Lord, the translation of the act of the 4th of July by which the Colonies declared themselves independent under the title of the United States of America. Others will appreciate more than I the value of the motives upon which this declaration is based. This is the fact in which I think we will take more interest. It is between two armies and in sight of a formidable fleet that the Colonies unanimously declare war on Great Britain; for this act may be called a declaration of war. . . If the resistance of the Americans is successful, this ever memorable period will reduce England to the point of no longer being a subject of disquietude for France, whose importance on the continent of Europe should be augmented in proportion to the weakening of the British Empire. . . . Lord Germain yesterday said ironically to the Spanish ambassador in speaking of the act of independence of the American States, that now the other powers could make treaties of commerce and alliance with them, but that he was constantly waiting for the news that they had changed their tone. Meanwhile, it seems to me it would be well for him to take a different tone himself, for if we should put into effect this innocent jest, England, I think, would not find it a laughing matter."—Doniol, Participation de la France à l'Etablissement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, I: 585–86.

" On this day two fire-ships, "commanded by Capts. Fosdyke and Thomas, (Gentlemen Volunteers of Rank in the Army of the United States) proceeded up the North-River with Intent to give a suitable Warming to those piratical Gentry that have infested it since the 12th of July last [q. v.]. The night was dark and favourable to the Design, and the Enemy did not perceive our Vessels till they were near aboard of them.—Capt. Fosdyke grappled the Phoenix, but the Fire not communicating so soon as was expected, she disentangled herself in about 20 Minutes, after sustaining considerable Damage in her Rigging.—Capt. Thomas fell on board one of the Tenders, which was soon consumed; and we are truly sorry to inform the Public this intrepid Commander is yet missing.—This gallant Enterprize struck so great a panic upon the Enemy, that they thought it prudent to quit their Station; and Yesterday, taking Advantage of a fresh Wind at S. E. attended with considerable Rain, they run the Gauntlet, through a great Number of well directed Shot from our Batteries in and near this City, which undoubtedly must have damaged them much. Our Gallies played smartly, and followed the Ships a considerable Distance into the Bay. The Enemy's Fire seemed to be mostly directed upon the City, as the Tops of the Houses were crouded with Spectators, but very little Damage was done to the Buildings, nor any Lives lost upon the Occasion."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 19, 1776. Cf. Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. See also descrip. of Pl. 45-a, I: 352–53; and Ag 3. Aug. 16

17 Lord Drummond writes to Gen. Washington as follows:

"Sir,

"Being deeply interested in the welfare of America, I think it my duty to communicate a matter of intelligence, which I flatter myself may be rendered conducive to the restoration of a desirable peace. And in this view I request your Excellency's permission to land at New-York, to go directly to Philadelphia, in order to lay the same before the General Congress.

"In the course of a conversation I have had with Lord Howe, I perceive that the powers he is vested with, as well as his disposition for establishing an equitable and permanent peace, are altogether misunderstood by the Colonies.

"For in consequence of a sketch of some propositions being offered for his consideration, he very frankly assured me, he was willing to confer upon these grounds with any gentlemen of the greatest influence in this country.

"As I am at liberty to declare his sentiments, I have the honour to enclose for your Excellency's information, a copy of my correspondence with his Lordship, and of the propositions referred to in his letter, which are the motives of my present request.

"Attending in the boat to be indulged with your answer, I have the honour to be your Excellency's most humble servant, Drummond."

The papers enclosed in this letter included, first, a letter of Drummond to Howe dated Aug. 12, which reads: "I take the liberty of sending inclosed the sketch of propositions referred to in my late conversation with your Lordship; which propositions, I have understood the Colonies were disposed, not many months ago, to make the basis of a reconciliation with Great-Britain."

The second paper was the "Sketch of Propositions communicated to Lord Howe, 12th August, 1776." These "Propositions" were six in number, namely:

"1. That it shall be ascertained, as far as can be determined by calculation, what supply towards the general exigency of the State, each separate colony can furnish, consistent with its ability.

"2. When such supply is thus ascertained, that each colony shall, by acts of its own Assembly, impose such taxes as they shall find expedient for raising of the said supply.

"3. In consideration of the fluctuating state of all young countries, that such taxes may not, in their operations, become partially or accidentally burthensome on the one hand, nor on the other hand gradually become deficient in producing the aid intended by the colonies toward the general exigency of the State, such articles shall be chosen, as the objects of imposition, as they shall deem the most likely to keep pace with the growth or decline of the said colonies.

"4. That these taxes, so imposed, shall, as in the customs, be levied by officers of the appointment of the King; and that a perpetual grant, of the produce of these taxes, shall be made by the respective Assemblies to the Crown of Great Britain.

"5. As the direct means of removing the fatal grounds of this contention, by establishing a security against the apprehended invasion of property by Parliament, formal relinquishment shall be made on the part of Great Britain, of all future claim to taxation over these her colonies.

"6. To remove all future suspicions, from the minds of the Colonists, that under the appearance of regulating commerce, duties may be imposed for the farther purposes of revenue, an application of the produce of all duties, imposed on articles of trade by the British legislature, shall be made towards defraying the expences of collection; and the surplusses in each colony, to be paid into their separate treasuries, and to be subject to the disposal of the respective Houses of Assembly. Drummond."

The third paper was Lord Howe's answer, written from the "Eagle, off Staten-Island, August 15, 1776," in which he said: "I have received the honour of your Lordship's letter of the 12th, inclosing a sketch of the propositions mentioned in your late conversations, which I return herewith.

"As I think they contain matter, that upon a conference and cool discussion, might be wrought into a plan of permanent union, I 1776 Aug. 17 shall with great satisfaction embrace the first opportunity that may be offered upon these grounds, to promote so desirable an event."

Washington replies to Drummond on the same day (17th) as follows: "I have your Lordship's favour of this day, accompanied by papers on subjects of the greatest moment, and deserving the most deliberate consideration.

"I allow much for your Lordship's well meant zeal on such an occasion, but I fear it has transported you beyond that attention to your parole, which comprehends the character of a man of strict honour. How your Lordship can reconcile your past or present conduct, with your engagement, so as to satisfy your own mind, I must submit to your own feelings; but I find myself under the disagreeable necessity of objecting to the mode of negociating proposed while your Lordship's line of conduct appears so exceptionable.

"I shall, by express, forward to Congress your Lordship's letter, and the papers which accompanied it. The result will be communicated as soon as possible. I am sorry to have detained your Lordship so long, but the unavoidable necessity must be my apology."—Penn. Packet (Phila.), S 24, 1776.

The correspondence and papers were forwarded by Washington to congress on the next day (ibid.), and on the 20th, they were read in congress and referred to a committee.—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 672. Subsequently three members of this committee conferred with Howe (see S 11), and reported the result of [the conference to congress on Sept. 17, on which day congress gave orders for the Drummond correspondence to be published.—Ibid., V: 765–67. The Drummond correspondence is printed in a footnote in The Candid Retrospect (see Ja 30, 1781), and Wm. Smith, in comment, says: "It took air, however that the flag brought proposals for a treaty, not only in the American army, but in the New-York Convention then sitting on the island; and to prevent the effect of the rumour it was thought proper to deny it in public orders, which were first shewn at General Washington's head-quarters in draft to two members of the Congress, then attending him upon a message from Haerlem; one of whom has since acted as a Delegate in the Congress at Philadelphia.—It continued a secret till some time afterwards, that a letter had been written and some other papers received."—Candid Retrospect, 18–19 (footnote).

" Washington urges the New York convention to execute some plan for removing women and children from New York to a place of safety.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 347. He writes from headquarters in New York to the provincial congress, describing the situation thus: "When I consider that the city of New York will in all human probability, very soon be the scene of a bloody conflict, I can not but view the great numbers of women, children and infirm persons remaining in it with the most melancholy concern. When the men of war passed up the river, the shrieks and cries of these poor creatures, running every way with their children, was truly distressing; and I fear will have an unhappy effect on the ears and minds of our young and inexperienced soldiery. Can no method be devised for their removal?"—Corresp. Provin. Cong., II: 277. The convention at once resolved that they be removed.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 578; N. Y. Merc., Ag 19, 1776. Washington, on the same day, issued the following announcement: "Whereas a Bombardment and Attack upon the City of New York, by our cruel, and inveterate Enemy, may be hourly expected: And as there are great Number of Women, Children and infirm Persons, yet remaining in the City, whose Continuance will rather be prejudicial than advantageous to the Army, and their Persons exposed to great danger and Hazard: I do therefore recommend it to all such persons, as they value their own safety and preservation, to remove with all Expedition, out of the said Town, at this critical Period,—trusting, that with the Blessing of Heaven, upon the American Arms, they may soon return to it in perfect Security. And I do enjoin and require, all the Officers and Soldiers in the Army, under my command, to forward and assist such persons in their Compliance with this Recommendation."—Broadside, in N. Y. H. S. See Pl. 47-a, Vol. V.

" So that the communication between New York and Long Island shall not be obstructed by the enemy's ships, Congress resolves: "That Capt. Rutgers and Patrick Dennis, be requested and empowered by this Convention, to stop up the channel between the grand battery and Governor's island in case they shall deem the same practicable, and that this Convention will defray all the charges incident to the execution of this design."—Jour. Provin. Convention, I: 577; Corresp. Provin. Cong., II: 277. See Ag 19.

" A "Gentleman who has escaped from the Provincials at New-York, and joined the Army under General Howe" writes from Staten Island to a correspondent in London: "A few days ago I left our devoted City, where every Means of Defence has been concerted to secure it, and the whole Island of New-York, from an Attack of the Royal Army. Should General Howe succeed in that Enterprise, his Antagonist, Mr. Washington, has provided a Magazine of Pitch, Tar, and Conbustibles, to burn up the City before he shall retreat from his present Station; the Numbers of his Men are daily diminishing; they desert in large Bodies, are sickly, filthy, divided, and unruly; putrid Disorders, the Small-pox in particular, have carried off great Numbers; when I left the City there were six thousand in their Hospitals, to which Use they have converted King's College; they have not now quite 25,000 Men in Arms. Aug. 17

"John Morin Scott is appointed Governor of New-York. . . . The Persecution of the Loyalists continues unremitted: Donald M'Lean, Theophilus Hardenbrook Young Fueter the Silversmith, and Rem Rappalge, have been cruelly rode on Rails, a Practice most painful, dangerous, and till now peculiar to the humane Republicans of New-England. . . . Mr. Washington commands at New-York; his Town Residence is at General Robertson's, on the Broadway, and his Country Seat is at Mr. De Lancey's House in Bowery.

"Mr. John Foxcroft, Postmaster-General, Mr. Dashwood, Mr. Smith Ramage, Messrs. Hugh and Alexander Wallace, and Mr. Abraham Lott, the Treasurer, are committed to Gaol, having refused to take an Oath of Allegiance to the Congress; in short, every one suspected of an hostile Disposition to that Body, are disarmed, and conducted into a damnable Durance, which was the Case of the venerable Chief Justice Horsmanden, who at 80, was hurried into the Country by a Party of Ruffians, but he proved so troublesome on the Journey that they chose to leave him on the Road, without performing the Injunction of the Demagogues . . .

"Some People lately arrived here from Philadelphia, tell us, that Mr. John Dickenson is employed by the Congress in digesting a Code of Laws for the United States of America. We are informed that Mr. John Alsop, one of the New York Delegates, has escaped from the Congress, and is on Long-Island, on his Way to join General Howe; Dr. Peter Middleton, Mr. Theophylact Baetie, Mr. Philip John Livingstone, Sheriff of Duchess County; Mr. John Watts, jun. Recorder of New-York, Mr. Augustus Van Cortlandt, and Messrs. Robert and Samuel Auchmuty are lately arrived in this Island, having narrowly escaped from their Pursuers. . . . A Person just escaped from New-York informs us, that their is again a fresh Hunt for the Friends of Government, who are called Tories. . . . Capt. Archibald Kennedy, of the Royal Navy, is confined in Morris Town, and Governor Franklin, accompanied by that merry Heart David Matthews, Mayor of New-York, now under Sentence of Death for eminent Proofs of Loyalty to his King and the old Constitution, are removed into Connecticut Government, for the better Security of their Persons. . . . The Episcopal Churches in New-York are all shut up, the Prayer-Books burned, and the Ministers scattered abroad, in this and the neighbouring Provinces. [See O 31.]

"It is now the Puritans high Holiday Season, and they enjoy it with Rapture all over the Continent: Their Behaviour exactly assimilates the Manners of the King-killing Tribe during the English grand Rebellion; but perhaps they may find an Alteration in their Spirits from the Execution of a Plan for a general Attack of the Island of New-York, &c. for which Preparations are now making. The whole Army is on Shipboard. General Clinton . . . is to land and attack the Enemy's Posts on Long Island. Lord Cornwallis is on the Point of Departure, with a considerable Detachment of Troops, round Long Island, and to land at New Rochelle, near West Chester; and General Howe, with the main Body of the Army, to proceed up the North River, and make a Descent in West Chester County, as nearly opposite as possible to the Place where Lord Cornwallis may secure a landing. Should General Howe succeed in this Arrangement, it will be difficult for Mr. Washington to move from the Island of New-York; so that a general Engagement may be expected. . . .

"We are told that Mr. Washington's Magazines are all in Cortlandt's Manor; to get Possession of them must surely be an Object of Gen. Howe's serious Attention, and an additional Inducement to attempt a Landing in the Rear of the Provincial Forces."—St. James's Chron. (London), O 3–5, 1776.

Regarding the report that Washington intended to burn the city, see Ag 22, 1776.

1776 Aug. 17 An item in a London paper reads: "The Army under General Washington has been indefatigable in constructing Redoubts, throwing up Entrenchments, and otherwise strengthening Posts already by Nature very advantageous and defensible, particularly at Fort George, near Trinity Church; on the Eminence at Mr. Harrison's Brewhouse, at King's-Bridge; from Crown-Point at Corlaer's Hook, through the Estate of Mr. De Lancey of the Bowery, down to the North River; making the most of Mr. Nicholas Bayard's Hill, at Mr. Cruger's Wharf, and several other Places within the City. On Long Island, where they have 5,000 Men, from the Wallebot down to Redhook; on Governor's Island, and also at Pole's Hook. The Accounts given of the Numbers of the whole Army upon the Island of New-York vary very much; some pronounce them 12, 14, and others from 24 to 30,000 Men."—St. James's Chron. (London), Ag 15–17, 1776.

18 Kemble records: "Early in the morning a smart Cannonade gave us the Idea of the Ships coming down the River, verified by their Appearance shortly after; being obliged by the sinking of Rafts and hulks from keeping the mid Channel, they were under a necessity of going near the York Shore, but received no Damage, one Man, only, being Wounded by a Splinter. Every thing else quiet; the Orders of the day indicate a Movement very soon. The Troops, most of them, being to Embark."—Kemble's Jour., 84.

Robertson refers to the day's events thus: "This morning the Phoenix & Rose men of War w^{t} two tenders came down to the Fleet after hav^{g} pass'd the fire of all their Batterys—in w^{h} the Rose had two men wounded—The Night of the 16th [q. v.] They were Attack'd by two fire Ships—The Rose's Tender was burnt & the Phoenix narrowly escaped."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

Pastor Shewkirk, describing the affair, says: "Phil. Sypher's experienced a kind preservation. A nine pounder came through the old German church on the Broad Way, into the house they lived in, opposite the Lutheran church, and into the room where they slept; but they were up and out of the room. . . . [The course of the cannon-ball through the house is described.] A thirty-two pounder, supposed coming from the Powlis Hook battery, fell into Sr. Barnard's garden, just before her door. . . ."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776, part 2, 113.

19 A London news item reads: "In the opinion of the most impartial politicians, the consequence of the American dispute will be a general war throughout Europe. France and Spain will most assuredly conclude a treaty with America. This will occasion a rupture with those powers. England will claim the assistance of Russia, Prussia, and her other allies. Some will explain away the meaning of certain passages in treaties, and exclude themselves from interfering. Others will feebly lend their aid. The rupture will be consequential, the event important. Let Britain, deprived of her colonies, bereft of her commerce, and of course impoverished in her revenue, look to the probability of success!"—Kentish Gaz. (Canterbury), Ag 17–21, 1776.

" "Troops from all Quarters have been daily arriving to our Assistance . . . and Yesterday Afternoon 14 Sail of Transports, full of hearty Troops, arrived here from the Eastward, so that we can with great Truth assert, that we have now an Army in and about this City, of at least 70,000 Men.

"Every Tide we expect an Attack will be made on this City from the piratical Fleet at Staten-Island."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 19, 1776.

" An entire regiment is employed "to load a number of vessels with stones, for to sink between the grand battery and Governor's Island [see Ag 17], which they will effect in a day or two."—New York news in Penn. Jour. (Phila.), Ag 21, 1776.

20 Capt. Nathan Hale writes from New York to his brother: "For about 6 or 8 days the enemy have been expected hourly, whenever the wind and tide in the least favored. We keep a particular look out for them this morning. The place and manner of attack time must determine. The event we leave to Heaven. Thanks to God! we have had time for compleating our works and receiving reenforcements. The militia of Connecticut ordered this way are mostly arrived. Col. Ward's Reg^{t} has got in. Troops from the Southward are daily coming. We hope, under God, to give a good account of the Enemy whenever they choose to make the last appeal.

"Last Friday night [see Ag 16], two of our fire vessels (a Sloop and a Schooner) made an attempt upon the shipping up the River. The night was too dark, the wind too slack for the attempt. The Schooner which was intended for one of the Ships had got by before she discovered them; but as Providence would have it, she run athwart a bomb-catch which she quickly burned. The Sloop by the light of the fire discovered the Phoenix—but rather too late—however, she made shift to grapple her, but the wind not proving sufficient to bring her close along side or drive the flames immediately on board, the Phoenix after much difficulty got her clear by cutting her own rigging."—Stuart, Life of Capt. Nathan Hale, the Martyr-Spy of the Am. Rev. (1856), 70-71. (In Johnston's Campagin of 1776, part 2, 131-32, the words "five vessels" should be "fire vessels," in the transcription of this text.

Aug. 20

21 Smith writes: "The Debt of this colony is immense—

We have unsunk old Paper Currency—	[£] 70,000:0:0
Loan Office Bills outstanding—	120,
The Prov: Congress have emitted before June	110
Our Proportion of the Continental Paper	300
Now emitting in this Province as M^{r} Livingston informs me 50—or	60
	660,000:0:0

"I don't know the condition of other Colonies but the grand congress must soon borrow in their own Dollars and impose Taxes—an Hour much to be dreaded for the Common People may be converted by their Burdens when they feel them grow heavy.

"A vast Expence must be incurred to provide Winter Quarters especially if the Regulars are divided between N Y Long Island Staten Island & the Jersey shore opposite to the City.

"Both Parties must therefore begin to think of Treating for a Cessation of arms if the Howes have any Powers for that Purpose."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" Kemble records: "Embarkation of the whole Troops [begun on the 18th, q. v.] compleated. Embark about Eleven thousand eight hundred and fifty English Foot, Near five hundred Artillery and about 120 Light Horse, with fifteen hundred Foreigners under Col. Donop."—Kemble's Jour., 84.

22 Washington orders the disposition of the troops of Maj.-Gen. Heath, "into the flat grounds of Haerlem," and along "a road out of the Haerlem flat lands that leads up to the hills and continues down the North River by Bloomingdale, Delancey's, &c."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 360.

" The "ministerial troops" (British) land "between New-Utrecht and Gravesend on Long Island to the number of 7000 men." It is said "they have since increased to 13000, are encamped and employed in throwing up breast-works." The patriots "are not idle, having taken possession of the adjacent hills, where they are strongly fortifying themselves to prevent the enemy's troops penetrating further into the island." On the following day, the Americans "endeavoured to force their march, but were repulsed with loss."—Const. Gaz., Ag 24, 1776; Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 362–64; Lieut. Hinrich's letter in Munsell's Hist. Ser. (Albany, 1891), 195; Die Neuesten Staatsbegebenheiten (1777), 110–16 (translated in Lowell's The Hessians, chap. 6); Winsor, VI: 276, 376. Kemble records in his Journal that the movement was made "without the smallest opposition," and that total force of 14,700 was "on the Shore by 12 o'Clock." The advance under Clinton and Cornwallis consisted of "the reserve, composed of Grenadiers, 42d. and 33d. Regiments with part of the Light Infantry, immediately proceeded to Flat Bush, with 1,500 Hessians under Col. Donop, where they had some Skirmishing with the Rebels from the Heights leading to the Brookland Ferry, and a few men Killed and Wounded, but of no consequence. Part of the Light Infantry and 71st. took post at Flat Lands Church. The rest of our Army, extending from Gravesend to New Utrecht, remained in that position till the 26th" (q. v.).—Kemble's Jour., 85.

On the same day, Jabez Fitch, a lieutenant in the Connecticut forces at "N. York Camp," wrote in his diary: "I this Forenoon, Observ'd several peculiar Smoaks, arising at Different places on Long Island, we were also Informed that y^{e} Regulars had Landed somewhere near y^{e} Narrows and at about Noon y^{e} Alarm Guns were Fired at Red hook, & at Fort Sterling—About 2 °Clock our Officers were chiefly together at L^{t} Hales tent, had considerable Banter &c. . . .

"At About 4 o'Clock we Rec^{d} Orders for our Reg^{t} to repair Imediately to Long Island; Accordingly we soon Cross'd East River . . . March^{d} forward about a Mile where we halted, & there Wated for Orders. . . .

"About Sunset we March'd forward, & pass'd y^{e} Lines or 1776 Aug. 22 Breast Work, soon after which we were Ordered to Load our pieces, Our Regt & Col Tylers . . . took Post in a large Wood, where we spent ye Night; not a Man Allowed to Sleep a Wink, or put his Pies [gun] out of his hand."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 1–2, in N. Y. P. L.

" The provincial convention at Harlem approves "A draft of a Letter to his Excellency General Washington, relative to a report that the City of New-York was to be burnt if the Troops left it." The letter is as follows:

"Sir: The Convention of this State have received information from one of the Deputies of the City and County of New-York of a report prevailing amongst the Army, 'that if the fortune of war should oblige our troops to abandon that city, it should be immediately burnt by the retreating soldiery, and that any man is authorized to set it on fire.'

"The Convention will cheerfully submit to the fatal necessity of destroying that valuable city whenever your Excellency shall deem it essential to the safety of this State or the general interest of America, yet the duty which they owe to their constituents obliges them to take every possible precaution that twenty thousand inhabitants may not be reduced to misery by the wanton act of an individual. They therefore entreat your Excellency to take such measures in preventing the evil tendency of such a report as you shall deem most expedient.

. . . "Abm Gates, President."

—5 Am. Arch., I: 1531. A like rumour was prevalent in the British camp (see S 2). On Aug. 23 (q. v.), Washington replied contradicting the report. Subsequently (see S 2), he asked the advice of congress on such a step, and, on Sept. 5 (q. v.), Gen. Greene wrote to him advising it. Congress, however, did not favour it (see S 3).

23 Washington writes to the provincial convention: "I am favoured with yours of the 22d [q. v.] acquainting me with a report now circulating 'that if the American Army should be obliged to retreat from this city, any individual may set it on fire.' I can assure you, gentlemen, this report is not founded upon the least authority from me; on the other hand, I am so sensible of the value of such a city, and the consequences of its destruction to many worthy citizens and their families, that nothing but the last necessity, and that such as should justify me to the whole world, would induce me to give orders for that purpose.

"The unwillingness shown by many families to remove, notwithstanding your and my recommendation, may, perhaps, have led some persons to propagate the report with honest and innocent intentions; but as your letter first informed me of it, I cannot pretend to say by whom or for what purpose it has been done. As my views with regard to the removal of the women and children have happily coincided with your sentiments, and a Committee appointed to carry them into execution, I submit it to your judgment whether it would not be proper for the Committee to meet immediately in this city, and give notice of their attendance on this business. There are many who anxiously wish to remove, but have no means."—5 Am. Arch., I: 1538.

24 Jabez Fitch's regiment (see Ag 22) joins "Genll Greens Encampment, at Brookline." Fitch says: "There was ye Report of Cannon heard most of ye Day, from Flat Bush (ye place of ye Enimys Randisvoose) Some wounded there were also Bro't into Camp, We are this Day Inform'd yt ye Enimy have Extended their Force more Eastward than what it was Yesterday, & that their Numbers are supos'd to be about 10000, Several Regts Cross'd ye Ferry over onto ye Island this Day, there was also several Regts sent into ye Woods, in Order to Relieve such as had been there thr'o ye Night . . . At about 4 oClock, our Regt was Order'd into ye Meeting house, & a Barn Standing near it, there was also a Comfortable Room provided for ye Officers, We took Possession of ye Same, which was noway Disagreable."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 6–7, in N. Y. P. L.

" A German, Lieut. Col. Zedwitz (see Jl 15, 1775), of Washington's forces in New York, is detected sending a letter to Gov. Tryon, traitorously disclosing Washington's plans and falsely stating that he had seen "four villains at Gen. Washington's house with fourteen bottles of a mixture as black as ink with which they were to poison the Watering place on Staten Island, and were to receive a recompense of £1000 each from the General." He promised to give information to the British for £2,000. In his defense at his court martial on Aug. 26, he confessed writing the letter, but pleaded that it was a trick to reimburse him for previously raising a regiment in Germany for the British. By a "casting vote" he was acquitted.— N. Y. Merc., S 3; Penn. Eve. Post, S 3; Conn. Gaz. (New London), Ag 30, S 4 and 6, 1776. Aug. 24

James Thacher, M. D., commenting on this instance of disloyalty, stated in his journal, under date of Sept. 12, that, while Zedwitz' life was saved "by the casting vote of a militia officer, who pretended some scruples of conscience," he was nevertheless "cashiered, and declared incapable of holding any military office in the service of the United States."—A Military Jour., etc. (1823), 64–65.

The provincial convention resolves that, in case of the invasion of the city and the distressing consequences attending it, "the several committees throughout this State be and they hereby are authorized and required to quarter upon the inhabitants of their respective counties and districts all such unfortunate persons as may, in consequence of the aforesaid invasion, be driven away from their places of abode, paying all possible regard to the conveniences of such inhabitants; and that they do assess moderate prices to be paid to such inhabitants for the persons so quartered on them."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 589. 25

Lord Stirling tells Lieut. Fitch that "he had this Morning view'd five Different Encampments of ye Enimy, on ye Island & yt he Judg'd Each Encampt did not contain much more than a Thousand Men."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 10. There is reason to believe that Washington thought the British movement to Long Island a feint to conceal an attack on Manhattan Id. See letter of Washington to Yates, dated Aug. 28, in Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 277. "

"General de Heister took Post with two Brigades of Hessians at Flatbush, & Lord Cornwallis moved with his Command in the Evening to Flatlands."—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of the "Journal of the Operations of the Am. Army under Gen. Sir Wm. Howe" in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). On the same day Capt. Robertson writes: "Ordered to attend Genl Clinton, Join'd him at 8 in the Evening at flat lands, at 9 we march'd, wt all the Grendrs L. Iy 33d 71st Regts & 17th Light dragoons in order to turn the left flank of the Rebel army who were in posessn of the high Grounds of Brooklyn, that extend all the way most to Jamaica."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). The movements of the American forces on this day are described by a New Englander, one of a body of 100 volunteers under Col. Knowlton that crossed from New Jersey to Long Island to reconnoitre between the British and American lines: "We crossed in flat boats, and marched immediately to the quarters of Generals Washington and Putnam. They were riding about with spy-glasses in their hands, observing the enemy, whose tents were in sight. We spent the night in reconnoitering, without any special incident, excepting that while we were on the point of executing a plan for surrounding a British picket guard, we were fired upon by a party of American Militiamen, who did not understand their duty, and who immediately took to their heels. The firing alarmed the picket, and we failed in our enterprise."—Onderdonk, Battle of Long Id. (scrap-book & MS.), 79–80. Cf. L. I. Hist. Soc., Memoirs, III: 58–59. See also Lossing, Pictorial Field-Book of the Rev., II: chap. 23. 26

The provincial convention being "informed that the Committee, who were appointed for that purpose, cannot proceed in the removal of the Poor from the City of New-York without a supply of cash," it is ordered "That the Treasurer of this State advance to James Beekman, Esq., one of the members of the committee appointed to remove the indigent women and children and infirm persons out of the City of New-York, the sum of £1,000, to enable the said committee to complete the business for which they were appointed."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 589. "

The British engineer Robertson gives the following account of the Battle of Long Island: "at day break we pass'd these heights [see Ag 26] wt out any opposition, About 5 miles East of Bedford, & continued our march towards Bedford & Brooklyn, when we came near to Bedford the Rebels began to fire from the Woods on our left wh continued for some disstce as we march'd on to Brooklyn—ordered to stop the L. Compy of the 23d I joined them & obliged to remain my Communication wt the Genl being cut off—About 9 oClock the Rebels gave way very fast & in their retreat, across a marsh & mill dam Received a heavy fire from our Grinadrs tho' disst—the Lt Horse could not act for a swamp that was in front—At the same time Genl C——n went from Flatlands—Genl Grant march'd from Dennys's wt 2 Brigades to turn the Rebels right Flank & Count Dunkop [Donop] march'd in the Centre 27

1776 Aug. 27 from Flat Bush—Gen^{l} G——t in his march had sev^{l} smart Skirmishes—A Batt^{ln} of our Grenad^{rs} & the 71st were sent on towards Gen^{l} G——t and about 2 in the Afternoon they had a very smart Skirmish in the woods w^{t} the Rebels who were trying to get to the water side to escape—The Hessians likewise fell in w^{t} the flying Party's & they were drove from every Quarter—We lost some Good off^{rs} about 60 men kill'd & about 300 wounded. The Rebels loss was very considerable upwards of 3,000 kill'd Wounded & Prisoners amongst the latter Gen^{l} Sulivan & L^{d} Stirling—They had about 12,000 men on the heights—great Numbers got across the creek into their Works on Brooklyn heights, we were in Possess^{n} of very good Ground within 600 y^{ds} of them & by some mistake in orders had very near Evacuated this ground in the even^{g} we retired a little.—The whole of this days Manœvre was well plann'd & Executed, only more of the Rebels might have been cut off had we push'd on from Brooklyn sooner towards Gen^{l} Grant."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

A newspaper account of the engagement, published in New York, reads: "The English Troops, in three Divisions, taking three different Roads, and the Advantage of the Night, almost surrounded the whole of our Out Parties, who though encircled with more than treble their number, bravely fought their Way through the Enemy, killing great Numbers of them, and brought off some Prisoners. The New York first Battalion behaved with great Bravery. Lord Stirling's brigade suffered the hottest of the Enemy's Fire: . . . they were all surrounded by the Enemy, and had to fight their Way through the Blaze of their Fire.—They fought and fell like Romans! . . . The major Part of Colonel Atlee's and Col. Piper's Regiments are missing. Doctor Davis and his Mate were both taken Prisoners as they were dressing a wounded Person in the Woods. . . . The Generals Stirling and Sullivan are thought to be Prisoners. . . . Our killed, wounded and missing are imagined to be about 1000; but for our Encouragement the missing are hourly coming in. Gen. Grant, of the British Troops, from good Intelligence, is among the killed: His Hat with his Name on it, was found near the dead Body; the Bullet had gone thro' the Hat, and carried some of his grey Hairs with it—Thus fell the Hero, who boasted in the British House of Commons, he would march thro' America with 5000 Men, having only marched five Miles on Long Island with an Army of more than four Times the Number. Our Out-guards have retreated to the main Body of the Army within the Lines. The British Army have two Encampments about a Mile from our Lines, and by their Manœvres, 'tis plain, they mean to attack us by Surprize and storm our Intrenchments. Our men shew the greatest Bravery, and wish them to come to Action."—N. Y. Merc., S 2, 1776; cf. the account given in South Carolina and Am. Gen. Gaz. (Charleston), O 2, 1776, reprinted in L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II, 58–60.

Washington, writing on Sept. 19 to Pres. Powell of the Massachusetts assembly, said: "In respect to the attack . . . , the publick papers will furnish you with accounts nearly true. I shall only add, that . . . we lost about eight hundred men; more than three-fourths of which were taken prisoners. This misfortune happened, in great measure, by two detachments of our people who were posted in two roads leading through a wood, in order to intercept the enemy in their march, suffering a surprise, and making a precipitate retreat, which enabled the enemy to lead a great part of their force against the troops commanded by Lord Stirling, which formed a third detachment, who behaved with great bravery and resolution, charging the enemy and maintaining their posts from about seven or eight o'clock in the morning till two in the afternoon, when they were obliged to attempt a retreat, being surrounded and overpowered by numbers on all sides, and in which many of them were taken. One battalion . . . lost two hundred and fifty-nine men, and the general damage fell upon the regiments from Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, and Colonel Huntington's, of Connecticut."—5 Am. Arch., II: 399–400.

A Philadelphian, writing to a friend in London on Sept. 8, said: "The Defeat of the Provincial Forces at Long Island was in a great Measure owing to the bad Conduct of Lord Stirling, who neglected sending a proper Force for the Defence of the Heights above Flat-Bush, and by that Means afforded Howe an Opportunity of shewing his superior Generalship in surrounding their Lines, instead of attacking them in Front, as was expected. Only one Battalion of Rangers, under the Command of Col. Trail, was left to defend the Pass on the Road to Jamaica Plain, where the grand Attack was made. That gallant young Officer for a long Time made Head against the whole Force of General Clinton's Body of Infantry; but as no Support was sent him, after losing Two-thirds of his Men, and being dangerously wounded himself he made good his Retreat, and joined General Putnam at Brooklyne. General Sullivan, Col. Smith and Major Guy behaved with great Bravery. Aug. 27

"The Men were so reduced by the Camp Fever and Flux which had prevailed among them, that it is not to be wondered Long Island proved an easy Conquest.

"General Washington is at Kingsbridge; the Grand Army under his Command consists of about 33,000 effective Men."—St. James's Chron., (London,) O 19–22, 1776.

Col. William Douglas, an American officer, who took part in the battle wrote, on Aug. 31, to his wife: "I take this as the first opportunity to acquaint you that on Tuesday last we got a severe flogging on Long Island. The enemy surrounded a large detachment of our army, took many, killed some, and the rest got off. Major Genl. Sullivan & Brig^{r} Genl. Lord Sterling, Col. Clark and several other field officers are prisoners. Col. Johnson was killed. By the best act's we killed more of them than they did of us. But they took the most prisoners."—L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 69.

Wm. Eddis, writing from Annapolis on Sept. 5, says of the battle of Long Island that it has "proved fatal to the arms of America. . . . Maryland has suffered most severely in this conflict; many young men of the most respectable families, being included in the number of the slain."—Letters from Am. (London, 1792), 327.

Lieut. Fitch of the Connecticut forces was captured by the British during the day and taken "to y^{e} Edge of Flat Bush Plain, where," he wrote, "I see a Large Body of Hessian Troops on a Hill at our Left; We then took a turn to y^{e} Right, & was March'd by y^{e} Front of Several Batallions of y^{e} Hessians, where I Rec^{d} many Insults from those Formidable Europeans."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 16–17.

A detailed and scholarly account of the battle by Prof. Johnston is published, together with the supporting documents, in L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III; cf. C. P. Adams, "The Battle of Long Island" in Am. Hist. Rev., I: 650–70. Adams, always a rather severe critic of Washington's generalship, says (p. 665): "The campaign of Long Island was in reality Washington's first experience of active field movement and fighting, in which he held chief command. That he profited greatly by it was subsequently apparent. He learned through his mistakes; and the mistakes of that first campaign were numerous and patent." An officer in Washington's army saw a different reason for the failure when he wrote: "I fear Gen^{l} Washington has too heavy a task, assisted mostly by Beardless Boys."—Letter of Col. John Haslet to Gen. Rodney (Aug. 31, 1776) in L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III: Part II, 52. Prof. Johnston defends Putnam and Sullivan against charges made against them for their conduct in this battle by Bancroft, Dawson, and others.—Ibid., III, part I: 192–95, footnote. See also Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 69–73, quoting from a spectator's letter; Earl Percy's letters to the Duke of Northumberland and others (dated Sept., 1776), in Letters of Hugh, Earl Percy, ed. by Bolton (1902), 67–72; Lowell, The Hessians, chap. 6, citing a diary, pub. in a magazine at Frankfort-on-the-Main, entitled Die Neuesten Staatsbegebenheiten (1777), 110–16; and other German works, including Schlözer's Briefwechsel, II: 103 et seq., Eelking's "Hulfstruppen," I: 37–45 (in the Preussisches Militair-Wochenblatt, 1833, Nos. 863, 864), and the MS. journals of the Grenadier Battalion von Minnigerode, the Regiment von Lassberg (Heusser), and the same regiment (Piel); Winsor, VI: 279, 327, 328.

The operations of the American and British forces in the neighbourhood of New York, beginning with this battle, are shown on "A plan of New York Island, with a part of Long Island, Staten Island, and East New Jersey, with a particular Description of the Engagement on the Woody Heights of Long Island, between Flatbush and Brooklyn, on the 27th of Aug. 1776, between His Majesty's forces commanded by Gen'l Howe and the Americans under Major Gen'l Putnam. Showing also the landing of the British army on New York Island, and the taking of the City of New York, &c, on the 15th of September following, with the Subsequent Disposition of the British Armies." This plan, "Engraved and published October 19, 1776, by William Faden," is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 45.

This is the day appointed by the provincial convention on Aug. 2 (q. v.) as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 554. "

1776 Aug. 27 The committee of safety resolves "That the records and papers belonging to the Convention of this State, as also the chest belonging to the Receiver-General's office, be immediately conveyed to Genl. Clinton's encampment, at or near King's Bridge." It is also ordered "That one of the Secretaries do see them safely conveyed to the said encampment, and remain with them till further orders."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 594.

28 Col. Moses Little, of Massachusetts, in a letter written to his son, dated Sept. 1, said: "On the morning of the 28th the enemy were encamped on the heights in front of our encampment [Fort Putnam]. Firing was kept up on both sides from the right to the left. Weather very rainy."—Letter published in L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 43. Washington's own description of the day, written on the 29th, was similar: "There was some skirmishing the greatest part of yesterday between parties from the enemy and our people. In the evening it was very smart."—Letter of Washington to Hancock, 5 Am. Arch., I: 1211. Capt. Robertson, on the British side, writes: "This night wt a party of 400 men I opened ground opposite their Works & form'd a kind of Porabilar place of Arms 650 Yds Disst—this day Sr Wm Erskine wt the 71st Regt & L. Dragoons went to Jamaica. They took a Gen1 Woodall [Woodhull] Prisoner."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Gen. Nathaniel Woodhull, of Long Island, was captured "on the day after the battle" by "a party of British light horse, under Oliver De Lancey," riding "out on the Jamaica Road." He was carried away captive after being "without provocation . . . cruelly hacked in the head and arm," and subsequently died of his wounds.—L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part I: 199.

" Lightning strikes Gen. McDougall's Camp, "near the Bull's Head in the Bowry," and instantly kills Capt. Van Wyck and his two lieutenants, Versereau and Depyster. A soldier is also killed in the "House of Joseph Hallet, in Hanover Square," while others are hurt.—Conn. Gaz. (New London), Ag 30, 1776.

28 and 29 Kemble records: "Employed in erecting Batteries to Attack their Works on Brookland Heights."—Kemble's Jour., 86. The place where "Gen1 Howe broke Ground" on this day is shown on a Chart and Plan of the Harbour of New York & the County Adjacent . . ., pub. in the Political Mag. (London), Nov., 1781, and reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1870), opp. p. 844. See O 7.

29 Samuel Loudon (see Ja 4) discontinues The New York Packet And the American Advertiser with the issue of this date. The last issue found is that of Aug. 15 (No. 33). Loudon re-established the paper at Fishkill on Jan. 16, 1777 (q.v.). Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 474. See S 2.

" With the issue of The New-York Journal, or General Advertiser, of this date (No. 1756), the paper is discontinued because of the expected British occupation of the city. It was revived at Kingston on July 7, 1777 (q.v.).—Early Newspapers, II: 424.

" During the day Capt. Robertson reports: "Party 300 employ'd in makg a Bayou & Partys employ'd in making fascines to raise Batterys."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). The work of the British engineering staff on this and the preceding day (q.v.) resulted in "a breastwork . . . 60 rods long, & 150 rods distant from fort Putnam."—Letter of Col. Little to his son, L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 43. Prof. Johnston, discussing the "Origin of the Retreat," declares his belief that this "intention of advancing by trenches" on the part of Gen. Howe impelled Washington finally to call a council of war to consider retreat.—Ibid., part 1: 215–16. The council was held "at Mr. Phillip Livingston's house" (ibid., part 2: 37), and it was decided unanimously "to give up Long-Island, and not, by dividing our force, be unable to resist the enemy in any one point of attack."—Letter of Washington to Yates, 5 Am. Arch., I: 1230.

Orders were given to commanding officers "to parade their men with their Arms, Accoutrements, and Knapsacks at 7 oClock, at the Head of their Encampments & there wait for Orders."—Order book of Col. Wm. Douglas in L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 31. Orders were also given "to impress every kind of water craft from Hellgate on the Sound to Speyghten Duyvel Creek, that could be kept afloat, and that had either sails or oars, and have them all in the east harbor of the city by dark."—Memorial of Col. Hugh Hughes in Leake's Life of John Lamb, 361. "At eight o'clock of the evening, such was the celerity of the movements of those employed, that everything important to the occasion was in readiness, to be placed in the most favorable locations to secure the retreat."—Ibid., 361–62.

Soon after this, Washington began to withdraw his forces across East River to Manhattan. The British did not discover the movement until the following morning (q.v.). Aug. 29

Prof. Johnston, gathering his information from contemporary accounts, pictures the retreat thus: "Hitchcock's Rhode Islanders carried their baggage and camp equipage to the boats on their shoulders 'through mud and mire and not a ray of light visible.' The embarkation was made from the ferry—the present Fulton Ferry—where General McDougall superintended the movements. Between seven and eight o'clock the boats were manned by Glover's and Hutchinson's men, and they went to work with sailor-like cheer and despatch. The militia and levies were the first to cross, though there was some vexing delay in getting them off. Unluckily, too, about nine o'clock the adverse wind and tide and pouring rain began to make the navigation of the river difficult . . . However, at eleven o'clock there was another and a favorable change in the weather. The north-east wind died away, and soon after a gentle breeze set in from the south-west, of which the sailors took quick advantage, and the passage was now 'direct, easy, and expeditious.' The troops were pushed across as fast as possible in every variety of craft—row-boats, flat-boats, whale-boats, pettiaugers, sloops, and sail-boats—some of which were loaded to within three inches of the water, which was 'as smooth as glass.'"—L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part I: 221–22. See Ag 30.

Lieut. Tilghman, aide-de-camp to Washington, wrote to his father, on Sept. 3: "Our Retreat before an Enemy much superior in Numbers, over a wide River, and not very well furnished with Boats certainly does Credit to our Generals. The thing was conducted with so much Secrecy that neither subalterns or privates knew that the whole Army was to cross back again to N. York."—L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II, 85; 5 Am. Arch., II: 214. A British officer, in a letter to London dated Sept. 6, takes this view: "The 29th, upon a movement of the men-of-war and the troops, the Rebels ran away, and left the Island to the conquerors, flying over to New-York in the greatest confusion and dismay."—Ibid., II: 200; Winsor, VI: 281. See, further, Ag 30.

" Lieut. Fitch and other Americans captured on Long Island by the British are ordered "into ye Flat bottom'd Boat," in which they go down to the British fleet, and are put on board the "Pacific," a ship of about 900 tons. Fitch says: "our Accomodations were but somewhat Coars, for Officers & Men, being almost 400 in Number, were soon Drove under Deck together without Distinction; Here we kept our Residence three Nights Successively, & my own Lodging was no other than a Great Gun or a Quilt of Riging, yet we here Recd great Indulgence."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 21–22.

30 The American retreat from Long Island to New York (see Ag 29) is completed this morning under cover of a fog. A newspaper account reads: ". . . by six o'clock in the morning we had everything embarked. There never was a man that behaved better upon the occasion than General Washington; he was on horse back, the whole night, and never left the ferry stairs till he had seen the whole of his troops embarked."—Penn. Gaz., S 4, 1776; see also ibid., S 5 and 14. Gen. Greene, writing to Gov. Cooke on Sept. 17, said it was "the best effected retreat I ever read or heard of, considering the difficulty."—5 Am. Arch., II: 370. The British themselves expressed high praise for this feat of generalship. The Ann. Register (1777), *173, referred to the "wonderful silence and order" of the retreat; adding: "those who are best acquainted with the difficulty, embarrassment, noise and tumult, which attend even by day, and no enemy at hand, a movement of this nature with several thousand men, will be the first to acknowledge that this retreat should hold a high place among military transactions."

Capt. Montresor, of the British forces, states: "I gave the first Information of the Enemy's abandoning the works near Brooklyn; and was the first man in them with one Corporal, and six men, in the front of the Piquets."—Montresor's Jour., 122.

Capt. Robertson records that the British "perceived by Day Break that the Rebels had evacuated all their Works on long Island & retreated to N. Y. Island in the Night—we immediately took Possessn of them wt the Piquets—& in the Eveng were relievd by 1000 Hessians—Gen1 C——n went On towards Newton wt 2 Battns Lt Iny & 1 Bat1 Grenadrs."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

Kemble gives further evidence that the British were surprised when he says: "In the Morning, to our great Astonishment, found they had Evacuated all their Works on Brookland and Red Hook, without a Shot being fired at them, and to the best of our observa-

1776 Aug. 30 tion found a Body of three or four hundred remaining upon Governors Island, who might have been taken by flat Boats, but for what reason was not attempted; neither could our shipping get up for want of Wind, and the whole Escaped the following Night to New York."—Kemble's Jour., 86.

Solomon Nash records: ". . . the Enemy fired som at Last Boats that Left the Island our men Left goveners Island the Enemy fired at our Boats when Left govnrs Island and Cilld and wounded 3 or 4."—Nash's Jour., 31.

Pastor Shewkirk, viewing the affairs of the day from the Manhattan side, writes: "In the morning, unexpectedly and to the surprize of the city, it was found that all that could come back was come back; and that they had abandoned Long Island; when many had thought to surround the King's troops, and make them prisoners with little trouble. The language was now otherwise; it was a surprising change, the merry tones on drums and fifes had ceased, and they were hardly heard for a couple of days. It seemed a general damp had spread; and the sight of the scattered people up and down the streets was indeed moving. Many looked sickly, emaciated, cast down, &c.; the wet clothes, tents,—as many as they had brought away,—and other things, were lying about before the houses and in the streets to-day; in general everything seemed to be in confusion. Many, as it is reported for certain, went away to their respective homes. The loss in killed and wounded and taken has been great, and more so than it ever will be known. Several were drowned and lost their lives in passing a creek to save themselves. The Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Maryland people lost the most; the New England people, &c., it seems are but poor soldiers, they soon took to their heels."—L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 115.

" The committee of safety resolves, in reply to the inquiry of Ebenezer Hazard, deputy postmaster for the New York department, regarding "the most proper place of safety and convenience to the public to which he should remove his office, as an invasion of the city of New-York is hourly expected," that he should remove it "to some convenient place near Dobbs' ferry, till further orders from the Postmaster-General."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 602.

31 "All the [British] Army began to move towards Newton but 5,000 H^ns und Gen^l D Heister left at Brooklyn heights—2 Brigades w^h Gen^l G——t at Bedford—Gen^l Clinton was this morn^g at Hell Gate & L^d Cornwallis encamp'd on the heights near Newton—at 2 ^oClock the Gen^l w^th the rest of the Army Arrived at Newton w^h was head Q^rs—we pass'd through a Pleasant Country—Reported that the Rebels were firing on one Another & evacuating the Town." —Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Kemble records: "Marched to Newtown, with the Grenadiers Light Infantry, 1st., 2d., 3d., 5th. and 6th. Brigades and 71st. Regt., who occupied Flushing and Jamaica. Gen. Sullivan about this time sent to New York, and from thence went to Philadelphia, supposed on the Subject of Negotiation with the Congress."—Kemble's Jour., 86.

" Solomon Nash records in his journal: "to Day ye fleet Came up Nearer the Town our people went to Governers Isld and fired at the Shiping Severel time with Cannon that our people Left their and they returned the fire and fired savral times at our rogalys as they went By the grand Battry to go up ye north river."—Jour. of Solomon Nash, 31.

Autumn A fortification was erected by American troops on Laurel Hill, the site on the modern maps being between 192d and 193d Sts., on Audubon Ave., extending midway toward Fort George Ave.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc., 431; L. M. R. K., III: 944; Pl. 180, Vol. III. See, further, N 16, 1776.

For contemporary plans of the military movements on Long Island and Manhattan Island in 1776, see Winsor, VI: 336, 342, 343, 344, 345.

Sept. — ". . . The college, when finished will be exceedingly handsome: it is to be built on three sides of a quadrangle, fronting Hudson's or North river, and will be the most beautifully situated of any college, I believe, in the world. At present only one wing is finished, which is of stone, and consists of twenty-four sets of apartments; each having a large sitting room, with a study, and bedchamber. They are obliged to make use of some of these apartments for a master's lodge, library, chapel, hall, &c. but as soon as the whole shall be completed, there will be proper apartments for each of these offices.

". . . There is also . . . one of the finest prisons I have ever seen—The Court or Stadt-house makes no great figure, but is to be repaired and beautified. There is a quadrangular fort, capable of mounting sixty cannon, though at present there are, I believe, only thirty-two Within this is the governor's palace, and underneath it a battery capable of mounting ninety-four guns, and barracks for a company or two of soldiers. Upon one of the islands in the bay is an hospital for sick and wounded seamen; and, upon another a pesthouse . . ."—Lottery Magazine (London), Sept., 1776 (with plan of the city, drawn "on the Spot" by Lieut-Col. Walter Nugent). See also St. James's Chron. (London), S 28–O 1, 1776. Sept. —

Earl Percy, writing from Newtown, Long Island, to his father, the Duke of Northumberland, describes the engagement of Aug. 27 (q.v.), and the subsequent evacuation of Long Island by the Americans, and then adds: "In consequence of which we marched on Yesterday to this Place, where almost every body has come in to Us, such as have been in Arms or Active have surrendered Themselves, & all taken the Oaths. Whole Reg^ts we are informed have deserted from them at New York, & in short they are in the greatest State of Confusion. They feel severely the Blow on the 27^th & I think I may venture to assert, that they will never again stand before us in the Field. Every Thing seems to be over with Them, & I flatter myself now that this Campaign will put a total End to the War."—Letters of Hugh, Earl Percy, 67–70. 1

Capt. Archibald Robertson records that he "reconnoitred the shore opposite Hell gate where The Rebels have a Work round Walton's house, call'd Horn Hook—the water in E. River about 500 Y^ds across here—Gen^l Sulivan sent over to N: Y^k about negociations."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). "

Washington writes to the president of congress: ". . . with the deepest concern I am obliged to confess my want of confidence with the generality of the troops. . . . I more than once in my letters took the liberty of mentioning to Congress, that no dependence can be put in a Militia or other troops than those enlisted and embodied for a longer period than our regulations heretofore have prescribed. I am persuaded, and as fully convinced as I am of any one fact that has happened, that our liberties must of necessity be greatly hazarded, if not entirely lost, if their defence is left to any but a permanent standing army. . . . Our number of men at present fit for duty, are under twenty thousand. . . . Till of late, I had no doubt in my own mind of defending this place, nor should I have yet if the men would do their duty; but this I dispair of. It is painful and extremely grating to me to give such unfavorable accounts, but it would be criminal to conceal the truth at so critical a juncture. . . ." 2

He asks the advice of congress regarding the advisability of destroying New York, with a view to prevent its becoming the headquarters of the enemy: "If we should be obliged to abandon the town, ought it to stand as winter-quarters for the enemy? They would derive great conveniences from it on the one hand; and much property would be destroyed on the other. It is an important question, but will admit of but little time for deliberation. At present, I dare say the enemy mean to preserve it, if they can. If Congress, therefore, should resolve upon the destruction of it, the resolution should be a profound secret, as the knowledge of it will make a change in their plans."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 378–81. Congress replied the next day.—See S 3.

On this day also, an English field-officer writes from the British camp on Long-Island: "I have just heard there has been a most dreadful fray in the town of New-York. The New-Englanders insisted upon setting the town on fire and retreating. This was opposed by the New-Yorkers, who were joined by the Pennsylvanias, and a battle has been the consequence, in which many have lost their lives. By the steps the General is taking, I imagine he will effectually cut off their retreat at Kings Bridge, by which the Island of New-York is joined to the Continent."—5 Am. Archives, II: 123. "

Another British officer on Long Island writes at the same time: "All accounts agree that they are preparing to evacuate the Town [New York]. Whether they will burn it or not is uncertain, as the Provincials from the Jerseys and the neighborhood strenuously oppose that measure."—Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 43. "

Samuel Loudon advertises in Gaine's newspaper that he "Is removing his Printing-Office to Fish-Kills, where the Provincial Congress now reside," and regrets "that he will be obliged to discontinue the Publication of the New-York Packet, for several Weeks, occasioned by the Trouble in moving as well as the great Scarcity of Printing Paper."—N. Y., Merc., S 2, 1776. See Ag 29. "

PLAN OF THE BATTERY AND FORT GEORGE, "AS THEY EXISTED BEFORE THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR;" DRAWN BY COL. JOHN VAN DYK IN 1827.

SEE ADDENDA, VOL. VI.

1776 Sept. 2 The detachment of American patriots having left Governor's Island on Aug. 31, abandoning munitions and provisions, one captain and 100 men of the British forces occupy it, "to keep the rebels within bounds, in the city as well as in their redoubts thrown up on the side of the city." "Blockwell Island" is also occupied by the British.—From Baurmeister's narrative in Mag. Am. Hist., I: 33; cf. Nash's Jour., 31. The British army also held possession of Newtown, Bushwick, Hell Gate, and Flushing. They began the erection of two batteries at Remsen's Mill and one near Hell Gate.—Transcript, in Library of Cong., of "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS., 2135 f. 7). See also descrip. of Pl. 47-a, I: 361.

" Capt. Archibald Robertson consults Gen. Clinton about "plac^g mortars to drive the Rebels from their work at Waltons house," but nothing is done. It is reported that Gen. Sullivan has gone to Philadelphia.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" A British officer in the 42nd Regiment writes from Long Island: "I was upon a Party who took above 100 Prisoners, who upon their Knees begged their lives, and many of them declared that they had been forced into the Service. We could see the Rebels preparing to evacuate New-York, and hear that they are in great Consternation lest a Junction should be effected with General Burgoyne's Army. It is reported also, that many of the Loyalists in New-York have dared to lay down the Arms which they had been compelled to carry against his Majesty's Army; so that I have no Doubt of our being soon in Possession of that City."—St. James's Chron., O 22–24, 1776.

3 ". . . in the night of the 3d. of September the frigate Rose of 32 guns sailed out of the fleet up the East River, with 30 boats, leaving New York on the left, and without the slightest difficulty anchored in Whall [Wallabout] Bay and Buschwickfeste. All the enemy's [American] cannon were put into a serviceable condition [by the British] and conveyed to the batteries, which were found in part and also erected on the rising ground to the left of the village ferry [at Brooklyn] as far as to Gouverneurs Island.

"The rebels fired several times from their works upon these batteries, but everywhere without effect, especially at the great fort Bunkers Hill. . . . they had their camp in the great wood between Cron Point and Blumenthal. The strongest position of the enemy [American] was along the Harlem River to guard their rear and communications. Often in the night rebels came over to the English camp in small boats, asked to serve, and enlisted in the newly raised brigade, 2000 men strong, of a Colonel de Lancy, whose ancestors settled on York Island, and who had much to suffer from the present rebels. Some 100 men, from the prisoners of the attack of August 27th., are also enrolled in this brigade."—From Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 34.

Capt. Robertson's account of this declares that "This Night the Rose man of war came up the E. River w^t 20 flat Boats she Anchored under Blackwells Island received Sev^l Shot in com^g past the Batt^ys—A Picquet sent to take Posses^n of Blackwell's Island for her Protection."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also descrip. of Pl. 47-b, I: 361.

" "The forepart of y^e Day there was a mighty movement of y^e [British] Transports in y^e Harbour, a great number of them mov'd up toward Town."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 26.

" Washington's letter of Sept. 2 (q.v.) is read in congress. A resolution is passed immediately that he "be acquainted, that the Congress would have especial care taken, in case he should find it necessary to quit New York, that no damage be done to the said city by his troops, on their leaving it: The Congress having no doubt of being able to recover the same, though the enemy should, for a time, obtain possession of it." It was also ordered that "three more batallions be ordered from Virginia, to reinforce the army at New York;" two, likewise, from North Carolina and one from Rhode Island; and that it "be recommended to the assemblies and conventions of the several states to the northward of Virginia, immediately to send all the aid in their power to the army at New York."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed.), V: 33–34. Washington replied on Sept. 6 (q.v.).

" Col. Rufus Putnam writes from Bloomingdale to Gen. Washington: "I have reconnoitered every part about the Island of New-York and the main, as far as Frog's Point, and, on a full view, find the enemy have such a variety of places to choose out of, that it's impossible to prevent their landing when they please. They have such guides and intelligence of our movements that they can always avoid or surprise any parties that are posted to oppose their landing. Their army is so numerous that they can attack any division of our army with a superior force; and yet, while our army is extended from New-York to King's Bridge, 'tis necessary to have a body of reserve at this place [Bloomingdale]. But I cannot think it would be best, nor have we time, to make fortifications; since the moment any quarter is attacked, the whole body of reserve, I conclude, will be ordered to support it. I should advise the throwing obstructions in the way of landing. That they have one week's provisions always with them, and teams ready to carry their baggage wherever the service requires." He advises that the army "be collected together in some advantageous place," where supplies may be had, and "a camp fortified in such a manner as the enemy dare not attack, or, if they did, must be repulsed. . . . And to defend the passage of the North River, which I take to be the capital object, and at the same time keep open a communication with the Eastern and Southern Colonies, is to press the army from Bundet landing, on the Jersey shore—Mount Washington and the Heights, south as far as Colonel Thompson's house, on Harlem River—the Heights we now possess at King's Bridge, and as far south as the Three Trees. The batteries on the Jersey side to be filled with guns; the battery on the rocks below Mount Washington completed; a new one built below the hill opposite the sunken vessels. These, well filled with guns and ammunition, if the galleys also afforded their assistance, would render it very difficult for ships to pass. . . ." —5 Am. Arch., II: 140. Sept. 3

A letter from Long Island to a gentleman in London, contains the following: "In the night of the 2d instant three persons escaped from the city in a canoe, and informed our General that Mr. Washington had ordered three battalions of New York Provincials to leave New-York, and that they should be replaced by an equal number of Connecticut troops; but the former, assured that the Connecticutians would burn and destroy all the houses, peremptorily refused to give up their city."—5 Am. Arch., II: 168. 4

John Haslet, writing to Brig. Gen. Caesar Rodney from the "Camp at Kings Bridge," refers in discouraging tones to the losses on Long Island, and the indefensible condition of New York. "Had Long Island been rendered Useless, to the Enemy, N. York laid in Ashes, when we were Ordered to L. Island, & the Heights between this & Connecticut Properly Occupied, the Enemy must have attacked at Disadvantage. . . . tis true this kind of Devastation may be condemned as Cruel, but Provinces e'er now have been sacrificed with Applause to the Safety of a Kingdom, & what ought not to be done for the Safety of a Continent. . . ."—From the original letter, sold by Henkels, in Phila., Je 13, 1919. "

". . . the English left their post on Blackwells Island, the rebels occupied it in force, and so strong, that the outposts on the main shore were exposed to a continuous fire, which even the great battery could not silence."—From Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 34. "

Capt. Robertson writes: "Capt^n Moncrief & I were ordered to raise two Batt^ys at Hell gate against Walton's house one of 3, 24 P^rs & one 3, 12 P^rs—a work^g party of 300 men we began to work at ½ past nine & by 5 next morn^g they were completed within 2 hours work of 60 men—This Even^g a Party was sent to raise a Breast Work on Blackwell's Island—but the Picquets were withdrawn & the Rose went down to Bushwick Point."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 87. "

A letter written by Gen. Mercer, "who commands the flying camp," states: "Gen. Washington has not so far as I have seen 5000 men to be depended on for the service of a campaign, and I have not 1000. Both our armies are composed of raw militia, perpetually fluctuating between the camp and their farms, poorly armed, and still worse disciplined. These are not a match for, were their numbers equal to, veteran troops, well fitted and urged on by able officers. Numbers and discipline must prevail at last." —Gordon, Hist. of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the U. S. A. (London, 1788), II: 316. "

"Gen. Washington came up and dined at our General's quarters" (above Kingsbridge).—Memoirs of Maj. Gen. Heath (1798), 58. "

The provincial convention resolves: "That His Excellency General Washington be requested and authorized to cause all the bells in the different churches and public edifices in the city of New-York, to be taken down and removed to New-Ark, in New-Jersey, with all possible despatch, that the fortune of war may not throw the same into the hands of our enemy, and deprive this State 5

1776 Sept. 5 at this crucial period of that necessary, though unfortunate, resource for supplying our want of cannon."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 610. On Sept. 8, Washington wrote to Mr. Yates, the president of the committee of safety, acknowledging receipt of the resolution of the convention, approving of it, and stating that he would "accordingly have it carried into execution."—Ibid., I: 616. Pastor Shewkirk recorded their removal in his diary, under Sept. 9 (q.v.).

" "This morng the Two Batty Completed all but the Platforms—The Rebels took possn of Blackwell's Island—Orders were again given for our retakg it this Eveng the Boats were ready—but it was defered."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Fitch writes: "It is now one Week since ye Day when we came on Board ye Pacific, & two Weeks since ye Day we left N. York. What Changing Scenes a few Days open to our View! what a mighty Alteration two Week hath made in ye Appearance of American Affairs, but more Especially in our own perticular Circumstances—

"About Sunset ye Officers . . . belonging to our Regt, were all Removed to ye Snow Mentor . . . This Afternoon we heard a very considerable Canonade up at ye Northward, which continued some part of ye Night following."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 30.

" Gen. Greene, writing from "New-York Island" to Gen. Washington, advises burning the city (see S 2). He states, among other things, that "It has been agreed that the city of New-York would not be tenable if the enemy got possession of Long-Island and Governour's Island. They are now in possession of both these places. Notwithstanding, I think we might hold it for some time, but the annoyance must be so great as to render it an unfit place to quarter troops in. . . .

"The City and Island of New-York are no objects for us; we are not to bring them into competition with the general interests of America. Part of the army already has met with a defeat; the country is struck with a panick; any capital loss at this time may ruin the cause. 'Tis our business to study to avoid any considerable misfortune, and to take post where the enemy will be obliged to fight us, and not we them. The sacrifice of the vast property of New-York and the suburbs, I hope has no influence upon your Excellency's measures. Remember the King of France. . . . Two-thirds of the property of the city of New-York and the suburbs belongs to the Tories. We have no very great reason to run any considerable risk for its defence. . . .

"I give it as my opinion, that a general and speedy retreat is absolutely necessary, and that the honour and interest of America require it. I would burn the city and suburbs, and that for the following reasons: If the enemy gets possession of the city, we never can recover the possession without a superiour naval force to theirs; it will deprive the enemy of an opportunity of barracking their whole army together, which, if they could do, would be a very great security. It will deprive them of a general market, . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 182. "John Jay before this also proposed its destruction. Scott urged abandonment of the place for sound military reasons, though the move would ruin him."—Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 229.

" Samuel H. Parsons writes to Major Gen. Heath: "As the machine designed to attempt blowing up the enemys ships is to be transported from the East to the North River, where a small vessel will be wanted to receive it, I wish you would order one for that purpose. As all things are now ready to make the experiment, I wish it may not be delayed. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 183. The reference here is undoubtedly to Bushnell's submarine torpedo (see Aug.).

" An officer, at "Camp near New-Town Long Island," writes: "Deserters tell us they are in great confusion at New York, one party wanting to burn the Town, and the other to save it; but in compassion for their Sick, which it is impossible they can remove, the number being so great, I think they will hardly set Fire to the Town."—Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 44.

" Referring to the conquest of Long Island, and the resistance still encountered beyond "Jamaika," Baurmeister states: "The happiness of the inhabitants, whose ancestors were all Dutch, must have been great; genuine kindness and real abundance is everywhere, anything worthless or going to ruin is nowhere to be perceived. The inhabited regions resemble the Westphalian peasant districts, upon separate farms the finest houses are built, which are planned and completed in the most elegant fashion. The furniture in them is in the best taste, nothing like which is to be seen with us, and besides so clean and neat, that altogether it surpasses every description. Sept. 5

"The female sex is universally beautiful and delicately reared, and is finely dressed in the latest European fashion, particularly in India laces, white cottons and silk gauzes; not one of these women but would consider driving a double team the easiest of work. They drive and ride out alone, having only a negro riding behind to accompany them. Near every dwelling-house negroes (their slaves) are settled, who cultivate the most fertile land, pasture the cattle, and do all the menial work. They are Christians and are bought on the coasts of Guinea, being sold again here among the inhabitants for 50 to 120 York pounds a head; 20 York shillings are such a pound and 37 York shillings make the value of a guinea."—From Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 34–35.

Washington writes to the president of congress, acknowledging receipt "last night" of congress' resolution of Sept. 3 (q.v.), and adds: "Perceiving it to be their opinion and determination that no damage shall be done to the city in case we are obliged to abandon it, I shall take every measure in my power to prevent it."—5 Am. Arch., II: 193. 6

" Francis Marschalk, for many years one of the city surveyors (see Je 8, 1733), dies "in an advanced Age." Rivington speaks of him as "one justly entitled to the Character of a peaceful Citizen, and a useful and worthy Member of Community."—Royal Gaz., S 9, 1776.

The British batteries at Hell Gate are unmasked "by fellg Trees." They were opened on the 8th, but "The Rebels only fired three guns."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). The date of Sept. 8 is found on one of Robertson's drawings (No. 35—see Jl 12) entitled "View of the opening [?] of our Battery at Hell Gate upon . . . Walton's house . . . & the . . . Estuary, 8th Sept. 1776." 7

" "Several Sail came in to ye Bay, under Convoy of a Man of War, some of them we supos'd to be Prises."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 32.

" Col. Wm. Douglas of Connecticut writes to his wife from a "Country Seat near Turtle Bay:" "Our Army is now in three grand Divisions. One at the City, which is our right wing, commanded by Genl Putnam, one at and above Kings Bridge, commanded by Genl Heath, and one at and above Harlem, commanded by Genl Spencer, which is the Division that I belong to, and is called the Center Division. . . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 70.

" In a council of war, held at the Richmond Hill house, with Washington presiding, it is voted "to arrange the army under three divisions; five thousand to remain for the defence of the City; nine thousand at Kingsbridge and its dependencies . . .; the remainder to occupy the intermediate space, and support either." Some officers, "in whose judgment and opinion much confidence is to be reposed," argue for "a total and immediate removal from the city," but they are "overruled by a majority," who think that an attempt should be made "to maintain the city a little longer."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 395–96.

" The provincial convention, meeting in the Episcopal church at Fishkill, resolves "That the Committee of Safety and Correspondence at New-York be appointed and authorized to take from the doors of the houses in the city of New-York all the brass knockers, and that they cause the same to be sent to some careful person at New Ark, in New-Jersey, with all possible dispatch; that the said committee keep as accurate an account as possible of the weight and value of them, and of the houses from whence taken, in order that satisfaction may be hereafter made to the respective owners."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 616.

" "Fairbattle" publishes an open letter to Lord Howe suggesting that "the fate of America" be decided by a pitched battle between equal numbers of British and American troops. He would have "the extensive plains of Long Island" the battlefield, and 10,000 men on each side, the armies to be "provided in all respects equal, with trains of artillery and all other offensive weapons; then, on a given signal, begin the attack and leave the issue to the God of armies."—Moore's Diary, I: 308–9, citing Penn. Eve. Post, S 7, 1776.

"This Day sev[l] Ships Saild out of ye Bay, some to Sea & others up to Town. . . . This is ye Annual of Johnsons Battle at Lake George in ye Year 1775 [q.v.], a very Memorable Event for Americans &c."—Diary of Jabez Fitz (MS.), 32. 8

" Kemble records: "Our batteries opened early in the morning upon the Rebel Redoubt at Horns Hook; had one Sailor and one 1776 Sept. 8 Soldier Killed during the day. This Night and the following day the Rebels increased their fire, having brought down some say four, some six Mortars. One of our 24 Pounders rendered useless by running at the Muzzle."—Kemble's Jour., 87.

" Washington writes to the president of congress from headquarters at New York a full report of his plans and policies of defence. He is advised, and from experience concludes, that "the war should be defensive (it has been even called a war of posts;) that we should, on all occasions, avoid a general action, or put anything to the risk, unless compelled by a necessity into which we ought never to be drawn. . . . The honour of making a brave defence does not seem to be a sufficient stimulus when the success is very doubtful, and the falling into the enemy's hands probable. . . .

"We are now in a strong post, but not an impregnable one; nay, acknowledged by every man of judgment to be untenable, . . . I am fully of opinion that the establishing strong posts at Mount Washington, on the upper part of this Island, and on the Jersey side opposite to it, with the assistance of the obstructions already made, and which may be improved, in the water, that not only the navigation of Hudson's River, but an easier and better communication, may be more effectually secured between the northern and southern States. . . .

"The post at King's Bridge is naturally strong, and is well fortified. . . . I have also removed from the city all the stores and ammunition, except what is absolutely necessary for its defence, . . ." The council of general officers, who met on Sept. 7 (q.v.), "agreed the town would not be tenable if the enemy resolved to bombard and cannonade it."—5 Am. Arch., II: 236–38; Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 390–97. For a list of the works of defence in New York, see Johnston's Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, 84–92.

" Gen. George Clinton writes from "King's Bridge" to the president of the New York State convention: "By the enclosed return of my brigade, you will observe that there are wanting to complete, 596 men; that this deficiency principally arises from the different militia regiments not having furnished their quotas, and from desertion; which latter have been so frequent, that unless some effectual method can be devised to prevent, in future, not only my brigade, but the whole army will be much injured, if not ruined. . . . I know it is my duty, as well as the duty of every other officer in the service, to cause deserters to be apprehended; but it is also the duty of every friend to his country, and more particularly so, of members of committees and officers of militia. They can do it without injuring the public service in any degree. I can't. If I send officers and parties of faithful men after them, I thereby weaken the army. The deserters hear of them in their neighbourhood, know their business, and I am sorry to add, are too frequently aided in evading my guards. . . .

"From the disposition of the enemy's army and their delay, I imagine they intend attacking us in two or three different quarters; and I think it more than probable that their grand aim is to hem in our army and cut off our communication with the country; in which case, this division of our army, were it possible, should be augmented. It ought to be considered they hem us in by water on three sides. The distance across, up (as far as Maronick,) between the two rivers, does not much exceed twelve miles, though I hope their shipping won't be able to pass Fort Washington; but this is very uncertain. I mention these matters to show the necessity of the militia's holding themselves in the most perfect readiness; for should the enemy attempt any thing of this kind so high up, it will be of the utmost consequence to fight and vanquish them before they have time to throw up any works whatever. . . . I am just informed that there are many disaffected persons near the Sound and East river, possessed of large stocks of cattle; that they neglect driving them back and refuse to part with them to the commissary at the ordinary price. It is more than probable they will fall into the hands of the enemy, where I believe the owners wish them, unless some proper measures are speedily taken to prevent it."—Pub. Papers of Geo. Clinton, I: 338–42.

9 The British batteries being completed (see S 2), they fire upon the Americans. Sir Wm. Erskine drives them from Blackwell's Island, which place the patriots had retaken on Sept. 4. The British also take possession of Montresor's and Buchannon's Islands. A frigate and 36 flat-boats "got up in the night to Hell Gate."—From transcript in Library of Congress of "Journal of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). Gen. Howe reported on these movements to Lord George Germaine on Sept. 21, as follows: "Upon the Rebels abandoning their lines at Brooklyn, the King's army moved from Bedford, leaving Lieutenant-General Heister encamped upon the Heights of Brooklyn, with two brigades of Hessians and one brigade of British at Bedford, and took five positions in the neighbourhood of Newtown, Bushwick, Hell-Gate, and Flushing. The two Islands of Montresor and Buchanan were occupied, and batteries raised against the enemy's work at Horen's Hook, commanding the passage at Hell-Gate."—5 Am. Arch., II: 378 Sept. 9

Kemble records: "The morning quiet, except very early, when the Cannonade was sharp. this Night begun a new Battery compleated in 36 hours very quietly. Mr. Sullivan returned from Philadelphia, no prospect of a Reconcilliation taking place, nor could it be expected.

"Think the Rebels may derive great Advantage from our delays, and have erected Batteries from New York at every Landing to Hell Gate, and a large Body Encamped on the Heights behind it. Our proposed Attack of Hell Gate Redoubt, and landing there, thought very hazardous by many. The strength of the Tides must unavoidably make our landings very difficult, as well as dangerous, from the length of time it will take between them."—Kemble's Jour., 87.

Capt. Archibald Robertson records: "Firing at the Batt^{ys} not very Brisk The Rebels disabled two of our Guns—They brought 6 mortars to play this morn^{g} & two Guns—This Even^{g} another Battery of two Guns began on our Right—S^{r} W^{m} Erskine w^{h} the 71st came to Hell gate from Flushing."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 36—see Jl 12), entitled "E. N. E.—View of the West end of the Sound, taken from a height on Long Island near to Hell Gate 9th Sept^{r} 1776."

"Brigadier General Erskine sent word to the rebels, to stop the firing of small arms, and to be content with watchfulness on both sides, or else all their houses on the farther shore of the Island of Montrevor (upon which 4 12-pounders were turned) should be battered to the ground, which proposition was accepted and quiet was restored. The river between these posts is scarcely as broad as the Fulda in Hesse, but deeper and full of eddies."—From Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 35.

" "Several Men of War now lie Within Gun Shot of our main Battery, and the greatest Part of the Fleet behind Governor's-island, tho' they have lately had very favourable Winds to come up to the City."—N. Y. Merc., S 9, 1776.

" Washington transmits from headquarters at New York to Lord Howe a letter from Dr. Franklin, and expresses his willingness to forward Lord Howe's answer.—5 Am. Arch., II: 257. Lord Howe replied on Sept. 10, from the "Eagle, off Bedlow's Island," stating that he would meet Dr. Franklin "and Messrs. Adams and Rutledge [a committee of congress], to-morrow morning [Sept. 11, q.v.], at the house on Staten-Island, opposite to Amboy" (the Billopp house), and he made provision for possible delay.—Ibid., II: 274.

" Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: ". . . By the measures and proceedings of the Rebel army, it appeared evident, that they intended to leave the city; for as they had begun last week, so all this week, they removed their sick, their stores, and ammunition, and gradually the soldiers marched away. They likewise took the bells out of all the Churches [see S 5] and conveyed them away."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 116.

" "We hear that the Deputy Post-Master of this City, hath received Orders to remove his Office immediately from Dobb's Ferry, to Head-Quarters; so that the Obstruction that Correspondence hath lately met with, will now, in a great Measure, be removed."—N. Y. Merc., S 9, 1776.

" The last issue of The New-York Gazette; and the Weekly Mercury is brought out in New York by Hugh Gaine, prior to his retirement to Newark, N. J., in anticipation of the occupation of the city by the British. This was No. 1300 in his series.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 423. See S 21.

10 "This morn^{g} the light Infan^{y} took Possess^{n} of Bahanna's & Montresor's Islands [see S 9] w^{t} the loss of one man K^{d} & one w^{d} The Rebels by our Preparat^{ns} think a land^{g} intended near Walton's House, This Day they are Busy throw^{g} up Breast works along the shore. The 1st Brigade went over to Bahanna's Island."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

1776 Sept. 10 Having now obtained the particulars, James Thacher, M.D., records in his journal the incidents of the plot against the American patriots, which was discovered on June 21 (q.v.). "Several of these miscreants," he states, "were tried and convicted, and two or three were executed. . . . We have now ample evidence, that the tories are the most virulent and implacable of our enemies; . . . so numerous and active are the tories in the vicinity of our main army, that it has been found necessary to adopt coercive measures, and to compel them to take the oath of allegiance, as prescribed by our Congress, or to depart from our territories."—A Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War, 64.

" According to a letter from Brig.-Gen. James Clinton, who is at Fort Montgomery, to Gen. Washington, four or five sloops have been sent from the upper Hudson "to bring the sick from the Hospital in New-York to Orangetown." Other boats are to be impressed for the same purpose.—5 Am. Arch., II: 276–77.

11 Kemble records: "Some firing the Night past, thro' mistake, the Highlanders and our Seamen in Flat Boats."—Kemble's Jour., 87.

Franklin, Adams, and Rutledge, commissioners from congress (see S 9), meet in conference with Lord Howe in the old Christopher Billopp house at Tottenville, Staten Island, in an effort to bring about a reconciliation between England and America.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).; Kemble's Jour., 87; Mather, The Refugees of 1776 (1913), 52; Winsor, VII: 12.

Howe opened the conference by remarking that, although he could not treat with the Americans as a committee of congress, his powers enabled him to consult with them as "private gentlemen of influence in the colonies." He proposed that the colonies return to their allegiance to the king, intimating that in that case the offensive acts of parliament would be revised and the instructions to governours reconsidered. The commissioners, however, recited the numerous and continued tyrannies which had impelled the colonies to declare their independence and asserted that "a return to the domination of Great Britain was not now to be expected." They said that the Declaration of Independence "had been called for by the people of the colonies in general; that every colony had approved of it, and all now considered themselves as independent states, and were settling, or had settled, their governments accordingly; so that it was not in the powers of the Congress to agree for them, that they should return to their former dependent state." In conclusion they declared that, although Howe had at present no power to treat with them as independent states, it would be easier for him to obtain fresh powers, if there were in England a real disposition toward peace, "than powers could be obtained by Congress, from the several colonies to consent to a submission." Howe thereupon put an end to the conference, as, he said, "no accommodation was like to take place."—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 765–66; Penn. Packet, S 24, 1776; cf. letter of Rutledge to Washington, 5 Am. Arch., II: 287–88; also Thacher, A Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War., 67–69. The committee's report of the conference is also printed in a footnote in The Candid Retrospect (see Je 30, 1780), 19–21, and Wm. Smith, commenting on the Americans' remarks concerning the colonies' desire for independence, said: "The intelligent American wants no aid to convict this report of the want of truth and good faith. Some of them were so far from the calling for Independence as to suspend all authority to declare it, to this hour. And when uttered it shocked, and from that instant divided the Continent, and drove its advocates to violences and distresses, that demonstrate the general discontents, and their own fears."—Candid Retrospect, 20 (footnote). See also S 20.

" "From this day forward it was plainly to be observed, that the heavy cannon of the New York batteries diminished their fire on Gouverneurs Island, and that their sick were transported from the city to Pauls Huck. The inhabitants, who had long before taken away their effects, now carried off in the night their last property, even the cattle, out of the city to the main land before New York, and the royalist inhabitants were plundered, maltreated and in part dragged off too. From Fort Bunkers Hill the artillery played little upon our works, but they double in the evening their posts along the shore between New York and Cron Point, where General Washington was often to be seen, and provoked the Hessian artillery Captain Krug to fire off 2 cannon at him and his suite, a third shot too would not have been wanting, if the horses of the enemy had been pleased to stay."—From Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 36.

Sept. 11 Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary under Sept. 10 and 11: "Night and day they were busy to bring their things away; and it appeared plain, that there would be a change soon; Almost daily there was firing from Long Island to Horn's Hook, and the ship yards here."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 116. "That portion of the inhabitants who were opposed to the British rule, and friendly to Congress, took refuge mostly on the other side of the Hudson river, and found among the ancient Dutch families of Bergen, Rockland and Orange, a transient and unquiet home until after the war."—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 25, 1850, citing the N. Y. Observer.

12 Peter Elting writes to Capt. Richard Varick that "the town Apears . . . to be in a Bad state of defance it seems the greatest dependence Is made on the muskitry." He is informed, however, "that our army is in a much better Posture of defence at Hornshook [later called 'Harris's Point'—nearly opposite 'Hurlgate'] and Kingsbridge, at the later the grand stand is to be made Many Waggons & Horses about here have been Impres for Carrying the stores, Provisions &c out of New York."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 105–6.

" Two ships of war make their appearance at Hell Gate, having come through the Sound.—N. Y. Merc. (Newark ed.), S 21, 1776.

" Washington, reporting to the president of congress on Sept. 14, stated that another conference of general officers was held on the 12th, when it was determined that a removal of the army was not only prudent but absolutely necessary. He expected the immediate attack of the British.—5 Am. Arch., II: 326.

" Evert Byvanck, a prominent merchant of New York, was among those who fled from the city as soon as the success of the British was apparent. His country-place was on the East River, near the foot of the modern Delancey St. In a letter written at the time, he gives an account of his efforts to get from New York to Horseneck: "On Thursday, the 12th of September, I took my Chais, Horse and Negro Sam to drive, and went down to Corlears' Hook to my country seat [on the East River near the foot of Delancey St.] . . . There being heavy firing of cannon from the two Batteries on Long Island and two of ours on Corlears' Hook, on both sides of the house, was advised not to proceed farther, but being so near my house, about three-quarters of a mile off, I went out of my Chais and ventured to walk through a Lane which led me to the back part of my place, ordering my man to follow me with Horse and Chais. A heavy cannonade still kept on; as we were going there several cannon balls flew past us, and two balls struck a post and a rail of the Lane fence we passed through breast-high just before us; however, we got safe to the back part of my Land. . . . That afternoon the Gentleman I took down with me in my Chais, came to me and importuned me to make all the haste I possibly could to get away out of imminent danger, as it was not in the least doubted but the King's Troops were preparing for landing, and by all likelihood would land next day or Sunday, at farthest, and I would or could not then escape being killed, wounded or taken prisoner, on which I took his advice, and after the firing of the Enemies' Cannon ceased, which was about six o'clock on Friday evening, 13 Sept., I ordered my man Sam to put the horse in the Chais, and I proceeded that evening as far as the hill above Harlem to the place where Mr. Lawe [Lawrence] Kortright had retired to, being a house belonging to Mr. Eagans of St. Croix, where I was kindly received, who told me he had removed his family to Hackensack that day, and intended in one or two days to follow them; his house and outhouses were filled with officers, attendants and their horses. About ten o'clock we were all preparing to go to bed, when a General who was there received orders to be with his several companies of Soldiers at one o'clock that night opposite Turtle Bay or Kip's Bay, and to lay on their arms to obstruct the landing of the King's troops then hourly expected."—Whittemore, The Abeel and Allied Families, 17–18.

13 Washington, writing to the president of congress on Sept. 14, states: "Yesterday afternoon [Sept. 13] four ships of war, two of forty and two of twenty-eight guns, went up the East River, passing between Governour's and Long-Island, and anchored about a mile above the city, opposite Mr. Stuyvesant's, where the Rose man-of-war was lying before."—5 Am. Arch., II: 326. The "Journal of Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7), gives the names of the ships as the "Phoenix," "Roebuck," "Orpheus," and "Carrysfort," and says they were "under Fire of the Rebel Batteries, above Bushwick" (i. e., on the Manhattan shore 1776 Sept. 13 opposite Bushwick). On the following day, the "Flat boats were all sent into Bushwick Creek."—From transcript, in Library of Congress. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under Sept. 14.

Col. Babcock, writing on Sept. 21 from Westerly, R. I., to Gov. Cooke, states that the four ships "kept up an incessant fire, assisted by the cannon at Governour's Island. The batteries from the city returned the ships the like salutation. Three men agape, idle spectators, had the misfortune of being killed by one cannon ball. The other mischief suffered on our side was inconsiderable, saving the making a few holes in some of the buildings. One shot struck within six feet of General Washington, as he was on horseback riding into the Fort."—5 Am. Arch., II: 442.

The four ships anchored at Horn's Hook. The Americans were getting ready to retreat.—Solomon Nash's Jour., 33.

"On this day," runs Baurmeister's narrative, "General Howe wished to land upon the island of New York, because 18 years ago on this day General Wulff had conquered at Quebec, but also lost his life. The watchword for this end was 'Quebec' and the countersign 'Wulff,' but the frigates were too late for this attack as they only sailed out of the fleet at 5 o'clock on the evening of the 14th; 4 frigates, all of 32 guns, named Phoenix, Rhobock, Orpheus and Carysfort, moved up the East River and anchored beyond Buschwic. The rebels fired from all sides on this passage, but the vessels under cover of our batteries sailed by without damage. The battery on Gouverneurs Island had the best effect upon the Point of New York, and on the other hand the wooden watch-house on the said island suffered all the injury which the rebels intended for the battery, and not a man was lost."—Mag. Am. Hist., I: 36.

Gen. Johnson's "Map of Brooklyn at the time of the Revolutionary War" shows the American battery at Brande Molen's Point, north of Stuyvesant's Meadows, and directly opposite Bushwick Creek, Brooklyn, where the "Rose" was anchored. The frigate, to escape destruction, that night took a position between Blackwell's Id. and Long Id.—See reproduction in Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 112.

" Robertson writes: "I went on board the Rose at Bushwick Point w^t Col^o Sherriff to reconnoitre the opposite shore of N. Y. Island Kipps's Bay w^h Appeared very strong ground—made a Sketch of it."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). This sketch may have served as the ground work of the drawing of "Kipps's Bay 17^th Aug^t 1778 (q. v.), where the Troops landed 15^th Sept^r 1776," preserved among the Robertson drawings in N. Y. P. L.

14 "At 8 ^oClock this evening I received orders to Attend Gen^l C —— n who was to command the 1^st Division of Troops consist^g of all the B: & Hess^ns Grenad^rs the L. In^y & Hess^n Chasseurs, to be landed the next morn^g at Kipp's Bay on N. Y. Island, went off immediately."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Lieut. Col. Lewis Morris, Jr., writes to his father an account of local movements among their friends and among the enemy. "The Enemy have been in Possession of Montraseur's Island for these four Days and yesterday they brought several Field Pieces, upon the North West Point and fired several Times at your House. I suppose they will shoot it like a sieve and destroy what little is left upon the place; . . . Could we have supposed that a Nation so civilized in their Manners, so christianized in their Principles, could so far have debased themselves so to extend their Acts of Oppression over a People, the Fruits of whose honest Industry were appropriated to their Advantage, and were the great source of their Riches? . . . The Enemy, from their different Manœuvres and great Preparations intend soon to strike a decisive Blow—their Plan is to outflank and hem us in, but I think they will be disappointed, for the Heights above Harlem and King's Bridge are strongly manned and fortified, and all the Points up to Frog's are strongly picqueted and the avenues blocked and the Roads cut up to prevent the approaches of their artillery. . . . Old Oliver Delancey is a Colonel, and your poor Friend Woodal is killed, and that fawning, treacherous Courtier Governor Tryon lies at the Point of Death. . . . This is the last Letter I shall write you in New York, perhaps it will be the last I shall ever write you for depend upon it there will soon be a Blow struck that in a great measure will determine the Fate of America and liberate us from the Jaws of Tyranny."—From "Letters to Gen. Lewis Morris," in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), VIII: 445–46. In another letter of Sept. 18, Morris stated that, on the evening of Sept. 14, "six ships passed by our Batteries up the East River and anchored just above Mr. Stuivinson's House five having passed by the night before."—Ibid., VIII: 447. See also Winsor, VI: 283. Sept. 14 "

Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "In the afternoon more ships went up the East River, which being fired on again, brought on another smart cannonading; some Houses were damaged and it was very unsafe to walk in the streets. The remainder of the Rebel army hasted away, and so did the members of the Committee, and others of the deluded people."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 116–17. "

Col. Babcock, in a letter of Sept. 21 to Gov. Cooke previously cited, states that, on Sept. 14, "his Excellency came and breakfasted with us at General Putnam's, hard by the fort whereat we lodged. He further assured us he would attend us at General Putnam's an hour before dinner. He did so." Various questions were considered at this meeting of officers.—5 Am. Arch., II: 442. The Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, was the headquarters of Gen. Putnam while he held his short command at New York.—Watson's Annals, 341. See also Ap 5, Addenda. Regarding the occupancy of the Kennedy house by Washington as headquarters, see Ap 13, and Jl 20, 1776.

Miss Moncrieffe, daughter of a Royalist, Maj. Moncrieffe, who was with Gen. Gage in Boston, having written to Gen. Putnam, was invited to his house. She relates the incident in her later memoirs thus (without date): "On the next day, he sent Colonel Webb, one of his aid de camps, to conduct me to New York. When I arrived in the Broad Way (a street so called), where General Putnam resided, I was received with the greatest tenderness both by Mrs. Putnam and her daughters, and on the following day, I was introduced by them to General, and Mrs. Washington [who departed on Je 30, q.v.] . . .; but I seldom was allowed to be alone, although sometimes indeed, I found an opportunity to escape to the gallery on the top of the house (Almost every gentleman's house in New York, has a gallery, with a summer house on top), where my chief delight was to view with a telescope, our fleet and army [British] at Staten Island. . . ."—Memoirs of Mrs. Coghlan, (Daughter of the late Major Moncrieffe,) (London, 1794), 16–17.

Col. Joseph Reed writes that it is expected the headquarters of " the army will be removed this evening to Kingsbridge.—5 Am. Arch., II: 332. The removal was made to the Morris house.—See S 16, 1776.

Capt. Francis Hutcheson, ass't-secretary to Sir William Howe, " writing on Sept. 24 to a friend in England, says that Washington remained at Richmond Hill (see Jl 10) all summer, leaving it the night before the landing of the British (Sept. 15).—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 219, citing the Haldimand MSS., British Museum. Lossing states in The Pictorial Field-book of the Rev., II: 815, that Washington made the residence of Robert Murray on Murray Hill his headquarters on the 14th; but there appears to be no evidence to support this statement, or that he spent the night of the 14th there.—Johnston, Campaign of 1776 around N. Y. and Brooklyn, 230, footnote. See also Winsor, VI: 276.

"The Landing on New York Island, was made this Morning in 15 Kipp's Bay, and the Town of New York, was taken Possession of this Evening by Major General Robertson, who was appointed Commandant."—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of "Journal of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). See also descrip. of Pl. 45-b, I: 354–55.

The following selected extracts from contemporary sources present the principal facts which constitute our knowledge of the events of the day:

Col. Archibald Robertson writes: "at ½ past four in the morn^g of the 15^th we began our march towards Newton Inlet where we arrived a little past 6—found the Boats ready—at 7 the Embarkat^n began & at 10 the whole were in their Boats—I went in a Boat attend^g the Gen^l who was in Commodore Hotham's Boat, we went down the Creek pass'd over the E. River & went on Board the men of War who where [sic] station'd to Cover our landing—They were well Placed & very Close in shore, there were a Number of the Rebels in their Breast Works where we were to land.—After being on board the Ships we return'd immediately again to the Creek & the Commodore made the Signal for the Boats to advance, by ½ past 12 ^oClock they were all rendevouzed under Bushwick Point—Then the Signal was made by the C——re to advance towards the Shore in their proper Divisions upon w^h all the Ships began to fire & kept up an incessant Roar & their Guns well directed our Boats were quite covered w^h smoak The scene all-together was 1776 Sept. 15 Grand & Noble—while we were proceeding we perceived a large Column of Rebels on our left march^{g} with their Colours flying seemingly w^{t} an intention to throw themselves into the Breast Works where we were to land—at last about one the L^{t} In^{y} landed on the Rocky Hill to the Right of the Bay & Part of the Grenad^{rs} the Rest of the Grenad^{rs} landed on the left of the Bay—w^{t}in 40 Y^{ds} of their Breast Works—Gen^{l} Cl——n & I were on the Rock upwards of two minutes before any of the Grenad^{rs} landed on our side & then went into the B. Works to my great Joy w^{t}out the loss of a man—either side of the Bay. The horror & fright the few inhabitants in the first house we came to were in was shoking—we pushed on in ½ Comp^{ys} front to seize the Rising ground in our front in going up saw many of the Rebels running off in the greatest disorder, G——l C——n desired me to run on & hold out my white Hankerchief & call to them to come in, but only one man turn'd about—after the Grenad^{rs} were form'd we halted a little & at this time the Hess^{n} Grenad^{rs} that were on our left fell in w^{t} the Rebel column & soon disspersed them The Hess^{ns} had 5 killd & 10 wounded the Rebels 17 K^{d} & 40 w^{d}—We then went on to the heights of Inklenberg about one mile in front towards King's Bridge where we halted, the L. I^{y} on our Right & a little advanced —About 2 Gen^{l} H——e came up—& after the 2^{d} Embark^{n} arrived about 4 we moved on w^{t} some field pieces in front—The Rebels were drawn up before their Encampment about 2 miles in front on the heights of Harlem but on our advanc^{g} retreated w^{t} the greatest precipitat^{n} leav^{g} great part of their tents Bagage & ^{ca}—we then occupied the ground they left on to the Plains of Harlem & halted all night only Gen^{l} Vaughan wounded of the British this day. A number of the Rebels that were shut in between us & N. York made their Escape on our left, w^{h} might have been prevented had we had more men in the 1st Debarkation to push across the Island to Hudsons River."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). For reference to Robertson's drawing of the landing at Kipp's Bay, see Sept. 13, 1776.

"The [British] army landed . . . at the house of Mr. Foxcroft Postmaster General, in Kip's Bay. The troops immediately took possession of the house of Mr. Robert Murray, the Quaker House on Inkling Barrack [Inclenberg], a very strong point. Mr. Washington's men were driven from the posts they possessed as far as the Hill, with a Hollow way on its right, about 3 miles short of Mount Morris [161st St.] at which place and near the Blue Bell [see O 12, 1753], which is three miles from King's Bridge, they were strongly posted."—Battle of Harlem H'ts, 210, citing St. James's Chron., N 16, 1776.

"Kip's Bay was the large cove which then set in from the East River at about the foot of Thirty-fourth Street. It took its name from the old Kip family, who owned the adjacent estate. From this point breastworks had been thrown up along the river's bank, wherever a landing could be made, down as far as Corlears Hook or Grand Street."—Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 232. Regarding the disposition of the American troops before the British attack, see ibid. See also Winsor, VI: 333.

"The first landing was of 84 boats, with English infantry and Hessian grenadiers under command of Lieut.-General Clinton. Commodore Hotham conducted this landing, under cover of 5 frigates, anchored close before Kaaps [Kip's] Bay, above Cron [Crown] Point, and maintained a 3 hours cannonade on the enemy's advanced posts in the great wood. The signal of the red flag denoted the departure of the boats, the blue on the contrary the stoppage of the passage, and if a retreat should be necessary, a yellow flag would be shown."—From Baurmeister's narrative in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1877), I: 36.

Sir William Howe's report of Sept. 21 to Lord Germaine contains the following account of the events of Sept. 15: "On the 15th instant, in the morning, three ships of war passed up the North River as far as Bloomingdale, to draw the enemy's attention to that side; and the first division of troops, consisting of the Light Infantry, the British Reserve, the Hessian Grenadiers, and Chasseurs, under the command of Lieutenant-General Clinton, having with him Lieutenant-General Earl Cornwallis, Major-General Vaughan, Brigadier-General Leslie, and Colonel Donop, embarked at the head of Newtown Creek, and landed about noon upon New-York Island, three miles from the town, at a place called Kepp's Bay, under the fire of two forty-gun ships and three frigates, as per margin [Phoenix, Roebuck, Orpheus, Carysfort, Rose], Commodore Hotham having the direction of the ships and boats.

"The Rebels had troops in their works round Kepp's Bay, but their attention being engaged in expectation of the King's troops landing at Stuyvesant's Cove, Horen's Hook, and at Harlem, which they had reason to conclude, Kepp's Bay became only a secondary object of their care. The fire of the shipping being so well directed and so incessant, the enemy could not remain in their works, and the descent was made without the least opposition." He here praises the conduct of the officers and men of the Navy. Sept. 15

"The British immediately took post upon the commanding height of Inclenberg, and the Hessians moving towards New-York, fell in with a body of Rebels that were retiring from Stuyvesant's Cove; some firing ensued, by which a Brigadier-General, other officers, and several men of the Rebels were killed and wounded, with the loss of four men killed and eight wounded on the part of the Hessians.

"As soon as the second embarkation was landed, the troops advanced towards a corps of the enemy upon a rising ground three miles from Inclenberg, towards King's Bridge, having McGowan's Pass in their rear, upon which they immediately retired to the main body of their army upon Morris's Height.

"The enemy having evacuated New-York soon after the army landed, a brigade took possession of their works in the evening.

"The prisoners made in the course of this day were about twenty officers and three hundred men. The enclosed return will show the artillery and stores taken [not printed with the report].

"The position the King's army took on the 15th in the evening, was with the right to Horen's Hook, and the left at the North River, opposite to the Blue Bell [see O 12, 1753] where the enemy have their principal work, in which positions both armies still continue."—5 Am. Arch., II: 378–79.

Baurmeister thus describes this phase of the capture "This morning, at 7 o'clock the man-of-war Renome [Renown] of 40 guns sailed out of the fleet with 2 frigates, the Repulse and Pearl, each of 32 guns, up the North River, and anchored above Blumenthal, the rebels fired upon this passage from Pauls Huck, but without any effect. These vessels however in sailing by fired whole broadsides on the shore of the city of New York, on account of which the city, together with Fort Bunkers Hill, was deserted by the enemy, and about half past 10 in the forenoon a white flag was displayed, and at 11 o'clock the Royal Admiral's flag on the point of New York; this caused Admiral Howe to send some 100 marines into the city, to take possession of it, and to post guards in all the principal streets, by which all plundering was stopped and no one suffered any injury."—Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 37.

Pastor Shewkirk writes in his diary the following graphic description of the day's incidents: "Soon in the morning when the tide served, more ships passed up both the North and East river; and though what was yet in town of the Rebel troops got away as fast as they could, yet they fired again on the ships, as they did likewise from Powles Hook; which caused a cannonading which made the houses shake, and the sound of it was terrible. One large ball, supposed to come from Powles Hook, flew against the North Church, just opposite the Chapel [,] broke, and a part of it went back into a neighboring cellar kitchen, where a negro woman was who came running over to the kitchen of the chapel-house; where also Syphers' family was, who had been there all night [see Ag 16], as they lived near the fort, where the houses were most exposed to the firing. After some time the firing ceased, and at the usual time we had the forenoon's preaching, in all stillness; the only service kept in the city. About this time the kings troops had landed on York Island, about three miles from the city; there was some slaughter, and the rebels were made to retreat towards Harlem. In the afternoon at three was the congregation meeting; but the evening preaching we thought proper to drop. There was a good deal of commotion in the town; the continental stores were broke open, and people carried off the provisions; the boats crossed to Powles' Hook backward and forward yet till toward evening; some people going away and others coming in; but then the ferry boats withdrew, and the passage was stopped. Some of the king's officers from the ships came on shore, and were joyfully received by some of the inhabitants. The king's flag was put up again in the fort, and the Rebels' taken down. And thus the city was now delivered from those Usurpers who had oppressed it so long."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776, part 2, 117.

The ships-of-war which covered the landing of the British army at Kip's Bay were the "Phoenix" (44 guns), "Roebuck" (44 guns), the "Rose" (32 guns), and another.—Private Jas. S. Martin's account, printed in Johnston's Campaign of 1776 (1878), part 2, 81. Gen. Jeremiah Johnston stated they were the "Phoenix," "Rose," and "Dutchess of Gordon."—See his map of Brooklyn, etc., in Man. Com. Coun. (1858), opp. p. 112.

1776 Sept. 15

"All accounts agree that it was next to impossible to remain under the fire of the men-of-war. Major Fish says that 'a Cannonade from the ships began, which far exceeded my Ideas, and which seemed to infuse a Panic thro' the whole of our Troops, &c.' Silliman speaks of the 'incessant fire on our lines' with grapeshot as being 'so hot' that the militia were compelled to retreat. Douglas's description is as quaint as it is expressive: 'They very suddenly began as heavy a cannonade perhaps as ever was from no more ships, as they had nothing to molest them.' Lieutenant John Heinrichs, of the Hessian yagers, writes: 'Last Sunday we landed under the thundering rattle of 5 men-of-war.'"—Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 234, foot-note; ibid., part 2, 71. Private Jos. P. Martin, of Col. Wm. Douglas' regiment, in describing the attack, wrote: ". . . all of a sudden, there came such a peal of thunder from the British shipping, that I thought my head would go with the sound. . . ."—Ibid., part 2, 82, citing A Narrative of Some of the Adventures, Dangers and Sufferings of a Revolutionary Soldier, etc. (1830). (The author of this work was Joseph P., and not James S., Martin, as erroneously stated in The Campaign of 1776.—See New Eng. Hist. and Genealog. Register, XXX: 330.) See also O 6.

Kemble records in his journal an account of the British operations: "About 9 in the morning the Reserve, 33d. and 42d. Regiments excluded, Embarked in Flat Boats in Newtown Creek. The rest of the Army marched to the point of Land opposite to Kipp's Bay and embarked there; the 1st Brigade & 71st. excepted, who were Left at Hell Gate. About 12 the whole first Landing pulled to the Shore, consisting of the Reserve & Donop's Corps, covered by two 40 Gun Ships and three Frigates, whose fire was both terrible and pleasing, and so terrible to the Rebels that they dare not come within half a Mile of the Shore instead of defending their Lines on the Shore. As we were going on Shore we saw a party of about 500 . . . Rebels, . . . marching in great haste to take possession of their Works in the Rear of Stuyvesant's House; suppose them to be the People that afterwards fell in with the Hessians. The Light Infantry Landed upon the Right of the Bay, got up a Rock, the Grenadiers &c. in it; the Light Infantry took possession of the Post on their Right; the Grenadiers, 33d. and 42d. Marched thro' to Inclenberg Hill, and the Hessians to the left, where they met with a party of the Rebels, of whom they killed 30 or 40 and took about 60 prisoners. The Grenadiers met with a small party and exchanged a few shot, Maj. Gen. Vaughan the only Person Wounded and that Slightly. Our loss the whole day about 3 Killed and 16 or 18 wounded. The advance of our Army Marched to the Black Horse, and across from thence by Apthorp's House to North River, and had very near cut off Mr. Putnam's Retreat, who brought off the Rebel Rear Guard from New York, most of whom and their Troops in general got off by the North River Road."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 88–89.

On the morning of Sept. 16, Washington prepared the rough-draft of a letter to be sent to the president of congress describing the events of Sept. 14 and 15. It was copied and dispatched immediately by Robert H. Harrison, who explained in a postscript that Washington intended to sign it, "but having rode out, and his return or where to find him uncertain," it is sent unsigned. The letter in full is as follows:

"Sir: On Saturday [Sept. 14], about sunset, six more of the enemy's ships, one or two of which were men-of-war, passed between Governour's Island and Red-Hook and went up the East River to the station taken by those mentioned in my last. In half an hour I received two expresses, one from Colonel Sargent at Horn's Hook, (Hell-Gate,) giving an account that the enemy, to the amount of three or four thousand, had marched to the river, and were embarking for Barnes's on Montressor's Island, where numbers of them were then encamped; the other from General Mifflin, that uncommon and formidable movements were discovered among the enemy, which being confirmed by the scouts I had sent out, I proceeded to Harlem, where it was supposed—or at Morrisania, opposite to it—the principal attempt to land would be made. However, nothing remarkable happened that night; but in the morning they began their operations. Their ships came up the North River as high as Bloomingdale, which put a total stop to the removal by water of any more of our provisions, etc.; and about eleven o'clock those in the East River began a most severe and heavy cannonade, to scour the grounds and cover the landing of their troops between Turtle Bay and the city, where breastworks had been thrown up to oppose them. As soon as I heard the firing, I rode with all possible despatch towards the place of landing, when, to my great suprise and mortification, I found the troops that had been posted in the lines retreating with the utmost precipitation, and those ordered to support them, (Parson's and Fellows's brigades,) flying in every direction and in the greatest confusion, notwithstanding the exertions of their generals to form them. I used every means in my power to rally and get them in some order; but my attempts were fruitless and ineffectual; and on the appearance of a small party of the enemy, not more than sixty or seventy, their disorder increased, and they ran away in the greatest confusion, without firing a single shot. Finding that no confidence was to be placed in those brigades, and apprehending that another part of the enemy might pass over to Harlem Plains and cut off the retreat to this place, I sent orders to secure the heights in the best manner with the troops that were stationed on and near them; which being done, the retreat was effected with but little or no loss of men, though of a considerable part of our baggage, occasioned by this disgraceful and dastardly conduct. Most of our heavy cannon, and a part of our stores and provisions which we were about removing, were unavoidably left in the city, though every means, after it had been determined in Council to evacuate the post, had been used to prevent it. We are now [Sept. 16] encamped with the main body of the army on the Heights of Harlem, where I should hope the enemy will meet with a defeat in case of an attack, if the generality of our troops would behave with tolerable bravery; but experience to my extreme affliction, has convinced me that this is rather to be wished for than expected. However, I trust that there are many who will act like men, and show themselves worthy of the blessings of freedom. I have sent out some reconnoitring parties to gain intelligence, if possible, of the disposition of the enemy, and shall inform Congress of every material event, by the earliest opportunity."—5 Am. Arch., II: 351.

Sept. 15

In a letter written to John Augustine Washington, on Sept. 22, Gen. Washington repeats the account of the patriot forces "running away in the most disgraceful manner," and refers to the "loss of many tents, baggage, and camp equipage, which would have been easily secured, had they made the least opposition."—5 Am. Arch., II: 446. See also Washington's report on this event to Abraham Yates, Jun., president of the convention of the state of New York, dated Sept. 23.—Ibid., II: 466.

Jos. Montgomery, an officer of the Delaware regiment, writing to Caesar Rodney from Kingsbridge on Sept. 16, said that when only a few of the British put in an appearance two or three regiments of Americans ran away, "notwithstanding all the Solicitatious, Prayers and I might say Tears of Genl. Washington."—From the original letter, sold at Henkels', in Phila., Je 13, 1919.

"The rebels, under direction of General Putnam, drew back during this landing from the shore, to the wood between Cron [Crown] Point and Blumenthal [Bloomingdale], with a broken front, sometimes the left, sometimes the right wing in advance; when however the [British] regiments were collected in line on the shore, and the drums gave the signal for the march, not a rebel awaited our coming in order. They fled through the wood, notwithstanding General Putnam made every effort to bring back the fugitives, but it was in vain, and lucky for him, that he was able to escape on a horse. . . ."—Baurmeister's narrative, in Mag. Am. Hist., I: 37.

James Thacher, M. D., records in his journal "When retreating from New York, Major General Putnam, at the head of three thousand five hundred continental troops, was in the rear and the last that left the city. In order to avoid any of the enemy that might be advancing in the direct road to the city, he made choice of a road parallel with and contiguous to the North River, till he could arrive at a certain angle, whence another road would conduct him in such a direction as that he might form a junction with our army. It so happened that a body of about eight thousand British and Hessians were at the same moment advancing on the road, which would have brought them in immediate contact with General Putnam, before he could have reached the turn into the other road. Most fortunately, the British generals, seeing no prospect of engaging our troops, halted their own, and repaired to the house of a Mr. Robert Murray, a quaker and friend of our cause; Mrs. Murray treated them with cake and wine, and they were induced to tarry two hours 1776 Sept. 15 or more, Governor Tryon frequently joking her about her American friends. By this happy incident General Putnam, by continuing his march, escaped a rencounter with a greatly superior force, which must have proved fatal to his whole party. One half hour, it is said, would have been sufficient for the enemy to have secured the road at the turn, and entirely cut off General Putnam's retreat. It has since become almost a common saying among our officers, that Mrs. Murray saved this part of the American army."—Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War, 70–71. The residence of Robert Murray stood at "about the corner of the present Thirty-sixth Street and Fourth Avenue," on the slope of what was known as "Inclenberg" heights, now Murray Hill (see L. M. R. K., III: 966).—Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 235, 239. A bronze tablet was erected on the site of the Murray house on Nov. 25, 1903, by the Knickerbocker Chapter, N. Y. City, Daughters of the Am. Revolution.—Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City, 160; Ann. Report, Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1904), 72.

". . . Gen Washington at first consented to his troops marching forward to give them battle; but on a second consideration, counter-ordered, as he could not have any dependence on the militia and the flying camp, which composed half the number then present. When the Americans were withdrawn, and no prospect of action remained, the British generals repaired to the house of Mr. Robert Murray, a gentleman of the quaker persuasion. The lady of the house being at home, entertained them most civilly, with what served for, or was cakes and wine. They were well pleased with the entertainment, and tarried there near upon two hours or more; gov. Tryon seasoning the repast, at times, by joking Mrs. Murray about her American friends, for she was known to be a steady advocate for the liberties of the country. Meanwhile, the Hessians and the British, except a strong corps which marched down the road to take possession of the city, remained upon their arms inactive; which gave Gen. Putnam the opportunity of escaping with about 3500 men, including the guards, who had been left to shift for themselves, when Col. Glover had been ordered away from New-York. . . . Col. Grayson has repeatedly said, speaking humorously, 'Mrs. Murray saved the American army.'"—William Gordon, Hist. of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment, of the Independence of the U. S. of Am. (1st ed., London, 1788), II: 328–29.

When Washington reached the vicinity of the Robert Murray estate, on the summit of the present Murray Hill, in the vicinity of Fourth Ave. and 36th St., "he found the militia retreating in disorder along both the cross and the Post roads, and Fellows' brigade just coming on to the field. The general, with Putnam and others, was then on the rising ground in the vicinity of the present Forty-second Street reservoir. In a very short time Parsons and his regiments arrived by the Bloomingdale Road, and Washington in person directed them to form along the line of the Post Road in front of the enemy, who were rapidly advancing from Kip's Bay. 'Take the walls!' 'Take the cornfield!' he shouted; and Parsons' men quickly ran to the walls and the field, but in a confused and disordered manner. Their general did his best to get them into line on the ground, but found it impossible, they were so dispersed, and, moreover, they were now beginning to retreat. . . ."—Campaign of 1776, 234–40. This account accords with the testimony of a court of inquiry respecting the retreat, which Johnston published in ibid., part 2, 92–95.

James Thacher, M. D., commenting on the panic of the American troops, wrote in his journal, under date of Sept. 20: "His Excellency [Gen. Washington], distressed and enraged, drew his sword and snapped his pistols, to check them; but they continued their flight without firing a gun; and the General, regardless of his own safety, was in so much hazard, that one of his attendants seized the reins, and gave his horse a different direction."—Military Jour. during the Am. Rev. War, 70.

Lieut. Tench Tilghman, Washington's aide-de-camp, in a letter of Sept. 16 to his father, stated that ". . . the General did all in his power to convince them they were in no danger. He laid his Cane over many of the officers who shewed their men the example of running. These were militia, the New England Continental Troops are much better. . . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 86.

Dr. Stiles recorded in his diary, under date of Nov. 10, a letter he had received from Gen. Greene, which stated that "The 2 Brigades run away from about 40 or fifty men, and left Gen[l] Washington standing alone within an hundred yards of the Enemy. This disagreeable circumstance made the last Retreat very disgraceful." —From the original MS. in Yale Univ. archives cited in Battle of Harlem H'ts, 163. Sept. 15

". . . fame hath said, that Gen. Washington threw his hat on the ground, and exclaimed, 'Are these the men with which I am to defend America?' But several things may have weight here;—the wounds received on Long Island were yet bleeding; and the officers, if not the men, knew that the city was not to be defended. Maj. Chapman was killed, and Brig. Maj. Wyllis was taken prisoner. A few others were killed, wounded, and taken prisonors. The Americans retreated up the island; and some few, who could not get out of the city that way, escaped in boats over to Paulus Hook, across the river. The house, in the fort at Horn's Hook, was set on fire by a shell, and burnt down. The fort was afterwards abandoned."—From Gen. Heath's Memoirs, cited in Battle of Harlem H'ts, 170. See also Bancroft's observations, regarding Washington's vexation, in a bibliographical note on the events of this day, in Hist. of the U. S. (first ed., 1866), IX: 122.

A company of artillerymen commanded by Capt. Sebastian Bauman occupied Bayard's Hill fort, and then escaped along the North River as far as the "Glass House," where after occupying a small redoubt they appropriated boats and crossed the river at night with their howitzers.—Battle of Harlem H'ts., 86–88, citing Bauman's manuscript account.

In Private Martin's account of the rout, he wrote: ". . . the demons of fear and disorder seemed to take full possession of all and everything on that day. When I came to the spot where the militia were fired upon, the ground was literally covered with arms, knapsacks, stores, coats, hats and old oil flasks, perhaps some of those from the Madeira town cellars in New York . . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 83.

Maj. Nicholas Fish, writing on Sept. 19 to John McKesson, secretary of theNew York convention, observed that "the Panic seized as well Officers (& those of distinction) as Men, in so much that it magnified the Number of the Enemy to thrice the Reality & generated substances from their own shadows, which greatly assisted them in their flight to the Heights above Harlem."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 33.

Col. Smallwood wrote to the Maryland convention on Oct. 12: "I have often read and heard of instances of cowardice, but hitherto have had but a faint idea of it till now. I never could have thought human nature subject to such baseness. I could wish the transactions of this day blotted out of the annals of America. Nothing appeared but fright, disgrace, and confusion. Let it suffice to say, that sixty Light Infantry, upon the first fire, put to flight two brigades of the Connecticut troops—wretches who, however strange it may appear, from the Brigadier-General down to the private sentinel, were caned and whipped by the Generals Washington, Putnam, and Mifflin, but even this indignity had no weight, they could not be brought to stand one shot."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1013–14.

It was stated in a letter from New York to England, dated Sept. 27, that "Mr. Washington, presently after the landing on New-York Island, narrowly escaped being made prisoner. He left Mr. Apthorp's house, at Bloomingdale, a few minutes only before the British Light Infantry entered it."—5 Am. Arch., II: 564. Howe made his headquarters at the Apthorp house, which was at the present 9th Ave. between 90th and 91st Sts.—Lamb, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 128–29. Cf. infra.

Lieut. John Heinrichs, writing on Sept. 18 at "Hornhogk" [Horn Hook], thus describes the capture of Manhattan Island: "Briefly; in the afternoon this part of the island was ours. . . . I had the right wing of the out-posts; we marched towards King's Bridge, consequently I came close on the East River, which is lined with the finest houses. I had the pleasure of taking possession of all these houses, together with the hostile battery, where I found 5 cannons; the rebels all fled. All the houses were crammed with furniture, rural riches, and jewels; the people however had all fled, and left their slaves behind. By the next day one proprietor after another came back and joyful tears of gratitude rolled down the faces of these formerly happy people, when they found again their houses, fruits, cattle, and all their furniture, and heard from one that I had merely taken possession for them, and delivered their property back to their hands."—Battle of Harlem H'ts, 227–28, citing Schlözer's "Briefwechsel meist historischen und politischen Inhalts," Vol. II, Part vii, p. 99; Jay Pamphlets. For another translation, see Munsell's Hist. Series, No. 18, p. 189.

1776 Sept. 15 Gen. Geo. Clinton, writing from Kingsbridge on Sept. 18, to the committee of the New York convention, said, regarding the landing of the British: "Our lines were but thinly manned, as they were then intended only to secure a retreat to the rear of our army, and unfortunately by such troops as were so little disposed to stand in the way of grape-shot that the main body of them almost instantly retreated, nay, fled, without a possibility of rallying them, though General Washington himself, (who rid to the spot on hearing the cannonade) with some other General Officers, exerted themselves to effect it.

"The enemy, on landing, immediately formed a line across the Island. Most of our people were luckily north of it, and joined the army. The few that were in the city crossed the river, chiefly to Paulus-Hook, so that our loss in men, artillery, or stores, is very inconsiderable; I don't believe it exceeds one hundred men, and I fancy most of them, from their conduct, staid out of choice. Before evening, the enemy landed the main body of their army, took possession of the city, and marched up the Island, and encamped on the heights extending from McGown's and the Black-Horse to the North River."—5 Am. Arch., II: 383

Gen. Greene, writing on Sept. 17 from the "Camp at Harlem Heights" to Gov. Cooke of Rhode-Island, says in regard to the retreat from Long-Island, and the evacuation of New York: "The retreats were both judicious and necessary, our numbers being very insufficient to hold such an extent of ground. His Excellency had proposed to evacuate the city and suburbs of New York some time before the enemy made their last landing, and had the Quarter-master-General been able to furnish the necessary wagons to remove the stores and baggage, the retreat would have been effected in good order, had the enemy delayed their landing twenty-four hours longer. Almost all the old standing regiment was drawn out of the city, in order to oppose the enemy at Hell-Gate, where they made an appearance of a very large body of troops, and movements as if they intended a landing.

"We made a miserable, disorderly retreat from New-York, owing to the disorderly conduct of the Militia, who ran at the appearance of the enemy's advance guard; this was General Fellows's brigade. They struck a panick into the troops in the rear, and Fellows's and Parsons's whole brigade ran away from about fifty men, and left his Excellency on the ground within eighty yards of the enemy, so vexed at the infamous conduct of the troops, that he sought death rather than life.

"The retreat was on the 14th [error for 15th] of this instant, from New-York; most of the troops got off, but we lost a prodigious deal of baggage and stores. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 369–70.

Vice Admiral Lord Viscount Howe, in a letter to Mr. Stevens, written on board the "Eagle, New York River" (East River) on Sept. 18, describes the movements of the Navy during these operations. He states, among other things, that, on the night of the 15th, "the enemy directed four fire-vessels in succession against them, but with no other effect than that of obliging the ships to move their stations, the Repulse excepted. The Renown returned on this side the town, but the two frigates remain still in the North River, with the Tryal armed schooner, to strengthen the left flank of the army, extending to the western shore of York-Island, . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 379–80.

The chaplain of an American regiment stationed at "Powle's Hook" records in his journal that "After Long-Island was evacuated, it was judged impossible to hold the city of New York, and that for several days the artillery and stores of every kind had been removing, and last night the sick were ordered to Newark, in the Jerseys; but most of them could be got no farther than this place and Hoebuck, and as there is but one house at each of those places [evidently for the sick], many were obliged to lie in the open air till this morning, whose distress when I walked out at day-break gave me a livelier idea of the horrours of war than any thing I ever met with before. . . .

"About eleven o'clock a furious cannonade was heard a little above New-York, and before night numbers came over from the city and informed that it was evacuated by our troops, and about sunset we saw the tyrant's flag flying on Fort George."—5 Am. Arch., II: 460–61.

"The same Day the Enemy . . encamped on York Island across about the Eight Mile Stone & between that & the four Mile Stone."—From letter of Gen. Geo. Clinton, dated Sept. 21, in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), 111. A footnote states that "The eighth mile-stone on the old Boston road, measured from the old City Hall in Wall street, must not be confounded with the eighth mile-stone on the present road running north from the city. The former was, probably, near the present suburban village of Yorkville."—Ibid., 111. Sept. 15

Gen. Howe immediately chose for his headquarters the country seat of Dr. James Beekman, on East River, near the present 52d St.; he remained there seven and a half months.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 554. For a view of the house, see ibid. (1861), opp. p. 496. Cf. reference to Apthorp house, supra; and S 16.

According to Lossing, Washington made Mott's tavern, near the present 143d St. and Eighth Ave., his headquarters.—Pic. Field-Book of the Rev., II: 815.

" A view of the city from the south-east, in pen and ink, probably drawn between this date and Sept. 21, and showing the English fleet in the foreground, anchored off the northern end of Governor's Island, is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 47-a. A similar view from the north-east, made during the same period from a point just north of the Rutgers house, which appears in the foreground, is shown on Pl. 47-b, Vol. I.

" "The Asia, and two other ships of war proceeded up the North River, but were roughly handled by our battery at Powles Hook; and the next morning by day light, the Asia came down much faster than she went up, the three ships of war being nearly all destroyed by four of our fire ships that run in among them."—N. Y. Merc. (Newark ed.), S 21, 1776. See also 5 Am. Arch., II: 460–61.

16 British brigades and regiments are landed, and guards are posted "in & about New York." The general orders contain, in part, the following provisions: "M. G^{l} Robertson will Command in New York;" "His Excelincy L^{t} G^{l} Hiester will be pleased to remove his Camp from Brook-line to Hell Gate in Long Island & Encamp on the Heights, where the Brigade of Guards Where [were] Encamp^{t};" "Capt^{n} Grants New York Comp^{y} to be Posted in the Battery in Brookline Height & to report to Maj^{r} G^{l} Robertson Comman^{dg} In New York;" "The Turtle Bay & Provost Guard to be takin By the Brigade of Guards, 2^{d} & 6th Briga^{es} of British, these Guards to Mount Immediately;" "All Rebel Prisoners to be Kept in New York, in the Hosp^{l} or wherever M. G^{l} Robertson shall Think proper;" "the Camp Equipage of The Army to be Brought Over As Soon as Possible. Magazines & Stores left in New York, are to be secured For his Majesty. The Barrak Master Gen^{l} is Order'd to take Possession of all Empty Houses, he shall judge Necessary For the More Effectually carrying on the Kings Service. —and the Comman^{dg} Officer of that Quarter will Afford Him any Assistance, he may require For the Above Purpose."—From the British Orderly Book of 1776–1777, preserved in the N. Y. H. S.

" "This morn^{g} a Batt^{n} of L. I. advanced by Jones's house on our left, but going too far were Attacked by a number of the Rebels & would have been cut off if they had not been well supported by the Grenad^{rs} & some field pieces we had 130 W^{d} & 9 K^{d} The firing lasted for some hours—Two men of War went up the N. R. & lay opposite our left Flank."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Pastor Shewkirk's diary, under this date, states that the English troops this forenoon were "drawn up in two lines in the Broad Way; Governor Tryon and others of the officers were present, and a great concourse of people. Joy and gladness seemed to appear in all countenances, and persons who had been strangers . . . were now very sociable together, and friendly. . . . The first that was done was, that all the houses of those who have had a part and a share in the Rebellion were marked as forfeited. . . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 117–18

" "The Commander in chief was pleased to direct William Butler Esq to take an account of all the derelict property, & make report every evening of his proceedings to Gen^{l} Robertson then Commander of the City."—From the "Case of William Butler, Esq." in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 150. This statement is followed by an account of the methods of military administration during the British occupation, with particular reference to the use of private property for the storage of supplies, for dwelling houses, barracks, etc. See also D 27, 1777.

" A resident of New York, of loyalist sympathies, wrote on Sept. 23, as follows: "The Day after the City was taken I repaired to it, and found it a most dirty, desolate and wretched Place. My House had been plundered by the Rebels of almost every thing I had left behind."—St. James's Chron. (London), N 7–9, 1776. Regarding the condition of the city, see also Winsor, VI: 331.

1776 Sept. 16 Rev. Charles Inglis returns on this same day from Long Island to the city, which, he says, exhibits "a most melancholy appearance, being deserted and pillaged. My house was plundered of everything by the rebels. My loss amounts to near 200l. this currency, or upwards of 100l. sterling. The rebels carried off all the bells in the city [see S 9], partly to convert them into cannon, partly to prevent notice being given speedily of the destruction they meditated against the city by fire, when it began."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 643.

" Kemble, after describing in his journal the landing and advance of the British troops on Sept. 15, adds: "On a Survey of their Works the Day after, find the whole Coast from Kipp's Bay to New York on the East River, and from New York to Little Bloomingdale [near Greenwich] on the North River, fortified with a Line of Entrenchment, except where the Marshes obstructed it, with a Chain of Redoubts and Works from [Judge] Jones's House, across the Island to Lespenard's and Mortimer's [Mortier's] House [Richmond Hill] by Bayard's Mount on which they have a Fort called Bunker's Hill [see Pl. 50, Vol. I], the only Work of any Consequence or strength on the Island, and tolerably well finished. It is made of Sod. All the rest of Works (which are innumerable) appear calculated more to amuse than for use."—Kemble Papers, I: 88. "Flour and other Stores of no great Consequence" were also found, "with some cannon in their redoubts."—Ibid., I: 89.

" The general orders, issued from the American headquarters on Harlem Heights (the Morris house), contain "The Arrangement for this Night," as follows: "General Clinton to form next to the North River, and extend to the left. General Scott's Brigade next to General Clinton's. Lieutenant-Colonel Sayer, of Colonel Griffith's Regiment, with the three companies intended for a reinforcement to day, to form upon the left of Scott's Brigade. General Nixon's, Colonel Sargent's division, Colonel Weedon's, and Major Price's Regiments are to retire to their quarters and refresh themselves; but hold themselves in readiness to turn out at a minute's warning. General McDougall to establish proper guards against his brigade upon the height, and every regiment posted upon the heights, from Morris's house to General McDougall's camp, to furnish proper guards to prevent a surprise, not less than twenty men from each Regiment. General Putnam commands upon the right flank to night; General Spencer from McDougall's brigade up to Morris's house. Should the enemy attempt to force the pass to night, General Putnam is to apply to General Spencer for a reinforcement."—5 Am. Archives, II: 381–82.

" "The first priest to celebrate Mass in New York City after the British occupation was the Abbe de la Motte, an Augustinian, who was chaplain of a French ship, taken at sea by the British cruisers, and brought for condemnation to New York." For such Catholic service, the British commander ordered him to be arrested; he was kept a "close prisoner" until he was exchanged in 1779.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1450. See also N 18.

" "When the British Army took possession of New York, they found a Frenchman in Goal, under Condemnation for Burglery & Robbery . . . This fellow was set over our Prisoners in the Hospital, as a Surgeon, tho' he knew not the least principle of the Art . . ." He caused the death of many American prisoners by poisoning.—Boudinot's Jour., op. cit., 35.

This introduces, in general, the subject of the treatment of American prisoners in the hands of the enemy during the British occupation of New York. In this connection, the name of William Cunningham, the provost marshal, comes first to mind (see Ag 4, 1774). Cunningham's dying confession on Aug. 10, 1791, regarding his atrocities in New York, stated: "I shudder at the murders I have been accessary to, both with and without orders from government, especially while in New-York, during which time there were more than 2,000 prisoners starved in the different churches, by stopping their rations, which I sold.

"There were also 275 American prisoners and obnoxious persons executed, out of all which number there were only about one dozen public executions, which chiefly consisted of British and Hessian deserters. The mode for private execution was thus conducted: A guard was dispatched from the Provost about half after 12, at night, to Barrack-street, and the neighborhood of Upper Barracks, to order the people to shut their window-shutters, and put out their lights, forbidding them not to presume to look out of their windows or doors, on pain of death; after which the unfortunate prisoners were conducted, gagged, just behind the Upper Barracks, and hung without ceremony, and there buried by the black pioneer of the Provost."—Genius of Liberty (Morristown, N. J.), Ja 15, 1801. Sept. 16

For Cunningham's later history, see N 25, 1783; Ag 10, 1791. For a more particular account of the cruelties and atrocities committed by Cunningham, both in Philadelphia and New York, see the Journal or Historical Recollections of Am. Events during The Revolutionary War, by Elias Boudinot (Phila., 1894), 56–59. Concerning the grievances of prisoners, see ibid., 9–23, 35–36. See also N 1776.

John Pintard has left a description of the interior of the jail as it was under Cunningham's mal-administration. It is published in Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 473–74.

In the battle at Harlem Heights, the British are forced to re- " treat. The engagement began near what is now 130th St. and Broadway, and ended at about 107th St. and Broadway, covering the country west to Riverside Drive.—Johnston, The Battle of Harlem Heights, containing an account of the military operations of the day and a topographical description, with plan, of the battlefield. See also Winsor, VI: 285, 334, 335. The principal events connected with the battle, taken from contemporary accounts, are outlined below:

The British official record reads as follows: "This day there was a smart Action near Bloomingdale, in which the light Infantry [British] suffered, but on being supported by the Reserve under the Hon^{ble} Major Gen^{l} Vaughan, the Rebels were defeated with great loss."—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of "Journal of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7).

Kemble records in his journal: "In the morning a Party of the Enemy showed themselves at Jones's House; were inconsiderately pursued by two Companies of Light Infantry who Engaged and drove a very Superior Body to a great distance, supported by 42d. Regiment and some Light Infantry; were fired at from a Breast work, and, it not being thought proper to support them, were ordered to Retreat. 1 Serjeant 13 Privates Killed; 2 Majors, 2 Captains 7 Subalterns, 5 Serjeants, 3 Drummers, & 138 Wounded." —Kemble's Jour., 89.

Lewis Morris, Jr., writes to his father from "the Heights above Harlem:" "Monday Morning [Sept. 16] an advanced Party, Colonel Knoulton's Regiment, was attacked by the Enemy upon a Height a little to the South West of Days's Tavern, and after opposing them bravely & being overpowered by their Numbers they were forced to retreat and the Enemy advanced upon the Top of the Hill opposite, to that which lies before Deyes's Doare, with a Confidence of Success, and after rallying their Men by a Buegil Horn and resting themselves a little while, they descended the Hill with an Intention to force our Flanking Party which extended from the North River to the before mentioned Hill, but they received so warm a Fusilade from that Flank and a Party that went up the Hill to Flank them and cut off their Retreat, that they were forced to give Way. Their loss is something considerable, ours, about forty wounded & twelve killed. The Impression it made upon the Minds of our People is a most signal Victory to us and the Defeat a considerable Mortification to them."—From "Letters to Gen. Lewis Morris," in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), VIII: 447–48.

In a letter of Sept. 18, written at the Morris house, Washington continues his report to the President of Congress which he began on the morning of the 16th, and gives these particulars: "Nothing has been attempted upon a large and general plan of attack. About the time of the post's departure with my letter, the enemy appeared in several large bodies upon the plains, about two and a half miles from hence. I rode down to our advanced posts, to put matters in a proper situation, if they should attempt to come on. When I arrived there I heard a firing, which, I was informed, was between a party of our Rangers under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Knowlton, and an advanced party of the enemy. Our men came in and told me, that the body of the enemy, who kept themselves concealed, consisted of about three hundred, as near as they could guess. I immediately ordered three companies of Colonel Weedon's regiment from Virginia, under the command of Major Leitch, and Colonel Knowlton with his Rangers, composed of volunteers from different New-England regiments, to try to get in their rear, while a disposition was making as if to attack them in front, and thereby draw their whole attention that way.

"This took effect as I wished on the part of the enemy. On the appearance of our party in front, they immediately ran down the hill, took possession of some fences and bushes, and a smart firing

1776 Sept. 16 began, but at too great a distance to do much execution on either side. The parties under Colonel Knowlton and Major Leitch unluckily began their attack too soon, as it was rather in flank than in rear. In a little time Major Leitch was brought off wounded, having received three balls through his side; and in a short time after Colonel Knowlton got a wound, which proved mortal. Their men, however, persevered, and continued the engagement with the greatest resolution. Finding that they wanted a support, I advanced part of Colonel Griffith's and Colonel Richardson's Maryland regiments, with some detachments from the Eastern regiments, who were nearest the place of action. These troops charged the enemy with great intrepidity, and drove them from the wood into the plain, and were pushing them from thence, having silenced their fire in a great measure, when I judged it prudent to order a retreat, fearing the enemy, as I have since found was really the case, were sending a large body to support their party.

". . . We had about forty wounded; the number of slain is not yet ascertained; but it is very inconsiderable. By a Sergeant, who deserted from the enemy and came in this morning, I find that their party was greater than I imagined. It consisted of the Second Battalion of Light Infantry, a battalion of the Royal Highlanders, and three companies of the Hessian Riflemen, under the command of Brigadier-General Leslie. The deserter reports that their loss in wounded and missing was eighty-nine, and eight killed. In the latter, his account is too small, as our people discovered and buried double that number. This affair I am in hopes will be attended with many salutary consequences, as it seems to have greatly inspired the whole of our troops. The Sergeant further adds, that a considerable body of men are now encamped from the East to the North River, between the seven and eight mile-stones, under the command of General Clinton. General Howe, he believes, has his quarters at Mr. Apthorp's house."

He adds in a postscript: "The late losses we have sustained in our baggage and camp necessaries, have added much to our distress, which was very great before. I must therefore take the liberty of requesting Congress, to have forwarded, as soon as possible, such a supply of tents, blankets, camp-kettles, and other articles, as can be collected; we cannot be overstocked."—5 Am. Arch., II: 351.

Writing on Sept. 17 from headquarters, at Col. Morris's house, to Gov. Cooke of Rhode-Island, Washington told the following story of the battle: "I am now encamped on the Heights above mentioned, which are so well calculated for defence, that I should hope that if the enemy make an attack, and our men will behave with tolerable resolution, they must meet with a repulse, if not a total defeat. They advanced in sight yesterday [Sept. 16] in several large bodies, but attempted nothing of a general nature, though in the forenoon there were some smart skirmishes between some of their parties and detachments sent out by me, in which I have the pleasure to inform you our men behaved with bravery and intrepidity, putting them to flight when in open ground, and forcing them from posts they had seized, two or three times. From some of their wounded men which fell into our hands, the appearance of blood in every place where they made their stand and on the fences as they passed, we have reason to believe they had a good many killed and wounded, though they did not leave many on the ground. In number our loss was very inconsiderable, but in the fall of Lieutenant-Colonel Knowlton, I consider it as great, being a brave and good officer; and it may be increased by the death of Major Leitch, of the Virginia regiment, who unfortunately received three balls through his side."—5 Am. Arch., II: 369. See also Washington's account, dated Sept. 23, written to Abraham Yates, Jr., president of the convention of the state of New York.—Ibid., II: 466–67.

Gen. Geo. Clinton, writing from Kingsbridge on Sept. 18, reported to the committee of the New York convention: "On Monday morning [Sept. 16], about ten o'clock, a party of the enemy, consisting of Highlanders, Hessians, the Light Infantry, Grenadiers, and English troops, (number uncertain,) attacked our advanced party, commanded by Colonel Knowlton, at Martje Davit's Fly. They were opposed with spirit, and soon made a retreat to a clear field, southwest of that about two hundred paces, where they lodged themselves behind a fence covered with bushes. Our people attacked them in front, and caused them to retreat a second time, leaving five dead on the spot. We pursued them to a buckwheat field on the top of a high hill, distant about four hundred paces, where they received a considerable reinforcement, with several field-pieces, and there made a stand. A very brisk action ensued at this place, which continued about two hours. Our people at length worsted them a third time, caused them to fall back into an orchard, from thence across a hollow, and up another hill not far distant from their own lines. A large column of the enemy's army being at this time discovered to be in motion, and the ground we then occupied being rather disadvantageous, a retreat likewise, without bringing on a general action, (which we did not think prudent to risk,) rather insecure, our party was therefore ordered in, and the enemy was well contented to hold the last ground we drove them to. Sept. 16

"We lost, on this occasion, Colonel Knowlton, and sixteen privates, killed. Major Leitch, from Virginia, and about eight or ten subaltern officers and privates wounded. The loss of the enemy is uncertain. They carried their dead and wounded off, in and soon after the action; but we have good evidence of their having upwards of sixty killed, and violent presumption of one hundred. The action, in the whole, lasted about four hours.

"I consider our success in this small affair, at this time, almost equal to a victory. It has animated our troops, gave them new spirits, and erased every bad impression the retreat from Long-Island, &c., had left on their minds. They find they are able, with inferiour numbers, to drive their enemy, and think of nothing now but conquest."—5 Am. Arch., II: 383–84.

Gen. Geo. Clinton writing on Sept. 21 to Dr. Peter Tappen, thus described the battle: "Our Army at least one Division of it lay at Col° Morris's & so southward to near the Hollow Way which runs across from Harlem Flat to the North River at Matje Davit's Fly About half way between which two Places our Lines run across the River which indeed at that Time were only began but are now [Sept. 21] in a very defensible state. On Monday Morning [Sept. 16] the Enemy attacked our Advanced Party Commanded [by] Col° Knowlton (a brave Officer who was killed in the Action) near the Point of Matje Davit's Fly the Fire was very brisk on both sides our People however soon drove them back into a Clear Field about 200 Paces South East of that where they lodged themselves behind a Fence covered with Bushes our People pursued them but being oblidged to stand exposed in the open Field or take a Fence at a Considerable Distance they preferred the Latter it was indeed adviseable for we soon brought a Couple of Field Pieces to bear upon them which fairly put them to Flight with two Discharges only the Second Time our People pursued them closely to the Top of a Hill about 400 paces distant where they received a very Considerable Reinforcement & made their Second Stand Our People also had received a Considerable Reinforcement, and at this Place a very brisk Action commenced which continued for near two Hours in which Time we drove the Enemy into a Neighbouring orchard from that across a Hollow & up another Hill not far Distance from their own Encampment, here we found the Ground rather Disadvantageous & a Retreat insecure we therefore thot proper not to pursue them any farther & retired to our first Ground leaving the Enemy on the last Ground we drove them to—That Night I commanded the Right Wing of our advanced Party or Picket on the Ground the Action first began. . . ." The American loss in killed and wounded, he states, was about 70; and the British, about 300.—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 111–13.

A report printed in Newark on Sept. 21, stated that the British attack was first "near the Blue Bell."—N. Y. Merc. (Newark ed.), S 21, 1776.

Col. Reed, who took part in the battle, writing to Mrs. Reed on Sept. 22, gives another account of the engagement, and among other things says: "Our greatest loss is poor Knowlton, whose name and spirit ought to be immortal. I assisted him off, and when gasping in the agonies of death, all his inquiry was if we had driven in the enemy." Referring to the success of the patriots, Col. Reed says: "You can hardly conceive the change it has made in our army. The men have recovered their spirits, and feel a confidence which before they had quite lost. I hope the effects will be quite lasting. . . . I suppose many persons will think it was rash and imprudent for officers of our rank to go into such an action. General Putnam, General Greene, many of the General's family, Mr. Tilghman, &c., were in it; but it was really to animate the troops, who were quite dispirited, and would not go into danger unless their officers led the way."—5 Am. Arch., II: 444. The same letter, in modified form, is printed by Johnston in The Battle of Harlem Heights, 136–39, citing the Reed Papers, N. Y. H. S.

1776 Sept. 16 Another account of the death of Knowlton, by an officer who assisted him from the field, is contained in ibid., 154–55, citing the Conn. Gaz. (New London), S 27, 1776.

A letter written at headquarters on Sept. 17 (by whom does not appear), regarding the battle of Harlem Heights, states that: "Yesterday morning [Sept. 16] the Regulars came within half a mile of our lines, and made a stand. A few of our scouts, who were out, attacked and drove them off. In two hours after, two thousand of them returned. General Beall sent out three companies of Riflemen, under the command of Major Mantz, who attacked them. Immediately General Washington reinforced with the remainder of our brigade, together with General Weedon's regiment from Virginia, Major Price's three independent companies, and one regiment of Rhode-Islanders. Never did troops go to the field with more cheerfulness and alacrity; when there began a heavy fire on both sides. It continued about one hour, when our brave Southern troops dislodged them from their posts. The enemy rallied, and our men beat them the second time. They rallied again; our troops drove them the third time, and were rushing on them, but the enemy had got on an eminence, and our troops were ordered to retreat, the General considering there might be a large number of the enemy behind the hill, concealed." Among the wounded were Captain Low and Major Leitch; and "Colonel Knowlton, from Boston, killed in the field, who distinguished himself at Bunker's Hill, as well as in this engagement. He will be interred to-day, with all the honours of war." —5 Am. Arch., II: 370–71.

It was stated in a letter from Baltimore that Maj. Leitch was in command of three companies of Colonel Weedon's regiment of Virginians. Col. Knowlton's "Rangers" were "composed of volunteers from different New-England regiments."

"By a Sergeant who deserted from the enemy, and came in this morning, we were informed that their party consisted of the Second Battalion of Light Infantry, a battalion of Royal Highlanders, and three companies of the Hessian Riflemen, under the command of Brigadier-General Leslie. The deserter reports that their loss, in killed and wounded, amounts to one hundred and forty, about forty of which we found dead on the field, and buried. [Cf. p. 1017.]

"On the whole, the enemy got completely defeated, which has given great spirits to our army, who are encamped on the heights at Harlem, where they are advantageously posted, and in high spirits, waiting the attack of the enemy.

"By letters received from New-York, we are informed that the enemy were encamped about two miles from Head-Quarters; that they were landing their artillery from Long-Island at Horn's Hook; and that an attack was shortly expected on our lines, which were very formidable."—Ibid., II: 371–72.

Capt. John Montresor records in his journal on the day of the battle, that in "the action on Vandewater's Heights, near Harlaem, on New York Island," he procured two brass 3-pounders, and there being no horses near McGowns's, where the cannon were, he had them hauled by hand into position to prevent the Americans getting around the British left, "and 60 rounds from each were fired."—Montresor's Jour., 121.

Lieut. John Heinrichs, writing on Sept. 18 from a point "100 yards from Hornhogk," states that he was wounded in this battle and adds: "To whom could I more safely go, and who would receive me in a more friendly manner than they who had but yesterday called me their benefactor, their preserver? As I do not like noise, now still less than ever; I selected for myself, although I could have chozen palaces, a small house on the East River, to which the widow of a New York preacher, Oglyby [former rector of St. George's Chapel in Beekman St.] had fled with a numerous family of children and step-children. Not far distant was the house or rather the palace of her old father, who had a storehouse full of porcelain, wine, and brandy, but had lost nothing from it.

"All these people came back last evening; and the emotion I felt on seeing mother and children, grandfather and grandchildren, &c. down to the black children of the slaves, hugging and kissing each other, so affected my wound, that I got a fever. . . ."—Battle of Harlem Heights, 228, citing the "Jay Pamphlets."

See also the following accounts of the battle: James S. Martin's (error for Joseph Plumb Martin's) Narrative (1830), cited in Campaign of 1776, part 2, 81–84; Lieut. Tench Tilghman's letter to his father, ibid., 87; Col. David Humphrey's account, ibid., 90–91; Baurmeister's narrative in Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 37; and the additional documents in ibid. (1882), VIII: 39–49; extracts from the journal of the Hessian Gen. von Heister, and the diary of Capt. Von Walzburg, pub. in Battle of Harlem Heights, 224–26. Sept. 16

". . . Some few days after this Happened a New England Captain Was Dressed in Woman's apparel arm'd With a Wooden gun & Sword & Drum'd out of the army for Cowardice. . . ."—From "The Journal of Captain William Beatty, of the Maryland Line, 1776 to 1780," in Hist. Mag., 2d sev., I: 79.

"In y^e^ Afternoon we heard many Reports of y^e^ bad Success of our Army, which seem'd to Vary much in y^e^ Telling, so y^t^ it seems very doubtfull whether any of them are worthy of Credit or not."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 42. 17

It is stated in the British orders of the day that: "The Com^r^ in Chief Entertains the Hiest Opinion of the Bravirey of the few troops that Yesterday beat back a Verry superior Body of the Rebels, and he desires to return Thanks to the Batt^n^ and to the Officers and Men of the Artillery, that came to their Support, with that Expedition wich so Strongly markes the Prevaling, spiritt in The Army, and wich Properly temper^e^d must Always Insure Success to his Majestys Arm^e^s, but at the same time he finds Himself under a Nessaty of Dissaproving Want of Attention in the Light Comp^ys^ persuing The rebels without that proper Discretion To be Observe'd when their is not troops to Support.—The Ge^l^ has also much Satisfaction in taking notice, of the steady Behavour of the troops under the Com^d^ of L^t^ Gen^l^ Clinton, who made good the decent of this Island on the 15^th^ Inst^——^Four days Provision from the 18^th^ to the 21^st^ Inclusive will be Isued to the troops at Tirtle Bay as fast as it can be Landed.——The Comp^y^ Officers of Brigades Will press all the Waggons, and cartis, In Possession of the Corps and Employ them For Bringing up Provisions for the troops Without loss of time."—From Orderly Book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. Regarding the campaign around New York, see Winsor, VI: 323, with map p. 404. "

Washington thanks the troops in general orders for their conduct the day before, which shows "What may be done where Officers and Soldiers will exert themselves."—From Orderly Book, McDougall's Brigade (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. "

"Col. Knowlton . . . will be interred to-day with all the honours of war."—From a letter of this date addressed to a gentleman in Annapolis, in Battle of Harlem Heights, 157. For the exact place of burial, see ibid., 79. "

Pastor Shewkirk's diary contains this entry: ". . . everything was pretty quiet, though almost daily they brought in prisoners, who were lodged in the Dutch and Presbyterian churches . . ." —The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 118. "

A letter, written by John Oothout, Jr. (probably about 1855) to Frederic De Peyster, states that early in the Revolution, when the British converted the Middle Dutch Church into a riding-school for their dragoons by removing the pulpit, gallery, pews, and flooring, his father obtained from Lord Howe permission to take down the bell, which was the one presented to the church by the will of Abraham De Peyster in 1728 (q.v.). This he stored in a secure and secret place, where it remained some years after the British army evacuated the city, until the church was repaired and reopened.—De Witt's Discourse (1857), 97–98. This bell remained in the Middle Dutch Church until it was dismantled in 1844, when it was removed to the Dutch Church in 9th St. near Broadway. It remained there until 1855, when it was placed in the Dutch Church in Lafayette Pl.—Ibid. It was later hung in the tower of the Dutch Reformed Church at Fifth Ave. and 48th St.—Brief Account of an Hist. Church (1904), 36.

Among the orders for the day, of the American troops on Harlem Heights, is this: "The Brigade Majors are immediately to settle a Court-Martial for the trial of prisoners, to meet at the white house near Head-Quarters."—5 Am. Arch., II: 382. 18

Lieut. Col. Lewis Morris, Jr., writes to his father: "We . . . are now upon the Heights above Harlem where we shall do or die." —N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), VIII: 447. "

Rev. Charles Inglis of Trinity opens "one of the churches" and holds service.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 643. See Ag 17, and S 22. "

Gen. Geo. Clinton, writing from Kingsbridge, reports to the "Committee of New-York Convention" the events of the last few days in and around the city. Since the battle of Harlem Heights, he says, "nothing material has happened. The enemy keep close to their lines. Our advance parties continue at their former station. We are daily throwing up works to prevent the "

1776 Sept. 18 enemy's advancing. Great attention is paid to Fort Washington, the posts opposite to it on the Jersey shore, and the obstructions in the river, which, I have reason to believe, are already effectual, so as to prevent their shipping passing; however, it is intended still to add to them, as it is of the utmost consequence to keep the enemy below us. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 383–84. The original of this letter is in the N. Y. H. S.—Battle of Harlem Heights, 139–42.

" Gen. Glover writes, from "Burdett's Ferry" to Washington: "The Enemy are forming an encampment on the edge of the North River, about one mile below the ground where the battle was fought on Monday last. I have moved the Brigade up the hill about one and a half [miles] from the Ferry.

"Colonel Bradley's Regiment is posted between my Brigade & Powlus Hook. The Asia Man of war passed by that post, nine o'clock this morning. Colonel Durkee saluted her with five shot—thirty two pounders, which was not returned."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), part 2, p. 1.

" Lieut. Heinrichs, a Hessian officer wounded in the battle of the 16th (q.v.), in a letter of this date, written at Harlem, near "Horn-Huck" (Horn's Hook), thus describes the city: "The island of New York is the most beautiful island I have ever seen. No superfluous trunk, no useless twig, no unnecessary stalk, can here be found. Projecting fruitful hillocks, surrounded by orchards, meadows, and gardens full of fruit-trees, and single ones scattered over the hills, with houses attached, line both sides of the river, and present to the eye a beautiful scene. The houses, which are two stories high and painted white, are encircled by a piazza, and have a weather-vane on top. They are also surrounded by beautiful walks, and are built and furnished in the best of taste."—From "Letters of Brunswick and Hessian Officers during the Am. Rev." in Munsell's Hist. Ser., No. 18, 201–2.

" This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 367—see July 12), entitled "View of Long Island & East River from my Quarters on N. York Island. 18th Septr 1776."

19 Admiral Lord Howe and Gen. Howe, "the King's Commissioners for restoring Peace to His Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in North-America," issue at New York the following proclamation or "Declaration:"

"Although Congress, whom the misguided Americans suffer to direct their opposition to a reëstablishment of the Constitutional Government of these Provinces, have disavowed every purpose of reconciliation not consonant with their extravagant and inadmissible claim of Independence, the King's Commissioners think fit to declare that they are equally desirous to confer with his Majesty's well-affected subjects, upon the means of restoring the publick tranquility, and establishing a permanent union with every Colony as a part of the British Empire. The King being most graciously pleased to direct a revision of such of his royal instructions to his Governours as may be construed to lay an improper restraint on the freedom of legislation in any of his Colonies, and to concur in the revisal of all acts by which his Majesty's subjects there may think themselves aggrieved, it is recommended to the inhabitants at large to reflect seriously upon their present condition and expectations, and judge for themselves whether it be more inconsistent with their honour and happiness to offer up their lives as a sacrifice to the unjust and precarious cause in which they are engaged, or return to their allegiance, accept the blessings of peace, and to be secured in a free enjoyment of their liberties and properties, upon the true principles of the Constitution."—From one of these original broadsides, in the author's collection; see also 5 Am. Arch., II: 398.

An American "Declaration," answering this, is in the form of a travesty, signed with the names of the Howes and purporting to be an explanation of their "Declaration."—Ibid. For another proclamation by the commissioners, see N 30.

" The British orders of the day provide that: "No Officers are to take Possession of Houses in New York but by Application to Majr Genl Robertson;" "The Commissary Genl of stores & Commissary Genl of Artiller'y or their deputys To attend and take Charge of all stores left by the Rebels in the Island of new York;" "A Guard of an Officer and 20 Men from the Brigade of Guards to do duty at Greenwich, to Protect the boats and to Preserve order among the Seamen There—This Guard to Parade at 4 O'Clock This Afternoon, a Guide will attend to Conduct them. The Captns of Guides and all the Guides of duty to attend at head Qurts dayly at Orderly time and there to remain Till Dismiss'd—Lt Genl Earl Pearcy Orders care to be taken by the Regts not to Burn any straw Near the store houses."—From Orderly Book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. Sept. 19

" Washington writes from the Morris house to the president of congress that the British "are bringing many of their heavy cannon towards the heights. . . . They have also eight or nine ships of war in the North River, which, it is said, are to cannonade our right flank, when they open their batteries against our front." He plans "to maintain the post so long as it shall appear practicable and conducive to the general good."—5 Am. Arch., II: 398–99.

" The general orders, issued from "Head-Quarters, Harlem Heights," contain praise for the British policy "to restrain every kind of abuse of private property." They also express complaint that "the abandoned and profligate part of our own army, countenanced by a few officers, who are lost to every sense of honour and virtue, as well as their country's good, are by rapine and plunder spreading ruin and terrour wherever they go; thereby making themselves infinitely more to be dreaded than the common enemy they are come to oppose. . . . The General [Washington] . . . is determined to show no favour to officer or soldier who shall offend herein, but punish without exception every person who shall [be found guilty of this most abominable practice, which, if continued, must prove the destruction of any army on earth.."—5 Am. Arch., II: 413–14.

" Lieut. Tench Tilghman, Washington's aide, writes to his father: "An Ensign is to be tried for marauding to-day, the Genl will execute him if he can get a Court Martial to convict him."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 87.

" In a letter to the Massachusetts assembly, Washington writes "in a cursory, rough way, an account of the most material events from the battle on Long-Island to the present moment."—5 Am. Arch., II: 399–401.

20 Lord Howe, from the "Eagle off New-York," writes to Lord Germain: "Finding in a conversation with Mr. Sullivan, a Major General in the rebel army, taken prisoner in the action of the 27th of August [q.v.], that the leaders of the disaffected Americans, professed to understand the powers delegated by the King's commission, were restricted to granting pardons and declaring the Colonies at peace, without authority to enter into any discussion of grievances, I thought proper to inform that gentleman, that the object of his Majesty's paternal desire was to make his American subjects happy, as well as to relieve them from the calamities of war—That the Commissioners were willing to consult and confer with any persons of influence, upon the means of attaining these ends; and that reconciliation, union and redress of grievances, might be the happy consequence. Mr. Sullivan hereupon proposed, and with General Howe's approbation, I consented, that he should go to Philadelphia, and undeceive those who appeared to entertain that confined opinion of the King's most gracious intentions.

"On the 9th instant he returned, and acquainted me, that he had made known the sentiments I had expressed to him; and that according to the tenor of a resolution of Congress, three Deputies might soon be expected in this province, to enquire more particularly into the grounds of the information he had communicated. . .

"Although the object of this deputation apparently was to interrogate rather than to confer, General Howe concurred in opinion with me, that I should not, on that account, decline any proposition for a meeting.—We thought it material to controvert the real or affected ideas before mentioned, which had probably been circulated with a view to persuade the ignorant, that the offer of peace and pardon held forth in our Declaration of the 14th of July [q.v.], was merely an artifice to disarm them, and that their liberties and properties were only to be secured by a perseverance in their resolution, to throw off all dependence upon the King and Parliament of Great-Britain.

"In the evening of the same day I received information that Doctor Franklin, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Rutledge, would meet me, at any appointed place, on the morning of the 11th. General Howe's presence being that day necessary with the army, he could not accompany me to the meeting, which I appointed should be on Staten-Island, opposite to the town of Amboy. [For account of the conference, see S 11.]

"In consequence of the result of the above-mentioned interview, we judged it necessary to publish the declaration [see S 19] inclosed in our joint letter to your Lordship of this day's date. . . .

"I have only to add, that as the rebel army remains strongly posted at the north part of the island of New-York, and the 1776 Sept. 20 inhabitants who had fled, or been compelled to leave the city, before the King's troops took possession of it, are not returned; we have it not yet in our power, even were it expedient in the present moment, to effect the compleat re-establishment of the Civil Government of this district."—Candid Retrospect, 21–22, citing the Parliamentary Register for 1778.

" Writing to Gen. Schuyler from the Morris house, Washington briefly reviews events since the retreat from Long Island. Of the battle of Harlem Heights, he says: "This little advantage has inspired our troops prodigiously; they find that it only requires resolution and good officers to make an enemy (that they stood in too much dread of) give way." He adds: "The British army lies encamped about two miles below us; they are busy in bringing over their cannon and stores from Long-Island, and we are putting ourselves in the best posture of defence that time and circumstances will admit of."—5 Am. Arch., II: 416–17.

" The British orders of the day provide that "the 3d & 4th Brigdes will send one Carefull woman——to attend the Genl Hospl at Hell gate the woman will be paid & Reliev'd weekly any one that Quits her duty will be immediately sent Home,—all the facines & Pickets made for the 3d & 4th Brigades of British & the Brigade of Stern will be Carried in the Waggons belonging to the Corp's to Joneses House near the north River, those Made by the Brigade of Gds 2d & 6th Brigades to be sent in the same Manner to Major Musgroves advanc'd Post to the Left of McGowens House." —From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

21 A large part of New York City is destroyed by fire.—Winsor, VI: 334. The many references to it in contemporary publications give a composite picture of the catastrophe which no modern summary of the facts could so graphically present. These are contained in the following excerpts from letters, newspapers, official documents, and other authoritative sources:

Kemble records in his journal: "Everything quiet till 12 at Night of the 20th & 21st in the morning, when the Town of New York took fire. The Wind blowing hard a South East. The fire was first discovered between 12 & 1 o'Clock in that block of Houses fronting Mr. Watts's and near the Exchange, in a House facing the Water; from thence it ranged up the Broadway and Broad Street to the City Hall, one way, and near Smiths, the other, at Flattenberg Hill. The other side of the Broad way was all consumed from Cortlands House to Hills Tavern and from thence to St. Paul's Church, with all the buildings back of that to the North River.

"Many People taken up and confined on suspicion of setting the Town on fire, and it is not to be doubted; but it was done by design, Combustibles, Matches, &c. having been found in Houses since, hid under stairways, and ready for another Conflagration." —Kemble's Jour., 89–90. See also Stedman, Hist. of the Am. War, (1794), I: 208–9; The German Allied Troops in the No. American War of Independence, translated from the German of Max von Eelking by J. C. Rosengarten (1893), 42.

Fitch records in his diary: "About one oClock in ye Morning We Observ'd a Considerable Light up toward ye Northward, which we sopos'd to be ye burning of some Buildings; this Light continued while Day, & some Time in ye Morning we were Informed yt it was in ye City of N. York, & yt a considerable part of ye City was Burnt, but we are yet Scarcely able to believe this Report."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 46.

A letter, written by a loyalist in New York on Sept. 23, states: "I flattered myself that the City would soon be peopled again, and that Matters would speedily be restored to their former State; but the Authors of our Calamities were determined to frustrate this Expectation. The Destruction of the City was resolved on, and a Number of Villains remained in the City concealed to execute this most diabolical Purpose. Accordingly, on the Thursday following, when every Thing was very dry, and a brisk southerly Wind blew, some of them set Fire to the Houses near Whitehall. The Fire instantly spread and raged with inconceivable Violence. There were few Citizens in Town; the Fire-Engines and Pumps were out of Order. Two Regiments of Soldiers were immediately ordered into Town, and many Boats full of Men were sent from the Fleet; to these, under Providence, it is owing that the whole City was not reduced to Ashes. The Destruction was very great; between a third and fourth of the City is burnt. All that is West of the New Exchange, along Broad streat to the North River, as high as the City Hall, and from thence along the Broad Way and North River to King's College, is in Ruins. St. Paul's Church and the College were saved with the utmost Difficulty. Trinity Church, the Lutheran Church, the Parsonage, and Charity School, are destroyed. Many of the Villains were apprehended, with Matches in their Hrnds [sic] to set Fire to the Houses. A Fellow was seized, just about to set Fire to the College, who acknowledged he was employed for the Purpose. A New England Captain was seized, with Matches in his Pocket, who acknowledged the same. Between 1000 and 1500 Houses are burnt; and we are under the most dismal Apprehension that there are some more of those Villains concealed in Town to burn what is yet left. Our Distresses were great before, but this Calamity has encreased them tenfold. Thousands are hereby reduced to Beggary. This infernal Scheme was confessedly executed to prevent the King's Troops from having any Benefit by the City, and to distress the Friends of Government . . . the Continental Congress gave express Orders to burn this City if not tenable against the British Fleet and Army [per contra, see S 3]. The City was set on Fire in four different Places at the same Time. Poor Trinity Church, a principal Object of Republican Independent Malice, was set on Fire in three Places."—St. James's Chron., N 7–9, 1776. Mr. Shelton, in The Jumel Mansion, 47 and 64, calls attention to the fact that the portion of this account referring to "A New England Captain" was omitted from the transcription in the 5 Am. Arch., II: 463. He presents other significant records which tend to confirm the opinion that the "Captain" referred to was Nathan Hale. Sept. 21

Ezra Stiles states in his diary, under date of Nov. 25, 1776, that of the many different reports of the fire, the most authentic, "we believe," was the one published in "Mr Gaines' N. York Mercury of 28. Sept. printed at Newark."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 83–84. That account states:

". . . That the fire originated at or near Whitehall, soon extended to the Exchange, took its course up the west side of Broadstreet as far as Verlattenberg Hill, consuming all the blocks from the Whitehall up. The flames extended across the Broadway from the house of Mr. David Johnston to Beaver Lane, or Fincher's Alley, on the west, and carried all before it, a few buildings excepted, to the house at the corner of Bercley-street, wherein the late Mr. Adam Vandenberg lived, sweeping all the cross streets in the way. The buildings left standing on the west-side of the Broadway are supposed to be Captain Thomas Randall's, Capt. Kennedy's, Dr. Mallat's, Mr. John Cortlandt's sugar house and dwelling house, Dr. Jones's, Hull's tavern, St. Paul's, Mr. Axtell's and Mr. Rutherford's. The cause of the fire is no[t] known. We imagine about a 6th part of the whole city is destroyed, and many families have lost their All."—N. Y. Merc. (Newark ed.), S 28, 1776.

Stiles also stated that "There is another N York Mercury printed in the City of N Y. at the printing office Mr. Gaines left when he removed to Newark. By a Kings Printer. In that of 7th Oct. this Burning is ascribed to the N Engld pple. as that of Rome was to the Christians."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 83–84. The mention of the fire, to which Stiles refers was as follows: "The savage burning of this City by the New-England Incendiaries, will be a lasting Monument of their inveterate Malice against the Trade and Prosperity of this Colony, as well as their rooted Disaffection to British Law and Government. They had long threatened the Performance of this villainous Deed; and this is the best Return that the People of Property in this City, who have espoused their Cause, are to expect for their heedless Credulity."—N. Y. Merc., O 7, 1776.

The same paper of two days later (Sept. 30) gives the following full account: "On Saturday the 21st Instant, we had a terrible Fire in this City, which consumed about One Thousand Houses, or nearly a fourth of the whole City. The following is the best Account we can collect of this melancholy Event. The fire broke out first at the most southerly Part of the City, near White-Hall; and was discovered between 12 and 1 o'Clock in the Morning, the Wind blowing very fresh from the South, and the Weather exceedingly dry. The Rebel Army having carried off all the Bells of the City, the Alarm could not be speedily communicated; and very few of the Citizens were in Town, most of them being driven out by the Calamities of War, and several of the first Rank sent Prisoners to New England, and other distant Parts. A few Minutes after the fire was discovered at White-Hall, it was observed to break out in five or six other Places, at a considerable Distance.

". . . Major General Robertson, who had the Chief Command, sent immediately for two Regiments that were encamped near the City, placed Guards in several Streets, and took every 1776 Sept. 21 other Precaution that was practicable to ward off the impending Ruin. Lord Howe ordered the Boats of the Fleet to be manned, and after landing a large Number of Officers and Seamen to assist us, the Boats were stationed on each Side of the City in the North and East Rivers; and the Lines near the Royal Arms were extended across the Island, as it manifestly appeared the City was designedly set on Fire.

"The Fire . . . swept away all the Buildings between Broad Street and the North-River, almost as high as the City-Hall; and from thence, all the Houses between Broad-Way and the North-River, as far as King's College, a few only excepted. Long before the main Fire reached Trinity Church, that large, ancient and venerable Edifice was in Flames, which baffled every Effort to suppress them. The Steeple, which was 140 Feet high, the upper Part of Wood, and placed on an elevated Situation, resembled a vast Pyramid of Fire, and exhibited a most grand and awful Spectacle. Several Women and Children perished in the Fire, their Shrieks, joined to the roaring of the Flames, the Crash of falling Houses, and the wide spread Ruin which every where appeared, formed a scene of Horror grand beyond Description, and which was still heightened by the Darkness of the Night. Besides Trinity Church, the Rector's House, the Charity School, the old Lutheran Church, and many other fine Buildings were consumed. St. Paul's Church and King's College were directly in the Line of Fire, but saved with very great Difficulty. After raging about 10 Hours, the Fire was extinguished between 10 and 11 o'Clock, A. M.

". . . several Persons were discovered with large Bundles of Matches, dipped in melted Rosin and Brimstone, and attempting to set Fire to the Houses. A New-England Man, who had a Captains Commission under the Continental Congress, and in their Service, was seized with these dreadful Implements of Ruin—on being searched, the Sum of 500l. was found upon him. General Robertson rescued two of those Incendiaries from the enraged Populace, who had otherwise consigned them to the Flames, and reserved them for the Hand of deliberate Justice. One Wright White, a Carpenter, was observed to cut the Leather Buckets which conveyed Water—he also wounded, with a Cutlass, a Woman who was very active in handing Water. This provoked the Spectators to such a Degree, that they instantly hung him up. One of those Villains set Fire to the College, and was seized; many others were detected in the like Crime, and secured.

"The Officers of the Army and Navy, the Seamen and Soldiers greatly exerted themselves, often with the utmost Hazard to themselves, and shewed all that Alertness and Activity for which they are justly celebrated on such Occasions. To their vigorous Efforts in pulling down such Wooden Buildings as would conduct the Fire, it is owing, under Providence, that the whole City was not consumed; for the Number of Inhabitants was small, the Pumps and Fire-Engines were very much out of Order. This last Circumstance, together with the Removal of our Bells, the Time and Place of the Fire's breaking out, when the Wind was South, the City's being set on Fire in so many different Places nearly at the same Time, so many Incendiaries being caught in the Fact of setting Fire to Houses: these, to mention no other Particulars, clearly evince beyond the Possibility of Doubt that this diabolical Affair was the Result of a preconcerted, deliberate Scheme. Thus, the Persons who called themselves our Friends and Protectors, were the Perpetrators of this atrocious Deed; which in Guilt and Villainy is not inferior to the Gun-Powder Plot: Whilst those who were held up as our Enemies, were the People who gallantly stept forth, at the Risque of their Lives, to snatch us from Destruction! Our Distresses were very great indeed before; but this Disaster has increased them tenfold. Many Hundreds of Families have lost their all; and are reduced from a State of Affluence to the lowest Ebb of Want and Wretchedness—destitute of Shelter, Food or Cloathing. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., S 30, 1776.

"The London papers attributed the story to 'Major Rook,' formerly aide-de-camp to General Gage, and a noted paragraph writer in the 'Massachusetts Gazette.'"—Wm. H. Shelton in The Jumel Mansion (1916), 45. (Mr. Shelton, in this work, presents evidence tending to show that the New England captain mentioned in this account was Nathan Hale.) "For some reason this graphic account of the great fire in New York is omitted from Force's 'American Archives,' where almost every reference to that event has found a place."—Ibid., 47 and 64.

There are several other accounts worthy of special notice. The following was written by David Grim for the N. Y. Hist. Soc.: Sept. 21

"This fire of 1776 commenced in a small wooden house, on the wharf near the White Hall Slip, it was then occupied by a number of men and women of a bad character; . . . There being very few inhabitants in the city, in a short time it raged tremendously.

"It burned all the houses on the E side of the White Hall Slip, and the W side of Broad Street to Beaver street; A providential and happy circumstance occurred at this time, the wind was then S westerly, about 2 o'clock that morning, the wind then veered to the S. E. this carried the flames of the fire to the W ward, and burned both sides of Beaver Street, to the E side of Broadway, then crossed Broadway, to Beaver lane, and burned all the Houses on both sides of the Broadway with some few houses in New Street to Rector Street, and to John Harrison, Esq^{r}, three story brick house, which house stopped the fire on the E side of the Broadway; from thence it continued burning all the houses in Lumbard Street, and those in the rear of the houses on the W side of Broadway to St. Pauls Church there continued burning the houses on both sides of Partition Street, and all the houses in the rear [again] of the W. side of the Broadway to the N. River.

"The fire did not stop, untill it got into Mortkill Street, now Barclay Street. The Colledge yard and the vacant grounds in the rear of the same, put an end to this awful and tremendous fire.

"Trinity Church, being burned was occassioned by the flakes of the fire that fell on the S side of the roof, The southerly winds fanned those flakes of fire, in a short time to an amazing blaze, it soon became out of the Human power to extinguish the same; The roof of this noble Edifice was so steep that no person could go on it.

"St. Paul's Church; was in like perilous situation. The roof being flat, with a balistrade on the eves; a number of the citizens went on the same, and extinguished the flakes of fire, as they fell on the roof. Thus happily was this beautiful church saved from the destruction of this dreadful fire [which] threatened the ruin thereof, and that of the whole city.

"The Lutheran Church, being contiguous to houses adjoining, it was impossible, to save it from destruction, this fire was so furious and violently hot, that no person could go near it. And there were no fire engines to be had at that time in the city.

"The number of Houses, that were burned and destroyed, in the city at that awful conflagration were thus: viz^{t}

"From	Mortkill Street to Courtlandt St.	167
"	Courtlandt Street to Beaver St.	175
"	Beaver Street to E. river,	151
	Houses	493

"There being very few inhabitants in the city at that time, and many of those were afraid to venture at night in the streets, fearing of being taken up as suspicious persons.

"An instance to my knowledge occurred, a Mr. White, a decent citizen and house carpenter, rather too violent Loyalist, and latterly had addicted himself to liquor; Was that night of the fire, hanged on a tavern sign post, at the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt Streets; several of the citizens were sent to the provost guard for examination, some of them remained there two or three days, until they could give satisfactory evidence of their Loyalty."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1870), 275.

Grim's account is accompanied by a plan of the city ("within the Palisades which were erected in the year 1745"), showing the course of this fire and also that of Aug. 3, 1778 (q. v.). It indicates the sites of the prominent buildings of the period. This plan is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and was reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), opp. p. 766. No other map of the burned district appears of record.

To this account, William Dunlap, writing in 1840, adds: "Over the ruins of this fire I have wandered, when a boy, in every direction. It will be observed, by Mr. Grim's account, that the houses on the west side of Broadway, and which were south of Beaver street, escaped the conflagration; and it was in these, that the English generals lived—what is now No. 1, being head-quarters. I must observe, that the houses in Broadway, north of Trinity church yard, were not burned. The City Tavern was on part of the site of the present City Hotel. Between this and St. Paul's church the houses were small and most of them of wood. The last brick houses in the town were next beyond the church. The ruins on the south-east side of the town were converted into dwelling places by using the chimneys and parts of walls which were firm, 1776 Sept. 21 and adding pieces of spars, with old canvass from the ships, forming hovels—part hut and part tent. This was called 'Canvass-town' [see Ag 26, 1785]; and was the receptacle and resort of the vilest dregs brought by the army and navy of Britain, with the filthiest of those who fled to them for refuge."—Dunlap, Hist. of the New Netherlands, etc., II: 79.

Washington reported very briefly to the president of congress, from Headquarters on the Heights of Harlem, on Sept. 23, that "On Friday night [Sept. 20–21], about eleven or twelve o'clock, a fire broke out . . . which continued to burn pretty rapidly till after sunrise the next morning." He added that he was not informed "how the accident happened, nor received any certain account of the damage."—5 Am. Arch., II: 463.

Writing on the same day to Gov. Trumbull, Washington stated that "the gentleman who brought the letter from General Howe last night [Sept. 22], and who was one of his Aids-de-Camp, informed Colonel Reed that several of our countrymen had been punished with various deaths on account of it, some by hanging, others by burning, &c.; alleging that they were apprehended when committing the fact."—Ibid., II: 466.

Sir Wm. Howe, in his report to Lord Geo. Germain, dated Sept. 23, states that the fire occurred "Between the 20th and 21st instant, at midnight." He attributed it to "a number of wretches," who "succeeded too well," having set the town on fire "in several places with matches and combustibles that had been prepared with great art and ingenuity." He says that "Many were detected in the fact, and some killed upon the spot by the enraged troops in garrison; and had it not been for the exertions of Major-General Robertson, the officers under his command in the town, and the brigade of Guards detached from the camp, the whole must infallibly have been consumed, as the night was extremely windy.

"The destruction is computed to be about one-quarter of the town. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 462–63 (see also 380).

Rev. Chas. Inglis, writing on Oct. 31 to the S. P. G. F. P., gives the following account of the burning of the city: "Several rebels secreted themselves in the houses, to execute the diabolical purpose of destroying the city. On the Saturday following an opportunity presented itself; for the weather being very dry, and the wind blowing fresh, they set fire to the city in several places at the same time, between twelve and one o'clock in the morning. The fire raged with the utmost fury, and, in its destructive progress, consumed about 1000 houses, or a fourth part of the whole city. To the vigorous efforts of the officers of the army and navy, and of the soldiers and seamen it is owing, under Providence, that the whole city was not destroyed. We had three churches, of which Trinity Church was the oldest and largest. It was a venerable edifice, had an excellent organ which cost 850l sterling, and was otherwise ornamented. This church, with the rector's house and the charity school,—the two latter, large expensive buildings,—were burned. St. Paul's Church and King's College had shared the same fate, being directly on the line of fire, had I not been providentially on the spot, and sent a number of people with water on the roof of each. Our houses are all covered with cedar shingles, which makes fire very dangerous. The church corporation had suffered prodigiously, as was evidently intended. Besides the buildings already mentioned, about 200 houses, which stood on the church ground, were consumed; so that the loss cannot be estimated at less than 25,000l sterling. This melancholy accident, and the principal scene of war being here, will occasion the Clergy of this city to be the greatest sufferers of any on the continent by the present rebellion."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to. ed.), III: 643. On June 9, 1777 (q.v.), an exact estimate of Trinity's losses was ascertained.

The chaplain of Col. Durkee's regiment at Powles Hook writes in his journal: ". . . had not the wind as it veered to the west died away, the remainder of that nest of vipers would have been destroyed."—5 Am. Arch., II: 461. See also the graphic description of the fire, recorded by a loyalist eye-witness, in Pastor Shewkirk's diary, pub. in Campaign of 1776, part 2, 118–19.

Gen. Robertson's house was one of those burned. Instead of using one of the engines to save it, he used it to save the king's ships and magazines, and thus saved stores worth £200,000, while he lost his house which cost him £2,000. In 1780, he wrote to the commissioners of the treasury asking for reimbursement.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 798–99.

A letter, written on Sept. 26 from the camp of the Americans at Harlem, states: "Our friends were suspected."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), O 11, 1776. The question of the origin of the fire must have been a mooted question from the day of its occurrence until after the war. One early newspaper mention of the subject follows: "Slanderous reports have been made that the late conflagration of N. York was the act of the friends of America. It is a fact that many thousands of innocent persons [who] were found there by the King's troops were confined in various churches on suspicion. The probable cause is that Lord Howe's seamen going ashore for a frolic carelessly set a house on fire at White Hall Slip and that a high wind easily spread it."—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), N 20, 1776. Sept. 21

Col. Robertson records in his journal: "About this morng the Town of N: York was set on fire in many places, by Rebels that had lain concealed from the 16th the wind being high near ¼ of the Best houses were burnt down Sev[l] of the Rascals were taken in the fact w[t] faggots dipp'd in Brimstone."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

Reporting to Lord Germain on Sept. 24 regarding the fire, Gov. Tryon says, among other things: "Many of the incendiaries are now in confinement, and two or three were killed as they were detected in their hellish design. Many circumstances lead to conjecture that Mr. Washington was privy to this villainous act, as he sent all the bells of the churches out of town, under pretence of casting them into cannon; whereas, it is much more probable to prevent the alarm being given by ringing of the bells before the fire should get ahead beyond the reach of engines and buckets; besides, some officers of his army were found concealed in the city, supposed for this devilish purpose. The town was thought to be saved more by a sudden change in the wind (which blew strong) and pulling down intermediate houses, than by water. It is afflicting to view the wretched and miserable inhabitants who have lost their all, and numbers of reputable shop-keepers that are reduced to beggary, and many in want for their families of the necessaries of life. The fire broke out in sundry places nearly at the same time, but was first discovered at Whitehall stairs, and has burnt the whole body of the buildings that lies between George street and Broad street, as high up as the City Hall, and all the buildings on the north of Fort George, lying between the North River and Great George street, as far up as King's College, excepting a few houses and St. Paul's Church; and almost all the houses on the church estate, with Trinity Church, are totally consumed. . . . The ship-docks, warehouses, and the commercial part of the city is as yet safe, and every measure pursued by General Robertson, commanding officer in New-York, assisted by myself, to establish such regulations and police as may ensure its future security. I was at Flatbush, at Mr. Axtell's four miles from the city, for the recovery of my health and strength, when this dreadful event befell this devoted city."—5 Am. Arch., II: 493–94.

John Sloss Hobart, writing from the camp at Kingsbridge regarding the fire, says: ". . . The city is burnt from the Bowling-Green, on the west side of the Broadway, to the College, except the buildings of Mr. J. Cortlandt and Mr. Rutherford's houses; and on the east side to within two doors of the house lately occupied by General McDougall, and the west side of Broad street from the Exchange to Vervlatenburgh street. General Howe disclaims any knowledge of the matter till the city was in flames; in order to evince his sincerity, we are told he threw several persons, suspected of being concerned, into the flames; several others were hung up by the heels, and afterwards had their throats cut. This, we suppose, has been done in order to take the odium of such a crime from the army. The most rational conjecture we can make for the cause of the fire is, that the army, having been promised the plunder of the town in case of conquest, and finding from their late repulse that such an event is rather too far distant for their impatience, have set fire to the town in order to facilitate their views."—5 Am. Arch., II: 503.

Pastor Shewkirk's diary states: "The fire was then in the lower part of Broad street, Stone street, &c. It spread so violently that all what was done was but of little effect; if one was in one street and looked about, it broke out already again in another street above; and thus it raged all the night, and till about noon. The wind was pretty high from southeast, and drove the flames to the northwest. It broke out about White Hall; destroyed a part of Broad street, Stone street, Beaver street, the Broadway, and then the streets going to the North River, and all along the North river as far as the King's College. Great pain was taken to save Trinity church, the 1776 Sept. 21 oldest and largest of the English churches, but in vain; it was destroyed, as also the old Lutheran church, and St. Paul's, at the upper end of Broadway, escaped very narrowly. . . .

"There is great reason to suspect that some wicked incendiaries had a hand in this dreadful fire, which has consumed the fourth part of the city; several persons have been apprehended; moreover there were few hands of the inhabitants to assist; the bells being carried off, no timely alarm was given; the engines were out of order; the fire company broke; and also no proper order and directions, &c.; all which contributed to the spreading of the flames."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776, part 2, 119.

Baurmeister records on Sept. 24: ". . . nearly 500 of the best houses and one church were the sacrifice to this rebellious fury. There are many villains caught and under arrest, others were thrown into the flames, and one a sworn rebel, whose wife and 5 children could not induce him to give up this incendiarism, stabbing his wife, who was about to extinguish the fire with water, was seized by the sailors, at once stabbed and hung up by the feet before his own house until daybreak of the 20th [error, evidently, for 21st]. The English guard was of much assistance in suppressing the fire, hastening into the city at once, but the sailors did the best part of it, taking care to pay themselves well by plundering other houses near by that were not on fire. It is a real horror to look at New York in its desolation."—Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 38.

Regarding the burning of Trinity Church, see the sketch of the ruins, reproduced as Pl. 49, and described on pp. 362–63, Vol. I.

A description of Trinity Church, published Oct. 7, 1776, states that the body of the church was 105 ft. long, the chancel 16 ft. long, the steeple 32 ft. square, the whole length 153 ft.; the breadth of the church 73 ft., and the spire 180 ft. high. The organ, consisting of 25 stops, and costing 850 guineas, was estimated by the best judges to be "as good a one as any in London of the Price."—N. Y. Merc., O 7, 1776. The church also contained "several pieces of handsome painting, and some very beautiful marble monuments." The windows were of leaded glass. The edifice was "embosomed" by "lofty trees."—N. Y. Mag., Jan., 1790 (I: 3).

The loss on Trinity Church property amounted to £22,200, and in rentals of ground lots on which the tenants' buildings burned, £536.—Trin. Min. (MS.), Je 9, 1777. See also Dr. Auchmuty's letter of Nov. 20.

The Lutheran Church, which stood on the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St., and was consumed in this fire, was never rebuilt. The site was known for many years as the "Burnt Lutheran Church." For a view and descrip of this church in 1799, see Pl. 68-a, Vol. I. On Oct. 28, the Rev. Bernard Houseal, minister of the "Lutheran Trinity-Church," which was destroyed "with its good organ, &c. and the habitation of the minister," advertised for the recovery of any articles that were saved.—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776.

It is said that the house, belonging to a devout German, in Wall Street, in which a small Catholic congregation worshiped just prior to the Revolution, was also burned.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1405.

The block on the west side of Broadway, opposite Bowling Green, escaped destruction, and its pre-Revolution, colonial, appearance was preserved for many years.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 515 passim.

Letters from New York, dated Sept. 25, state "that the Rebel Incendiaries having placed a large Quantity of Combustibles in the Cellars of several Houses in that Part of the Town called Whitehall, set Fire to them. . . ." The wing of King's College "is much damaged; but the main Building, with the Library, is saved." Nearly 1,600 houses "were burned by this atrocious Act, which was conducted by one William Smith, an Officer in a New England Regiment, who was taken with a Match in his Hand, and sacrificed on the Spot to the Fury of the Soldiers." Another letter states "that the first Incendiary who fell into the Hands of the Troops was a Woman, provided with Matches and Combustibles; but that her Sex availed her little, for without Ceremony, she was tossed into the Flames. Those who next attracted Notice were some Fellows destroying a Chain of Buckets, in order to prevent their being made Use of in extinguishing the Conflagration; . . . they were instantly thrown into the Flames after her."—St. James's Chron., N 9–12, 1776. Edmund Burke, in a glowing tribute in the house of commons on Nov. 6, 1776, exalted the noble patrioism of this woman whose life was sacrificed in opposition to British tyranny.—The Parl. Reg., VI: 60.

Charges of inhuman barbarity, made by both Americans and British against each other, were frequent. A British soldier, writing from New York on Sept. 22, says: "We are at length in Possession of this City, and I suppose upwards of five thousand Inhabitants have remained in it, . . .; I mean the New-Yorkers, not the New-England Saints, some of whom I find staid behind for the villainous Purpose of setting Fire to the City, which, 'tis verily believed, was concerted by some great ones among the Rebels, and that the poor Wretches who did the Business were only their Tools. . . . Some of the Incendiaries were found at their hellish Work, and killed by the Soldiery in their Fury on the Spot. The Guards and Hessians in every Engagement in which they have been concerned have fought like Devils. The Report which was circulated in London, that they would desert and go over to the Enemy, 'tis supposed has spirited them up to behave so very courageously. It is thought that the Army will be at Philadelphia before Christmas, as most of the Provincials are sick of the Business."—St. James's Chron., N 2–5, 1776. Sept. 21

Another British soldier, one James Drewitt, in a letter written on Sept. 25 on board the frigate "Mercury," said: "One of the fellows who set fire to this town cut a poor woman's arm off for attempting to extinguish the fire in her own house, but a party of soldiers coming up run their bayonets through him, and some of the seamen hoisted him up by the heels to a sign post: there are upward of 600 suspected persons taken up and imprisoned in the town."—Ibid., N 16–19, 1776.

An American officer at Harlem, in a letter of Sept. 25, wrote: "By the best accounts, we learn, that about a quarter part of the city of New York is burnt, and that it was purposely fired by some private persons. Since this fire, the enemy have practiced some inhuman cruelties on the unfortunate wretches they have in their power, under pretence of their being concerned in the plot. They have hanged numbers by the feet, and then cut their throats. The Hessians are continually plundering, and are countenanced by their General; and General Howe dares not punish them for fear of producing a general mutiny."—5 Am. Arch., II: 524.

The American committee of secret correspondence, in its long review of events prior to Oct. 1, 1776, stated: "The enemy charged some stragglers of our people that happened to be in New-York with having set the city on fire designedly, and took that occasion, as we are told, to exercise some inhuman cruelties on those poor wretches that were in their power. They will no doubt endeavour to throw the odium of such a measure on us; but in this they will fail, for General Washington, previous to the evacuation of that city, whilst it was in his power to do as he pleased with it, desired to know the sense of Congress respecting the destruction of the city, as many officers had given it as their opinion it would be an advisable measure; but Congress resolved that it should be evacuated and left unhurt, as they had no doubt of being able to take it back at a future day [see S 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6]. This will convince all the world we had no desire to burn towns or destroy cities, but that we left such meritorious works to grace the history of our enemies."—Ibid., II: 820–21; see also Marshall, Life of Washington, II: 464.

A letter of Oct. 9, 1776, states: "Only one man who was caught setting fire to his own house, was shut up in it, and consumed to ashes with his property;" that "the shipping in the river, during the conflagration, was with much difficulty saved, and (agreeable to former accounts) only about 1000 destroyed."—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 778. For the result of an official investigation by the British, see O 18, 1783.

Lieut. Tench Tilghman, writing on Sept. 25 to his father, says: "Reports concerning the setting fire to New York, if it was done designedly, it was without the knowledge or Approbation of any commanding officer in the army, and indeed so much time had elapsed between our quitting the City and the fire, that it can never be fairly attributed to the Army. Indeed every man belonging to the Army, who remained in or were found near the City were made prisoners. Many Acts of barbarous cruelty were committed upon poor creatures who were perhaps flying from the flames, the Soldiers and Sailors looked upon all who were not in the military line as guilty, and burnt and cut to pieces many. But this I am sure was not by Order. Some were executed next day upon good Grounds."—Memoir of Lieut. Col. Tench Tilghman (1876), 140.

Col. Silliman, in a letter to his wife, on Sept. 25, says: "I believe it was not the regulars, but some of our own people in the city that set it on fire, for they executed several of our friends there for it the next day."—Shelton, Jumel Mansion (1916), 51.

1776 Sept. 21 A letter written from Harlem on Sept. 26 states: "Our friends were immediately suspected and according to the report of a flag of truce who came to our lines soon after, those that were found in or near the spot were pitched into the conflagration, some hanged by the heels, others by their necks with their throats cut. Inhuman barbarity! One Hale in New York, on suspicion of being a spy, was taken up and dragged without ceremony to the execution post, and hung up" (see S 22).—5 Am. Arch., II: 548.

A printed commission, issued by congress and signed by John Hancock, is "found in the pocket of a Provincial Officer, who was detected in setting fire to some of the houses in New York, and put to death by the soldiers." It showed him to be First Lieutenant Richard Brown of the second company of riflemen in the second regiment of foot, commanded by Col. William Thomson.—London Packet, D 2–4, 1776. According to Heitman's Hist. Reg. of the Cont. Army, this was a Pennsylvania regiment; and Richard Brown was taken prisoner at the battle of Long Island. It is probable that, being a prisoner in New York, he was released by the fire.—Shelton, Jumel Mansion, 45.

John Jos. Henry (later Judge Henry), of Pennsylvania, a prisoner on the frigate "Pearl" in New York harbour, saw the fire from a distance of four miles as "a most beautiful and luminous, but baleful sight." He first saw it "of the size of the flame of a candle," which appeared to be "the burning of an old and noted tavern called the 'Fighting Cocks,' . . . to the east of the battery and near the wharf." The flames increased rapidly because of the wind, and he soon "saw another light at a great distance from the first, up the North River." This seemed to be "an original, distant and new formed fire, near a celebrated tavern in the Broadway called 'White Hall.'" Boats put off from the British fleet, and rowed speedily toward the city. "This circumstance repelled the idea that our enemies were the incendiaries, for indeed they went in aid of the inhabitants." The boat from the "Pearl" returned at daylight, and the officer and crew reported "that the burning of New York was the act of some mad-cap Americans." The sailors said "that they had seen one American hanging by the heels dead, having a bayonet wound through his breast," and that "he was caught in the act of firing the houses;" also that "they had seen one person who was taken in the act tossed into the fire, and that several who were stealing, and suspected as incendiaries, were bayonetted." In this account of the fire, Judge Henry adds: "The testimony we received from the sailors, my own view of the distinct beginning of the fire, in several spots, remote from each other, and the manner of its spreading, impressed my mind with the belief that the burning of the city was the doings of the most low and vile of persons, for the purpose not only of thieving but of devastation. This seemed to be the general view, not only of the British, but that of the prisoners then aboard the transports. . . . It was not until some years afterwards that a doubt was created; but for the honor of our country and its good name, an ascription was made of the firing of the city to accidental circumstances. It may be well that a nation in the heat and turbulence of war, should endeavor to promote its interests by propagating reports of its own innocence and prowess, and accusing the enemy of flagrant enormity and dastardliness (as was done in this particular case) but when peace comes let us, in God's name, do justice to them and to ourselves."—Henry (J. J.), Campaign against Quebec (Lancaster, 1812), 184–86.

Samuel Curwen, writing on Dec. 20 to George Russell, in England, says: "The accounts of the burning of the city of New York in the Gazette [vide supra], are full, explicit, and intelligible; . . . and that it was fired by some Northern man is undoubted. A Mr. Smith, son of a clergyman of Weymouth, in Massachusetts-Bay, whom and whose family I knew very well, was concerned, taken, and I believe executed on due proof."—5 Am. Archives, III: 1307.

On Oct. 18, 1783 (q. v.), before the British left New York, they made an effort, by special investigation, to clear up the conflicting evidence and opinions concerning the origin and cause of the fire. The testimony of eye-witnesses, both American and British, was taken by commissioners and put on record.

" The British orders of the day state: "The Hessian Chasseurs being by accident omitted in the thanks of the 17th the Gen[l] is happy to take the earliest opportunity of acknowledging their alertness & of thanking them for their great readiness to support the Light Infantry. The Corps under the Command of Lieut. G[l] Clinton to receive provisions at Marsons Wharf—That under L G[l] Earl Percy & the Artillery at Turtle Bay—The Troops in Town to receive theirs there." "A Working party of 400 Men with Officers in proportion to parade tomorrow Morning at Day break & march to M[r] Gowen's House, the Qu[rs] of the 1st L[t] Inf[y] where an Engineer will attend to conduct them—this party to leave off working at Noon to retire to Camp & be replaced by the same Number at 2 o'Clock who are to continue till 10 at Night."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. Sept. 21

" In the "Convention of the Representatives of the State of New-York," at Fishkill, it is resolved "That the Secret Committee, for obstructing the navigation of Hudson's River, be empowered and directed to purchase or impress . . . any number of Vessels not exceeding six," for "completing the obstructions in Hudson's River, opposite to Mount Washington." The same committee is to be directed "to send all the oak Plank which they have in their possession to Mount Washington." It is also resolved that "the superintendents for building the Continental Frigates at Poughkeepsie, be earnestly requested to send as much of their short oak Plank as they possibly can spare to Fort Washington with the utmost despatch."—5 Am. Arch., II: 439–40. Resolutions are also adopted appointing a committee for detecting and defeating conspiracies. These were printed as a broadside, one of which is now in the N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., 6923).

" The headquarters of the American army are still at the Morris house. The main army of the British is encamped between the 7th and 8th mile-stones. Gen. Howe's Headquarters are at the Apthorp house.—From letter of Samuel Chase to Gen. Gates, in Gates Papers (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

A stone house that stood at 152d St. and Kingsbridge Road during the Revolution is shown in a lithographic drawing in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 690.

" Gen. (afterwards Governour) George Clinton, writing to Doctor Peter Tappen from Kingsbridge, says: "I have been so hurried & Fatigued out of the ordinary way of my Duty by the Removal of our Army from New York & great Part of the public stores to this Place that it has almost worn me out tho' as to Health I am as well as usual; but how my Constitution has been able to stand lying out several Nights in the Open Air & exposed to Rain is almost a Miracle to me—Whom at Home the least Wet indeed some Times the Change of Weather almost laid me up."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 109.

" Lieut. Gov. Colden dies at his home at Flushing, L. I.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 685–86; N. Y. Merc., O 14, 1776. An American patriot's estimate of the character and ability of Cadwallader Colden, who was president of the council and lieutenant-governour of the province of New York for various periods from Aug. 4, 1760, is contained in The Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 77–78. See S 14; Keys, Cadwallader Colden, a Representative Eighteenth Century Official (N. Y., Columbia Univ. Press, 1906).

" Gaine, in Newark, N. J. brings out No. 1301 of The New-York Gazette; and the Weekly Mercury, continuing the sequence of his numbered issues, his last previous one being that of Sept. 9 (q. v.). He published seven issues in Newark, to No. 1307 (Nov. 2, 1776).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 423. See S 30.

22 "This morn[g] by day break a work[g] party of 400 men began to make a Chain of Ridouts from the N: to the E: River across the heights of Harlem—This Even[g] The Rebels attempted to surprize our Picquet in Montresor's Island consisting of 100 men, but were repulsed w[t] considerable loss besides one Major & 13 taken the 71st lost 8 men K[d]."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See S 24.

" Fitch writes: "About Noon all y[e] Ships who had Prisoners on board together with y[e] Experiment & y[e] Resolution, Men of War, got under way; in Order to go up toward the City, y[e] Wind being unfair, y[e] Ships were Obliged to beet up, & at 4 oClock came too of[f] between Red hook & Gibbit Island, in midst of a very great Number of Ships, among whome is y[e] Eagle, y[e] Admyral, or Lord Howes Ship, which lay Just ahead of us, & y[e] Rainbow (another large Man of War) is near us on y[e] other hand & beside those, a number of Frigates & other Ships of War."—Fitch's Diary, 47.

" Nathan Hale, a captain in Knowlton's Rangers, is executed as a spy by the British. The original record of this event is contained in the British general orders of the day: "Head Qrs. New York Island. Septr. 22d 1776, Parole, London, Countersign, Great Britain. . . . A spy from the Enemy (by his own full confession) apprehended last night, was this day Executed at 11 o'clock in front of the Artilery Park."—From Orderly book in archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. We find three or four other references to the event in nearly contemporaneous sources. A letter received in London from James Drewitt, written on board the "Mercury" frigate at New York, under date of Sept. 25, 1776, stated: "On the 22d, we hung a man who was sent as a spy by General Washington." —5 Am. Arch., II: 521. A letter, written at Harlem on Sept. 26, states: "One Hale in New York, on suspicion of being a spy, was taken up and dragged without ceremony to the execution post, and hung up. General Washington has since sent in a flag, supposed to be on that account."—Ibid., II: 548. Tench Tilghman, of Washington's staff, writing on Oct. 3 from headquarters on Harlem Heights to Egbert Benson, said: "The General is determined if he can bring some of them in his hands under the denomination of spies, to execute them. General Howe hanged a Captain of ours belonging to Knowlton's Rangers, who went into New-York to make discoveries. I don't see why we should not make retaliation." —Ibid., II: 854.

1776 Sept. 22

The fact that Hale was "apprehended last night," and that he "went into New York," gives clear circumstantial evidence that he was captured on Manhattan Island. A careful study of all the evidence in the question of the place of capture has been made by Prof. Henry Phelps Johnston, and published in Nathan Hale (1914). A summary of his discussion shows (p. 157 et seq.) that Hale was not captured at Huntington, L. I., as previously believed.

Regarding the exact place of execution, Prof. Johnston concluded, in the first edition (1901) of his Nathan Hale, that it was near Turtle Bay, and not near the Dove Tavern, as he had previously argued in The Battle of Harlem Heights. This later conclusion was followed or concurred in by Avery in A Hist. of the U. S. (1909), VI: 28. But in the last edition of his book (1914), Prof. Johnston discloses newly discovered evidence which leads him to decide finally that the place of execution was near the Dove Tavern, which stood at about the N. W. corner of Third Ave. and 66th St. He states (pp. 162–64) that, since the publication of the first edition in 1901, "the author has found, among the maps in the British Museum, a topographical sketch or survey of the greater part of New York Island and Brooklyn, showing the position of the British army during September-October, 1776. . . . It bears all the marks of the work of Captain Montressor, who made many such maps before and during the first years of the war. . . . No camps are marked below the tavern site—none at Turtle Bay. . . . Furthermore, it is probable that Montressor, although an aid to Howe, still occupied his quarters, or marquée, with his own Engineer Corps, which usually accompanied the artillery. He did this at times in the next campaign. This would explain his presence at the Dove Artillery Park when Hale was executed. . . . During the campaign against Philadelphia in 1777, the execution of British deserters and marauders took place, almost without exception, at the Artillery Park, which was generally near headquarters. Hale thus suffered at the usual site and in the usual way. . . ."

For this conclusion, Prof. Johnston gives primary credit to the late William Kelby, librarian of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. In an historical account of Hale's services, written by John Austin Stevens, and published in the N. Y. Herald of Nov. 26, 1893, following the unveiling of the MacMonnies statue of Hale in City Hall Park the day before, a letter from Mr. Kelby was printed, giving the results of his inquiries. Mr. Kelby was the first to bring to light the record in the British orderly-book of Hale's execution, "in front of the Artillery Park." He called attention also to the entry of Oct. 11: "Majors of brigade to attend at the Artillery Park, near the Dove." He cited advertisements in the newspapers which confirmed the location of the camp. One in the Royal Gaz. of Nov. 2, 1779, stated that there was a "horse stolen or strayed from the Royal Artillery pasture at the five-mile stone;" and a published order of Jan. 19, 1780, requires that, in case of attack, "alarm guns be fired from the cantonment of the Thirty-seventh regiment, near the five-mile stone, formerly known by the name of the Dove Tavern." The place of Hale's execution was described by Mr. Kelby as "west of the post road, on Third avenue, between Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh streets. The cultivated ground attached to it was afterwards known as the Dove Lots, and contained about four acres."—See Herald, above cited; L. M. R. K., III, 962-63; N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bulletin, April, 1918; Winsor, VI: 333.

Washington made no mention of Nathan Hale in his letters to the president of congress or elsewhere in his correspondence.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 431, footnote

A British officer, writing from New York on Sept. 26, states: "We hung up a rebel spy the other day, and some soldiers got, out of a rebel gentleman's garden, a painted soldier on a board, and hung it along with the Rebel; and wrote upon it—General Washington—and I saw it yesterday beyond headquarters, by the roadside."—Kentish Gaz. (Canterbury, Eng.), N 6–9, 1776. Sept. 22

Nearly five years after the death of Hale, the statement was published that: "About four years ago, Capt. Hale, an American officer, of a liberal education, younger than André, and equal to him in sense, fortitude, and every manly accomplishment, tho' without opportunities of being so highly polished, voluntarily went into the city of New-York, with a view to serve his invaded country. He performed his part there with great capacity and address, but was accidentally discovered. In this trying circumstance he exhibited all the firmness of André, without the aid of a single countenance around him that spoke either respect or compassion, and tho' every thing that was said or done to him was adapted to make him feel that he was considered as a traitor and rebel. . . . Hale, tho' not at all disconcerted, made no plea for himself, and firmly rejected the advantageous offers made him by the enemy upon condition of his entering into their service . . .; but just before he expired, said, aloud, 'I am so satisfied with the cause in which I have engaged, that my only regret is, that I have not more lives than one to offer in its service.'"—Ind. Chron. (Boston), My 17, 1781.

A quite full and very gratifying description of Nathan Hale, as a young captain in the patriot army in New York, has come to light recently. It was discovered in 1914 by Mr. George Dudley Seymour among the files of the pension bureau in Washington. The sketch was written by Lieut. Elisha Bostwick on the margin of his commission as "Second Lieutenant of Captain Isaac Bostwicks Company in the nineteenth Regiment of foot Commanded by Colonel Charles Webbe." This commission Lieut. Bostwick deposited, with other papers, when he made his claim for a pension. He says he was in the same regiment with Hale, and "always in the habits of friendship and intimacy with him." He describes him as "a little above the common stature in height, his shoulders of a moderate breadth, his limbs strait & very plump: regular features—very fair skin—blue eyes—flaxen or very light hair which was always kept short—his eyebrows a shade darker than his hair & his voice rather sharp or piercing—his bodily agility was remarkable I have seen him follow a football & kick it over the tops of the trees in the Bowery at New York, (an exercise which he was fond of)--his mental powers seemed to be above the common sort—his mind of a sedate and sober cast, & he was undoubtedly Pious; for it was remarked that when any of the Soldiers of his company were sick he always visited them & usually Prayed for & with them in their sickness." He further tells of the captain coming upon some of his men "in a bye place Playing Cards." They were told: "This won't do,—give me your Cards," whereupon he "chopd them to pieces, & it was done in such a manner that the men were rather pleased than otherwise." Hale's activity on all occasions is described as wonderful; "he would make a pen the quickest & best of any man." He concludes with the query: "Why is it that the delicious Capt Hale should be left and lost in an unknown Grave & forgotten!"—From a photolithograph of Elisha Bostwick's commission in N. Y. Hist. Soc. The document in its entirety is printed in A Sacrifice of Seventy-six—Nathan Hale (1915), by Frisbie, 26–31.

Gen. Washington, writing to his brother, John Augustine Washington, reviewing the events of the last few days, closes thus: "In short, it is not in the power of words to describe the task I have to perform. Fifty thousand pounds would not induce me again to undergo what I have done. Our numbers, by sickness and desertion, are greatly reduced. I have been trying these four or five days to get a return, but have not yet succeeded. I am sure, however, we have not more than twelve or fourteen thousand men fit for duty, whilst the enemy, who, it is said, are very healthy, cannot have less than twenty-five thousand."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 425–30. "

The general orders from the headquarters at Harlem Heights inform the soldiers who have been wounded "in their country's cause" that the congress has passed the following resolutions: "that officers and privates losing a limb in any engagement, or who shall be so disabled in the service of the United States of America as to render them incapable of getting a livelihood, shall receive half of their monthly pay during life or the continuance of their disability, from the time their pay ceases as officers or soldiers. "

1776 Sept. 22 "Also such officers or soldiers as are wounded in any engagement and rendered incapable of service, though not totally disabled from getting a livelihood, shall receive monthly such sums towards their subsistence as the Assembly or representative body of the State they belong to, or reside in, judge adequate . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 448.

" A soldier of the American army at Harlem Heights is sentenced by court martial to be shot for "cowardice and misbehaviour before the enemy on Monday last," and for "presenting his firelock at his superiour officer when turning him back a second time," the penalty for which is death by article 27 of the Army Rules and Regulations." Another soldier, an ensign, is ordered to be cashiered for "the infamous crime, of 'plundering the inhabitants of Harlem.'"—5 Am. Arch., II: 447–48.

Washington takes occasion to recommend to the president of congress that the army regulations be amended to provide against "plundering, marauding and burning of Houses. . . . Such a Spirit has gone forth in our Army that neither publick or private Property is secure—Every Hour brings the most distressing complaints of the Ravages of our own Troops who are becoming infinitely more formidable to the poor Farmers and Inhabitants than the common Enemy. Horses are taken out off the Continental Teams; the Baggage of Officers and the Hospital Stores, even the Quarters of General Officers are not exempt from rapine."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 425.

" St. Paul's Chapel is reopened for services by order of Gen. Howe, the sermon being preached by Rev. Mr. O'Beirne, Lord Howe's chaplain.—N. Y. Merc., O 14 and 21, 1776; Kemp, Old St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York. Names & Histories that have clustered around it in four generations, 8. See Jl 18. See, further, N 20.

23 At four o'clock in the morning of this day, "Colonel or Brigadier General Erkskine had a visit from 100 rebels in 5 boats, but many were shot before disembarking; 1 Major and 12 men however were captured. This cost the 71st regiment 4 killed and 8 wounded."—Baurmeister's narrative, Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 39.

Col. John Glover, in a letter from Fort Constitution, dated Oct. 7, describes the attack made by a detachment of Americans, commanded by Lieut. Col. Jackson, in six boats of forty men each, who tried to dislodge the British from Montresor's (Ward's) Island on this day. Many of the bravest of the party, including Major Hendly who was carrying off Col. Jackson, fell in this engagement. The disaster was attributed by Col. Glover to the failure of part of the force to land and assist their leaders, but who retreated instead. "The officers who commanded the other boats," he states, "are all under arrest and will be tried for their lives. In short if some example is not made of such rascally conduct, there will be no encouragement for men of spirit to exert themselves. As the case now is they will always fall a sacrifice, while such low-lived scoundrels, that have neither Honour nor the Good of their Country at heart, will skulk behind and get off clear."—Campaign of 1776, 99, citing the original in the Essex Institute, Salem, Mass.

" "In y^e^ Afternoon y^e^ Regulars were very busy in Transporting Troops over to y^e^ Jersey Shore, where I don't perceive as yet y^t^ they meet with any Great opposition; We are also Informd y^t^ they have Landed a considerable body of Troops from Staten Island, so y^t^ it seems they are going to bend Considerable of their force that way."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 48.

" Sir Wm. Howe, reporting to Lord Germain on Sept. 24, states that on the day before (Sept. 23) a favourable wind enabled the British ships of war to move "up to the batteries upon Paulus Hook." Troops landed and took possession of the American works there "without the least resistence."—5 Am. Arch., II: 492. Baurmeister, in his narrative of Sept. 24, written at "the detached Camp, at Helgatte," states that this expedition occurred "On the night of the 24th" (evidently before day break), and that it was led by "Gen. Lord Percy."—Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 39. Col. Robertson writes under date of Sept. 23: "This day L^d^ Percy took possession of Paulus Hook without the loss of a man."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 90. Cf. transcript in Lib. of Cong. of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc. in Brit. Museum (Egerton MSS., 2135 f. 7).

" Pastor Shewkirk records on Sept. 23: "The fire has thrown a great damp on the former joyful sensation; numbers of people were carried to Jail, on suspicion to have had a hand in the fire, and to have been on the Rebel's side; it is said about 200; however, on examination, the most men were as fast discharged."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 119. Sept. 23

In a letter to Gov. Trumbull, Washington states: "The enemy have formed a large encampment in the plains, or rather heights, below us, extending across, as it were, from the East to the North River; but have attempted nothing, as yet, of a general nature."—5 Am. Arch., II: 465–66. "

"Gen. Howe's Head Quarters are at Lt. Col. James Beekman's House on the East River near Turtle Bay. His troops are throwing up intrenchments from Jacob Walton's country seat at Horn's Hook at Hell Gate across the whole Island to Humphrey Jones House on the North River."—From letter of this date in St. James's Chron. (London), N 16, 1776, reprinted in Battle of Harlem Heights, 210. "

Gen. Knox, writing to his brother William, says: "The affair of last Monday [Sept. 16] has had some good consequences toward raising the peoples spirits—they find that if they stick to these mighty men they will run as fast as other people. . . . The general is as worthy a man as breathes, but he cannot do every thing nor be everywhere. He wants good assistants. There is a radical evil in our army,—the lack of officers. We ought to have men of merit in the most extensive and unlimited sense of the word. Instead of which, the bulk of the officers of the army are a parcel of ignorant, stupid men, who might make tolerable soldiers, but [are] bad officers; . . . We ought to have academies, in which the whole theory of the art of war shall be taught, and every other couragement possible given to draw persons into the army. . . . As the army now stands, it is only a receptacle for ragmuffins."—Life and Correspondence of Henry Knox, 31–32. On the following day, Washington wrote to congress from the Morris house a long and circumstantial account of the need of good officers for the army. —5 Am. Arch., II: 495–98.

Baurmeister writes in his narrative of this date: "All the houses, which were inhabited and deserted by the rebels in New York, are marked G. R. [George, Rex], and thereby confiscated, the government takes possession of all the papers and effects of the enemy, and the fleet is erecting a magazine in the city. Many subjects are returning to the legitimate authority, and on Long Island the villages of Grevesand, New Utrecht, Flattbusch, Brockland and Ferry are filled with the fugitive settlers, most of whom however find their dwellings empty, furniture smashed, not a window left whole and their cattle gone forever. 24

"The royalists are obliged to distinguish themselves from the rebels by red ribbons in their hats. . . ." The house of Col. Henry Rutgers was one which received "the mark of Confiscation on the south door." As late as 1827, he still preserved this mark on the door. The residence was occupied by the British "as an Hospital, a Store House, or Barracks, as the circumstances of the times required."—From Battle of Harlem Heights, 184, citing Mag. of the Dutch Reformed Church, II: 412. The Methodist Meeting House was one of the buildings used for a hospital.—Oliver Burnam's statement, Battle of Harlem H'ts, 198.

"All the 5 Ridouts, 3 Batt^ys^ of 1 Gun each besides a line of near 200 Y^ds^ finished accord^g^ to the Plan proposed."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On the next three days men were employed in cutting down trees, and, on Sept. 26, Jones's house was made "musket prooff round the Gallery."—Ibid. See S 28. "

The advanced post of the British "is at the Black Horse tavern and the Army is posted from the North to the East Rivers quite across the Country above Mr. Apthorps."—From a letter by Capt. Hutcheson, assistant-secretary to Gen. Howe, in camp at Turtle Bay, to a friend in England, now preserved with the Haldimand MSS., British Museum, and pub. in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1882), VIII: 40. "

Regarding the results of the fire, Hutcheson states that "all that part of the town where Mr. Watts House stood, with the houses in Broadway & West side of Broad Street and all the North River as far as Vaux Hall is consumed. Kennedys, Halletts, Col. Reeds & two or three Houses joining are all that escaped as far as St. Pauls Church. What adds to the misfortune, they are chiefly the friends to government who have suffered; several of the Villians have been detected, & have suffered the fate they deserve."

He is evidently writing to John Mortier, then owner or lessee of Richmond Hill, for he adds: "I am sorry to acquaint you that your furniture left at Richmond Hill was not sold. M^r^ Washington lived in the house all Summer and made use of it; some of the 1776 Sept. 24 tables & chairs he had in Gen[l] Robertson's house & was consumed in it, and on the Night before we landed he quitted Richmond hill, left it open, & the Rebells in their retreat, took many things out of it, and broke all the glasses. As soon as I could, I got a safe guard to it, which still remains, and everything left will be safe, a return [inventory] of which I will send you & will dispose of the whole the best for your advantage."—Battle of Harlem H'ts, 221–22, citing the same MSS.

" Regarding Colden's death (see S 21), Gov. Tryon writes to Lord Germain: "This makes a vacancy in the Council. The following is the present state of the remaining eleven: Mr. Chief-Justice Horsemanden, very old and feeble; Mr. Oliver De Lancey, Mr. Charles Ward Apthorp, Mr. Axtell, and Mr. Henry Cruger, at liberty to attend the summons of Government. Mr. William Smith, withdrawn to his plantation up the North River, and not been heard of these five months; Mr. Hugh Wallace and Mr. James Jauncey, prisoners with the Rebels; Mr. John Watts, Colonel Morris, and Mr. Henry White, in England. . . .

"Mr. Thomas Jones, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, and Mr. David Matthews, Mayor of the City of New-York, with many other gentlemen of the country, are in the hands of the Rebels."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 685–86.

" Gov. Tryon writes to Lord George Germain: "It is the opinion of both His Majesty's Commissioners for restoring peace to the Colonies that I should postpone any executive Acts of Government, untill the Province is more liberated from the controul of the Rebels. I therefore have kept the executive powers of Civil Government dormant, leaving every thing to the direction of the Military."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 686–87. See N 26.

" Tryon also informs Lord Germain that Oliver De Lancey "under General Howe's orders is endeavouring to raise a Brigade of Fifteen hundred men for the Defence of Long Island."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 687. New York remained throughout the war the chief city of refuge for loyalists.—Winsor, VII: 196–97; Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 243 et seq.

" The British orders of the day provide that "the working Party M[c]Gowens Hill to Consist of 200 Men only till further orders to Parade at day Break & be Releiv'd as Directed in the after orders of the 21[st]." On September 25, the number was reduced to 100.—Orderly book, British Army, in N. Y. H. S.

" In the general orders for the day, issued at headquarters on Harlem Heights, is the following: "The Quartermaster-General and the Chief Engineer are to mark the ground, to-morrow, on which the barracks and huts are to be built this side King's Bridge. They are to call upon the General, previous to their setting out upon this business, for directions. When the ground is marked out, the Quartermaster-General is to cause the materials for building to be laid thereon as quick as possible. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 501.

Mr. Reginald Pelham Bolton is of the opinion that this order led to the selection of the recently discovered camp-site at Prescott and Seaman Avenues, and that this camp, begun by the Americans, afterwards became the great centre for the British and Hessian soldiery.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc., 371. See, further, O 24.

25 "This Afternoon y[e] Eagle moved up further toward y[e] City, several other Ships made movements in Different ways—We were also this afternoon Informed something of y[e] Circumstance of y[e] late Fire in the City of N. York, & y[t] a Number of the Perpetrators thereof, were this Day to be Executed."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 50.

"On Wednesday last [Sept. 25], the Eagle Man of War, Vice Admiral Lord Howe, came up from off Bedlow's-Island, and moored off the Fort in the North River; and, next Morning, the Bristol, Vice Admiral Lord Shuldham, and the Preston, Commodore Hotham, came up and placed themselves likewise in the North River just above the Eagle."—N. Y. Merc., S 30, 1776.

" Kemble records: "General Prescott came to Head Quarters, having been exchanged for General Sullivan. . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 90.

26 A "Memorandum" in the British orders of the day reads as follows: "all persons who can give any Information of the Incendiaries who set New York on fire are to wait on Gen[l] Robertson to Mor[w] Morning for that purpose."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

27 The British orders of the day provide for "the Offi[cers] G[d] at Greenwich to be withdrawn Imediatly Leaving a Corp[l] & 3 Men at M[r] Bayards House."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. Sept. 27

A midshipman on board the British frigate "Emerald" at New York wrote on Sept. 30: "The 27th inst. about Eleven o'Clock, P. M. the Industry, an American Privateer, of 26 Guns, appearing off this Harbour, our Ship slipped her Cables and put to Sea, and about Nine, A. M. came up with her and brought her to Action, and in less than three Glasses she struck to us. We have brought her safe into this Harbour, with the Loss only of three Men, and fourteen wounded. The Industry had thirteen Seamen killed, and twenty-nine wounded."—St. James's Chron., N 28–30, 1776. "

Solomon Nash records: "this afternoon their was two 13 inch morters with iron beds arived here from Boston and was on Loaded By fort worshington."—Nash's Jour., 35. "

"I this Day Observ'd y[e] Fort y[t] we Built at Red hook, was on Fire, & Burnt great part of y[e] Day."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 52. 28

The British orders of the day require "A working party of 100 men with off[rs] in proportion to parade to Mor[w] Morning at Day break on the Road to the Right of Jones's House where an Enginier will Attend to Receive them this Party to work till 12 at noon & be Replaced by the Like number who will work till sun set."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. This party, in all probability, was engaged in building the fortifications shown on Robertson's drawing of April 11, 1777. "

The British orders of the day require "a working Party of 300 Men f[m] the Brigade of G[ds] 2[d] & 6[th] Brigades to Parade to Mor[w] Morning at day break & March to the Battery at new york, where an off[r] of the ordinance will Receive them they are to be Employed in Making Cartriges & will take their formers with them—the off[rs] & Men belonging to the Garrison at Hallifax are to be in Readiness to Embark for that Place at the shortest notice—the following Gentlemen having offerd their services to Raise a Brigade of Provincials of 3 Batt[n] of 500 Men Each for the service of his Majesty & the Suppression of the Present unnatural Rebellion—the Commander in Chief has made the following Appointments oliver Delancy B: Gen[l] & Colo: of the 1[st] Batt[n] I: H Cruger L Colo: C[l] Green Late 40[th] Reg[t]: Major, 2[d] Batt[n] Ja[s] Braton Colo: Stephen De Lancy LColo Jn[o] Boden Major, 3[d] Batt[n] Ludlow Esq Colo: Hulett Esqu[r] L Colo Menzies Major Campbell Esqu[r] M: of Brigade"—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. 29

The British orders of the day require "50 More Men with offrs in proportion to be Aded to the working party ordered to parade to the R[t] of Jones's House;" "Cap[t] W[m] Bamford of the 40[th] Regt: is Appointed Town Major to the Garrison of N: York—Sergt: Major Thomson 37[th] Reg[t]: is Appointed Town Adj[t]: to the Garrison of N. york;" "Lieut: Mich[l] Sykes 64[th] Reg[t]: is Appointed Barrack Master to the Garrison of Nyork."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. 30

The British, being without a newspaper in New York, and having engaged Ambrose Serle to take charge of printing one, he, on this day, brings out No. 1301 of The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, continuing Gaine's former numbering (see Sept. 9), and leaving the imprint "Printed by Hugh Gaine."—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 423. See O 7. "

Jabez Fitch writes: "At ½ after 9 y[e] Snow [Mentor] & y[e] Ships that had y[e] Prisoners on board, got under way, & a little before 12 came too in North River Opposite to y[e] Colledge, where we have a very Malencholy Prospect, of the Affects of y[e] late Fire, which is sopos'd to have Destroy'd a fourth part of y[e] City, & chiefly in this part of y[e] Town."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 54–55. Oct. 1

"Two new Fleches ordered at M[c]Gowan's on our Right—And Guns to be put in all the Ridouts, Built only for Musquetry—Began to lay the Platforms on the Rock Ridout for 3—12P[rs] w[h] occupied the whole Front—One of the Fleches finish'd at M[c] Gowans—to hold one Howitzer & a 36[r]—The Abbatis of the line & Two Ridouts to the left finish'd."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On the following day he wrote: "The 2[d] Fleche at M[c]Gowan's finished." On Sept. 4, "The Hessians began a Fleche—advanced from Jones's on our left & add[g] one Gun to the left of the Rock Red[t]."—Ibid. "

The American committee of secret correspondence, writing from Philadelphia to Silas Deane a long account of the progress of events, states, among other things, that "Our side occupy the Heights of Harlem, King's Bridge, and Mount Washington, where they have made lines as strong as can be."—5 Am. Arch., II: 820.

The British orders of the day require "100 facines with Pickets 2

1776 Oct. 2 in proportion to be made immediately by the carpenter L Gen[l] Clintons Command & Sent as soon as possible to the Rock Redoubt on the Right of Jones's House . . . any woman that is Detected in Selling Spirituous Liquors to the Soldiers, or bringing Any to Camp will be Instantly Drum'd out & never suffer'd to Come into Camp again."—From Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

" Kemble records in his journal: ". . . The Rebels made a Movement from Morris's House and marched about 2,000 Men into Harlem plains supposed to take off the Forage."—Kemble's Jour., 90–91. The movement is described in a "rebel" letter of Oct. 3: ". . . Gen[l] Putnam with a party of 16 or 1800 men as covering party went on to Harlem plains & with a number of waggons brought off a large quantity of Grain, but not the whole, for just at Day break the Enemy had manned their lines & were seen in collumn advancing: as our party were not more than half theirs it was thought best to retreat which was done in good order and without a skirmish. We are daily fetching off large quantities of Hay & Grain from Morrisania as we are daily in expectation of Landing and an attack there. . . ."—The Campaign of 1776, 98–99. See also Wm. Ellery's account in 5 Am. Arch., III: 990.

3 "This Afternoon the Phenix and Roebuck, two forty Gun Ships, sailed up the North River, have no Intelligence from them yet."—Kemble's Jour., 91. See O 5.

" Burgoyne's "Reg[t] of Light Dragoons" arrives from England.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under O 4.

" R. Eynon, "behind the Royal Exchange," London, publishes an "Accurate Map of Staten Island with that Part of New York Long Island and the Jerseys, which is the Rendevous of the Two Grand Armies and the supposed present seat of Action." The map was drawn by "a Merch[t] who resided in America 15 Years."—Emmet Coll. (No. 8220) in N. Y. P. L.

4 The British orders of the day require "Gun firing by Capt Emerick at the North River shore near Little Bloomingdale."—Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

5 Kemble records: "General Howe and Lord Howe went this day to Long Island, supposed on a Reconnoitering Party, and that it is intended to Land on some part of Westchester.

"The Roebuck and Phenix [see O 3] lay off Bloomingdale waiting a Wind to proceed up the River. Three Rebel Vessels are seen lying between Forts Washington and Constitution, the first on this Island, the other on Jersey Shore; the Vessels not above five Miles asunder."—Kemble's Jour., 92. See O 7 and 9.

" Archibald Robertson records in his diary: "I began a line . . . to the Right of my small Red[t]—& at the end of that line a Sq[r] Redout of 40 f[t] a side—the front 8 f[t] & the other 3 sides 6 f[t] thick—I had 50 men from the morn[g] to 12—& 50 men from 12 to ½ past four when the whole was finished—the Fascines were to carry 600 y[ds]—13 fascines layers attended the whole was faced inside & out w[t] a single Fascine—& 4½ feet high the P[t]—The Hessians were at work continu[g] a line from their New Fleche to the Rock Redout—but Stopt by L[d] Cornwallis—all this was done w[t] out Gen[l] Howe's Opinion about it—The rest of my Party of 150 men were employ'd in carry[g] on the Abbatis at the Red[t] to the Right."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On the next day he wrote: "A line of 112 feet in length was rais'd at the End of the Mill dam to the Right two pieces of Cannon put in it." On Oct. 7, he recorded: "All the works finished."—Ibid.

6 In a letter to his mother, Gen. Glover says that the American army is "composed of flying Camp, four months levy men, and one months Militia, who are always uneasy, and cannot go through the fatigue & hardships which soldiers are necessarily called to, like those Troops that have been seasoned to it. We have a few old Regiments, if detached by themselves, I believe would do honor to their country. But we are obliged to intermix them with the raw troops, which is by far the greatest part of the army, consequently confuse the whole. This we saw verified on the 15[th] ult[o], the day we evacuated New York; and happy for us we began the retreat so timely as we did; otherwise the whole that were in the City must have been cut off, the Enemy having landed 18,000 men, on that day, on the East side, about four miles from the City, covered by ten sail of Men of War; and opposite to them, on the North River, came up three large Ships. The whole kept up a constant cannonading with Grape shot and Langridge quite across the Island."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), Part II, 2. Cf. Washington's description of the army on Sept. 2 (q. v.).

" A published notice of this date, announcing the hours when the post office is open for the delivery of letters, shows that it is situated in Broad St. "Captains of Ships who have brought from Europe Letters for America, are desired to send them to this Office, that none may be delivered to disaffected Persons."—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776. It was still in Broad St. in 1778.—See advertisement of John C. Knapp in Royal Gaz., F 21, 1778. Oct. 6

" "His Majesty's Forces are now in Possession of the City of New-York with all the Harbour and Sound, of Long and Staten-Islands, and nearly of New-York Island. They are also in Possession of Powles-Hook, and command the East-River and Connecticut Sound. All this has been obtained with very little Difficulty and Loss on the Part of the Troops; the Rebels, after the Battle [of Long Island], or rather Rout on the 29th of August, having never attempted to face the Soldiers, but fled every Way with the utmost Precipitation. They quitted Works, which they had been laboring upon during the whole Summer without scarce the Conflict of a Day. . . . "—N. Y. Merc., O 7, 1776. 7

The foregoing extract indicates the different tone in which this paper was being conducted by the new printer, Ambrose Serle (see S 30). The item continues at length to describe conditions in the city and harbour.

" The Second and Sixth Brigades of British troops cross over to Brooklyn and encamp at Bedford. The next morning they moved to Jamaica, where part of the British army assembled under Lieut. Gen. De Heister.—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7); Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See O 12.

" "So vast a Fleet was never seen together in this Port, or perhaps in all America before. The Ships are stationed up the East-River or Sound, as far as Turtle Bay; and, near the Town, . . . Some are moored up the North-River; others in the Bay between Red and Yellow-Hook; some, again, off Staten-Island; and several off Powle's-Hook, and towards the Hills. The Men-of-War are moored chiefly up New-York Sound, and make, with the other Ships, a very magnificent and formidable Appearance. Five Men-of-War have been detached from the Squadron into the North-River above Greenwich [see O 3] probably to assist the Operations of the Army against the Rebels, who still remain on the Northern Extremity of this Island, and on the Heights about Kingsbridge."—N. Y. Merc., O 7, 1776. See O 9.

" Jabez Fitch and other American officers, having signed a parole, are landed from an English prison ship, "on a Ferry Wharf near y[e] Bair Market in N. York," and are lodged in "a very large House, on y[e] West Side of Broad Way, & South of Warren Street." Fitch writes: "Having this large House assigned us with a small Yard to Walk in &c, we sopose we have chang'd our Cituation Rather for y[e] better, both on acc[t] of Noise & Crowd—During y[e] 39 Days which I was confind on Board y[e] Ships, I never tasted . . . any kind of fresh Meet or fish Except four Meals of Quawhogs, while we lay down below y[e] Narrows; nor any Butter, or other kind of provision Except a very Scanty allowance of Salt Meat & Bread, with a small matter of Cheese & Chocolet, which we have purchas'd; We have also Lived about as Scant on acc[t] of Drink as Victuals."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 61–63.

" The name of the printer (see S 30) is omitted from the imprint of The New-York Gazette; and the Weekly Mercury.—Early Newspapers, II: 422. See N 11.

8 This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 38—see Jl 12), entitled "View of Part of the Rebel work round Walton's House w[th] the situation of our Battery on Long Island, taken from N. York Island 8th Oct[r] 1776." See also No. 39, which is an undated "View of the Rebel work round Walton's House w[th] Hell Gate & the Island."

9 Washington writes to the president of congress from "Head-Quarters, Heights of Harlem": "About eight o'clock this morning two ships of forty-four guns each, supposed to be the Roebuck and Phœnix, and a frigate of twenty guns, with three or four tenders, got away from about Bloomingdale, where they had been laying some time [see O 3], and stood with an easy southerly breeze towards our chevaux-de-frise, which we hoped would have interrupted their passage, while our batteries played upon them; but to our surprize and mortification, they ran through without the least difficulty, and without receiving any apparent damage from our forts, though they kept up a heavy fire from both sides of the river. Their destination or views cannot be known with certainty; but most probably they are sent to stop the navigation, and cut of[f] the 1776 Oct. 9 supplies of boards, which we should have received, and of which we are in great need. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 943. See also Kemble's Jour., 92; Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

The American communication by water with Albany is thus cut off; while the army remains strongly intrenched.—See letter of Col. Smallwood, to the convention of Maryland, from the "Camp of the Maryland Regulars" at headquarters (Morris house), pub. in Ridgeley's Annals of Annapolis, 261.

" ". . . The enemy . . . sunk a sloop which had on board the machine invented by and under the direction of a Mr. Bushnell, intended to blow up the British ships [see Aug., 1776] . . . Mr. Bushnell had great confidence of its success, and had made several experiments which seemed to give him countenance; but its fate was truly a contrast to its design."—5 Am. Arch., II: 961, citing Heath.

10 A letter written from New York states: "The Brune [a British frigate lying in the harbour] is crouded with Loyalists, every Day making their Escape from the Rebels, and even several Officers and some of them of high Rank, who have deserted from the Rebels."—St. James's Chron. (London), N 16–19, 1776.

11 "Majors of Brigade & ord^{y} off^{rs} are to Attend at the Artilery Park near the Dove. . . . As soon as the Troops March against the Enemy L Gen^{l} Clinton will Command 1st Division Consisting of the Light Infantry, Reserve Hessian Grenad^{s} & Chessieurs.—L Gen^{l} E: Percy is to command on N: york Island & Posts Depending . . . the Troops that are under orders for March will strike their tents at 6 this Evening, put their Baggage on board & be Ready to March Immediately."—Orderly book, British Army (MS.), op. cit.

Capt. Robertson writes: "A number of Boats, Sloops and Schooners went up the East-River, & it seems we are to Embark tomorrow morning to make a push at West Chester"—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 93.

12 Gen. Howe embarks part of the army on the East River in flat-boats, and passing through Hell Gate, lands on "Frogs neck" (Throgg's Neck). Lieut-Gen. de Heister moved from Jamaica to Whitestone, and landed at the same point.—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). This "Journal" continues the official chronology of military operations under Gen. Sir Wm. Howe in this section of the country around New York, including New Rochelle, White Plains, Fordham, etc.

There were about 4,000 in the British force which landed on Throgg's Neck.—Phila. Eve. Post., O 15, 1776. Cf. Robertson's Jour. (MS.), which, after narrating the move to Westchester, says: "All our Force consisted of 11,000 Men." See also Kemble's Jour., 93. For Kemble's observations on this movement, see Dec. 31. See also F 25, 1777.

" Gov. Tryon having ordered that a city militia be established for the safety of the city and its environs, Fred. Wm. Hecht, the captain of a company, publishes a notice calling for recruits to come to his house (lately that of James Franklin), in Queen St., five doors from the corner of Chapel St., to enroll.—N. Y. Merc., O 12, 1776.

" Solomon Nash records: "to Day the Enemy Landed at Frog Point But our men ware To much for them they Could not march out from under the Covering of their Shiping."—Nash's Jour., 37.

13 General orders from American headquarters at Harlem Heights require "that the men have four days' provisions ready dressed at all times . . . As the enemy seem now to be endeavouring to strike some stroke before the close of the campaign, the General most earnestly conjures both officers and men, if they have any love for their country, and concern for its liberties, regard to the safety of their parents, wives, children and countrymen, that they will act with bravery and spirit . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1118.

14 "We are this Day Informed y^{t} y^{e} Regulars have Landed a large Body of Troops above Hell Gate, in Order to Cut off Communication between our Army & y^{e} Country."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 71.

" The following eulogy is published regarding the late Cadwallader Colden (see S 21): ". . . a Man of great Probity, Knowledge and Steadiness, which he had Occasion to shew upon many Occasions; nor least, when above 90 Years of Age, not all the Threats of rebellious Incendiaries could shake undissembled Loyalty to his Sovereign, nor all their Wiles seduce him from his Attachment to the constitutional Liberties of his Country, in opposition to the republican System of popular Tyranny. He died full of Days, and had the Satisfaction, before his Departure, to know, that the Arms of his Prince had prevailed, in a signal Instance over the Forces of the Rebels. They, who knew him best, will give his Character that Eulogium, which even a Stranger will rejoice to pay to such distinguished Merit."—N. Y. Merc., O 14, 1776. Oct. 14

15 The provincial convention passes the following resolution: "Whereas, this Convention is informed that the records of the city and county of New-York, as well as the records of the county and the records of the borough of Westchester, are at present lodged in private houses in the county of Westchester, whereby they may be exposed to the enemy, who have landed in that county: Ordered, That Wm. Miller, Theo. Bartow and John Cozine, be and hereby are appointed commissioners for removing, with all possible expedition, all the said records to Kingston, in Ulster county, and there placed in the care of Dirck Wynkoop, Abraham Hasbrouck and Christopher Tappen, Esqrs.; that the said commissioners apply either to the troops raised for the protection of that county, or to the militia, for a proper guard to attend the said records in their removal, which said troops or militia are hereby directed to furnish such guard as may be necessary for that purpose."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 675–76.

"as Nothing Can Mark the unsteadiness of Troops More than frequent & useless Firing of the advanc'd posts, the Commander in Chief flatters himself it is un Necessary to Remind the Army of the Superiority they must have in Dicipline over the Enemy opposed to them."—Orderly book, British Army (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

" One of the British general orders of the day is: "The Wounded Men are to be put on board of the Peace and Plenty, Hospital Ship."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 388.

" The following recently discovered item in a London newspaper throws light on the mystery surrounding the erection of the Wolfe monument (see 1761): "It is something remarkable, that Mr. Alexander commonly called Lord Stirling, was the first and principal person who promoted the design of erecting a statue to Lord Howe, as also of a monument to the memory General Wolfe, near New York."—Middlesex Jour. & Eve. Adv., O 15–17, 1776.

16 Washington, perceiving that Gen. Howe, not daring to attack the intrenched American camp on Harlem Heights, has attempted to gain the rear of his (Washington's) army, and to hem it in on the upper part of Manhattan Island, by landing a considerable force at Throgg's Neck (see O 12), and sending armed ships up the Hudson (see O 9) to cut off the supplies arriving for the Americans by water from the north and west,—calls a council of war at the headquarters of Gen. Lee. There are present, besides Gen. Washington, Maj.-Gens. Lee, Putnam, Heath, Spencer, and Sullivan; Brig.-Gens. Lord Stirling, Mifflin, McDougall, Parsons, Nixon, Wadsworth, Scott, Fellows, Clinton, and Lincoln; and Col. Knox, commanding artillery. Washington reads letters from the convention and from particular members, regarding "the turbulence of the disaffected in the upper parts of this State; and also sundry accounts of deserters showing the enemy's intention to surround us." After much consideration and debate, the question is raised: "whether, (it having appeared that the obstructions in the North River have proved insufficient, and that the enemy's whole force is now in our rear on Frog Point,) it is now deemed possible in our situation to prevent the enemy cutting off the communication with the country and compelling us to fight them at all disadvantages, or surrender prisoners at discretion?" It is agreed, with but one dissenting voice (Gen. Clinton), "that it is not possible to prevent the communication, and that one of the consequences mentioned in the question must certainly follow." It is also agreed "that Fort Washington be retained as long as possible."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1117–18; ibid., II: 1076, 1077.

" In consequence of an advertisement in a recent issue of the Mercury "requesting his Majesty's loyal subjects, inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," to meet on this day, a very large "concourse" including "The Members of his Majesty's Council, the Judges, and all the other well-affected Citizens who were not driven away by the Hand of Violence, or sent Prisoners to other Provinces," meet at the city hall, "when a decent and respectful Address to Lord Howe and General Howe, the King's Commissioners for restoring Peace to America, was read, Representing the firm Attachment of the Inhabitants to our rightful and gracious Sovereign, George the Third, and their Sense of the Constitutional Supremacy of Great-Britain over these Colonies; . . ., and praying that the City and County might be restored to His Majesty's Peace and Protection. The Address was unanimously approved 1776 Oct. 16 and adopted; and it was agreed that the Inhabitants should all sign it. But the Number assembled being too great to sign at that Time, two respectable Citizens were appointed to attend at a Public House [probably the tavern of John Simmons], adjoining the City-Hall, from 10 o'Clock A. M., to 2 o'Clock P. M. every Day, to take Subscriptions till all had signed. . . ." The address, with signatures, is published in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 117–38.

"After this, an affectionate Address to His Excellency William Tryon, Esq; our worthy Governor was read—'requesting him to present the above Address to the Commissioners, and otherwise to exert himself that the Prayer of it might be granted.' This Address was also unanimously approved, and agreed to; and the Honorable Mr. Chief Justice Horsmanden was desired to sign and deliver it to his Excellency, in Behalf of the Inhabitants. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., O 21, 1776; Conn. Gaz. (New London), N 22, 1776. This published account of the meeting was reprinted, on Nov. 4, in the Penn. Eve. Post, with comments by "A Friend to American Freedom," who referred to "the pains which the enemies to the free States of America are taking, in order to re-establish the old Constitution of New-York." He believed the account of this meeting should "be made public, in order that the people at large might determine on what conduct they would show to such as dared to break so important a link in the chain of union." He "cannot but view this breach or attempt of the utmost importance to the peace and well-being of every State."—Penn. Eve. Post, N 4, 1776.

The Loyalist address to Tryon by the inhabitants of New York was composed in the old style of servile dependence, and, like many which preceded it during the colonial period, it was a fervent appeal for protection: ". . . We . . . beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your return to the capital of your Government, and to assure you that we feel the sincerest joy on this happy event, which opens a prospect that we shall once more experience the blessings of peace and security under his Majesty's auspicious government and protection, blessings which we formerly enjoyed under your Excellency's mild administration, and which we ardently wish to have renewed.

"Presevering in our loyalty and unshaken attachment to our gracious Sovereign, in this time of distress and trial, and anxious to testify our affection for him, we have embraced the earliest opportunity to petition the Kings Commissioners, that they would restore this City and County to his Majesty's peace, although many of the most respectable citizens, and a much greater number of the inferiour classes, have been drawn off by the calamities of war, or sent prisoners to New-England and other distant parts; yet we hope that the numbers still remaining, and have voluntarily subscribed, may be deemed sufficient to entitle this district to his Majesty's grace, whilst the sufferings which our absent fellow-citizens undergo for the royal cause, plead in their behalf with the Commissioners, from whose well-known humanity, benevolence, and enlarged sentiments, we have the most flattering expectation.

"To your Excellency we naturally look for assistance; we therefore request that you would be pleased to present our petition to the Commissioners, and otherwise exert yourself that the prayer of it may be granted; as it is our fervent desire, and what we esteem the greatest earthly felicity, to remain subjects of the British Government, in union with the parent State.

"Signed by desire, and in behalf of the inhabitants, by Daniel Horsmanden,"

—5 Am. Arch., II: 1075. The governour answered on Oct. 25 (q.v.).
—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 138–40.

17 Division orders are issued from Washington's headquarters at Kingsbridge for the disposition of the division of the army under command of Maj.-Gen. Heath. Two regiments of militia, now posted on the Harlem River, are "to pass over the new bridge and join Colonel Swartwout's regiment, and form a flank guard."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1096–97.

" Gen. Alexander McDougall, writing to the committee of arrangements, from "Camp Harlem," says in part: ". . . The enemy appear very shy. Our advanced centries and theirs are within three hundred yards of each other in Harlem Lane. The works they have thrown up are evidently calculated for defence. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1906.

" "The Committee to whom was referred the claim of Mr. Nicholas Bayard for providing an Officer for securing the Records of this State, for a Guard-Room for the Guard appointed to watch the said Records, and for Fire-Wood and Candles supplied the Guard, have taken the same into consideration, and thereupon agreed to the following Resolution: Resolved, That there be allowed to Nicholas Bayard, for providing an Office[r] for securing the publick Records of this State, a Guard-Room and Fire-Wood and Candles supplied the Guard over the said Records, the sum of fifty pounds."—5 Am. Arch., III: 254. Oct. 17

Washington writes to the president of congress: " . . ten or eleven ships, which have been prevented passing Hell-Gate for two three days for want of wind, are now under way, and proceeding up the Sound. Among them there appears to be two frigates, the rest probably have in stores, &c. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1116. 18

The British forces under Howe take up their position "on the heights of Pelham's Manner our Left to E. Chester Creek & Right to New Rochelle, our Ft extendg about 2 Miles facg North or N N E."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 93–94. "

Solomon Nash records: "all our Rigerment Employd in giting Cannon and morters over to the jersays Likewise in giting other things of[f] the Island."—Nash's Jour., 37. "

It is reported in the British camp that Gen. Lee is commanding "the Rebel Army" and that it is 20,000 strong.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 19

"A severe order against Plundering, to no Effect; about this day received accounts of the arrival of the Hessians, long expected."—Kemble's Jour., 94. "

The name of Fort Constitution is changed to Fort Lee.—5 Am. Arch., II: 1130. "

On this date, the Howe War Plan, engraved by William Faden, was published. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 45-b, Vol. I. See also Aug. 27, 1776; and 1782. Cf. the Chart and Plan of the Harbour of New York & the County Adjacent, pub. in the Political Mag., Nov., 1781, and reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 844. "

On these maps, Ellis Island appears as "Bucking Id." It also appears as "Bucking I." on Southier's map, which was engraved and published by Faden, Jan. 1, 1779. For the origin of the name Ellis Island, see Jan. 20, 1785.

A letter from New York expresses "the great satisfaction of the loyal part of its inhabitants, who have for a long time suffered every hardship from a set of tyrants that is possible to be conceived. . . . The Howes do all that is possible to alleviate the sufferings of a persecuted people, who rather than turn rebels have despised death and ruin. . . . Almost all the New Yorkers have returned to their allegiance. . . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 134. 20

An English officer, writing from his "Camp near New York" to a friend in London, says: ". . . We have run a strong Line strengthened with Redoubts across that End of the Island where they [the Americans] are posted; and a Body of Men under the Command of Lord Percy (who commands upon this Island and its Dependencies) are left to defend them, and observe the Enemies Motions. General Howe landed some Days since upon the Continent about six Miles from King's Bridge and the Day before Yesterday took Possession of a Work of theirs, by which he has entirely cut off their Retreat to the New-England Governments. In the above Attack we had five Men killed and seven wounded; . . . The Rebels have no Retreat left, but over the North River into the Jerseys, and that will not remain open long, as Yesterday there arrived a Reinforcement of near 9000 Germans, whose Transports going up the North River, leads me to think they are to be landed for that Purpose; if this should be the Case, the War must be near an End; they desert very fast to our Army, and by the Account of those that come to us, they go off in great Numbers to their own Homes. . . . 21

"We have a very strong Army here; Gen. Howe has with him 18,000; upon this Island are 5,000, and on board the Transports that arrived Yesterday are near 9000; so that in the Whole we cannot have less here than 32,000 effective Men, as good Troops, and in as good Spirits as any ever were."—St. James's Chron., D 19–21, 1776.

"We are Inform'd yt about this Time a very considerable Reinforcmt hath Join'd ye British Army, among whom it is Said there are a Regt of Waldeckers several of Hanovarians & several of Brunswickers; we were this Day shewn one of ye Hessian Genlls who had also lately Arriv'd."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 77. "

The following news items are published: "The Subscription for the Clergy of the Church of England in America, who have suffered by the Rebellion, amounted to above Six Thousand Pounds Sterling, when the last Accounts came away." "

1776 Oct. 21 "Many of the Inhabitants are come into Town; and many others who were obliged to fly for their Loyalty, are coming in daily."

"The Earl of Dunmore has taken a House in the Broadway for his Residence during the Winter."—N. Y. Merc., O 21, 1776.

" The order of march is issued from Washington's headquarters "to be observed by the Division of the Army under the command of Major-General Heath, in their route from this place [Kingsbridge] to White-Plains."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1164–65. For a detailed account of this movement, see ibid., II: 1203–4, foot-note.

British marching orders are also issued.—See Orderly book, British Army (MS.), N. Y. H. S. After this orders of this command were issued from New Rochelle, White Plains, Dobbs Ferry, Courtland's Manor, Delancey's Mill, New Bridge, Aquasanuck, Newark, Amboy, Trenton, and Brunswick (to Jan. 28, 1777).—Ibid; Kemble's Jour., 94.

" The American army is encamped on Valentine's Hill, Westchester Co., to which place Washington has moved his headquarters. He goes early this morning "to visit the posts on the left of our line and the White-Plains." He sends various orders from White Plains, the British having advanced from New Rochelle to "Maroneck."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1165, 1186–87. See also Lossing, Field Book of the Am. Rev., II: 625.

22 The Hessians, Waldeckers, and other British forces disembark from their ships, and pass "up the East-River in a Multitude of Flat-bottomed Boats and other Vessels, in the highest Spirits imaginable." It being "a very fine Day, the Scene was rendered extremely beautiful by the Crowds upon the Water, chearing their Military Brethern and other Spectators on Shore, and making the Hills resound with Trumpets, French Horns, Drums and Fifes, accompanied by the Harmony of their Voices. These have added an agreeable Reinforcement to the Army, and are to all appearance as fine Troops as any in the World."—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776.

23 Washington transfers his headquarters from Harlem Heights to White Plains. Congress is informed that this movement is made "to counteract the operations of the enemy declining an attack upon our front. They have drawn the main body of their army to Frog's Point (see Oct. 12), with a design of hemming us in, and drawing a line in our rear."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1034, 1204.

" Fitch writes: "we are . . Inform'd y^t^ y^e^ Prisoners in Gen^l^ grow Remarkably Sick & Die very fast."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 78.

24 "The Governors of King's College in this City, are requested to meet at Hull's Tavern, on Thursday next [Oct. 24], at 10 o'Clock in the Morning, on Business of Importance. It is hoped as the Messenger is out of Town, that the Gentlemen will attend punctually without farther Notice."—N. Y. Merc., O 21, 1776.

" Writing to Washington from Fort Lee, Gen. Greene says, in part: "General Putnam requested a party of men to reinforce them at Mount Washington. I sent between two and three hundred of Colonel Durkee's regiment. . . .

"We shall get a sufficient quantity of provisions over to-day for the garrison at Fort Washington. General Mifflin thinks it not advisable to pull the barracks down yet. He has hopes of our army returning to that ground for winter quarters. I think this would be running too great a risk, to leave them standing in expectation of such an event, there being several strong fortifications in and about King's Bridge. If the enemy should throw in a thousand or fifteen hundred men, they could cut off our communication effectually; and, as the state of the barracks are, they would find exceeding good cover for the men. But if we were to take the barracks down—[even] if the boards were not removed—it would in a great measure deprive them of that advantage. . . ."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1221. See, further, O 27.

25 The anniversary of the King's accession to the throne is celebrated "with every Demonstration of Joy." "The Flag Ships hoisted the Royal Standard; and all the Ships in the Harbour gave a Salute of twenty-one Guns each. So noble an Appearance, and so grand a Salute, were never known in this Port before. The two Admirals gave Entertainments, and many loyal Toasts were drank upon the Occasion."—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776. See also Fitch's Diary (MS.), 80.

" Kemble records: "Marched in two Columns, the right led by Lieut. Gen. Clinton, left by Lieut. Gen. De Heister; occupied Grounds in East Chester, on the White Plain Road, Wards Head Quarters, a noted Rebel. The Enemy in three separate Camps in our Front, on the opposide of the Brunks [Bronx], and advantageously posted on rough and Commanding Height's."—Kemble's Jour., 94–95. Oct. 25

Gov. Tryon's answer to the address of the inhabitants of the city (see O 16) is as follows: "Sir: The address you delivered to me, in behalf of the inhabitants of the City and County of New-York, cannot fail of being highly agreeable to me, as it was accompanied with a dutiful petition and representation from them to the King's Commissioners for restoring peace to his Majesty's Colonies . . . I have cheerfully embraced the opportunity of presenting this day the address to Lord Howe, who was pleased to signify to me 'he would take the earliest opportunity of communicating with General Howe on the occasion.' The inhabitants may be assured I shall support their wishes with my best endeavours, although the completion of them must be left to the decision of his Majesty's Commissioners, in whom the highest national confidence is reposed." . . . —5 Am. Arch., II: 1075.

A court of inquiry, at White Plains, of which Brig.-Gen. John Morin Scott is president, takes evidence on the charge against Col. Tyler, of cowardice and misbehaviour before the enemy on Sept. 15, when the British took the city.—5 Am. Arch., II: 1251–54. 26

Gen. Greene writes from Fort Lee to Gen. Mifflin: "The people have been employed on the other side in getting the boards together at Fort Washington [see Oct. 24] and the ferry. Some have been brought from King's Bridge. To-day I sent up to Colonel Lasher to know what assistance he could give towards taking down the barracks, and bringing off the boards; and had for answer that he had orders to burn the barracks, quit the post, and join the army, by the way of the North River, at the White-Plains. 27

.

". . . I fear quitting Fort Independence will oblige Magaw to draw in his forces into the garrison, as the enemy will have a passage open upon his back. I fear it will damp the spirits of his troops. He did not expect it so soon. If the barracks are not burnt in the morning, and the enemy don't press too hard upon us, we will try to get away some of the boards."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1263.

Mr. Reginald Pelham Bolton, as a result of field-work and historical study, shows, in a report on the subject of "Military Camp Life on Upper Manhattan Island and Adjacent Mainland during the American Revolution, Disclosed by Recent Archeological Excavations," that, while Gen. Greene was writing the above letter, "these buildings on King's Bridge Heights were being reduced to ashes." Three days later, the British appeared on the scene to find "everything of value gotten away," and the King's and Farmer's bridges cut down. Mr. Bolton adds:

"There is good reason from the foregoing to suppose that the barracks upon Manhattan Island, were not entirely destroyed or removed, as they were in use up to the time of the assault which was made by the combined forces of Howe and von Knyphausen on November the 16th. The possession of such shelters as these barracks afforded, however crude they may have been, proved of immediate value to the captors of Fort Washington at that period of the year, and it is certain that those near by the fort and probably elsewhere were promptly occupied by the British and Hessian regulars. Thus the structures which had for several months [several days—see S 24] formed the only shelter of the poor patriots who shivered through the chill autumnal nights during the defence of the heights, and upon which much of their labor and some of their high hopes had been expended, passed into the possession of their opponents."—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 374. See also 21st Ann. Rep. (1916), 138–40.

In the same letter to Gen. Mifflin, Gen. Greene also says: "We have had a considerable skirmish on York-Island to-day. The cannonade began in the morning and held until evening, with very short intermissions. A ship moved up opposite Fort No. 1. Colonel Magaw got down an eighteen-pounder and fired sixty shot at her, twenty-six of which went into her. She slipped her cable and left her anchor, and was towed off by four boats. I think we must have killed a considerable number of their men, as the confusion and distress exceeded all description. Our Artillery behaved incomparably well. Colonel Magaw is charmed with their conduct in firing at the ship and in the field. . We have brought off some of the enemy from the field of battle, and more are still lying on the ground dead."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1263.

Another letter from Fort Lee states: "This morning, about seven o'clock, two frigates moved up the North River, and came to an anchor near Bourdett's Ferry, apparently with an intention to 1776 Oct. 27 stop the ferry-way, and cut off the communication between this place and Fort Washington. The enemy at the same time appeared on Harlem Plain, and Colonel Magaw, who commands on York-Island, ordered the lines to be manned. The ships endeavoured to dislodge them by firing on their flanks, but they fired to very little purpose. The barbette battery on the high hill on the left of the ferry, opened on the frigates, and fired a considerable time without doing them any or but very little damage. Upon our ceasing to fire, a gun from Fort No. 1, on York-Island, began to play on them with great advantage, and hulled the one highest up about twenty times." The action is further described in this letter. Regarding the action on land, the writer continues: "The enemy by this time had begun a smart fire on the island with field-pieces and mortars. Our men returned the compliment. They were out of their lines great part of the day. There were but few discharges of small-arms. Our men killed about a dozen Hessians, and brought them off. . . ."—Ibid., II: 1266–67.

" "This Day we were Inform'd y^t^ Gen^l^ Howe had advanc'd with his Army as far as y^e^ White Plaiñs, & y^t^ no very Considerable Action had as yet happened in those parts; We were also Inform'd y^t^ y^e^ two Armys were this Day Engaged between here and Fort Washington."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 81.

28 The battle of White Plains occurs. It is Washington's opposition to the British attempt to reach Manhattan Island from the north. After two unsuccessful attacks, the British finally force the Americans to retreat.—Winsor, VI: 286. For contemporary accounts by both sides, see Kemble's Jour., 95, and L. I. Hist. Soc. Memoirs, III, Part II: 139.

There was published in London, Feb. 25, 1777 (q.v.), a "Plan of the operations of the King's army under the command of General Sr. William Howe, K. B., in New-York and East New-Jersey, against the American forces commanded by General Washington, from the 12th of October to the 28th of November, 1776. Wherein is particularly distinguished the engagement on the White Plains, the 28th of October. By Claude Joseph Sauthier." The plan is reproduced in Winsor, VI: 336. For other contemporary maps showing the military movements of the year in the vicinity of New York, see ibid., VI: 342, 343, 344, 345.

" "The Liberty Pole at y^e^ Labetory was this Morning Taken down . . ."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), No. 81, in N. Y. Pub. Library. On Nov. 26, Gov. Tryon wrote to Lord George Germain: "The Liberty Poll erected some years ago in this City, and which remained as a monument of insult to the Government, and of licentiousness to the people, was last month by my recommendation to the Inhabitants, very properly and very quietly taken down and removed by them."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 691.

For a chronological history of the five liberty poles, which stood on two sites, very near together, and of which this was the last, see F 6, 1770. See also "The Liberty Pole on the Common," in N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bull., Jan., 1920.

Tryon's report to Germain, cited above, appears to effectually remove the erroneous supposition of Dawson that Capt. Wm. Cunningham, who had been appointed provost-marshal of the British forces (see Ag 4, 1774), "revenged himself, for the insult offered to him on the 6th of March, 1775 [q.v.], by cutting down the Liberty Pole, which, for more than ten years had graced 'the Commons'."—See "The Park and Its Vicinity," by Henry B. Dawson, in Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 468–73.

Dawson was probably right, however, in his statement which follows, that "afterwards in his official capacity," Cunningham "added new terrors to the 'New Goal' or 'Provost'" (see N 14, 1777).—Ibid.

" An editorial asserts that "The Nation is most highly incensed at the Declaration of Independence by the Congress, and at their impudent Abuse of the King. The warmest Advocates of America find it necessary to be silent now, as the Cause of the Colonies, maintained against every Offer of Conciliation and with such avowed Enmity to the Constitution of Great-Britain, is become absolutely unpopular.

"The Parliament was expected to meet by the End of this Month at farthest; and 'tis supposed that the Declaration of the Congress will promote the utmost Resentment and Unanimity. If so; has not the Congress proved itself the worst Enemy that America ever had?"—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776.

News reports of the day relate that "Several Gentlemen and other Inhabitants of the Town, who had been forced to fly by the Rebels, have returned in the Course of this Week. Among others, Mr. White, one of his Majesty's Council for this Province, and the Rev. Dr. Auchmuty. Oct. 28

"The Town begins to wear again a chearful Appearance; and the Markets are increasing daily.

"The Ships of War and other Vessels, make near 500 Sail within the Harbour."—Ibid.

" "This Day Gen^l^ Knipphausen advanced towards King's Bridge —F^t^ Independence &^c^ taken possess^n^ off."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" A wag among the British in New York advertises: "Wanted, By a Gentleman, fond of Curiosities, who is shortly going to England, a Parcel of Congress Notes, with which he intends to paper some Rooms. Those, who wish to make something of their Stock in that Commodity, shall, if they are clean and fit for the Purpose, receive at the Rate of One Guinea per Thousand, for all they can bring, before the Expiration of the present Month. Enquire of the Printer. N. B. It is expected they will soon be much lower."—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776.

" The following notice is published: "If any person into whose hands part of the College apparatus or books, which were deposited in the City-Hall in May last, or any of Dr. Clossy's books, which were deposited in the closet near the organ loft in St. Paul's, will bring them to the doctor, at the house where Dr. Bard lately lived the favour will be very gratefully acknowledged; and whatever trouble or expence such person may have been at in carrying such instruments or books, the doctor will very gratefully pay them for."—N. Y. Merc., O 28, 1776. See also Ja 27, 1777.

29 Gen. Greene writes from Fort Lee to Washington, whose headquarters are still at White Plains: "The ships have fallen down the North River, and the troops which advanced upon Harlem Plains, and on the hill where the Monday action was, have drawn within their lines again."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1281. This withdrawal of the British is thus explained and described in a letter (dated Oct. 30) to Lord George Germain by Hugh, Earl Percy, lieutenant under Gen. Howe, who was left in charge of Harlem Heights, when Howe's troops marched into Westchester County [see O 5], in the endeavour to get into the rear of Washington's army (see O 10 and 16): "I was left to defend the island with three British brigades and one Hessian [see O 11]. One of them encamped near New York, and the rest defended our redoubts in the north part of the island." He describes the action in which the troops under his command were engaged, and adds: "having now fully answered the Gen^ls^ intentions and being indeed unable to remain longer on account of the smallness of our numbers and the consequence of the island of New York which this corp was left to guard, I determined to return to the old position in our lines as soon as the evening favored the retreat." He recounts how the retreat was successfully carried out, "the enemy not finding we were gone till next morning." In conclusion he says: "I do assure you I am almost a little vain on this retreat, as the Hessians and all agree in calling the manœvre a masterly one. The rebels were taken in, for whilst they were observing my manœvres, Gen^l^ Kniphausen took from them their works at King's bridge which they had left weakly guarded, bringing almost all their forces to oppose me."—Letters of Hugh, Earl Percy, ed. by Charles Knowles Bolton (Boston, 1902), 72–75, citing 9th Rep. of the Royal Commission on Hist. MSS. (London), III: 86.

30 "We are Inform'd y^t^ a large number of Boats are gon up East River, & y^t^ y^e^ two Armys near East Chester, continue to Fight almost every Day."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 83.

" A British officer "in York-Island" writes to a friend in London regarding the tattered clothing of the "Rebel" soldiers. He states that they are well supplied with provisions. "When they retreated, they left fifteen hundred men in Fort Washington; and next day fifteen hundred more came into it from Fort Constitution; so that they have now a garrison of three thousand men under the command of General Lee, who I find is to be the scape-goat, and I fear will be destined to the cord."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1293–94.

" King George III issues proclamations for a general fast throughout England, Scotland, and Wales on Dec. 12 and 13, and for prayers for deliverance of "our loyal subjects within our Colonies and Provinces in North America from the violence, injustice, and tyranny of those daring Rebels who have assumed to themselves the exercise of arbitrary power."—5 Am. Arch., II: 1289–91.

31 Gen. Greene writes from Fort Lee to Washington, who is still 1776 Oct. 31 at White Plains, that "The enemy have possession of Fort Independence on the heights above King's Bridge," having made their appearance on the night of Oct. 29. He asks about holding the ground from King's Bridge to the lower lines.—5 Am. Arch., II: 1294.

" The Rev. Chas. Inglis, rector of Trinity Church, writes an extended account of the condition of the Anglo-American church in America, and particularly in New York City, addressing it (as appears by the postscript) to "The Rev. Dr. Hind." It is a summary of recent happenings involving the Church of England. Dr. Inglis refers particularly to the difficulties experienced by a loyal clergyman of the Church of England in 1776, prior to the city's capture by the British. The clergy, he says, "were viewed with peculiar envy and malignity by the disaffected." Although "civil liberty was the ostensible object," he believes "that an abolition of the Church of England was one of the principal springs of the dissenting leaders' conduct."

The clergy of the Church of England preached "without touching on politics," and endeavoured to "cherish a spirit of loyalty among their people." This "gave great offence to our flaming patriots, who laid it down as a maxim, 'That those who were not for them were against them.'" Various incidents are mentioned by Mr. Inglis to show brutal treatment of the clergy.

The Declaration of Independence increased their embarrassments. "To officiate publicly, and not pray for the King and royall family according to the liturgy, was against their duty and oath, as well as dictates of their conscience; and yet to use the prayers for the King and royal family would have drawn inevitable destruction on them. The only course which they could pursue, to avoid both evils, was to suspend the public exercise of their function, and shut up their churches. This was accordingly done."

After the clergy "had ceased to officiate publicly," Inglis writes, "several of the rebel officers sent to me for the keys of the churches, that their chaplains might preach in them; with these requisitions I peremptorily refused to comply, and let them know that 'if they would use the churches, they must break the gates and doors to get in.' . . . Upon this they desisted, and did not occupy any of the churches."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo ed.), III: 1049–66; Eccles. Rec., VI: 4292–4300. For a sketch of Inglis's life, see Sabine's Loyalists of the Am. Rev., I: 563. See, further, S 18.

Nov. — "In November new troubles began on account of the quartering of the soldiers, of whom more and more come in; as also many of their women and children. Many of the public buildings were already filled with Prisoners, or sick, &c; especially all the Dutch and Presbyterian churches, as also the French church, the Baptists, and new Quaker meeting; and we were not without apprehension, that something of that nature might come upon us; and this the more, as the Chapel-House [Moravian] has the appearance of a spacious building; and just opposite the same they were fitting up the fine north church of the English Dutch for Barracks."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 120.

1 Kemble records: "The Rebels quit their Works upon White Plains; our Troops took possession of them at Nine in the Morning."—Kemble's Jour., 96.

" "All things seem to be quiet at Fort Washington."—5 Am. Arch., III: 466.

" A. Hamilton, Jr., "near St. Johns Gate," London, publishes "A View of New York, Governors Island, the River &c. from Long Island." There is an impression of this view in the Emmet Collection (No. 2622) in N. Y. Pub. Library.

2 Lieut. Gen. Knyphausen, having repaired Kingsbridge, "took post within it."—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). Kemble states the situation thus: "Kniphausen in possession of a Post on the Island of New York near Kings Bridge. Gen. Earl Cornwallis with Sir William Erskine reconnoitered to the North River, and from thence to Kings Bridge, the Country clear of Rebels.

"The Country all this time unmercifully Pillaged by our Troops, Hessians in particular, no wonder if the Country People refuse to join us . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 96.

" Wm. Demont, adjutant to Col. Robt. Magaw, who commands Fort Washington, deserts to the British. In 1792, he wrote a letter confessing his treason, his statement being in part as follows: "On the 2d of Nov'r 1776 I Sacrificed all I was Worth in the World to the Service of my King & Country and joined the then Lord Percy, brought in with me the Plans of Fort Washington, by which Plans that Fortress was taken by his Majesty's Troops the 16 instant, Together with 2700 Prisoners and Stores & Ammunition to the amount of 1800 Pound. At the same time, I may with Justice affirm, from my Knowledge of the Works, I saved the Lives of many of His Majesty's Subjects—these Sir are facts well-known to every General Officer which was there."—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1877), I: 80. See also The Campaign of 1776, 281, footnote; Winsor, VI: 287. Nov. 2

"We had a Report this Morning, of Fort Washingtons being Taken by y^e^ Kings Troops, it was also Reported at Night y^t^ they had Taken Kings Bridg."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 87. Fort Washington was not taken until Nov. 16 (q. v.). 4

A New Yorker writes to a friend in Bristol: "It is astonishing with what Judgment the Rebel Posts are fortified, and yet they will not remain in them to defend them; they retreat at the Sight of our Army, whether it is from Cowardice or Policy I leave to better Judge to determine. The other Day we took Possession of three of their Forts with 72 Pieces of Cannon, which they had abandoned. Washington is retreated into the Province of Connecticut, and Gen. Howe is in full March after him, to cut off his Retreat to New-England. Putnam is narrowly watched on New-York Island, almost surrounded. You would be surprised to see the Spirit of our Army, who are much exasperated against the Americans, most of whom have nó other Clothing than a Blanket or Rug. I am told their whole Army is nearly in the same Situation. . . . 5

"We have now 70 Sail of Transports ordered to be ready with three Months Provision, expecting to embark daily upon some new Expedition. A Report prevails here that the Congress is separated, and that seven of them are gone to France, or some other Place, to secure their Dollars, for they have got most of the Cash of the Country into their Hands, you may guess for what Purpose. This is the News of the Day at New York. We have an exceeding good Market here; Beef 3½d. per lb. and every other Kind of Provision is in equal Plenty, and proportionably cheap; the Army have it for taking, and the Fleet are served with it twice a Week. I suppose no Army was ever better supplied, nor in better Spirits for engaging. The Inhabitants are coming into New York daily, and opening Shops. We are in great Want here of every Material belonging to Shipping. Tar sold the other Day for three Guineas a Cask, it is much wanted, so is Pitch, Rosin, Sheathing, Nails, Cordage, and Sailcloth, which would yield a good Profit."—St. James's Chron., D. 21–24, 1776.

Maj. Dixon and a brigade of British engineers receive orders "to go to beseige Fort Washington on Y^k^ Island near King's bridge where G^l^ Knipphausen was encamp'd w^t^ about 5,000 Hess^ns^."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 6

Thos. Clarke, in his will of this date, leaves his estate to his wife and her heirs. Pelletreau says of this bequest: "Captain Thomas Clarke was the owner of the farm which he named 'Chelsea,' and [which] still retains the name. It extended from east of eighth avenue to Hudson river, between 21st and 50th streets. The greater part of this tract eventually came in possession of the daughter Charity, who married Rev. Benjamin Moore, Bishop of New York, and the mansion built on this estate, was the home of their son, Clement Clarke Moore. . . ."—Abstracts of Wills, in N. Y. H. S. Collections, IX: 36. "

Robertson records that on this day he "Attended the Gen^l^ to King's Bridge to reconnoitre the Rebel's Works."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 7

Kemble writes: "8 or 10 of our People taken Marauding; Scandalous behavior for British Troops; and the Hessians Outrageously Licentious, and Cruel to such a degree as to threaten with death all such as dare obstruct them in their depredations. Violence to Officers frequently used, and every Degree of Insolence offered."—Kemble's Jour., 98. "

The British have broken camp, and gone towards the North River and Kingsbridge. Washington expects that they will invest Fort Washington.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), V: 7–9, 24, 36. For a detailed account of the movements of the British forces since the battle of White Plains, see Kemble's Jour., 96–98. "

Gov. Tryon returns to New York.—N. Y. Merc., N 11, 1776. 8

"We hear'd a Report y^t^ Gen^l^ Burgoin had taken possession of Ticondarogue & y^t^ our Army had Retreeted over Lake George; but we yet hope y^t^ this Report is without Foundation—Our 10 1776 Nov. 10 People who had been confin'd at Long Island, were this Day bro't into y^e City."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 91.

The "Perseus" (Capt. Elphinstone) brings in two prizes, valued at £5,000.—N. Y. Merc., N 11, 1776. See also in ibid. mention of prizes brought in on Nov. 6 by the frigate "Lively" (Capt. Bishopp). For later prizes, see ibid. Nov. 21; Montresor's Jour., 421; Gaine's Jour., 32, 40, 64, etc.

11 The following news items are published in New York: "A Gentleman lately arrived from Philadelphia, says that it was the prevailing Opinion there, that a French Fleet of great Force would arrive at New-York before Christmas, which would enable the Provincials not only to recover that City and the adjacent Parts, but destroy the British Ships at present in the Harbour, and of Course reduce the British Army to the last Extremity.—Such are the Absurdities and Falsehoods, with which the Leaders of the present Rebellion endeavour to keep up the Spirits and Opposition of their deluded Followers!"

"A Detachment of the Rebels still continue at Fort Washington, which is constructed with Masonry, &c. and, 'tis said, cost near 30,000 l. They have given out that they will defend it to the last Extremity."

"Several Rebel Privateers, &c. have been lately taken and brought into this Harbour, by some of His Majesty's Ships."

"A large Fleet of Transports, under Convoy of some Men of War, are preparing to sail Homewards."

"We hear, that his Excellency Governor Tryon, has mustered the Militia of Westchester County, and that above 1500 have already joined him, and taken the Oaths of Allegiance to His Majesty."—N. Y. Merc., N 11, 1776.

" Hugh Gaine, having espoused the royalist cause, returns to New York from Newark and brings out his paper The New-York Gazette; and the Weekly Mercury, from his former shop in Hanover Sq. (see O 3, 1763), with the former head-dress and his name in the imprint. He continued to print it at least until the date of Nov. 10, 1783, which is the date of the last issue found (No. 1673); with this issue it was apparently discontinued.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 423; Early Newspapers, II: 422.

" According to an advertisement of the hospital's "physician and purveyor," who desires certain supplies, the military hospital is situated "in Beekman-street, near the Chapel" (St. George's).—N. Y. Merc., N 11, 1776.

12 One division of the British army encamps "within 4 miles of K^s B^ge," the other encamps on Valentine's Hill.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

13 A proclamation is issued by the two Howes, commissioners for "restoring Peace to His Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in North America," commanding "all Persons whatsoever, who are assembled together in Arms against His Majesty's Government, to disband Themselves and return to their Dwellings, there to remain in a peaceable and quiet Manner." They also command "all such other Persons as are assembled together under the Name of General, or Provincial Congresses, Committees, Conventions, or other Associations, by whatever Name . . . or who under the Colour of any Authority from any such Congress, . . . take upon them to issue or execute any Orders for levying Money, raising Troops, fitting out armed Ships and Vessels, imprisoning, or otherwise molesting His Majesty's Subjects, to desist and cease from all Such treasonable Actings and Doings, and to relinquish all such usurped Power and Authority, so that Peace may be restored. . . ." They . . . declare, and make known to all men, "that every Person who within Sixty Days from the Day of the Date hereof shall appear before the Governor . . . and shall claim the Benefit of this Proclamation, and at the same Time testify his Obedience to the Laws, by subscribing a Declaration in the words following: 'I, A. B. do promise and declare, that I will remain in a peaceable Obedience to His Majesty, and will not take up Arms, nor encourage Others to take up Arms, in Opposition to His Authority,' shall and may obtain a full and free Pardon. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1777.

" The British army marches "towards De Lancy's Mills" and encamps "w^t the Brunx in our Front our Right covering the Comm^n to Morrisini, on the Sound—& our left towards the heights & F^t Independence."—Robertson's Jour. See also Kemble's Jour., 99.

14 "The 4^th Brigade under Gen^l Grant w^h had been posted at Miles Sq^r & the 1 & 2^d Bat^ln s L^t In^y from Valentines hill fell Back towards Courtlands house taking the left of the Army stretch^g towards the N. R^r about 1 mile in F^t of F^t Indep^ce. . . . The 1 & 2^d L^t I^y ordered near H^d Q^rs at De Lancy's Mills.—Major Dixon had Raised one or two small Batt^ys to favor an Attack to take post on the Hill where F^t Washington stood."—Robertson's Jour. Nov. 14

An item of London news states: "The very identical Dr. Franklyn, whom Lord Chatham so much caressed, and used to say he was proud in calling him his Friend, is now at the Head of the Rebellion in North America."—St. James's Chron., N 12–14, 1776. "

"This night a strong Working Party was employ'd Rais^g Batterys—en Barbet—for 20 field Pieces & How^rs along the side of Harlem River to cover an Attack to be made on Y^k Island."—Robertson's Jour. 15

John Reuber, a Hessian soldier, records in his diary: "15 Novbr., came the order from the Headquarters of the English General-field-marshal Clinton, that Fort Washington should be captured by 4 attacks: 3 by the English and one by the Hessians. 1. General Matthews, 2. Col-lieutenant Stirling, 3. Lord Percy, 4. General Von Kniphausen, near whom Col. Rall with his brigade had the avant-garde on the North-port, where the ship of war lies and is to protect the flank; another ship of war lay at the South-haven and is to protect the English flank, when the thing comes off."—Battle of Harlem Heights, 229, citing a translation of the original MS. at Cassel, N. Y. H. S. Papers. "

About one o'clock, Gen. Howe's adjutant-general made a demand for the surrender of the garrison at Fort Washington, but is answered by the commanding officer, Col. Robert Magaw, that he would defend it to the last extremity.—Gen. Greene's letter to Col. Knox, written from Fort Lee on Nov. 17, in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 100. For the text of Magaw's letter, see ibid., part 1, 278. "

"The Batteries being finished for the Attack of Fort Washington, the Advanced Works were stormed this Morning, and the Fort surrendered in the afternoon."—From transcript, in Library of Congress, of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in Brit. Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). This "Journal" continues the British record of operations under Howe,—including the capture of Fort Lee by Lord Cornwallis on Nov. 19, and of Newbridge on the Hackinsack River on Nov. 21. 16

Journals kept by officers employed with the British forces give detailed particulars of this engagement. Kemble writes, under this date: "In the Orders of the preceding day the 1st and 2d Light Infantry and Guards were ordered to march this morning at four; the Reserve at an hour before day Light; General Kniphausens Corps to receive their Orders from him: the whole to Attack the Rebels on the Heights leading to Fort Washington. . . . The first Landing of British . . . about a Mile below Kings Bridge, which was Effected at 12 at Noon, the tide not permitting it sooner . . ., at the same time the Hessians Advanced upon the right, the Brigade of Guards & Light Infantry landed in the Harlem River were opposed by a small Body of Rebels, who soon fled, but carried off a piece of Cannon they had in a Redoubt, which was meant to prevent our landing; here we received little loss—only 4 or 5 Killed and 9 or 10 Wounded.

"The 42d Regt. Attacked at the same time near Morris's House, where they were opposed and lost.

"Lord Percy attacked at the same time and Carried all the Rebel Lines with little loss, taking them in flank as he approached them; by two o'Clock were in possession of all their Forts and Redoubts except Washington, and cut them off from Escaping to the Jersey Shore,—this latter done by the Hessians. Our Troops behaved with their usual spiritness and have added Laurels to the British Nation.

"The Attack, having commenced at 12, was over about one; at 4 in the Afternoon the Rebels Surrendered the Fort, having treated for some time before with our Officers, particularly the Hessians, who Cut off their Retreat to the Water, & desired the honors of War. It is Amazing to say that they had not above 12 Men Killed and as many Wounded. The Officers to keep their side Arms, the Men to lay down their Arms, which was done about five. To our shame, tho' they Capitulated for the Safety of their Baggage, they were stripped of their Wearing Apparel as they Marched out by Hessians, till a Stop was put to it by making them take a different Route. They were so thronged in the Fort that they could not have subsisted there above 3 days; 2,600, I believe, is near the number of Prisoners, Officers included."—Kemble's Jour., 90–100. See also the map entitled "Attacks of Fort Washington by His Majesty's 1776 Nov. 16 Forces under the Command of Gen[l] Sir Will[m] Howe K: B.," in Man. Com. Coun. (1861), opp. p. 426.

An American woman, Margaret Corbin, was wounded in this fight.—See Jl 6, 1779.

The following summons to surrender was sent to the commander of the fort: "The Commander in Chief demands an immediate and categorical Answer to his second Summons of Fort Washington.

"The Garrison must immediately surrender Prisoners of War, and give up all their Arms, Ammunition and Stores of every Kind, and send two Field Officers to Head-Quarters as Hostages; in so doing, the General is pleased to allow the Garrison to keep Possession of their Baggage, and the Officers to have their Swords.

"J. Paterson, Adj. General.

"Agreed to Robert Magaw, Col. 5th Pennsylvania Bat. Commanding at F. Washington."

—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776.

Robertson writes: "A Number of Flat Boats having pass'd up the N. River to King's Bridge unperceived the Night Before—Four diff[t] Attacks were ordered to be made by day Break on the Lines and Diff[t] Strong grounds on York Island In order to reduce Fort Washington." He then gives a vivid description of the attack and the battle, with reference to a lettered sketch of the battle-ground. He adds: "Tho' the Gen[l] had summon'd the Fort the night before —They [the Americans] were all addmitted as Prisoners—& the officers their Baggage & swords about 2960 were taken alive their loss from their Situat[n] during the Attacks was but Triffling."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

A graphic description of the capture of Fort Washington was written by John Reuber in his journal under date of "17. Novbr." (error for Nov. 16): ". . . in the morning before day-break, all the regiments and corps were assembled, the Hessians on the right wing at the north-haven; the English troops upon the left wing at the south-haven. When it was now day and the Americans perceived us, but nothing more very plainly, at once, these two ships of war, on both sides, made their master-strokes upon the fort, and we began at the same time on the land with cannon, and all the regiments marched forward up the hill and were obliged to creep along up the rocks, one falling down alive, another being shot dead. We were obliged to drag ourselves by the beech-tree bushes up the height where we could not really stand. At last, however, we got about on the top of the hill where there were trees and great stones. We had a hard time of it there together. Because they had now had no idea of yielding, Col. Rall gave the word of command, thus: 'All, that are my grenadiers, march forwards!' All the drummers struck up the march, the hautboy-players blew. At once all were mingled together, Americans and Hessians. There was no more fireing, but all ran forward pell-mell upon the fortress. Before we came up, the Americans had a trench about the fortress, as soon as we were within which, the order came to halt. Then the Americans had a mind to run out through us, but then came the command: 'Hold! you are all prisoners of war.' The port was at once demanded by Gen. V. Kniphausen. The rebels were allowed two hours for capitulating; when they were expired, the fort was surrendered to General V. Kniphausen with all the munitions of war and provisions belonging thereto, within and without the fort; all guns and arms were to be laid down, and when all this was done, Rall's reg't. and the old Lossberg, being made to form into two lines facing each other, they were required to march out between the two regiments and deposit their guns and other weapons. Then came the English and took them to New York into custody, and when the first transport was off, the second marched out of the citadel and was as strong as the first, and they also were conducted to New York into confinement. And when all this was got through with, it was night. Thus the Hessians took possession of the fort, and the rest marched again round to Kingsbridge into our old camp we had before stopped so long. Then came the order that the fort should be called, Fort Kniphausen."—Battle of Harlem Heights, 229–31, citing "the Original MSS. at Cassel," the translation being in the N. Y. H. S.

A more circumstantial military account of the capture was written by Joseph Wiedeshslat, ensign in the Hessian contingent, pub. in ibid., 231–34, and citing the translation of the original MSS., in the N. Y. H. S.

A British officer thus described the attack on Fort Washington in a letter of Nov. 20: "On Saturday last [Nov. 16] we attacked Fort Washington, on the island of New York, the strongest post that ever was occupied by an army; the difficulties we had to surmount are almost incredible; hills covered with wood, and almost perpendicular; from the fall of the leaf the footing insecure; in short, there was every thing to favour the Rebels in point of ground. We attacked the south and east sides of the ground; the Hessians, in two columns, made their attack on the north. They behaved with distinguished bravery; . . . Lord Percy led on the troops under his command with great spirit, and forced the Rebels works with very little loss; his horse was twice wounded, but fortunately his Lordship received no hurt: the Rebels all ran into the fort, where they had 3000 firelocks charged: . . . They hung out a flag of truce, and asked leave to surrender with the honours of war; they were sent word, by Lieut. Gen. Kniphausen, that if they did not surrender in thirty minutes, the fort should be stormed, and every man put to death: they instantly complied with the terms, marched out of the fort, and grounded their arms; we made 2586 prisoners, with new cloathing for two battalions. At twelve at night they were marched prisoners at New York."—London Packet, Ja 6–8, 1777. Nov. 16

"A Gentleman, who saw the Action on the Kingsbridge Side, affirms, that nothing could exceed the Firmness and Intrepidity of the German Troops in making their Attack, nor the Alertness and Vigor of the Highlanders in ascending Rocks and Precipices almost insurmountable.

"An Officer, who was present with Lord Percy's Detachment on the Haerlem Side of the Attack, informs us, that Lord Howe animated the Troops by his Presence, and was near Lord Percy during the principal Part of the Engagement."—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776.

On the American side, Gen. Greene, writing from Fort Lee on Nov. 17 to Col. Knox, thus described the surrender of Fort Washington: "General Washington, General Putnam, General Mercer, and myself, went to the island to determine what was best to be done; but just at the instant we stepped on board the boat the enemy made their appearance on the hill where the Monday action was, and began a severe cannonade with several field-pieces. Our guards soon fled, the enemy advancing up to the second line. This was done while we were crossing the river and getting upon the hill. The enemy made several marches to the right and to the left,—I suppose to reconnoitre the fortifications and the lines. There we all stood in a very awkward situation. As the disposition was made, and the enemy advancing, we durst not attempt to make any new disposition; indeed, we saw nothing amiss. We all urged his Excellency to come off. I offered to stay. General Putnam did the same, and so did General Mercer; but his Excellency thought it best for us all to come off together, which we did, about half an hour before the enemy surrounded the fort. The enemy came up Harlem River, and landed a party at head-quarters, which was upon the back of our people in the lines. A disorderly retreat soon took place; without much firing the people retreated into the fort. On the north side of the fort there was a very heavy fire for a long while; and as they had the advantage of the ground, I apprehend the enemy's loss must be great. After the troops retreated in the fort, very few guns were fired. The enemy approached within small-arm fire of the lines, and sent in a flag, and the garrison capitulated in an hour. I was afraid of the fort; the redoubt you and I advised, too, was not done, or little or nothing done to it. Had that been complete, I think the garrison might have defended themselves a long while, or been brought off. I feel mad, vexed, sick, and sorry. . . . This is a most terrible event. . . ."—Drake's Life and Corresp. of Henry Knox, Maj. Gen., etc. (1873), 33–34.

Judge Oliver Burnham, one of Knowlton's Rangers, in his "Recollections," states: "Our Rangers were stationed near Harlem to watch the Enemy, and had Several Engagements with small parties of them. . . . We remained until the Sixteenth of November in this situation, when we were warmly Engaged on all sides. We were about two miles below the fort and well sustained the attack until the enemy made good their landing across Harlem River, when we had hard fighting to reach the Fort—Just as we had reached the gate the flag went out and Surrendered the fort and ourselves prisoners of war."—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 179–80.

Pastor Shewkirk states in his diary that the capture of Fort Washington "was a matter of moment, as now one may hope that the communication with the Jerseys will be open'd, as also with the places up the East River; so that the Inhabitants may come to the city and provisions be brought in; especially wood, which is not to be had, and is extremely dear; a cord of oak wood, bought formerly for 20 s. now 4 £ s. . ."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 120.

1776 Nov. 16

"With the capture of Fort Washington the whole island fell into the possession of the British. The Hessian mercenaries, whom the Elector of Hesse-Cassel hired to King George III, were encamped on the heights of Harlem; and General Knyphausen, their commander, occupied the Morris house as his headquarters, and it continued to be so used by the British and Hessians until the evacuation of the island on the 25th of November, 1783."—Mag. of Am. Hist., VI: 100. See also Winsor, VI: 298, 338, 339; Fort Washington . . . with a Hist. of the Defence and Reduction of Mount Washington, by Reginald Pelham Bolton (1902); Relics of the Revolution . . . in Forts and Camps on Manhattan Island, by Bolton (1916); and L. M. R. K., III: 945.

A London news item stated that "Upon the attack of Fort Washington, the retreat was formed by the General of that name, in so masterly a manner, that all the Generals publicly declared, that the first soldier in Europe could not have governed himself better; and that General Washington's conduct was of that style to do him great military honour."—London Packet, Ja 3–6, 1777.

Robt. H. Harrison writes to Maj. Gen. Schuyler from Harlem on Nov. 20: ". . . The loss Sustained on both Sides is not ascertained. We know the Lines were warmly disputed in some Parts, particularly on the Pass above the Fort, leading to Kingsbridge. In that Quarter the Engagement was of long Continuance, and heavy; and by the Information of one of the Train, who escaped on Monday Night, attended with a considerable Slaughter among the Hessians. The Firing there lasted, it is said, and was incessant from 2 & ½ to 3 Hours. The Artillerist adds that Lieut. Col. Rawlins, who was posted there, maintained his Ground a long Time, within Three or four Rods of the Enemy, and at Length was obliged to give Way, on Account of their infinitely Superior Number, and a constant Succession of Troops. His Major, Otho Williams Esq^r, a young Gentleman who promised much good Service to his Country, is reported to have fallen. Our Loss in killed is supposed to be inconsiderable."—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 180.

After the capture of Fort Washington, the British gave the name "Fort Tryon" to the northern outwork. For an account of the action at this point (where a monument was erected in 1909), see 14*th Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1909), 59; and for the dedication of this monument, Sept. 29, 1909, see 15*th Ann. Rep.*, of this society (1910), 347–62. See also "Fort Tryon and Vicinity," by Edw. Hagaman Hall, in 22*d Ann. Rep.* of this society (1917), 735–80.

An original plan of the attacks on Fort Washington ($29\frac{1}{16}$ x $22\frac{1}{2}$ in.), bearing the title "Attacks of Fort Washington by His Majestys Forces under the Command of Gen^l Sir Will^m Howe K: B. 16 Nov^r 1776," is owned by the N. Y. H. S. (the gift of Robert L. Stuart, Jan. 10, 1861).

Soon after this date, Sauthier made surveys for the beautiful map of the northern part of Manhattan Island which is reproduced and described in Vol. I (Pl. 46). It is entitled "A Topographical Map of the North Part of New York Island, Exhibiting the Plan of Fort Washington, now Fort Knyphausen, With the Rebel Lines to the Southward, which were Forced by the Troops under the Command of the R^t Hon^ble Earl Percy on the 16^th Nov^r 1776, and Survey'd immediately after by Order of his Lordship, By Claude Joseph Sauthier. To which is added the Attack made to the North^d by the Hessians, Survey'd by Order of Lieut^t Gen^l Knyphausen. Published by Permission of the R^t Hon^ble the Commissioners of Trade & Plantations. by W^m Faden, 1777." See also reproductions in Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 532; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 120.

In 1906, Reginald Pelham Bolton prepared for the Am. Scenic and Hist. Pres. Soc. an historical map of the west side of the upper part of Manhattan Island, from 196th St. to Spuyten Duyvil. This shows the location of Indian shell heaps, the planting ground of the Weck-quas-keek tribe, military roads during the Revolution, camp of the Seventeenth Foot (Cock Hill Camp), Cock Hill Fort, Fort Tryon 1776, the British Sanitary Camp 1779–1781, the pontoon bridge over Spuyten Duyvil 1779–1782, the North River redoubt 1776–1785, the Dyckman homestead 1787, Bastiaen Kortright's dwelling 1702, Black Horse Tavern 1812, and fishermen's huts on Little Sandy Bay. A printed copy of this map is filed in the real estate bureau of the comptroller's office (map No. 215).

See also "The Military Hut-Camp of The War of the Revolution on the Dyckman Farm, Manhattan, Explored by the Members of the Committee on Field Exploration, of the New-York Historical Society," by Reginald Pelham Bolton, in N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bull., Oct., 1918; Jan. and April, 1919. Nov. 16

Three manuscript plans of Fort George, showing its exact location, design, and dimensions, and one of them the buildings which it contained at this period, are shown on Pl. 46-A, Vol. I.

The British assault the American fortifications on Laurel Hill (see 1776, Autumn), and carry them at the point of the bayonet.—20*th Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc., 434. Later, these works were extended and elaborated by the British and became Fort Clinton (ibid., 433); and in 1781 the British constructed here "commanding fortifications" and called the works Fort George.—Ibid., 431. See 1776, fall; 1780, and 1781; L. M. R. K., III: 944; Pl. 180, Vol. III.

"We were this day Inform'd y^t the Town of Harlem was burnt y^e Night before."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 97. The report was not true. 17

"Some Time in y^e Afternoon the Prisoners Taken at Fort Washington, were brought into y^e City."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 97. These numbered about 3,000 men.—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776. 18

Most of the churches and sugar-houses of New York were used as barracks for these prisoners. Pastor Shewkirk records that the Moravian Church, after some conflict of authority, was spared, and 400 of the prisoners were taken, instead, to the North Dutch Church.—Shewkirk's Diary, op. cit., 121–22.

Lieut. Oliver Babcock, of Knowlton's Rangers, writes in his diary (now in the Pension Bureau, Washington), under this date: "Came to York and Lodged in ye [Quaker] Meeting House." See also his entry of Dec. 13.—Johnston, Battle of Harlem H'ts, 198.

Another prisoner, Capt. Alexander Graydon, gives the following account of his experiences in New York: "Our men," he says, "were confined in churches and sugar-houses and quarters were assigned for us who were officers, in the upper part of the town, in what was called the holy ground. But . . . I ventured to take boarding at four dollars per week. . . . The person with whom I boarded was a Mrs. Carroll, who, under the protection of General Robertson, commandant of the town, was hardy enough to entertain rebels . . . From the number of her boarders Mrs. Carroll might be supposed to have a very large house, but this was not the fact. It was but an humble tenement in Queen's street, of two stories, with two or three chambers; but, adjoining it, was a building which having been abandoned, we, at her instance, under the auspices of General Robertson, took possession of and furnished with our own mattresses and blankets." Having secured funds from his family in Philadelphia, and clothing from his baggage at Fort Washington, Capt. Graydon was able to enjoy considerable freedom in the city. "One day," he says, "I sallied forth alone and walked past the coffee-house, down to the battery. Finding the gate-way open, I entered it and after traversing it to its extremity, I strolled back again; almost every sentinel, to my great surprise, I must confess, handling his arms to me as I passed. Leaving the battery, I took a turn into another part of the town, and after a considerable round, regained my lodgings, without having met with the smallest molestation."—Memoirs of His Own Time, by Alexander Graydon, ed. by John S. Littell (Phila., 1846), 223–26.

For other accounts of the treatment of prisoners by the British at this time, see S 16; N 21, 25, and 28; D 15, and 17, 1776. Cf. also Banks, David Sproat and Naval Prisoners in the War of the Revolution (1909).

The "Laidleans" (followers of the Rev. Archibald Laidlie, who was called in 1763 to preach in English in the Middle Dutch Church) had possession until 1776 of the records and revenues of the Dutch Church, as allowed by a judgment of the supreme court in a suit brought against them by the Dutch faction in the church. In 1776, Gen. Howe reversed the judgment of the court, "seized upon the edifice, converted it into a prison for rebels," and put the old Dutch faction in possession of the revenues and records; which possession they held until the evacuation of New York by the British army in 1783.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 21–23. See also Eccles. Recs., VI: 3985–88, 4105.

"The Middle Church was used as a prison, and afterwards as a riding-school for the British officers and soldiers, and became the scene of habitual ribaldry, profanity, and dissipation. The whole of the interior, galleries and all, was destroyed, leaving the bare walls and roof."—De Witt, Discourse (1857), 40.

1776 Nov. 18 "The most distinguished prisoner confined there was the Abbé de la Motte of the Augustinian order [see S 16]. He was captured on a French ship and brought a prisoner to New York." On attempting to say mass, he was kept a close prisoner until his exchange in 1779.—Jour. Presby. Hist. Soc. (1917–8), IX: 364. The Middle Dutch Church was used as a hospital from Oct. 29, 1779 (q.v.) to April, 1780 (q.v.). It was reopened for religious services after the war, on July 4, 1790 (q.v.).

"The North Church was used as an hospital and for storage. The lower part was stripped of the pews, pulpit, etc., and the walls were much defaced, but otherwise the building preserved the general character and aspect it originally possessed, . . ."—De Witt, op. cit., 40. See also Lossing, Field-Book of the Rev., II: 629. Regarding its reopening as a church, see Dec., 1784.

The Garden St. (Dutch) Church, which did not suffer during the war, reopened on Dec. 11, 1783 (q.v.), just after the British evacuation.

" "The 1st Brigade, 3d Battln Grenadrs 3rd Battln Lt Iy & 3 Hessian Brigades went to New York—The other Troops returned to their Tents—Ft Washington Named Fort Nipphausen [Knyphausen] by Genl Orders."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Kemble Papers, N. Y. H. S. Collections, XVI: 413. "Fort Washington became Fort Knyphausen, as a special compliment to its captor. The Hessians themselves were not at all satisfied with Howe's delays, which cost them a large part of their loss. The wounded were sent to Harlem, where Captain Von Griesheim was in command; the Hessian brigade of Schmidt garrisoned Fort Washington, and the Waldeck regiment Fort Independence."—The German Allied Troops in the North Am. War of Independence; translated from the German of Max von Eelking, by J. G. Rosengarten (1893), 52.

19 Kemble records: "At 9 at Night, the Reserves, two Battalions Light Infantry, Chasseurs, and three Battalions Hessians, Embarked under the Command of Lord Cornwallis, and Crossed the North River the next morning early (the 20th) and landed without any opposition nearly opposite Colonel Philips's."—Kemble's Jour., 101. See N 20.

" The "Solebay" arrives in the harbour, "having under Convoy a Number of Merchantmen and Transports, with the 6th Regiment on board from St. Vincent's."—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776.

20 At daybreak, the British and Hessians under Cornwallis land on the Jersey shore "allmost opposite to Phillips's house." They march on to Fort Lee and find both it and Fort Constitution (cf. O 19) abandoned, "& the Rebel Tents Stores Guns &ca Standing."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

Kemble's record reads: "The Troops under Lord Cornwallis's Command amount to about 4,000 Men. Fort Constitution taken by his Lordship the same day; a quantity of Provisions, Ammunition, &c., were found in it, with about 30 pieces of Cannon, among which were two Brass Mortars. they likewise left their Tents standing, to the number of 300 or better, and their Kettles boiling; supposed to have quitted these Posts with between 3 and 4 thousand Men."—Kemble's Jour., 101.

The news report describes the capture thus: "So great was the Haste of the Rebels to quit their boasted Fort Lee, or Constitution, that they left behind their Meat dressing at the Fire. There were found in the Works, which a Handful of brave Men might have defended, 1 large Brass and 2 Iron Mortars, about 40 Pieces of Cannon, the astonishing Number of 400,000 Cartridges and a great Quantity of other Military Stores. When the Troops came up with their Rear-guard and the Baggage, the Rebels relinquished the whole at the first Fire, and many of them threw down their Arms and surrendered. The Country People behaved extremely well, and rebuilt a Bridge or two which the Rebels had destroyed upon Hackinsack River, even before the Troops could come up to them."—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776.

There is in the Emmet Collection (item No. 7815), in the N. Y. P. L., an original water-color drawing entitled "The Landing of the British Forces in the Jerseys on the 20th of November 1776 under the command of the Rt Honl Lieut Genl Earl Cornwallis." This is supposed to have been made by Lord Rawdon, who served at the time as engineer officer on Cornwallis's staff; it was purchased at the sale of the effects of the Marquis of Hastings, his grandson.

" Rev. Dr. Auchmuty writes to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts that, "upon his arrival at that once delightful but now unhappy city, he found everything in great confusion. Upon searching the rubbish of his late venerable Church, and his large and elegant house, he could find only a very few trifles of little or no value, except the Church plate and his own. Providence having preserved him two chapels, he begins to have divine service again regularly carried on, after a suspension of near three months, and his people begin to flock in, so that they will soon be filled. The several churches in that and the neighbouring governments are converted to the worst of purposes, and the Society's missionaries are either in a jail, or sent away back into the country. His wife and daughters are still in the hands of the rebels, and he knows not when he shall be able to obtain their freedom. The losses he hath himself sustained by fire and cruel devastations amount already to 2500 l. sterling; and to the loss sustained by his church, to the amount of 25000 l. sterling, must be added also that of the quit rents, which the tenants, as they are burnt out, are unable to pay.

Nov. 20

"The Doctor adds, that as soon as public affairs are settled, such measures will be adopted, as shall be recommended by their superiors, for procuring some assistance from this part of the world, in order to rebuild the church, the schools, and parsonage house; and they flatter themselves their applications will be attended with success."—From an "Abstract of the Proceedings" of this society, 1776–7, p. 68, printed in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1870), 274–75. St. Paul's Chapel had been reopened for services on Sept. 22 (q.v.).

21 Jabez Fitch visits the Americans "at ye Churches" and finds them "in a very Miserable Cituation, espacially those at ye Quakers Meeting house which is now Emprov'd for an Hospital."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 100.

" Kemble records: "Am told Lord Cornwallis is to pursue his Route thro' Jersey . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 101. On Nov. 22, he says: "Cornwallis still about 3 Miles from the Landing; this Evening came to Town. The General [Howe] went to Jersey; return'd about 11 at Night."—Ibid. See D 5.

22 "This Day I went [sic] a Message from the Gl to N. York—Genl Howe after having Visited Fort Lee went to New York to his Qrs there.—some recruits landed from England."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" The following general orders are among those issued on this day from Gen. Howe's headquarters at "De Lancey's Mill:"

"A Return will be given to-morrow to the Deputy Adjutant General [Kemble] of the Killed, Wounded, and Missing of each Corps since the 17th. of last September, specifying the different Dates of the several Casualties.

"Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen will command upon the Heights of Fordham.

"The unnecessary Works at Fort Knyphausen to be immediately demolished.

"The 6th Brigade and one Battalion of the 2d. to encamp near the Rebel lines on Haerlem Heights; they are to level the Enemy's Lines and Collect the Fraising and Pallisades to be sent to New York, and detach Parties to Haerlem and McGowan's to prepare Houses for their Winter Quarters.

"The Regiment of Waldeck to take Post at Jones's, and extend away towards De Lancey's.

"Maj.-Gen. Stirn's Brigade will march to New York.

"Three Battalions, 2d. Brigade, and the 2d. Battalion 71st. Regiment, to take Post at Fort Lee for the Removal of Stores, etc.

"Two Battalions 71st. to encamp on the Green Hill within King's Bridge, and to furnish a twenty-four Hours' Guard, of a Captain and sixty Men, at Fort Independence, and an Officer and twenty Men at the Bridge. A Flicke to be thrown up to receive them.

"Campbell's Company, in the Road to Cortland's and to Fort Independence; Grant's, at or near Gen. Cleaveland's Quarters; Rogers's Corps, at the Hay Magazine, with a Detachment of a Captain and sixty Men at the Redoubt of the 23d. Encampment, and to furnish Assistance to the Chief Engineer when applied to for that Purpose. A weekly Guard, of an Officer and twenty Dragoons, from New York to King's Bridge."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 413–14.

23 Part of the 2d brigade and 71st regiment of British troops crosses the North River and takes post at Fort Lee.—From transcript, in Lib. of Cong. of the "Jour. of the Operations," etc., in British Museum (Egerton MSS. 2135 f. 7). The movements of the British forces to Newark, Elizabeth Town, Raway, Brunswick, Amboy, Prince Town, Trenton, Burlington, Bordentown, etc., including 1776 Nov. 23 the capture of the "Rebel" Major Gen. Lee on Dec. 13, and the surrender of the British post at Trenton on Dec. 26, are recorded in this "Journal." See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under this and the following dates.

" "In y^e^ Morning we are Inform'd there are a Number more of Prisoners bro't into y^e^ City, it is said they were taken at Fort Lee, before Night I see a Woman y^t^ was Taken among those Prisoners. She Inform'd me y^t^ there was 85 in number, & y^t^ our Army had left considerable Baggage & Artilery."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 102.

24 "In y^e^ Morning there appeared a large Body of y^e^ Kings Troops on y^e^ Peraid we understand they were about to Embark for some place unknown."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 103.

25 The following news items are published in New York: "The Ground and Defences about Fort Washington, are so very strong and advantageous, that a Correspondent supposes, a Handful of British Troops would have maintained the Place for six Months against an Army of Thirty Thousand Men."

"The Flower of the Rebel Army are among the Prisoners taken at Fort Washington: . . .

"The whole Number of Prisoners, now in Town, is near 5,000; many of them half naked."

"To all their other Enormities, the Congress have added the Barbarity of entirely deserting the poor Wretches, whom they had beguiled into their Service, when taken Prisoners by the King's Troops. They have sent them neither Money, Subsistence nor Cloathing; nor have they paid the least Attention to the accumulating Distresses of either them or their Families. It is therefore needless to express the Filthiness of their Appearance and Situation; and if His Majesty's Officers had not shewn more Humanity to these deluded People, than their Masters the Congress, their Situation must have been doubly deplorable. Considering their great Numbers and their necessary Confinement, every possible Attention has been given to alleviate their Distress, arising from the complicated Evils of Guilt, Sickness, and Poverty."

"All Philadelphia is in the utmost Consternation; and the Inhabitants are moving out of it with their Families and Effects as fast as possible."

"Since our last arrived here from London . . . the Mermaid Frigate, . . . with about twenty Sail of Victuallers under her Convoy. . . . "

Samuel Kemble, "Naval Officer for this Port," arrived this week.—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776.

Another comment is as follows: "When Mr. Cadwaller, a young Officer in the Service of the Rebels, was dismissed the other Day by the General's Order, on Account of his Father's civil Treatment of General Prescot, while a Prisoner, he burst into Tears upon the Instance of Generosity shewn him, and discovered such Sensibility on the Occasion, as did him Honor as a Man and a Gentleman. 'Tis to be regretted, that such Men could have been seduced into so unexampled a rebellion against his King and the Constitution of his Country."—Ibid.

" A letter from New York contains the following news: "Captains Burton and Cleland in the British Queen and Joseph victuallers, ran on the Gauntlet about 12 days ago in going up the North River. The enemy being then in possession of Fort Washington and its lines on this side, and Fort Constitution, &c. on the other, and the enemy had also sunk chevaux de frize to obstruct the passage, leaving a channel on the side of New York Island; in passing which they were becalmed; the Joseph lay above three hours with four batteries playing on her, which tore her rigging, &c. to pieces, but had only one man wounded, who, from obstinacy in not having his wound open, is since dead. The British Queen received several shot, but had no men killed or wounded."—London Packet, Ja 3–6, 1777.

" Notice is published that a duplicate of the address presented to the king's commissioners, Admiral Lord Howe and Gen. Howe, on Oct. 16 (q.v.), has been "lodged in the Hands of Mr. James Downes," at "Scott's Tavern, near the City-Hall," where the signatures of returning inhabitants will be received.—N. Y. Merc., N 25, 1776.

" The Sixth Brigade of British troops encamps "to Destroy the Rebel lines near Morris's house on N. Y^k^ Island."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

26 The last division of Hessians has arrived in the city. Henry White, a member of the council, is with them. He became useful to Gov. Tryon, by his influence among the citizens, in establishing such police regulations as the governour, in his now restricted sphere as the civil executive, can command.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 691. Nov. 26

Gen. Howe orders that a "General Court Martial" be held the following day in the City Hall.—Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 415. Others were ordered on later dates to be held at the same place.—Ibid., 423, 434, 439. "

Gov. Tryon writes to Lord Germain: "I am getting proper lists of Officers, as also of Magistrates, that the civil Government may have its full operation as soon as it is judged proper to re-establish it with all its powers."—Ibid., VIII: 691. In such portion of the province as was under British rule, military government was continued until Nov. 25, 1783 (q.v.). "

"On Tuesday [Nov. 26] the Perseus and the Galatea, two Frigates sheathed with Copper and reckoned to out-sail almost any Vessels that can be framed, came into the Harbor from a Cruise. The Galatea alone has taken or retaken 15 or 16 Prizes, and sent them safe into Harbor."—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776. "

Tryon writes to Lord Germain: "The inclosed Plan of Fort George with the Works on the Lower Battery, and the intermediate buildings, will exhibit a Plot of ground which I esteem upon a settlement of the present war would be extremely advisable to be secured as Crown Land. 27

"The Fort with proper buildings might contain the King's Arsenal and Armoury and when all the buildings and Barracks now standing are Demolished, a proper esplanade might be marked out for the Soldiery, and a handsome range of barracks constructed for as many men as might be thought proper for a standing Garrison.

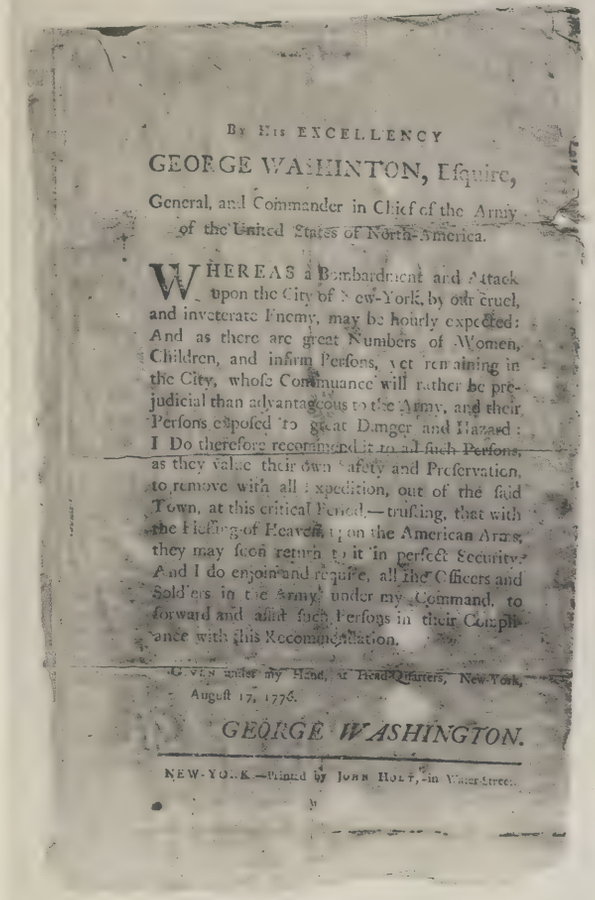
"The Inhabitants who claim the property in the houses and lots in Pearl Street and buildings adjoining, might probably be satisfied out of the Rebel Tenements within the City, upon Confiscation.

"By this arrangement . . . the soldier would be kept distinct from the Citizen and the Commercial Interest of the Town not in the least injured, as no Docks or wharfs have ever been built where the line of works border on the East and North River. All the ground within the dotted black line from Whitehall to the North River is proposed to be reserved to the Crown for the purposes above mentioned."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 691–92.

On Jan. 14, 1777, Lord Germain, acknowledging receipt of this, wrote to Tryon that he should avail himself "of the present circumstances to secure, for His Maj^ty's^ use, such part of the destroyed Town, as in the opinion of the Engineers will be most proper for erecting a Citadel, or other works, as well to command the Town as for the defence of the harbour."—Ibid., VIII: 695. (The plan referred to in this correspondence is not known to the author of the present work. Cf. Pl 46-A,Vol. I.)

The "Roebuck" (Capt. Hammond) comes "down from her Station up the North-River."—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776. "

Jabez Fitch writes: "About Noon I went down to y^e^ Dutch Church to see Sarg^t^ Tracy, & y^e^ other Prisoners, whom I found in a very Pityfull Cituation, both on acc^t^ of Sickness & Accomodation, I then came home by way of y^e^ Fly market, & found our people Zealously Engaged at Card playing— 28



"In y^e^ Afternoon I went onto y^e^ Burying Ground & see four of y^e^ Prisoners Buryed in one Grave."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 109–10.

Tryon sends to Germain "Copies of the Addresses of the City and County of New York, and also of King's and Queen's County to the King's Commissioners, testifying their wishes to return under the King's peace and Government."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 692. See O 16. "

"The King's Commissioners for restoring Peace" issue a proclamation (for earlier declarations, see Jl 14 and S 19), promising pardon to those who will within 60 days subscribe to a declaration that they will desist from "treasonable Actings and Doings."—Original broadside in N. Y. P. L. See Pl. 47-b, Vol. V. 30

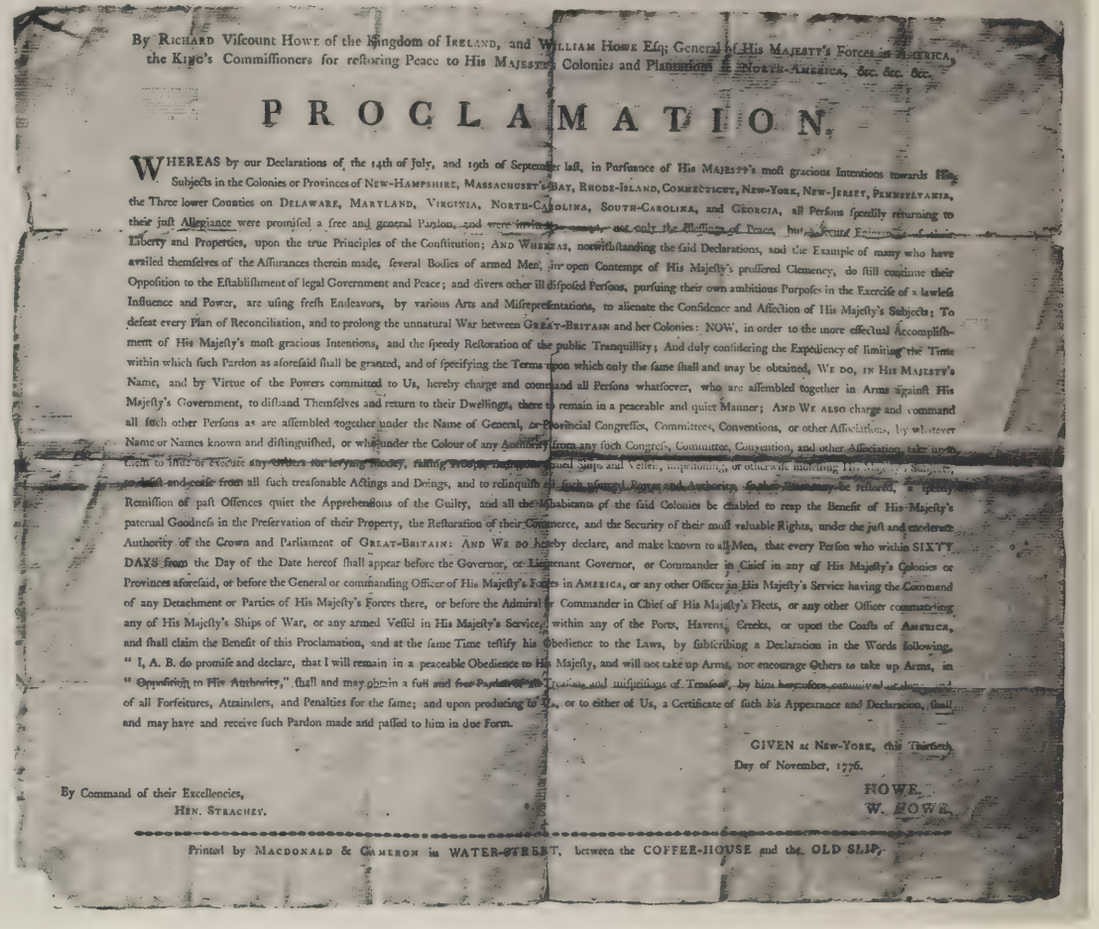
The "Camilla," with "a large Fleet of Victuallers under Convoy," arrives in the harbour.—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776. "

Near the last of November, Col. Ethan Allen, a prisoner in New York, was admitted to parole. On Jan. 22, 1777, he was quartered temporarily on Long Island, but later brought back to the provost jail. For his account of his experiences and investigations regarding the British treatment of prisoners, see A Narrative of Col. Ethan Allen's Captivity . . ., written by himself (Wal- "

By His EXCELLENCY

GEORGE WASHINGTON, Esquire,

General, and Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States of North-America.



WHEREAS a Bombardment and Attack upon the City of New-York, by our cruel, and inveterate Enemy, may be hourly expected: And as there are great Numbers of Women, Children, and infirm Persons, yet remaining in the City, whose Continuance will rather be prejudicial than advantageous to the Army, and their Persons exposed to great Danger and Hazard: I Do therefore recommend it to all such Persons, as they value their own Safety and Preservation, to remove with all Expedition, out of the said Town, at this critical Period,—trusting, that with the Blessing of Heaven upon the American Arms, they may soon return to it in perfect Security. And I do enjoin and require, all the Officers and Soldiers in the Army, under my Command, to forward and assist such Persons in their Compliance with this Recommendation.

GIVEN under my Hand, at Head-Quarters, New-York, August 17, 1776.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

NEW-YORK,—Printed by JOHN HOLT, in Water-Street.

A. WASHINGTON'S PROC. OF AUG. 17, 1776, ON EXPECTED BOMBARDMENT OF CITY. SEE P. 1001.

By RICHARD Viscount HOWE of the Kingdom of IRELAND, and WILLIAM HOWE Esq; General of His MAJESTY'S Forces in AMERICA, the KING'S Commissioners for restoring Peace to His MAJESTY'S Colonies and Plantations in NORTH-AMERICA, &c. &c. &c.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS by our Declarations of the 14th of July, and 19th of September last, in Pursuance of His MAJESTY'S most gracious Intentions towards His Subjects in the Colonies or Provinces of NEW-HAMPSHIRE, MASSACHUSET'S-BAY, RHODE-ISLAND, CONNECTICUT, NEW-YORK, NEW-JERSEY, PENNSYLVANIA, the Three lower Counties on DELAWARE, MARYLAND, VIRGINIA, NORTH-CAROLINA, SOUTH-CAROLINA, and GEORGIA, all Persons speedily returning to their just Allegiance were promised a free and general Pardon, and were invited to accept, not only the Blessings of Peace, but a Secure Enjoyment of their Liberty and Properties, upon the true Principles of the Constitution; AND WHEREAS, notwithstanding the said Declarations, and the Example of many who have availed themselves of the Assurances therein made, several Bodies of armed Men, in open Contempt of His Majesty's proffered Clemency, do still continue their Opposition to the Establishment of legal Government and Peace; and divers other ill disposed Persons, pursuing their own ambitious Purposes in the Exercise of a lawless Influence and Power, are using fresh Endeavors, by various Arts and Misrepresentations, to alienate the Confidence and Affection of His Majesty's Subjects; To defeat every Plan of Reconciliation, and to prolong the unnatural War between GREAT-BRITAIN and her Colonies: NOW, in order to the more effectual Accomplishment of His Majesty's most gracious Intentions, and the speedy Restoration of the public Tranquillity; And duly considering the Expediency of limiting the Time within which such Pardon as aforesaid shall be granted, and of specifying the Terms upon which only the same shall and may be obtained, WE DO, IN HIS MAJESTY'S Name, and by Virtue of the Powers committed to Us, hereby charge and command all Persons whatsoever, who are assembled together in Arms against His Majesty's Government, to disband Themselves and return to their Dwellings, there to remain in a peaceable and quiet Manner; AND WE ALSO charge and command all such other Persons as are assembled together under the Name of General, or Provincial Congresses, Committees, Conventions, or other Associations, by whatever Name or Names known and distinguished, or who under the Colour of any Authority from any such Congress, Committee, Convention, and other Association, take upon them to issue or execute any Orders for levying Money, raising Troops, [illegible] armed Ships and Vessels, imprisoning, or otherwise molesting His Majesty's Subjects, to desist and cease from all such treasonable Actings and Doings, and to relinquish all such usurped Powers and Authority, to the restored, a speedy Remission of past Offences quiet the Apprehensions of the Guilty, and all the Inhabitants of the said Colonies be enabled to reap the Benefit of His Majesty's paternal Goodness in the Preservation of their Property, the Restoration of their Commerce, and the Security of their most valuable Rights, under the just and moderate Authority of the Crown and Parliament of GREAT-BRITAIN: AND WE DO hereby declare, and make known to all Men, that every Person who within SIXTY DAYS from the Day of the Date hereof shall appear before the Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or Commander in Chief in any of His Majesty's Colonies or Provinces aforesaid, or before the General or commanding Officer of His Majesty's Forces in AMERICA, or any other Officer in His Majesty's Service having the Command of any Detachment or Parties of His Majesty's Forces there, or before the Admiral or Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Fleets, or any other Officer commanding any of His Majesty's Ships of War, or any armed Vessel in His Majesty's Service, within any of the Ports, Havens, Creeks, or upon the Coasts of AMERICA, and shall claim the Benefit of this Proclamation, and at the same Time testify his Obedience to the Laws, by subscribing a Declaration in the Words following, "I, A. B. do promise and declare, that I will remain in a peaceable Obedience to His Majesty, and will not take up Arms, nor encourage Others to take up Arms, in "Opposition to His Authority," shall and may obtain a full and free Pardon of all Treasons and misprisions of Treason, by him heretofore committed or done, and of all Forfeitures, Attainders, and Penalties for the same; and upon producing to Us, or to either of Us, a Certificate of such his Appearance and Declaration, shall and may have and receive such Pardon made and passed to him in due Form.

GIVEN at NEW-YORK, this Thirtieth Day of November, 1776.

HOWE.
W. HOWE.

By Command of their Excellencies,
HEN. STRACHEY.

Printed by MACDONALD & CAMERON in WATER-STREET, between the COFFEE-HOUSE and the OLD SLIP.

B. PROCLAMATION OF THE "KING'S COMMISSIONERS FOR RESTORING PEACE" PROMISING PARDON; DATED NOV. 30, 1776. SEE P. 1038.

1776 pole, N. H., 1807), 97 et seq., 123 et seq. See also S 16, and N 18, N30 1776.

Dec. British officers examine the Moravian meeting-house with a 1 view to occupying it, but "Bro. Shewkirk" appealed to Gen. Robertson, who said "he intended to have no place disturbed where service was kept." This house was "the only place where public service was held when there was none in the whole city."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 122–23.

" A loyalist writes to a correspondent in London: "as to our situation at New York, I must inform you that provisions are really cheap, considering the demand; and now the communication is opened, by the taking of Fort Washington, we shall be served much cheaper from the country; at present, most of our provisions are brought by water. As to lodging, you may rest assured, we are in no want of rooms. When the General went from hence, he left us 9000 men, which was on the 12th of October [q.v.], and on the 18th, the remainder of Hessians arrived, who had hardly time to breathe before they were sent on actual service. They have suffered very severely in the several actions, and particularly in that of Washington Fort [see N 16], where they lost three to one more than the English. . . . I am told they behaved like lyons when they took the out-works of Fort Washington; and had they then entered the Fort, they would most certainly have put every man to the sword that came in their way. General Howe, in compliment for their service on that day, called the Fort after their commanding officer [see Nov. 18]. . . . This month is the very worst in the whole year, at this place, on account of the strong north-westers, which continually blow during that time, and are so piercing, that there is no standing them. All the troops that could be spared from Boston, have been sent to reinforce General Washington, whose army, we hear, will soon be fewer in number, as the time of many of them is nearly expired, and they mean to return home."—London Packet, Ja 1–3, 1777.

" Gen. Anthony Wayne writes from Ticonderoga to Richard Peters, secretary of war: "An express just Arrived brings advice of Fort Washington being in the Hands of the Enemy [see N 16] and the Whole Garrison Consisting of 2000 men being killed or Prisoners; and that our people are on the Jersey side Retreating from post to post.

"Is the Genius of America fled our arms—is she Ashamed to Associate with her Degenerate sons; or does she Esteem them as Aliens, unworthy her protection: are not the Enemy as vulnerable as us—cuts not our Swords as keen—pierces not our Balls as deep as theirs—they do—why then this terror—why shrink as from a Gorgen head, whenever they appear Oh my Dear Sir I but too well know the Occation If you have any Regard for the Liberty of your Country—or the Honor of America; Imbody the Southern troops by themselves,—give more Attention to Manoeuvring—and less to working—and rest assured of Success."—From original letter in Emmet Coll. (No. 5509) in N. Y. P. L.

" Frequent fires in chimneys having occurred, Maj. Gen. Robertson appoints six inspectors of chimneys, who shall see that all chimneys that require it shall be swept and cleaned.—From recital in proclamation of Feb. 24, 1777 (q.v.).

2 "On last Monday Evening [Dec. 2], David Mathews, Esq; our worthy Mayor, arrived safe in Town, having effected an Escape, with great Danger and Difficulty, from Litchfield in Connecticut, where he had been confined since the 21st of July. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776. See J 22 and 25.

" "We hear, that Lord Cornwallis with the Detachment of the Army under his Command, is in Possession of Hackinsack, Newark, Elizabeth-Town, Woodbridge, and the Parts adjacent."—N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776.

"The Congress have summoned all Orders of Men to the Defence of Philadelphia by Hand-Bills, which they have distributed through the Colonies with all the Precipitancy of Fright and Consternation."—Ibid.

"Many of the Prisoners in this City, possibly as they profess from a Conviction of their Error and of the base Designs of the Congress, have made great Importunities to enter into the King's Service."—Ibid.

"So low is the Continental Paper Currency in Esteem since the late Successes of the King's Troops, that many of the Rebels themselves make every Shift to avoid taking it at any Rate."—Ibid.

" "The large and elegant corner house opposite to the Coffee House, well known by the name of the Old Coffee House; and also Dec.
a small house adjoining it in Dock-Street" are offered for lease.— 2
N. Y. Merc., D 2, 1776. The large house, and small dwelling adjoining (well shown on Pl. 69, Vol. I), were in 1765 conveyed by James Duane to Archibald Kennedy (Liber Deeds, XVIII: 315, Albany); the large house was at that time in the occupancy of the "Widow Brevan," as recited in that instrument. It was sold by John Kennedy (son and heir of Archibald Kennedy) and Robert Kennedy to James A. Stewart in 1801.—Ibid., XCIV: 532 (New York). This was the tavern from which Mrs. Ferrara moved in 1772 (q.v., Ap 27).

The following report is published in London: "Letters from 4
New-York mention, that Mr. Dickinson, a Member of Congress, and Author of the celebrated Farmers Letters, published in Favour of America about ten Years since, had arrived in that City, in Consequence of a Dispute with Mess. Hancock, Adams, and Franklin, and was preparing, by the Permission of General Howe, to embark for England upon Affairs of the utmost Importance."—St. James's Chron., D 3–5, 1776.

Gov. Tryon writes to Mayor Hicks from the "Duchess of Gor- " don," in the harbour, enclosing an address to the inhabitants of the colony of New York, notifying them that he has the king's permission to withdraw from his government, and recommending that they return to their allegiance to the British crown.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 835.

A British officer writes from New York: "No doubt you will be 5 extremely sorry to hear, that Mr. Washington had given us the slip at King's-bridge, and got safe to the mountains: his Aid de Camp, Mifflin, covered his retreat. . . . this is the second time they have escaped out of our clutches: . . .

"Most of the army have all along looked upon the enemy in a very contemptible light; and indeed their behaviour has, on most occasions, justified that opinion: . . .

"Washington has in many respects behaved like a gentleman and an officer; but his inhuman orders to burn New-York [see O 1, regarding this charge] will be a lasting blot in his escutcheon. The conflagration however did not produce all the bad effects the enemy intended; on the contrary, it served to purify the air, and I believe it was the means of preventing a plague; such was the filthy state of that quarter of the town when the rebels left it! . . .

"We have now got near 5000 prisoners in New-York, and many of them are such raggamuffins, as you never saw in your life: I cannot give you a better idea of them than by putting you in mind of Falstaff's recruits, or poor Tom in King Lear; and yet they had strained every nerve to cover their Nakedness, by dismantling all the beds, and tearing down the tapestry, hangings, and window-curtains; two deserters came over to us one day, who seemed at a distance to be Heralds; but on a nearer view we found they had got the story of Judith and Holofernes upon their backs, worked in old Dutch tapestry. The baggage which the Yankees left behind at King's-bridge (and which the Waldeckers were so eager to deck themselves with) would rival the choicest exhibitions of Ragfair: . . .

"To do them justice, they are tolerable good hands at fortification: their arms are (like the gravedigger's) a pick axe and a spade: these they handle with great dexterity: never were works better constructed or worse defended: in short, there is no doubt of our prevailing in the field, whatever we may do in the cabinet—there I fear we shall be out-witted. . . .

"I dare say that you (in London) hear many absurd and groundless reports about us; which is not to be wondered at, considering that we on the spot hear a number of lying stories about ourselves, and the enemy. A few days ago Hearsay drowned Gen. Washington in the North River; and Report shot Gen. Lee with a pistol, raised by his own hand, against his own head: however Mr. Lee, so far from being laid low, is now posted in West Chester, on a ridge of black mountains, to which the Yankies (from a spirit of contradiction, I suppose) have given the name of White Plains. Washington is at Trenton with about 5000 men; and Lord Cornwallis has got to Brunswick, on the high road to Philadelphia, and means to beat up the quarters of the General Congress."—London Packet, Ja 13–15, 1777.

Fitch writes: "a Battal^{n} of y^{e} Hessians came into Town, & " March'd by with vulgar Ceremony; At about 11 I observ'd a number of Hessian Troops on y^{e} plain above y^{e} Gen^{ll} Hospital; I Emediately went over to y^{e} Burying ground where I see their

1776 Battal[ns] March into y[e] City with very considerable Military D 5 Order."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 116–17.

" Kemble records: "General Howe went to Jersey. Remain at New York to attend the Drafting of the 14th. and 6th. Regiments, and superintend the Office."—Kemble's Jour., 102, where is contained a daily report of Howe's proceedings in New Jersey. See D 17.

" "The Regiment of Waldeckers embarked on board some Transports on Thursday last [Dec. 5] for Amboy. Many Horses, Waggons, &c. are also sent over thither from this City."—N. Y. Merc., D 9, 1776.

6 Maj. Gen. Robertson orders that "Soldiers are not to pull down House, Fence, or injure the Property of any Person whatever," under severe penalty.—Kemble Papers, N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 421. On Dec. 23, a private was under sentence of death and ordered to be executed for plundering.—Ibid., 428; and see 473, 623, 624–25.

7 In the orders for the day Gen. Howe mentions "the convalescent Barracks near Vauxhall."—Kemble Papers, N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 421.

9 Timothy Parker and other prisoners, on board the "Whitby Prison-Ship, New York," write to Gov. Trumbull; Parker says: "I make no doubt but your Honour long before this hath been apprised of our being prisoners in New-York. That our present situation is most wretched, your Honour need not doubt, which I likewise hope you will soon be assured of from men of undoubted veracity. There are more than two hundred and fifty prisoners of us on board this ship, (some of which are sick, and without the least assistance from physician, drug, or medicine,) all fed on two-thirds allowance of salt provisions, and all crowded promiscuously together, without distinction or respect to person, office, or colour, in the small room of a ship's between-decks; allowed only to walk the main deck from about sunrising till sunset, at which time we are ordered below deck . . .

"These, sir, with many other miserable circumstances too lengthy and tedious to enumerate, are the just portrait of our present situation. In short, sir, we have no prospect before our eyes but a kind of lingering inevitable death, unless we obtain a timely and seasonable release.

"From your Honour's well-known character of humanity and justice, we humbly hope that your authority will be exercised in procuring us an exchange."—5 Am. Arch., III: 1138–39.

" The following report is published in New York: "It is said by some Persons, who have lately seen the Rebel-Forces, that they are the most pitiable Collection of ragged, dispirited Mortals, that ever pretended to the Name of an Army; that not 3000 even of these are to be found between Amboy and Philadelphia; that, in this last Place, the Congress is openly execrated; and that, if the Weather continue fair but a little longer, there is no visible Impediment to his Majesty's Troops in compleating a March to the Capitol of Pennsylvania."—N. Y. Merc., D 9, 1776.

" An advertisement, dated London, Aug. 14, 1776, is published in New York, entitled "Proposals For Printing and Publishing, a Topographical Map of the Province of New-York, On Four Sheets and Half of grand Eagle Paper; Exhibiting all the Grants of Land made in that Province, with The Proprietors Names inserted on each Grant: Compiled from actual Surveys, By Claude Joseph Sauthier . . ."—N. Y. Merc., D 9, 1776. See descrip. of Pl. 46, I: 356.

13 Gen. Lee is captured at "Basken Ridge" by a division of the British army.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 127; Winsor, VI: 369, 403. Kemble states that the capture was made "in one White's House;" also that Lee was taken "by Colonel Harcourt with about 25 Light Horse; two of his Aid-de-Camps killed, Morris and Bird. He himself requested his Life Might be spared, and was brought to Penny Town on the 14th."—Kemble's Jour., 103. For a detailed account of Lee's capture, see that written by Capt. Bradford, and published by Johnston in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 146–47, from Stiles' MS. Diary, Yale College Library. See, further, Ja 1, 1777.

" Three British soldiers, tried by court martial at the city hall, are sentenced to suffer death for "Desertion, bearing Arms, and holding Correspondence with the Rebels." Two of these were pardoned on Dec. 23. Another is sentenced to receive 500 lashes for desertion, but some favourable circumstances secure his pardon also by the commander-in-chief.—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 424, 428.

Between this date and Jan. 1, 1777, the Jour. Provin. Cong. shows Dec.
no record of the proceedings of that body, at its meeting-place in 13
Fishkill. An editorial note says "A portion of the proceedings appears to be missing."

"We are this Day Inform'd y[t] Gen[ll] Howes Army are Retreeting 14 back from toward Philadelphia without much Suckcess y[t] way &c."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 126.

Wm. Darlington, a soldier in the American army, makes a state- 15
ment concerning the treatment of prisoners by the British. He swears that "the prisoners were very roughly used at Harlaem, on their way from Fort Washington to New-York; that at New-York eight hundred of them were stowed into a house called New-Bridewell [see Mr 27, 1775]; that it was a cold, open house, the windows not glazed; that on Monday they received their provisions; that they had not one mouthful from early on the unfortunate Saturday morning until then; that then, and so on afterwards their rations for three days, each individual, were one half pound of biscuit, half a pound of pork, a half pint of peas, half a gill of rice, and half an ounce of butter, the whole not more than enough for one good meal; that they were defrauded of this petty allowance two days' rations, each week; that they had no straw or hay to lie on; and no fuel but one cart-load, per week, for the eight hundred men; that at nine of the clock at evening, the Hessian guards would come in and put out the fires, and lay on the poor prisoners with heavy clubs for sitting round the fire; that the water was very bad, as well as their bread, beyond all comparison bad, except once, good biscuit, and once good baker's bread; that they began to die like rotten sheep, with cold, hunger, and dirt; that those prisoners who had any good wearing apparel, such as buckskin breeches or good coats, were necessitated to sell them, to purchase bread to keep them alive; that the enemy seemed to take a kind of infernal pleasure in their sufferings."—5 Am. Arch., III: 1234; Onderdonk, British Prisons & Prison Ships at N. Y. 1776–1783, 76.

Oliver Woodruff, another American taken prisoner at Fort Washington, after his relase made the following record of his confinement: "We were marched to New-York, and went into different prisons; 816 went into the New Bridewell, I among the rest. . . . On Thursday morning they brought us a little provision, which was the first morsel we got to eat or drink after eating our breakfast on Saturday morning. We never drew as much provision for three days' allowance as a man would eat at a common meal. I was there three months during that inclement season, and never saw any fire except what was in the lamps of the city. There was not a pane of glass in the windows, and nothing to keep out the cold except the iron grates."—Ibid., 37. See Ja. 4, 1777.

Maj. Cuyler returns to New York in a packet ship from England. "
"He left the Nation extremely pleased with General Howe's Successes on Long-Island, of which he was the welcome Messenger, having sailed from this Port on the 6th of September last, and made his Passage in 30 Days. The King has been pleased to confer the Order of the Bath, upon General Howe."—N. Y. Merc., D 16, 1776.

Ebenezer Hazard writes from Carpenter's Ferry, Fishkill, to 16
the N. Y. committee of safety that he has received "credible information that the records of the city of New-York were buried near King's Bridge." He thinks his informant was Col. Palfrey, the paymaster-general, and as nearly as he can recollect, Palfrey told him "the records were deposited in Colonel Cortlandt's family vault;" also that Palfrey "received the hint of it from Mrs. Van Cortlandt." Hazard suggests that "proper measures may be taken to secure those authentick documents, which may be of great service in a future day."—5 Am. Arch., III: 1248–49. "During the stirring years of the war, the New York city records were safely stored in the dark recesses of the Van Cortlandt family vault, a short distance above the mansion, Augustus Van Cortlandt being then city clerk."—15th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1910), 66.

"This Day is Published, And to be had at James Rivington's, "
Price One Shilling, The Battle of Brooklyn, a Farce of Two Acts: As it was performed on Long Island, On Tuesday the 27th Day of August, 1776, By the Representatives of the Tyrants of America, Assembled at Philadelphia" (6 lines of verse from Hudibras added).—N. Y. Merc., D 16, 1776. A reprint of this play, published in Edinburgh in 1777, a copy of which is in the N. Y. P. L., shows the following Dramatis Personae: The "Rebel Chiefs," Washington, Putnam, Sullivan, and Stirling; "Colonels" Lasher ("a Shoemaker of New-York"), Clark ("a Retailer of Rum in Connecticut"), and Remsen ("a Farmer of Newtown, Long-Island"); "Ebenezer

1776 Dec. 16 Snuffle, a New-England Parson, Chaplain to General Putnam;" "Joe King, Servant to Stirling;" "Noah, Servant to Sullivan;" "Skinner, a Thief, employed by Putnam;" "Lady Gates;" "Betty, her Servant;" "Officers and Soldiers." The scene is "Partly within the Rebel Lines at Brooklyn, and partly at Gwanas." As the play proceeds, these scenes are disclosed to be: "An Apartment at Brooklyn;" "a small house in a field;" "A Room at Brooklyn Ferry;" "Brooklyn Church;" "A Room in a house at Brooklyn;" "A Hill at Gwanas, about two miles from Brooklyn Lines, with an encampment on it;" "A Hill, with troops drawn up, under arms;" and "A Room at Brooklyn Ferry."

" "Several Ships and Vessels, 'tis said, are arrived at Sandy-Hook with Coals, &c. from Louisbourg."—N. Y. Merc., D 16, 1776.

17 Kemble records: "General Howe lay last night on his return to New York from Trentown, after having pushed Mr. Washington over the Delaware."—Kemble's Jour., 103; N. Y. Merc., D 23, 1776.

" "His Excellency the Governor came to Town on Tuesday [Dec. 17] from Long-Island, where he has been indefatigable in raising Provincial Forces for His Majesty's Service."—N. Y. Merc., D 23, 1776.

" Fitch records: "I went down to y^e^ Dutch Church to see y^e^ Prisoners but y^e^ Hessian Guard were grown so very Insolent y^t^ they wo'ld not suffer me to Talk with them through y^e^ Fence."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 130. On Dec. 18, he wrote: "I went down to y^e^ Dutch Church again, & visited y^e^ poor Prisoners, whom I found in a very miserable Condition, 4 of em lay dead in y^e^ Yard, & several others Dieing in y^e^ House . . . Indeed y^e^ whole of em appear Compleet Objects of Pity."—Ibid., page (unnumbered), after 130.

18 Franklin arrives at Paris.—Doniol, op. cit., II: 111–12.

" The situation of the tavern called "y^e^ Sign of y^e^ King of Prussia" is shown by a record of this date as "up the Bowery Lane."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), unnumbered page following 130.

20 A London news item reads: "Governor Tryon has assembled the Militia of several Counties in the Province of New-York, consisting of 13,000 Men, who have all chearfully sworn Allegiance to his Majesty."—St. James's Chron., D 19–21, 1776.

23 Franklin, Deane, and Lee, in Paris, inform the Count de Vergennes that they have been "empowered by the Congress of the United States of America to propose and negotiate a treaty of amity and commerce between France and the United States."—Wharton, Rev. Diplomatic Corresp. of the U. S., II: 239; Doniol, op. cit., II: 112. The French Alliance was concluded on Feb. 6, 1778 (q.v.).

" There is issued at Fishkill, and printed there this year by Samuel Loudon, An Address of the Convention of the Representatives of the State of New-York to their Constituents. It is an appeal to patriotism when the outlook is darkest. This edition is found at the N. Y. H. S. in a volume (III), lettered "Select Tracts." It was reprinted by Goddard of Baltimore in 1777.

" The news of the day in New York includes the following reports: "The Rebels are every where mouldering away like a Rope of Sand. With the most impudent Bravadoes, they have not yet had the Spirit to make any thing like a Stand in a single Encounter. The New-England People have neither Money nor Recruits; and the rest of the Colonies are nearly drained of their Resources. Ruin, therefore, and Destruction must be the Consequence to them of continuing the War any longer."

"Several Captures have been sent in by the Men of War in the Course of the last Week."—N. Y. Merc., D 23, 1776.

" According to an advertisement of Henry Ustick, who lives in "Smith's street," Potbaker's Hill is a place-name still in common use in New York.—N. Y. Merc., D 23, 1776.

24 "All the Men and Women arrived from Halifax belonging to Regiments quartered in Town are to be landed immediately.

"Those belonging to the Troops under Gen. Clinton's Command are to remain on Board till they can be embarked for Rhode Island."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 429.

26 Having crossed the Delaware with his troops, Washington surprises the Hessians at Trenton and completely routs them. About 50 are killed and over 900 taken prisoners.—Winsor, VI: 374–76. See also broadside in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet 5596); N. Y. Merc., D 30, 1776. Gov. Tryon said the American success gave him "more real chagrin, than any other circumstance this war; the moment was critical, and I believe the Rebel chiefs were conscious, if some stroke was not struck that would give life to their sinking cause, they should not raise another army. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 694. Dec. 26

27 Sir Wm. Erskine, at Prince's Bay, receives intelligence that the Hessians at Trenton "had been Surprised, attacked, Defeated & taken Prisoners."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

28 Two soldiers are hanged on a gallows "back of y^e^ Barracks, on y^e^ Burying Ground."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 143.

" Among orders for the day is the following: "Spruce Beer will be issued to the Troops at Mr. Horsfield's Brewery, near Maiden Lane, from 10 in the Morning to 4 in the Afternoon, at the Rate of 4 Shillings per Barrel of 30 Gallons."—Order-Book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 431–32.

29 General orders of the day: "All the Town Guards to report whether the Lamps are regularly lighted, and whether they burn all Night.

"An Officer and 12 Men to be on the King's Wharf, on the North River, at 10 o'Clock to-morrow morning, to escort a Number of Prisoners to Powles Hook, where they will be delivered over to an Officer of the 57th. Regiment."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 432.

30 "Many Rebel Colonels, Majors, Captains, &c. have come in and accepted the Benefit of the late Proclamation. Many others, who have been of Trades, and were taken Prisoners, have solicited Employment in this City."—N. Y. Merc., D 30, 1776.

31 "It is now Reported in this City, y^t^ y^e^ Americans have an Army of Sixty thousand Men in y^e^ Jerseys, alth'o it was lately say'd y^t^ they had all thrown down their Arms, & y^t^ Gen^ll^ Washington had fled to Lancaster, to Escape y^e^ Fury & Rapid Progress of y^e^ Kings Troops."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.), 147.

" At the close of the campaign this year, there were about 10,000 prisoners, soldiers and sailors, within the British lines at New York.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 351. See also the British account of the campaign in and around New York, in Ann. Reg. (1776), *167–*181.

" At the close of this year, Lieut. Col. Stephen Kemble makes the following critical entry in his journal, on the "Conduct of Commanders in Chief of Armies, &c.:"—"The delay of our Army under General Howe at New York Island, for some days, unnecessary. The Landing at Froggs Neck [see O 12], from whence no Issue but by a Narrow Causeway, not to be passed but with difficulty, without an Enemy to oppose—why not move to the White Plains immediately, and Attack the Rebels before their Works were completead?

"After Fort Washington was taken [see N 16], why not send a Detachment of the Army to Brunswick to cut off Mr. Washington's Retreat, while Lord Cornwallis was pursuing him to Newark, &c.? General Clinton's Troops would have answered that purpose Effectually. Why not pursue Washington from Brunswick with more Spirit?—his Cannon and Baggage must have fallen into our hands. Provisions might have been sent to Brunswick for all these Services by Water, and no delay in the proceedings of the Troops.

"Why Post so small Detachments as to be in danger of Insult, as happened in Rall's Affair, upon the Frontiers of your Line of Communication, or why put Hessians at the advanced Posts, particularly the Man at Trentown, who was Noisy, but not sullen, unacquainted with the Language, and a Drunkard?"—Kemble's Jour., 104–5.

1777

— In this year, the first edition of The Atlantic Neptune appeared; this is the best and most complete hydrographic work regarding the Western Atlantic coast published up to modern times; it was begun in 1763 (q.v.), and was published in two large atlas folios by Joseph F. W. Des Barres. For description, see Pls. 44, 45-a, I: 346–53; Winsor, VII: 183. The collection of plates, both views and charts, from this magnificent work in the author's possession, is the most complete known.

— There was published this year in London an 8vo volume of 81 pages, now very scarce, entitled A Letter from an Officer at New-York to a Friend in London, which, while lacking definite particulars as to dates, localities, etc., gives a view of the conditions of life in New York at this period of the British occupation. The letter was in part, as follows:

"Sir,

"I can with great pleasure inform you, that our situation is 1777 — very different to what it was last winter, as we abound in every necessary that soldiers can desire; and as to the prisoners, the sick, and the wounded, our officers are as vigilant in seeing them carefully supplied, as they are in seeing order and discipline punctually executed: from the good example of our land and sea commanders, there is such harmony between every rank of each, that we all live like brothers; and if there be the least shadow of envy, it is only against those gallant officers and soldiers whose happy stations in battle gave them the opportunity of acquiring so great a share of that honour which we all so eagerly pursue. Many of our soldiers earnestly wish for a personal knowledge of General Lee, to avoid either killing or wounding him, that a native of Britain, who, from disappointed ambition, has planted the point against the power that first put a sword into his hand, and paid for his military education, may be prepared for his grave without the least impression of any martial instrument.

"We begin now severely to want that part of the city which these unhappy destroyers of their country have consumed; as several good families, whom their army have ruined, come daily shivering in for our protection, and meet with such a reception, according to their stations, as can only be obtained from clemency, guided by order and œconomy. Many of the poor ladies have scarce a petticoat to cover them, being stripped of furniture, apparel, and every thing that could make a Yankee soldier either a shirt or a pair of breeches. Indeed, the poor fellows are in such a deplorable state that a good-natured lady, who has two petticoats, would rather give one for a covering, than look at a fellow-creature in such a naked condition.

"Your worthy friend, the Rev. Mr. ——, our Chaplain, frequently expatiates on the happy state that this country so lately enjoyed, and the present scenes of misery to which these people have been urged to bring so immediately on themselves and families. He gives us several instances from history of the dreadful examples that deluded nations have made of such patriots as Gen. Lee, and points out the present state of their own Clergy, who before were almost implicit[l]y obeyed; but, after breathing the spirit of rebellion on the people, attending their camps to keep alive the flame which they kindled, and spending their lungs and their fortunes to support the spirit of their cause, they now find the sad effects of instructing the people to be disobediant, and want the power they opposed to protect them; for, in such scenes of disorder and rapine, but little regard is paid to either morality or religion; and now, except they can plunder their share, swig rum, and bear a firelock, they are deemed a useless order amongst them. . . .

". . . The soldiers, he tells us, calls the Americans worse than deserters; for they have not only revolted, but turned our own arms against us; and such zeal and spirit runs through the whole regiment, that, in his opinion, the best plantation on the continent could not tempt a man to desert. Just after dinner we had three Yankee deserters brought to us; and, lucky for the poor fellows, we had fragments left sufficient to fill their hungry bellies; and, being almost naked, we bought cloaths for them of some old women, who make a trade of stripping the dead soldiers.—They confirmed the accounts we frequently receive of the distress of the rebel army, and that several of their regiments have petitioned the Honourable Congress for a quantity of tar and feathers sufficient to cloath them; the poor men beg only for stuff, being well skilled themselves at putting the materials together, and have at present amongst them several of the artificers who made the first pattern of this new-fashioned garment, which was undoubtedly designed by the High and Mighty Congress as a robe for instituting a new American Order of Knighthood; and, to shew their regard to their Mother Country, conferred the first honour on his—by proxy, in tarring and pluming his officer at Boston; and, to dignify the installation, bound the substituted Knight on horseback, with his face to the tail, dragging him through multitudes of applauding spectators, whilst, at intervals, Imperial Tea was copiously poured down his throat, to the health of the King and the Family Royal.

"In the news-papers which are transmitted to us, we frequently read of the distressed state to which we have reduced the men; but no more mention is made of the women and children, than if they were insensible of misery, and no part of the human species, who, in this case, are the only real objects of compassion, being reduced to a wretched state by the imprudence of their husbands, who are bound by the laws of God and Nature to protect them. The country round being now gleaned, such swarms of distressed women and children flock to their camp as are shocking to behold; and wherever we see a soldier's wife with two or three children, we are sure to behold one half naked skeleton; for from that maternal tenderness which is natural to the sex, what nutriment and rags they can collect must go to preserve their infants, whilst these patriotic heroes, who are fighting for posterity, (being now pinched themselves) appear to have as much regard to the future existence of their children, as they had the moment they begot them; and the same tenderness for their wives as the fellow had who always declared he loved her better than himself, till a strong appetite convinced her to the contrary, by his eating up all the morsel she had provided for their dinner."—Transcribed from a copy of the book in the John Carter Brown Library, Providence. There is another copy in the Boston Athenaeum. 1777 —

As early as 1777, Gouverneur Morris promulgated his belief in the practicability of connecting, by inland navigation, the Great Lakes with the Hudson River. He has been given credit for originating the idea, and projecting the plan, of the Erie Canal. For an account of his belief in its possibility, as expressed in later years and his services in effecting it, see Sparks's Life of Gouverneur Morris, I: 495 et seq. —

Although the New York convention enacted a naturalization law which virtually excluded Catholics from citizenship, religious toleration gained rapidly in public opinion, and Catholics began to feel free in the public practice of their religion.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1450. —

In this year, or perhaps a little later, Chelsea House was built on the site of the earlier residence of Capt. Thomas Clarke.—See description by C. C. Moore, LL.D., in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 536; cf. Liber Wills, XXXI: 191. This house was demolished in 1854.—See Man. Com. Coun., op. cit. See 1750; L. M. R. K., III: 949. —

Livingston's sugar-house, the Brick Meeting-house, the North Dutch Church, and the Protestant Church (in Pine Street) were used by the British as prisons for Americans. The Scotch Presbyterian Church (in Cedar St.) was occupied as a hospital for Hessian soldiers, and the Middle Dutch Church as a riding-school for their cavalry.—Thorburn, Reminiscences (1845), 166–78, 170. This sugar-house, located on the south side of Liberty St., adjoining the Dutch Church graveyard on the east, was apparently the only sugar-house so used.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 63. —

At this time, the street on which the Fly Market stood (the present Maiden Lane) was referred to in advertisements as "Fly Market" or "Fly Market Street." For examples, see De Voe, Market Book, 170–71. —

As early as this year, John Ramage, a miniature painter, was established in William St., where he painted "all the military heroes or beaux of the garrison, and all the belles of the place." On Oct. 3, 1789 (q.v.), Washington sat for his portrait by Ramage.—Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 267–68 and footnotes. —

As early as 1777, "the markets were raised eight hundred per. cent for the necessaries of life;" and the landlords, "from the demand for houses, raised their rents on an average at four times the sum such houses had rented for previous to the rebellion."—Tomlinson Papers (MS.). in Merc. Lib. Assn., cited by H. B. Dawson in his report on the N. Y. financial records of the Revolution, printed in Proc. Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 213. —

"The Matricula of King's College closes with a note of the admission, in 1777, of William Walton and James De Lancey Walton. It appears, therefore, that some instruction continued to be given. When the College building became a military hospital [see Ap 6, 1776], Mr. Leonard Lispenard provided a house for the President, tutors, and students of the College [see Je 2, 1777], and it was doubtless here that the College exercises, so long as they continued, were given. Mr. Moore lived in this house, as President ad interim, during a part of the war."—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 51, citing "Minutes of the Trustees of Columbia College, March 28, 1788." "The Corporation was kept alive by occasional meetings of the Governors. The evidences of this are not numerous, but they would seem to be sufficient."—Ibid., 51. See O 24, 1776. —

The item from the British Admiralty Records, cited in the description of Pl. 50, I: 364, as of this date, has been entered in the Chronology under its exact date, April 17, 1776 (q.v.). —

Lord Cornwallis goes in the armed schooner "Alert" from New York to Amboy.—Montresor's Jour., 420. Montresor says that the "Alert," on its return, on Jan. 14 (ibid.), brought Gen. Lee a pri- Jan. 1

1777 Jan. 1 soner to New York; but a letter written from New York on Jan. 2, states: "Yesterday [Jan. 1] Gen. Lee and Col. Robert Livinstone were brought to town from the Jerseys, and confined in the Old City Hall."—London Packet, F 19–21, 1777. For further account of the singular diversity of information, given by contemporary authorities, regarding the time when Lee was brought to New York, see Ja 8.

"Rooms were fitted up for his reception in the City Hall where he was treated with consideration and humanity. He was allowed to converse freely with the officers in whose custody he was placed. . . . The two officers on guard always dined with him and he had leave to invite any other person he pleased."—Moore, Treason of Maj.-Gen. Charles Lee (N. Y., 1860), 72.

" Lieut. Oliver Babcock records in his diary: "Was admitted in to Both houses of Assembly [evidently of Connecticut], and Related the sufferings of my poor fellow prisoners at New York."—Battle of Harlem H'ts, 201. There were at this time about 400 "Rebel" officers and 5,000 soldiers imprisoned within the British lines at New York.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 176, 197, 218, 220.

3 Having drawn off from Cornwallis's powerful army during the night, Washington early this morning intercepts the British reinforcements at Princeton and decisively defeats them.—Winsor, VI: 377–79. Cf. British account of this important battle, in N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1777.

4 "Prisoners went into the Sugar House. N. Murray says 800 men were in Bridewell. The doctor gave poison powders to prisoners, who soon died."—Onderdonk, Rev. Incidents of Suffolk and Kings Co., 218, citing Trumbull Papers, IX: 203.

5 Washington writes to Heath: "The enemy are in great consternation; and as the panic affords us a favorable opportunity to drive them out of the Jerseys, it has been determined in council, that you should move down towards New York with a considerable force, as if you had a design upon the city. That being an object of great importance, the enemy will be reduced to the necessity of withdrawing a considerable part of their force from the Jerseys, if not the whole, to secure the city."—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), V: 153. For Gen. Howe's distribution of the army on Manhattan Island, see Ja 8; and for this assignment of regiments to alarm posts, see Ja 26.

6 The news is published in New York that "several of the New England Rebels, quartered in Philadelphia, have expressed their Intentions of setting that City on Fire." The article continues: "The Inhabitants of this City in general are so exasperated against all Incendiaries that it would be impossible an Offender of this Sort should escape from the Flames he might kindle, if detected in the Crime! And the strictest Vigilance is now observed to prevent any Attempts from Persons lurking in the Streets at Night."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1777.

" "Great Numbers have flocked in this Week to receive the Benefit of the Proclamation [see N 13, 1776], and among them, many Officers who were lately in the Rebel Service."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1777.

" "The Theatre in this City having been Some Time in Preparation, is intended to be opened in a few Days, for the charitable Purpose of relieving the Widows and Orphans of Sailors and Soldiers who have fallen in Support of the Constitutional Rights of Great-Britain in America. It is requested that such Gentlemen of the Navy and Army, whose Talents and Inclinations induce them to assist in so laudable an Undertaking, be pleased to send their Names, (directed to T. C.) to the Printer of this Paper before Tuesday Night next."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1777. The theatre was opened on Jan. 25 (q.v.).

7 Francis Lewis writes to the New York committee of safety: "I lately wrote you by an Express, wherein I informed you that the State of New York was not represented in Congress, nor indeed has it been, for several months past, except at some small intervals, —I am at present the only Delegate for New York at this place, and the Members are continually urging me to request you would compleat your representation in Congress, as business is now multiplying upon their hands, and so many members detached upon Committees &c that the business in Congress is retarded, add to this that our state sometimes suffers for the want of a Vote in Congress which I beg you would speedily remmedy."—From original letter in Emmet Coll. (No. 1577) in N. Y. P. L.

8 Kemble records the following "Distribution of the Army under the Command of Gen. Sir William Howe, 8th. Jan. 1777:"

		Rank & File	Total
"With the Commander-in-Chief [in New Jersey]	British Artillery	380
	do Cavalry	710
	do Infantry	8,361
	Hessian do	3,300
	Anspach do	1,043	13,799
"New York Island	British Artillery	20
	do Infantry	1,513
	Hessian do	1,778	3,311
"Staten Island	British Artillery	11
	do Infantry	515
	Waldeck do	330	856
"Paulus Hook	British Infantry	360	360
	British Artillery	71
	do Infantry	1,064
	do Hessian	1,496	2,631
"N.B. Provincials at King's Bridge			2,000
	Total Army		22,957

"Do. Wemy's Battn. Rangers, with the Commander-in-Chief not included, 280 R. & File, makes the Army full 14,000 Effective Men."—Kemble's Jour., 107.

" A New Yorker, writing to a correspondent in London, says: "You have heard no doubt before now of the capture of General Lee [see D 13, 1776], . . . which I think is likely to turn out one of the luckiest circumstances of the war. . . . He was brought here a few days ago [see Jan. 1]; I have seen him twice; . . . the current report is, that he has pledged himself, on condition of a pardon, to give General Howe such intelligence, as must effectually put an end to the rebellion in the spring; as well as cut up the views of the French, who had it in very serious contemplation to give the Americans every assistance.

"I do not give this last part as authentic, it is the report, and it is generally believed; he is well guarded, and nobody permitted to see him but officially."—London Packet, Mr 3–5, 1777.

Although it is clearly shown that Gen. Lee was brought to New York from Brunswick as early as Jan. 1 (q.v.), a news item, published in this city on Jan. 20, stated that he was brought here "On Monday last" (Jan. 13), "and put into the Custody of a strong Guard."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1777. Montresor recorded that he was brought in the "Alert" from Amboy on the 14th.—Montresor's Jour., 420. Another report stated that he was brought to New York on Jan. 16, and placed under guard in a small house "at the bottom of King Street."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), Mr 7, 1777. A letter from New York, published in London early in April (London Packet, Ap 7–9, 1777), indicates that, about the first of March, Lee was confined in "the New Gaol." See, further, Mr 29.

Gen. Howe orders that "No Soldier is on any account, except on duty, to be out of his Barracks after 8 o'Clock at Night;" and that "The owners of the Public Houses having Sailors or Soldiers in their Houses after 8 o'Clock will be committed to the Provost, and the furniture of their houses forfeited. The Lights and Fires are to be put out in all the Barracks and Public Houses at 9 at Night."—From Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 435. The order is published by the town major, Wm. Bamford.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 10, 1777. Jan. 8 10

" Maj.-Gen. James Robertson, in command at New York, issues an order which states that, as "many Complaints are made by the Inhabitants that Bread is become extravagantly high, either from the Exaction of Bakers or Forestallers, it is become necessary to renew a Mode that was formerly followed in this Place, of fixing an Assize. The Price of the best Flour being now Thirty Shillings the Hundred, and that of fuel and Labour considerably increased, I find that it is the Opinion of the most respectable Inhabitants that a Loaf of Bread of the finest Flour, weighing Three Pounds Four Ounces, should be sold for Fourteen Coppers, and in the same Pro-

1777 Jan. 10 portion for Loaves of a lesser Weight." He therefore orders that "Any Person who exacts more will be taken into Custody, and the Bread in their Possession will be given to the Poor."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 13, 1777. It is reported in Philadelphia that the people in New York are "greatly distressed. Every article of provision is scarce and dear . . . the loaf which formerly sold for 8 coppers sells for 24. No fresh butter to be had, only some Irish butter, very strong, at 3 s. per lb. oak wood at 5 l. per cord."—Penn Gaz. (Phila.), F 19, 1777.

" "Wrote to Majr Erskine at N. York & sent him my Book of Sketches, to take care of for me."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Jl 12, 1776.

13 A proclamation by Maj.-Gen. Robertson states that "there is Ground to believe that the Rebels, not satisfied with the Destruction of Part of the City, entertain Designs of burning the Rest: And it is thought that a Watch to inspect all the Parts of the City to apprehend Incendiaries, and to stifle Fires before they rise to a dangerous Height, might be a necessary and proper Means to prevent such a Calamity." He directs that all persons must "turn out to watch when called for." Any who refuse to protect the city will be deemed "unworthy to inhabit it." He names persons to summon and superintend the watch in each ward. The Out Ward is to furnish 14 men each night, and the Montgomerie Ward and North Ward 15 men each, who are to meet "at the Guard Room near Cuyler's Sugar House." The West Ward is to furnish 6 men each night, the South Ward 4, the Dock Ward 10, and the East Ward 16, who are to meet "at the Guard House in Hanover-Square."—N. Y. Mercury, Ja. 13, 1777; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 634–35. The notice was printed and published as a bulletin on Jan. 27.—See broadside of that date in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., 10989).

" "This night (Monday)," Montresor records, "my House and out-houses, Barns and offices on Montrésor's Island, formerly called Belle Isle, and afterwards Talbot's Island, near Harlem, and 8 miles from New York, was burnt by the Rebels."—Montresor's Jour., 126. He acquired this island, Nov. 7, 1772 (q. v.). This was the present Randall's Island (Man. Com. Coun., 1855, p. 495), which was confiscated and granted to Thomas Delavall, the collector and receiver-general of customs, Feb. 3, 1668 (q. v.), after the English took the province. Cf. Jl 16, 1637.

" As appears by an advertisement for brooms, the barrack-master's office is at No. 214 Queen St.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 13, 1777.

" James Hallet, the "coachmaker in Broadway," offers a reward for the return of "A Chaise" which was "taken from the Ferry near the bear market," and is thus described: ". . . the body-carriage is painted cream colour, with flower pots on each side and back, in the latter is a cypher, O. T., steel springs, the inside, light coloured cloth."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 13, 1777. For the beginning of Hallet's business, see Ja 22, 1750.

14 Germain writes from Whitehall to Gen. Howe: "When I first read your requisition of a reinforcement of 15,000 rank and file, I must own to you I was really alarmed, because I could not see the least chance of my being able to supply you with the Hanoverians, or even with Russians in time. As soon, however, as I found from your returns that your army, if reinforced with 4,000 more Germans, (which I trust will be procured for you) 800 additional Hessian chasseurs, and about 1,800 recruits for the British, and about 1,200 for the Hessian troops under your command, will consist of very nearly 35,000 rank and file, I was satisfied that you would have an army equal to your wishes, especially when I considered that the enemy must be greatly weakened and depressed by your late successes, and that there was room to hope, that you would not find it difficult to embody what number of Provincials you may think proper, for particular parts of the service; in which expectation, cloth for 3,000 additional suits, and camp equipage for 8,000, are ordered, and will be sent to you. And here I must afford you the satisfaction of knowing, that whatever degree of support the rebels may have been taught to expect from foreign powers, I have great reason to believe, that Dr. Franklin will not be able to procure them any open assistance."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 382–83.

" A New Yorker writes to a friend in Leeds: "We are obliged to keep a strict Watch on board our Ships and on the Wharfs, to prevent any Rebels that may be among us from setting the Town or the Shipping on Fire. The Churches here are full of American Prisoners, who, I am informed, die so fast, that 15 or 20 of them are buried at a time."—St. James's Chron., Mr 11–13, 1777.

Jan. 15 Col. Stewart, an American officer, informs Wm. Smith "That 5 Days ago 6000 Militia marched from North Castle to attack New York under Generals Heath and McDougal, who I suppose if they got there will burn the Town." Smith says of this: "I doubt the Truth of the Militia-Expedition to New York, not from the Improbability of their Success, but their Want of Covers and a Bridge across Harlem Creek. Nor do I believe they have mustered 6000 Men. . . .

"If this Project is real and the Town should be plundered Mr Howe may be obliged to retire to Staten Island and Long Island from Amboy and regret the Cantonment of his Army in Jersey in small Detachments remote from each other."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. See Ja 17.

" Peter Dobbyn, master of a transport at New York, says in a letter to a friend in Hull: "The Rebels lurk about on the Roads like so many Highwaymen, and have taken the Lives of several innocent People or what they could rob them of. We had 4 or 5000 of them Prisoners on board our Ships, but they had such bad Distempers among them, that each Ship buried ten or twelve of them a Day. Gen. Howe about a Week ago gave all that were able to walk their Liberty, after taking the Oath not to take up Arms against his Majesty."—St. James's Chron., Mr 13–15, 1777.

16 A New York letter states: "General Howe, out of Humanity, had ordered all the Rebel Prisoners to be lodged in the most roomy Buildings in the Town, and allowed them to want for no Necessaries; yet we were alarmed, some Time ago, with a mortal Fever, which broke out among them. It first seised the Prisoners taken on Long-Island; Compassion for these misled People prevailed on the General to dismiss those that remained of the common Men."—St. James's Chron., Mr 11–13, 1777.

" The first Fishkill issue of Samuel Loudon's Packet is undoubtedly of this date (Vol. I, No. 36); although the earliest issue found is that of Feb. 6, 1777 (No. 39), which bears the title The New-York Packet, and the American Advertiser. The last issue in New York City was that of Aug. 29, 1776 (q. v.). "During the six years the paper was printed at Fishkill, the title was occasionally shortened to 'The New-York Packet,' as scarcity of paper stock reduced the size of the sheet."—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 235. See, further, Ag 28, 1783.

" James Robertson establishes a semi-weekly newspaper in New York entitled The Royal American Gazette.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 489. See Ja 15, 1778.

17 Gen. Robertson issues a proclamation stating that "by a former Proclamation, the Inhabitants then in New-York, and all Such as might afterwards come into the Place, were required to enter their own and Families Names at my Office, and it was directed, that every Householder should give Notice there, of the Arrival of any Stranger he admitted into his House." As "it is suspected there are now many Persons in Town who have not complied with this Regulation, that they who from Ignorance and Want of Attention may not be confounded with those who lurk about the Town with Views of destroying it, the Notice is repeated; and all Persons who do not comply with the Regulation before Tuesday Morning, will be considered as bad Subjects and bad Citizens."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1777; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 636.

" Smith records in his diary under this date: "Colo L[ivingston] shewed me a Letter from his Son informing him that the Militia destined to N Y [see Ja 15] were at the lower Yonkers and that they learnt that there were 3000 Soldiers in Town—He considers that Expedition therefore as at an End. . . . He says the Project was divulged all thro' N England weeks ago and that the Congress is forever destitute of Intelligence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

18 The queen's birthday is celebrated. "Guns, as usual, were fired at Fort George. His Majesty's Commissioners gave a grand Entertainment to the Governors and Officers of Distinction, both British and Hessian; and in the Evening a very splendid Exhibition of Fire Works, under the Direction of Col. Montressor, was played off at Whitehall, upon the Occasion.

"In Honor of the Day, the General [Sir Wm. Howe] was invested with the most honorable Order of the Bath, by [his brother] Lord Howe, assisted by General de Heister, in the Presence of a numerous Assembly.

"Sir William Howe gave an elegant Ball and Supper in the Evening. The Ball was opened by Miss Clark, and His Excellency Governor Tryon."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1776; Hist. of the Orders of 1777 Knighthood, by Nicholas Harris Nicolas (London, 1842), III: 92.

Jan. See also O 28, 1761.

18 Jabez Fitch gives an account of Gen. Howe's entertainment, and adds: "Query, whether it would not have been more Honourable to y^e^ British Army, to have had (at least) part of this Extraordinary Expence, bestow'd on y^e^ poor Prisoners who have perished for want, in such vast numbers."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.). This was not the actual anniversary of the queen's birth. Baroness Riedesel explains that the queen's birthday "really comes in summer, but as the kings birthday also comes in that season [June 4, q.v.], is celebrated in winter, to give more custom to the trades people, as every one upon those days appears at court in gala-dress."—Riedesel, Letters & Jour. relating to the War of the Am. Rev., 172.

" Robertson writes: "about 3,000 Militia under Gen^l^ Worster summoned F^t^ Independence—& being denied they Cannonaded it briskly for some time but were obliged to retire."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). A newspaper account states that a "large Body of Rebels" have made an "Attack upon Fort Independence, beyond Kingsbridge," and were bravely repulsed. "The Fort was defended by a small Party of Hessians and of Col. Rogers's Rangers."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1777. Kemble's record adds: ". . . the Rebels retired as far as Cortland's house, which they have plundered, and where they remained on the 22d."—Kemble's Jour., 108.

" "We . . . Observed a very considerable Cannonade this Forenoon, up toward Fort Washington; When I came home, I was Inform'd y^t^ y^e^ Amaricans had taken Fort Independence, but soon after this, M^r^ Gerol . . . came in, & Inform'd us y^t^ y^e^ Kings Troops had taken Six hundred Prisoners & y^t^ they were going to take six thousand more between then & Night; But whether there be not some Mistake in Counting those Prisoners, is a Question."—Fitch Diary (MS.), 167.

20 Howe writes to Germain from New York: "I do not now see a prospect of terminating the war, but by a general action, and I am aware of the difficulties in our way to obtain it, as the enemy moves with so much more celerity, than we possibly can. Nor can we hazard a march at this unfavourable season, with any hopes of making a stroke upon the enemy, in his present situation, that might turn the scale in our favour.

"Concluding upon the certainty of another campaign, am confident I need not press your Lordship, to send us every reinforcement of troops for immediate service, that can be procured, 20,000 men would by no means exceed our wants, yet 15,000 will give us a superiority, that I should hope, may be materially experienced in the course of the campaign. Philadelphia being now the principal object, by the greater number, we should be enabled to detach a corps to enter the Delaware by sea, and the main body to penetrate into Pensilvania, by way of Jersey: there would also in that case be a sufficient corps to act from Rhode Island. On the other hand, if the reinforcements are small, the operations will be much curtailed; or if none should arrive, we shall be confined to act in one body in Jersey, leaving only a small corps at Rhode Island, and another of sufficient force for the defence of this island and its dependencies."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 377–78.

" Mrs. Hannah White, wife of a sergeant in the regiment commanded by Gen. McDougall, reported to Governor Trumbull, of Connecticut, on Jan. 25, that, when she left New York on the 20th, "the college, Bridewell New goal, Baptist meeting, and the tavern lately occupied by M^r^ Dela Montaigne, and several other houses" were "full of sick and wounded of the enemy," that the Hessians were "very sickly and discontented;" that the enemy obliged the citizens to watch at night, but would not trust many of them with arms," clubs being given to those suspected.—Conn. Gaz. (New London), Mr 7, 1777. See also Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 788.

" "The Ships of War are daily sending in Prizes. There is an immense Number at present in this Harbour, and Some of considerable Value. Several of them are laden with Ammunition and military Stores."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1777.

" "Major French, who lately escaped out of Prison in Connecticut, where he has been treated with great Severity, is Safely arrived in Town."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1777. The escape was from Hartford. He left baggage of value behind; and a companion, who was captured, was then chained "to the Floor of Hartford goal, both by his Hands and Legs." The published comment in New York regarding this was: "Such is the Equity and Humanity of these Pretenders to Moderation and Liberty!"—Ibid., Ja 27, 1777.

Gen. Howe orders: "As the Fire Wards have the entire management of extinguishing the fires, it is particularly desired that no Officer Interfere with them in the Execution of that duty, unless called upon by Express Orders for that Purpose. Jan. 23

"The Fire Buckets belonging to the Guns that have been lent to extinguish the late Fire, are to be Immediately returned to Capt. Bowmaster, at his Lodgings in Dock Street."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 439. See Ja 26.

On the evening of this day, "the little Theatre in John-street" is opened with "the celebrated Burlisque Entertainment of Tom Thumb, written by the late Mr. Fielding, to ridicule the Bathos of several dramatic Pieces that at his Time to the disgrace of the British Stage, had engrossed both the London Theatres. The Characters were performed by Gentlemen of the Navy and Army; the Spirit with which this favourite Piece was supported by the Performers, prove their Taste and strong Conception of the Humour. Saturday's Performance convince us that a good Education and Knowledge of polite Life, are essentially necessary to form a good Actor. The Play was introduced by a Prologue written and spoken by Captain Stanly; we have great Pleasure in applauding this first Effort of his infant Muse, as replete with true poetic Genius. The Scenes painted by Captain De Lancey has great Merit, and would not disgrace a Theatre, tho' under the Management of a Garrick. The House was crouded with Company, and the Ladies made a brilliant appearance."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 27, 1777. 25
The name "Theatre Royal" begins to be applied (ibid., F 3, 1777), although performances during the season are invariably advertised as "At the Theatre in John's Street."—Ibid., F 10, 1777. This first season of theatrical performances by British officers lasted until May 29, 1777.—Seilhamer, Hist. of Am. Theatre, II: 22; N. Y. Merc., My 26, 1777. In 1778, under the patronage of Sir Henry Clinton, the performances were continued (see Ja 3, 1778).

Gen. Howe assigns the various regiments to "Alarm Posts," as follows: "4th. Regiment, Queen's Street, their Left near the Tea Water Pump. 26

"15th. Regiment, Lower end of Broadway to face Head Quarters, their left upon the General's Guard.

"27th. Regiment, The upper part of Broad Way, to face St. Paul's.

"45th. Regiment, To face the North River, with their Right near the College.

"17th. Light Dragoons, Mounted on the Common, facing the Jail."

The "Hessian Troops" are placed as follows: "Hereditary Prince's Regiment, In the Rear of the Barrack, facing outward.

"Mirbach's, To form in Queen's Street, their Right near Cherry Street, their Left extending towards Burling Slip.

"Donop's, Their right to the New Barrack.

"Rall's, To form in the rear of the Barracks on the left of the Hereditary Prince's Regiment.

"The Artillery will receive their Alarm Posts from Gen. Cleveland.

"Upon an alarm of Fire, the Troops form upon their Respective Parades, and wait for further Orders, sending an Orderly Officer to Head Quarters.

"Upon an alarm from the Enemy, the Troops will first form upon their Respective Parades, and from thence immediately march to their Alarm Posts, where they will wait for further Orders, sending an Officer to Head Quarters."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 440–41. The substitution of a military, in place of the civilian, fire-fighting force, proved disastrous in the fire of Aug. 3, 1778 (q.v.).

Gen. Howe orders "that Recruits belonging to different Regiments will Practice firing Ball on the Level near the Foundery."—Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 440; see also My 6, 1778. "

Gen. Robertson, having been informed "that the Library of King's College, and of the Society Library in the City of New-York, have been pillaged, as well of the Books as of part of the Philosophical Apparatus," issues a proclamation "that in the books belonging to the College, is placed, either the arms of the College, or of the Society for propagating the gospel, and in some of them the Arms of Joseph Murray, Esq; and that in the Books of the City Society Library, is placed the Arms of the said Society, or that the several Books so pillaged are otherwise so marked, that no one can be ignorant to whom they respectively belong. And all Persons in 27

1777 Jan. 27 whose Hands any of the said Books or Apparatus now are, by whatever means they came into their Possession, are hereby strictly ordered, within Ten Days, to deliver the same to the Printer hereof, for the Use of the respective Proprietors, or they will be committed to the Provost, and punished as Receivers of stolen Goods." N. Y. Merc., F 3, 1777; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 636. Maj.-Gen. Pigot issued a similar proclamation on March 26.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 31, 1777; Keep, Hist. N. Y. Soc. Library, 81–82.

28 Evert Byvanck writes: "It is reported that our Army of 12,000 New England Forces will endeavor to retake New York, and plunder it very much, as they judge no man that is true to this country has any business there more than those that are Tories, against whom they are much exasperated. Just this moment we received news that Gen. Washington was beating all the King's Troops back to New York, and hope in a short time to hear of their packing off and leaving us in quiet possession of our estates."—From letter in Whittemore's The Abeel and Allied Families, 18.

31 The committee of safety, meeting at Fishkill, resolves that a committee be appointed "to treat with Mr. John Holt about setting up a printing office in this State; and that they be authorized to offer him two hundred pounds for one year as a State Printer of this State, provided he will print a public newspaper, and on like terms as Samuel Loudon." It is also resolved that the same committee be directed "to seize and secure all the printing types formerly belonging to Hugh Gaine, now in the county of Dutchess and its neighborhood."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 793–94.

Feb. — Sometime in this month, a Londoner wrote as follows regarding the war in America: "The small scale of our maps deceived us; and, as the word 'America' takes up no more room than the word 'Yorkshire,' we seem to think the territories they represent are much of the same bigness; though Charleston is as far from Boston as London from Venice. Braddock might tell the difficulties of this loose, rugged country, were he living. Amherst might still do it. Yet these officers found a willing people to help them, and General Howe finds nothing willing. We have undertaken a war against farmers and farmhouses, scattered through a wild waste of continent, and shall soon hear of our General being obliged to garrison woods, to scale mountains, to wait for boats and pontoons at rivers, and to have his convoys and escorts as large as armies. These, and a thousand such difficulties, will rise on us at the next stage of the war. I say the next stage, because we have hitherto spent one campaign, and some millions, in losing one landing-place at Boston; and, at the charge of seven millions and a second campaign, we have replaced it with two other landing-places at Rhode Island and New York. I am entirely of opinion with Voltaire that every great conqueror must be a great politician. Something more is required, than the mere mechanical business of fighting, in composing revolts and bringing back things to their former order."—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, Part II, II: 150.

3 Counterfeit dollars, made of pewter, very light, and of bluish colour, are in circulation.—N. Y. Merc., F 3, 1777.

6 Pastor Shewkirk's diary states: "Our burying ground [Moravian] at Fresh Water, (corner of Mott and Pell streets) lies entirely open; not the least of a board or post is left."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 125.

10 The advertisement of the performance at the John St. Theatre, "On Thursday Next" (F 13), of "the Comedy of the Beaux Stratagem; With the Farce of the Upholsterer" concludes with this note: "The Gentlemen concerned in the above Charity give Notice, that they have lodged One Hundred Pounds with Doctor Morris, Treasurer to the Charity; for the Purpose of giving such immediate Relief to Widows and Orphans of Soldiers who by Certificates from the commanding Officers of Corps appear to be proper Objects."—N. Y. Merc., F 10, 1777.

11 Having gone "through several wards," Tryon personally secures the oath of allegiance of 1,970 inhabitants; and later 50 more made their attestation before the mayor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 697. On Feb. 15, a paper was circulated throughout the city, by Tryon's direction, stating that the inhabitants signing it revoke the authority of congress over them.—Ibid., VIII: 698–99. On March 28, Tryon sent the names of all of these inhabitants to Germain.—Ibid., VIII: 705.

12 Howe writes Germain that the rebels have hopes of "bringing into the field an army of more than 50,000 men. They are most sanguine in their expectations, and conscious that their whole stake depends upon the success of the next campaign, use every compulsory means to those, who do not enter voluntarily into their service."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 379. Feb. 12

" Kemble records: "New York Island, Long Island, Brunswick, Amboy, Paulus's Hook, [are] our principal Territory; loss of Men on several late occasions not less than fourteen or fifteen hundred."—Kemble's Jour., 110.

" Gov. Tryon offers his services to Gen. Howe "to command the Provincials in the ensuing campaign."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 697–98; Parl. Reg., XI: 378–79. He was so appointed, with the rank of "Major-General of Provincials" (raised in this colony).—Ibid., VIII: 715. Having objected to the rank thus bestowed, he was given the king's commission in May, with the rank of "Major General in America," and appointment to the command of the 70th Regiment.—Ibid., VIII: 746.

13 That the tidings of Gen. Lee's capture (see D 13, 1776) created great elation in England is evident from the following: "This is to give notice that Thursday night will be held as a day of rejoicin in commemoration of the takin of General Lee, when there will be a sermint preached, and other public demonstrations of joy; after which there will be a nox [an ox] roasted whole, and every mark of festivity and bell-ringing imaginable, with a ball and cock-fighting at night in the Assembly-room at the Black Lyone."—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, Part II, II: 69 (footnote), citing "Notice by James Clinch, Parish Clerk and Cryer of Tring in Buckinghamshire."

" "We learn y^{t} Times have Altered somthing for y^{e} Worse in N. York, since we left y^{e} City, Beef is soldat 1/3 p^{r} lb & other things proportionably Dear; . . . little News Respecting y^{e} Armys, only y^{t} about 1750 Hessians had lately been taken Prisoners in y^{e} Jerseys, & y^{t} great numbers of Wounded Soldiers had been Brought into y^{e} City."—Fitch's Diary (MS.), 198–99.

17 Maj.-Gen. Robertson sails for England, and is succeeded, in the command of the city, by Maj.-Gen. Pigot.—N. Y. Merc., F 24, 1777. He returned on Sept. 26 (q.v.).

While in England, he stated that "although when the King's Troops took Possession of the City of New-York it was found almost without Inhabitants, the Eagerness of the People to return under his Majesty's Government was such, that the Number of Inhabitants on the 17th of February amounted to upwards of 11,000."—St. James's Chron., Mr 22–25, 1777.

" Recruits are sought for a body of rangers commanded by Lieut.-Col. John Bayard, whose recruiting-station is at "Mr. Mason's near the exchange, in Little Dock-Street."—N. Y. Merc., F 17, 1777.

18 Gen. Howe goes to Jersey.—Kemble's Jour., 110.

22 A letter written from New York to someone in London states: "Since General Howe's Departure from this City we have seemed rather dull, as he took almost all the Regulars with him. Our Diversions notwithstanding continue, and are upon an excellent Plan; a Theatre is opened in John-Street, where the Officers of the Army and Navy perform Plays and Farces, and the Receipts of the House are applied to a Charity instituted for the Relief of the Widows and Orphans of Soldiers. Price, Pit and Boxes One Dollar, Gallery Four Shillings Currency. The Managers have already paid 100 l. to the Charity. With what Satisfaction must they see Plays here when they consider that they are promoting the Happiness of a Number of distressed Objects."—St. James's Chron., Ap 1–3, 1777.

23 Another letter from New York declares: "Two new Corps have been raised in this City and Long Island within the Space of ten Weeks, one called the Prince of Wales's Royal American Voluntiers, commanded by Governor Browne, who was taken Prisoner by the Provincials at their Attack on Providence; The other called the King's Loyal Orange Rangers, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Bayard. Considering the small Extent they had to recruit in, I think it proves the Loyalty of the People in enlisting so fast, as they only gave Forty Shillings Bounty."—St. James's Chron., Ap 3–5, 1777.

24 The proclamation which was issued by Maj.-Gen. Robertson (see Jan. 13), for establishing a city watch, not being observed, Maj.-Gen. Pigot issues a new proclamation requiring the superintendents of the watch to report to him all persons who refuse or neglect to watch.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 3, 1777.

" There being reason to believe that Maj.-Gen. Robertson's proclamation of Jan. 17 (q.v.), relative to the registering of the names of citizens and strangers in New York, has not been ob-

1777 Feb. 24 served in some instances, Maj.-Gen. Pigot issues a new proclamation requiring all persons who have come into the city since Sept. 22, 1776, and are not residents here, and have not given in their names, "to give them in immediately, or they will be treated as Spies." The same is required of persons coming into the city hereafter "from any Part of the Country possessed by the Rebels;" "and all Persons harbouring or concealing such Persons will be taken into Custody."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 3, 1777.

Another regulation regarding persons who come into the city to live, without pass or permission, and regarding lists of passengers on incoming vessels, and their passports, was published by Maj.-Gen. Pattison on July 12, 1779 (ibid., Jl 19, 1779), and still others by Maj. Metzger, on Jan. 10, 1781 (ibid., Jan. 15, 1781), and by Brig.-Gen. Birch on July 23, 1781 (ibid., Jl 30, 1781).

" In spite of the appointment of chimney inspectors on Dec. 1, 1776 (q.v.), fires in chimneys still occur frequently. Many inhabitants "not only neglect sending for Sweeps when their chimnies require, but also refuse to suffer the said Inspectors either to view their Chimnies or to employ the Sweeps when brought to their Houses, by which this City is often in Danger of being destroyed." Maj.-Gen. Pigot now issues a proclamation reciting these facts and requiring the inhabtants to permit an inspector "to view their Chimnies" when he calls for that purpose, and "to cause them to be swept."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 3, 1777. Cf. an order, for the same purpose, given by J. S. Brownrigg, barrack-master, in ibid., F 19, 1781.

" A London news item reads: "In the next packet for New York, the following passengers will go out, the Rev. Dr. Miles Cooper, President of the college of that city; John Watts, Esq; and several young noblemen who are going as volunteers in the British army."—London Packet, F 21–24, 1777.

25 There is published by Wm. Faden in London, a "Plan of the operations of the King's army under the command of General Sr. William Howe, K. B., in New-York and East New-Jersey, against the American forces commanded by General Washington, from the 12th of October to the 28th of November, 1776 [q.v.]. Wherein is particularly distinguished the engagement on the White Plains, the 28th of October [q.v.]. By Claude Joseph Sauthier. Engraved by Wm. Faden: 1777."

" "Five Prizes came up at different Times this Day sent in by the Frigates, taken at the Capes of Delaware and at Chesapeke Bay."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 19.

" A London news item states: "We hear Mr. James Rivington is to return to New-York as Printer to his Majesty in that reviving City."—St. James's Chron., F 22–25, 1777.

Mar. 3 The royal assent is given to a bill in parliament "to enable the lords of the admiralty to grant letters of marque to private ships of war, or merchant ships, to make reprisals on all ships belonging to the American colonies, that are now in actual rebellion against Great-Britain."—Ann. Reg. (1777), 171.

From 1777 to 1783, there were 185 privateers belonging to the port of New York, fitted out by the British for service in the war. For their names, with the number of their guns and names of their commanders, see Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 875–79.

" In a letter to Gen. Howe, Lord George Germain expresses the great concern he feels "for the disappointment you will have in the 3000 [4,000] Germans mentioned in my letter of the 14th of January [q.v.], for I begin to fear it will not be possible to send you more new forces than about 820 Hessian chasseurs, ditto Hanau about 400; two regiments of Anspach infantry, consisting of about 1280, and four companies of Highlanders, amounting to about 400."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 395.

" The clergy of the Church of England assembled at New York, present a "loyal Address" to Lord Howe, in the absence of Gen. Howe, congratulating them both on the success of the British fleet and army, and expressing their allegiance to the king, not only as their "rightful Sovereign" but also as "supreme Head on Earth of the Church of England."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 3, 1777.

4 The Rev. Samuel Auchmuty, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, dies. His body was interred on March 6 in the chancel of St. Paul's Church, "a church which was built under his Inspection, was consecrated by him . . . and where he preached his last sermon on Sunday, Feb. 23."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 10, 1777. Hugh Gaine noted, under date of May 11, that, during the past year, not only was Trinity Church destroyed by fire, but the rector, the sexton, and two clerks had died.—Gaine's Jour., II: 32.

Mar. 7 The provincial convention passes resolutions directing "the commissioners appointed within this State to inquire into, detect and defeat all plots and conspiracies against the rights and liberties of America, within this State . . . to send for all such persons, members of this State, as are confined by parol or otherwise . . ., excepting those who are charged with taking up arms against the United States, with enlisting men for the service of the enemy, accepting a warrant or commission for that purpose, supplying them with provisions or conveying intelligence to them; and that they do tender to each of them an oath, or if of the people called Quakers, an affirmation, that he will bear true faith and allegiance to the State of New-York; that he will discover all plots and conspiracies which may come to his knowledge, against the said State, or the United States of America; that he will do his duty as a good subject of the said State; and that he takes the said oath or affirmation without any mental reservation or equivocation whatsoever, and means faithfully and honestly to perform the same. That such of the said persons as shall take and subscribe the said oath or affirmation, be discharged; and that such of them as shall for six days after the same shall be tendered to them respectively, refuse to take the said oath or affirmation, receive a pass and be directed to repair, with their families, apparel and household furniture, to the city of New-York or some other place in the possession of the enemy; and in default of their obedience of such direction within the time for that purpose by the said commissioners to be limited, that they be confined in close jail, and otherwise treated as the open enemies of this State." The convention also resolves that "such of the said persons as shall not, after being so as aforesaid sent for, appear before the said commissioners within a time for that purpose by the said commissioners to be limited, . . . shall be considered as having gone over to the enemy. And the personal property of such persons shall be seized and sold at public vendue, and the money arising therefrom shall be paid into the Treasury of this State and be subject to the disposition of the future Legislature thereof; unless, upon the appearance of such delinquents before the said commissioners previous to such sale of their personal property, a sufficient reason be assigned for their non-attendance."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 827.

The minutes kept from 1778 to 1781, inclusive, by the commissioners for detecting and defeating conspiracies in New York were published by the state in three volumes in 1909, with editorial notes by Victor Hugo Paltsits, state historian.

" About 250 "Rebels," both horse and foot, make an attack on the light house at Sandy Hook, but are repulsed by the garrison of about thirty men.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 21.

" "Of near 10,000 inhabitants, which New-York contained last winter, there were not 3,000 left when the King's troops took possession of it, and these above half are Dutch and German traders, . . . the rest are composed of aged, sick, and such persons as refused to enter into the measures of the Congress."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), Mr 7, 1777.

10 A regiment is being raised by Col. John Morris to serve King George III "during the present rebellion in America." Recruits are requested to apply to "Mr. Waldron Blaau, in Little-Dock-street, near the Exchange," where they will receive clothes, etc.; and "as a further encouragement, each man shall be entitled to 50 acres of land in this province, at the expiration of this rebellion, for which he will receive a deed free of every expense."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 10, 1777.

" The Merchants' Coffee House (s. e. cor. Wall and Water Sts.—see L. M. R. K., III: 979) is designated as the meeting-place of the proprietors of "the United Whaling Company, in the city of New-York."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 10, 1777.

11 The frigate "Thames" arrives with ships under convoy. "She came out [from England] with 16 Sail."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 21.

12 "The committee for preparing and reporting a form or plan of government" submits its report to the New York provincial convention.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 833. The state constitution was adopted on April 20 (q.v.).

" "More of the Ships that came out with the Thames came up this morning, and a Report of the heavy Cannonade being heard towards Brunswick or Amboy."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 21.

14 "Reports current that General Washington was dead, and his Army passing the Delaware, however not credited by any Body."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 22. A contributor to a London paper

1777 Mar. 14 comments on the report thus: "If General Washington be dead, as reported, it is clear that the American Rebellion will not long survive him. His Character, as a humane, brave, and skilful Officer, has done more towards keeping the Provincials under Arms than all the hypocritcal Invocations of the whole Republican Congress put together."—St. James's Chron., Ap 29–My 1, 1777.

15 "The Reports mentioned above still prevail, but some say Mr. Washington was on the Recovery."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 22.

17 Smith receives the following information relating to New York: "The Sound crowded with Vessels—Preparations for moving a Way from N Y. Merchants imbarking their goods. Cannon spiked there. Fort Independence Washington abandoned." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" The "Friendly Brothers" (of St. Patrick) are notified to meet on this day at Hull's Tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 10, 1777. This was the City Tavern, at the present 115 Broadway. Again, on May 1, "being a Collar Day" (see Cen. Dict.), such Friendly Brothers as were in town were requested to meet at Hull's for dinner.—Ibid., Ap 21, 1777. Hull's Tavern was the principal headquarters for loyalist meetings. Boston loyalists who left with the king's army met here on May 21st.—Ibid., My 19, 1777. This tavern was also the meeting-place of the Society of the Hospital, the "Blue and Orange Society," and others.—Ibid., My 19, 1777; Royal Gaz., Ap 10, 1777.

19 "France is now arming at all points for a war with Great Britain. The protection she offers to American ships of war, and every other public step she takes is of such a nature, as to make it absolutely certain that a war between France and England is either actually begun, or must very soon take place."—Penn. Gaz. (Phila.), Mr 19, 1777. This was a premonition of the hostilities which began on June 17, 1778 (q.v.).

20 Sir William Howe ("General and Commander-in-Chief, of all His Majesty's Forces within the Colonies lying on the Atlantic Ocean, from Nova Scotia to West-Florida, inclusive, &c.") issues a proclamation from headquarters in New York, by his secretary, Robert Mackenzie, which recites: "Whereas a plentiful Supply of Vegetables, and of fresh Provisions of all Kinds, will greatly tend to the Preservation of the Health of His Majesty's Troops and others; and the raising large Quantities of Hay, and other Forage, will very much conduce to His Majesty's Service . . .," therefore none shall trespass upon any enclosure belonging to another, or remove the produce, or break down fences. Offenders shall be seized and delivered to the commanding officer, or the provost marshal, for punishment.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 24, 1777.

21 About 40 men (refugees) come to New York with their arms from North Castle.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 23. For reference to other groups of refugees, see Mr 29 and 31, Ap 11 and 14.

" "An expedition on flat-bottomed boats goes up North River." —Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 23. Gen. Howe wrote to Lord George Germain, under date of Apr. 1, of "the success of a detachment of 500 men that I sent up the North river in transports, on the 22d of March, conveyed by the Brune frigate, to destroy a considerable deposit of provisions and stores which the enemy had made at Peek's Kill, . . . reimbarking without interruption returned here the 26th."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 386. See also Kemble's Jour., 112.

24 The vestry of Trinity Church elects Rev. Charles Inglis rector, in the place of the late Dr. Auchmuty.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 24, 1777.

" An advertisement offers to let that "delightfully situated House and Gardens, Coach-house, Stable, &c. at Belvoir, near the Water-Works in the environs of this City, belonging to Mr. Howard."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 24, 1777. This house, later known as the White Conduit House, and, with its garden, also known for a time as Ranelagh, was built by Crean Brush in 1767 (q.v.). The grounds were modelled after the popular English "pleasure gardens" of the period, and were probably opened shortly after the occupation of the city by the British. The house stood at the present 341 Broadway. For its later history, see L. M. R. K., III: 981; Jl 15, 1780; Ap 21, 1781; Mr 4, 1782; F 6, 1799. By 1803, the garden had ceased to exist.—Liber Deeds, CIV: 509 (New York).

Some writers have made the mistake of confounding this celebrated house with that of Joseph Corré, later known as Mt. Vernon. The latter, however, was north of Leonard St., and the White Conduit House was south of that street. See L. M. R. K., III: 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III. There is an undated sketch in the Bancker Coll., in the N. Y. P. L., showing the White Conduit House; also a view, of much later date, in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), opp. p. 420.

Mar. 24 "The old Tavern lately kept by Capt. Thomas Doran, on the dock, near the Fly-market, is now revived . . . by . . . Loosley, & Elms."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 24, 1777. For an account of Doran's tavern, see Ja 15, 1770. These proprietors called it the King's Head, and it became popular.—See Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 284–86, and authorities there cited.

26 Hugh Gaine records: "The North River Ferries stopped." On March 27 he wrote: "The Ferries continue stopped."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 24.

28 "A Gentleman, late from Head-Quarters in the Jersies . . . remarks that he could not have believed it was in the power of any events to have made so great an alteration in the sentiments and spirits of a people in so short a time, as the enemy's rout and ravages made among the Jerseymen. The specimens of British Government exhibited on their momentary triumph, has fully gratified any hankering the inhabitants might have to see it established. The repeated failure of their military operations has cast such reproach on their arms, that those who were frightned with Gen. Howe's success and begged his pardon and protection, have almost to a man returned to the cause; and are now fighting for the defence of their country; being resolved at all hazards to prevent any future ravages."—Penn. Gaz., Ap 9, 1777.

" "Mr Paterson tells me that it was said in New york that all would be Peace in this Colony but for Ph. Livingston Robt R L[ivingston] Jay Duane Scott and Duer and that agst the last they uttered the severest Execrations . . . That there were 12000 Men with Genl Howe and at New york Long Island Staten Island Paulus Hook 22 Batallions except their Grenadiers & Light Infantry companies."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

29 Gen. Lee, now prisoner in New York (see Ja 1), submits to Lord and Sir William Howe a plan for the easy subjugation of the colonies. It is written unmistakably in Lee's own hand, and is endorsed in the known handwriting of Henry Strachey, secretary to the royal commissioners, as "Mr Lee's Plan 29th March, 1777." The document, having been brought to America from England, was purchased by the late George H. Moore, librarian of the New York Hist. Soc., and this and other proofs of Lee's treason were first presented to the world in a paper read by Mr. Moore before this society on June 22, 1858. For facsimile reproduction of the plan and a full account of the treason, see 'Mr. Lee's Plan—March 29, 1777.' The Treason of Charles Lee, by Geo. H. Moore (1860). Benson J. Lossing, in a footnote to Geo. Washington Parke Custis's Recollections and Private Memoirs of Washington (1860), 292–93, states that this treasonable act makes it easy to interpret Lee's peculiar conduct after the fall of Fort Washington, his occupancy of a suite of rooms in the city hall while a prisoner in New York, and his great intimacy with British officers here. See also essay on "Charles Lee, Soldier of Fortune," in Fiske's Essays Historical and Literary, I: 53 et seq.; The Lee Papers in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1873), II: 361; Winsor, VI: 369, 403. Concerning Lee's treasonable documents, see ibid., VI: 416; and for his trial, which was held at Brunswick, N. J., on July 4, 1778, see ibid., VI: 446. See, further, Ap 15, Je 4, D 30, 1777; F 3, 1778.

" "Sixteen Rebels came in To-Day, but we hear near 100 have been intercepted about the White Plains, that were coming in to join Col. Beverly Robinson's Battalion." Wood costs £5:10 per cord.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 25.

31 "Forty men came in from Dutchess in order to join Beverley Robinson's Batalion, which fills amazingly."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 25.

Apr. 2 In a letter to Lord George Germain, marked "secret," Gen. Howe expresses disappointment at "the small reinforcement intended for this army for the ensuing campaign," and adds: "My expectations of a move in the winter against the enemy in Jersey . . . have been frustrated by a deep fall of snow, which rendered the country impassable, and since the breaking up of winter, the depth of roads forced me to relinquish the idea. Restricted as I am from entering upon more extensive operations by the want of forces, my hopes of terminating the war this year are vanished; still I think it probable, that by the latter end of the campaign, we shall be in possession of the provinces of New-York, the Jersies, and Pennsylvania, though this, in some measure, must depend upon the successes of the northern army; for, notwithstanding it is my opinion the rebels will not be able to raise their army voted last Autumn, yet they will have a numerous militia in the field, in addition to their standing force, with a tolerable train of artillery."

1777 —Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 386–88. Accompanying this letter Howe
Apr. gives the "Distribution of His Majesty's troops, British and Foreign
2 for the Campaign, 1777."

"Pensylvania	11,000
Town of York and Island	3,200
Paulus Hook	300
Staten Island	1,200
Rhode Island	2,400
	18,100

"N.B. Prisoners with the rebels, sick artillery and cavalry not included.

"Also a corps of Provincials of 3,000 effectives, under the command of his Excellency Governor Tryon" (see F 12).—Ibid., 390.

5 An order is issued by the British "Obliging Each Prisoner to pay his own Billiting &c." Fitch says: "This is Indeed a piece of Usage which has been some talk'd of among us before, altho' none of us were scerce able to Credit it . . . What Wonderful Acts of Lenity & Generosity, are Exercis'd by y^e^ Britains, toward their Prisoners!"—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

6 "The Vessels that were coming up the last Night prove to be Part of the Fleet that Sailed from Cork the 20th of December, and the Rest some of the Ships that came out with the Thames Frigate. One of them in coming by the Battery struck on the Chevause De Frize and sunk before she got to the Wharff. Great Quantities of all Sorts of Artillery daily shipping on board the Transports, there being a Sufficiency taken up for 12,000 Men and Provisions to be put on board for 3 Months."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 27.

7 William Demagne, having obtained permission to establish a stage boat from New York to Perth Amboy, proposes sailing every Tuesday and Friday. His shipping office is at Doughty's tavern, Whitehall.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 7, 1777.

8 Smith writes in his diary: "I believe the American leaders now despair of their own ability to defend themselves ag^t^ the Power of Great Britain and that their Hopes are only sustained by the Prospect of French aid and that of this they are suspicious. This is the moment therefore for offering Terms and I pray God that adm^n^ may see the Propriety of some proper Publications for this Purpose. I am confident that the multitude would give them Success and believe the Delegates continental and Provincial or rather many of them would be glad to find the Temper of the People favorable to their making Cessions without Danger of the Wrath of the Populace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

11 "The Country people daily escaping thr^o^ the Rebels and coming in with their arms."—Montresor's Jour., 421; see also Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 28. Similar entries appear in the journals of both writers for several days after this; cruisers are bringing in prizes, too, almost every day.

" "I this Day learn by Capt Bebbe who has lately Been to York, y^t^ y^e^ Prisoners there are use'd much better than they have been some time past, & y^t^ they are considerably healthy."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

14 "The Several Provincial Corps already raised, are mostly cloathed, and make a very handsome Appearance. Their Uniform is chiefly Green faced with White, and made of the best materials."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 14, 1777.

15 The state convention, at Kingston, appoints a committee "to prepare and report a proper device for a great seal of this State."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 882. It does not appear that this committee ever made a report.—Wilde, The Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and State, 48; but see S 10, 1777; Mr 16, 1778

" An item of London news states: "When General Lee was taken, he was put on board a Vessel at New-York three several Times in order to be brought to England, and the Ship was absolutely on Sail when Washington's Letter to General Howe arrived at New-York; the Consequence of which was, that the Ship was stopt, and the General relanded."—St. James's Chron., Ap 12–15, 1777. Lee was transferred to a man-of-war in the harbour on June 4 (q.v.).

18 "Two Hundred and Six Men came in this Morning, from Dutchess County and more may be hourly expected [see Ap 21]."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 29. Cf. Wm. Smith's Diary, Vol. V, under Ap 21.

19 Germain writes from Whitehall to Gen. Howe: "I have had a great deal of conversation with Major-General Robertson; and as he is an officer of great experience and merit, and one whose continuance in America was particularly desired by you, his Majesty has been pleased to order him to return thither, and continue to act under you as Major-General. . . . Apr. 19

"Before this reaches you, I trust that Colonel Grey (appointed as Major-General) will have arrived with the Somerset" (see Je 5). He adds: "Lieutenant-General Clinton has been honoured by his Majesty with a red ribband, and will set out forthwith for America."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 406.

" "It is this Day two Years since y^e^ Commencement of y^e^ present War, when Hostilitys first took place at Lexington Concord &c, in Massachusets Province, in consequence of which, y^e^ whole Country hath long been in Arms, nor doth there yet appear any prospect of a Sessation of Hostilitys."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

Lafayette and Baron de Kalb sail from Los Passajes, Spain, in 20
the "Victoire," to enter the service of the United States.—Doniol, op. cit., II: 404–6.

The provincial convention, sitting at Kingston, adopts a constitution for the "State of New York" (see Mr 12). The preamble of the constitution recites the proceedings of the provincial congress leading to this enactment; and also recites in full the "Declaration of Independence," passed by "the Delegates to the United American States in General Congress convened." By virtue of these acts, the preamble avers, all power in this state "hath reverted to the people thereof, and this Convention hath by their suffrages and free choice been appointed, and among other things, authorized to establish such a government as they shall deem best calculated to secure the rights and liberties of the good people of this State, most conducive of the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular, and of America in general." "

The supreme legislative power of the state is vested in the assembly and senate. No "member of this State" shall be "disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to the subjects of this State, by this Constitution, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers." The supreme executive power and authority is vested in a governour, who shall be elected by the qualified freeholders of the state every three years. The style of all laws shall be: "Be it enacted by the People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly." Likewise, writs and other proceedings shall run in the name of "the People of the State of New-York."

The law of this state shall consist of "such parts of the common law of England, and of the statute law of England and Great Britain, and of the acts of the Legislature of the Colony of New-York, as together did form the law of the said Colony" on April 19, 1775; "subject to such alterations and provisions as the Legislature of this State shall, from time to time, make concerning the same." The parts of the common law or of the provincial statutes, which "may be construed to establish or maintain any particular denomination of Christians or their ministers;" or such parts of the laws as concern the sovereignty of the king of Great Britain over the colony of New-York and its inhabitants, or are repugnant to this constitution, are abrogated and rejected.

The "free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship" shall "forever hereafter be allowed within this State to all mankind; provided that the liberty of conscience hereby granted shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this State."

The constitution declares that "it is the duty of every man who enjoys the protection of society, to be prepared and willing to defend it." The militia shall at all times "be armed and disciplined and in readiness for service."

Trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

Naturalized citizens, on taking the oath of allegiance to this state, shall "abjure and renounce all allegiance and subjection to all and every foreign king, prince, potentate and State, in all matters ecclesiastical as well as civil."

The convention resolves "That Mr. Robert R. Livingston, General Scott, Mr. Morris, Mr. Abraham Yates, Mr. Jay and Mr. Hobart, be a committee to prepare and report a plan for organizing and establishing the government agreed to by this Convention."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 892–98. Such a plan was reported and adopted on May 8 (q.v.). See also "Birth of the Empire State—Formation of the First Constitution of New York," by John Austin Stevens, in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1879), III: 1–16; and "Constitutional Development of New York," by S. N. D. North, in ibid., III: 161–74. This constitution remained in force for forty-five 1777 years.—See 1822; and Lincoln, Constitutional Hist. of N. Y. (1906).

Ap 20

21 A proclamation, issued by Gen. Howe, states that, "for the more speedy and effectual Suppression of the unnatural Rebellion subsisting in North America, it has been thought proper to levy a Number of Provincial Troops, thereby affording to His Majesty's faithful and well-disposed Subjects, Inhabitants of the Colonies, an Opportunity to co-operate in relieving themselves from the Miseries attendant on Anarchy and Tyranny, and in restoring the Blessings of Peace and Order, with just and lawful Government." As a reward "for the Promptitude and Zeal wherewith His Majesty's faithful Subjects have entered into the Corps now raising, and as a further Encouragement to others to follow their laudable Example," he promises, with the authority given him by the king, "That all Persons who have, or do hereafter, inlist into any of the said Provincial Corps, to serve for two Years, or during the present War in North America, and shall continue faithfully to serve in any of the said Corps . . ." shall obtain, "after being reduced or disbanded," the following quantities of "Vacant Lands in the Colonies wherein their Corps have been, or shall be, raised, or in such other Colony as His Majesty shall think fit:

"Every Non-commissioned Officer 200 Acres.
"Every Private Soldier 50 do.

"The same to be granted to such of the said Non-commissioned Officers and Soldiers as shall personally apply for the same, by the Governor of the respective Colonies, without Fee or Reward, subject, at the Expiration of Ten Years to the same Quit Rents as other Lands are subject to in the Province within which they shall be granted, and Subject to the same Conditions of Cultivation and Improvement."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 21, 1777.

" Since April 15, about 500 inhabitants of the various counties of the province have come to town, and most of them have joined the new corps now being raised here.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 21, 1777.

" "Troops embarked about 2 o' Clock consisting of about 2000 Men, and various are the Conjectures of their Destination. A Prize Brig from Philadelphia by the Mermaid."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 29.

22 Robertson writes that the troops bound for Danbury (see April 20) "sailed up the East River and pass'd Hellgate w^t^ a fair Wind, w^h^ fail'd & we came to an Anchor in the sound off City Island."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 29. They were commanded by Gen. Tryon and destroyed the American stores on the night of April 26 (q.v.).

23 Wm. Smith writes: "An unknown Traveller informs my Servants Jay and John, that 300 of his neighbours in the Nine partner District went off last Week to Kingsbridge led by one Joshua Gidney and the Week before 500 from N England crossed the Sound to Long Island from Froggs Point and that he had seen a Man lately from N Y who told him the Prisoners there had listed in the Crown Service & with the Recruits who came in from the Country were to form an Army who were to ascend the River soon under the Command of Gov^r^ Tryon [see F 12] . . . I suspect he is one of the many Emissaries passing thro' the Country recruiting for the British Army."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

26 "There are 22 Vessels in Hudsons River opposite to Fort Washington and M^c^ Dugal writes from Peak's Kill that they expect a Visit soon. This greatly alarms."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

28 A schedule of the British killed, wounded, and missing, prepared by Deputy Adj. Gen. Kemble, and giving the number of casualties in each action from April 19, 1775, to this date, shows a total of 3,193.—Kemble's Jour., 115.

30 Gen. Howe issues a proclamation establishing, in terms of sterling, a rate of exchange for the currency of this province, thus: a guinea (weighing 5 pwt., 7 gr.) equals £1:17:4; a half Johannes (of 9 pwt., 3 gr.), £3:4; a moidore (of 6 pwt., 22 gr.), £2:8; a Spanish milled dollar, 8 sh.; and an English shilling, 1 sh. 9 d.—N. Y. Merc., My 12, 1777.

" "Sundry Prizes were brought in this Day by his Majesty's Ships, and the Governor [Tryon] with Sir William Erskine came to Town."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 31.

May

3 "The Galatea is returned from her Cruise, with only 7 Prizes, which makes 14 brought in this Week."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 31.

6 Wm. Smith writes: "Rob^t^ R L reports as fresh news from the Congress. That a new war is declared between the Russians & Turks. That D^r^ Franklin is gone to the Court of Prussia & Sheriff Lee to Madrid and that the Merchants of France fit out Privateers under Cont^l^ Colours & Commissions which are there brought in & sold & that a Knott of them at Nantz have lent the Congress 400,000 Livres."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 69–70. May 6

The provincial convention, at Kingston, adopts a "plan for organizing government." A "Council of Safety" is appointed, consisting of John Morin Scott, Robert R. Livingston, Christopher Tappen, Abraham Yates, Jr., Gouveneur Morris, Zephaniah Platt, John Jay, Charles De Witt, Robert Harper, Jacob Cuyler, Thomas Tredwell, Pierre Van Cortlandt, Matthew Cantine, John Sloss Hobart and Jonathan Tompkins. They are invested with all the powers necessary for the safety and preservation of the state, until a meeting of the legislature. The executive powers of the state are to be vested in the governour, however, as soon as he shall be chosen and admitted into office, after taking the oath of allegiance before the council of safety. The form of such oath is adopted. 8

Inasmuch as the new state constitution vests the appointment of state officers in the governour, with the advice and consent of a council of appointment, which will not exist until after an election of representatives in the senate and assembly; and as many of these state officers are necessary for the immediate execution of the laws, and even for holding such elections, the following officers are now appointed by the provincial convention: Robert R. Livingston, to be chancellor; John Jay, chief-justice; Robert Yates and John Sloss Hobart, puisne judges; and Egbert Benson, attorney-general. County judges and other officers are also named. The mode of holding elections for governour, lieutenant-governour, and senators in each county, by the free-holders (qualified as the constitution prescribes), and for members of assembly by the people at large, is also prescribed.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 916–18.

"The least overture of Peace P R [Livingston] says would be imbraced with the utmost Joy by all Ranks of People. Poor Man I compassionate the agony of his Mind—Hedged in on every side he knows not what to do—Equally fearful of the Crown and the Congress—He has privately put up a few necessaries to be ready to take Wing on the first Alarm—He has discovered yesterd: that the Tenants had agreed to give him & his two Majors Johnson & Ten Broeck to the British army."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 74. "

The location of Admiral Lord Howe's headquarters is shown in the advertisement of one William Campbell, who sells various kinds of goods "At his Shop in Hanover-Square, Nearly opposite Lord Howe's."—N. Y. Merc., My 12, 1777. 12

"Peter R L ret^s^ from the Convention which dissolved yesterday because the N Y [delegates] were elected to serve only to that Day. But for that accidental Limitation they would have sat longer for the other Counties had not fixed any Period . . . Rob^t^ R. L had 21 Votes for Chancellor Scott 9—Jay 15 for Chief J. Scott 6—They (the Convention) have Chosen Senators for the Southern District possessed by the British Troops and Assemblymen for each of those six Counties."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 83. 14

"The Colony is now in the Hands of 15 as a Council of Safety [see My 8]—The Resolutions of so small a Body will be quick and much depends on their Temper."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 85. 15

"We this Day hear'd a Rep^t^ y^t^ Gen^ll^ Carlton had taken Ticonderoge, & put y^e^ whole Garason (consisting of 1500 men) to y^e^ Sword."—Fitch's Diary (MS.). 17

"Ten Prizes brought in this week besides what were destroyed by the Ships at Sea."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 33. "

Lieut-Col. Kemble proceeds to Kingsbridge and views the ground where redoubts are to be placed.—Kemble's Jour., 118. On May 19, "The Provincials began to Work upon the Redoubts, Number 5 and 6, in front of the Provincial Encampment."—Ibid. "

There is a "considerable number of French prisoners now confin'd in y^e^ City [New York], who were taken at Sea."—Fitch's Diary (MS.). 19

Smith writes: "I take it for granted that the main object of the British Gen^l^ is to penetrate the New England Colonies—Because Nothing is as yet attempted many conclude that the General is weak. . . . I conjecture that M^r^ Howe may with the 6000 Provincials have a Force of 26 or 27000 men and that he reasons thus—I have 10,000 in Jersey and if I withdraw them the Friends of the British Governm^t^ there will be ruined.—The remaining 16 or 17000 are not sufficient till Burgoyne attacks by the Way of Tconderoge Boston or Salem and Gen^l^ Clinton with Reinforcements penetrates 23

1777 May 23 from Rhode Island.—Then I will keep Washington in Jersey send 10,000 to Horseneck and thus put New England between three Fires and with 6 or 7000 more ascend Hudson's River to Albany and thus add to my army every where & find only Militia to contend with.—It may be asked why the Troops at New York have not harrassed the Coast by Feints of Landing in one Place and another while the Roads were difficult. It may be answered—My Plan insures Success and such alarms would not only have cut off the Fruits of the Year by drawing off the Farmers, but would have involved the Friends of Governmt in Distress and tended by repeated Irritations to have added to the continental army."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 296–97.

24 A "large fleet, consisting of a hundred sail," leaves New York and stands out to sea.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), V: 399.

" Three regiments arrive from Rhode Island, one English and two Hessian.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 34. See My 28.

26 "Two Ships came up from England with Troops," part of an expected fleet from "the Downs."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 34.

" A report is current in New York City that "ye Prisoners are soon to be sent on Board ye Fleet in order to be sent home to Europe."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

28 "The Fleet consisting of 20 Sail came up from the Hook, having lain there 2 Days [see My 26]: They were convoyed by the Isis, Camels, Bute, and [Swift]."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 34.

31 "As many troops are come in, some were lodged in the North Church opposite us [the Moravian Chapel], who made a great wild noise. They were of the recruits that are come from England. Others were lodged in the Methodist meeting, and in the old Dutch church, &c."—Shewkirk's Diary, 126.

Summer The prisoners, crowded into Livingston's sugar-house on Liberty St., suffer from jail-fever, and are permitted, in companies of 20, to walk in the yard half an hour daily.—Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 414.

June 2 It is announced that "The students of King's College in the city of New-York, who Chuse to resume their studies, are requested to attend at No. 13 in Wall Street; where also the candidates for admission may apply to Benjamin Moore."—N. Y. Merc., Je 2, 1777. See My 31, 1776; 1777.

3 "Sixteen Vessels with Hessians, Anspachers, etc. arrived from England."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35.

On the same day Gen. Howe wrote to Germain: "The remount horses, for the 16th and 17th dragoons, are arrived in good order, with the loss of ten horses on the passage. The officers of the guards, and British recruits, also arrived on the 24th of May [q.v.]; the Anspach troops, 432 German recruits, and 51 German chasseurs, on the 3d instant, convoyed by the Somerset. These troops appear to be in very good health, and have disembarked upon Staten-Island, to refresh for a short time."—Parl. Reg., XI: 399. Cf. Kemble's Jour., 118; he says there were "2 Battalions Anspach."

" The Hon. Wm. Smith, a member of the provincial council since 1769, is summoned from his country seat at Haverstraw (to which he had retired on the departure of Gov. Tryon from New York), to attend the council of safety at Kingston. He was there asked whether he considered himself a subject of "the Independent States of America," and replied "that he did not conceive himself discharged from his oaths of fidelity to the crown of Great Britain." An order was immediately made by the board (on June 7) for him "to be confined, within the manor of Livingston." Here he remained "until he was sent into New-York, by a flag, under the superintendence of Colonel Burr [see Ag 26, 1778], by order of General Washington." He remained in New York until its evacuation by the British troops.—From "Memoir of the Honourable William Smith, written by his son," in N. Y. H. S. Collections, IV: xiii–xiv.

Smith says that the continuation of his history to 1762 was "arranged at the Manor of Livingston in 2 Months before the 20 March 1777, arranged from Notes formerly collected but great additions will be made when I can again have Recourse to a Collection of Gazettes & other Papers left at Haverstraw."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 475.

4 This being the anniversary of the king's birthday, "when he entered the 40th Year of his Age," the day is observed "with every possible Demonstration of Joy. At One o'Clock a Royal Salute was fired from Fort George, which was answered by all his Majesty's Ships in the Harbour, as well as Merchantmen, to the Amount of about 500 Sail. After which his Excellency Admiral Lord Howe, and the General Sir William Howe, with the principal Officers of the Navy and Army, dined together at his Lordship's House in Hanover-Square, where an elegant Entertainment was provided. His Excellency Governor Tryon also gave a splendid Entertainment upon the Occasion to many of the principal Gentlemen of the Town and Colony. In the Evening the City was universally illuminated, and the Inhabitants seemed to vie with each other in the public Declaration of their Loyalty."—N. Y. Merc., Je 9, 1777. June 4

" Gen. Chas. Lee is sent on board the "Centurion."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35. He had been kept a prisoner by the British in the city hall or new jail during the five and a half months that elapsed between his capture on Dec. 13, 1776 (q.v.) and his coming to New York on Jan. 1, 1777 (q.v.), and was placed on the man-of-war "Centurian" in the harbour while Gen. Howe was pursuing his brief campaign in New Jersey against the forces of Washington. There he had more freedom than when confined in the city, and was permitted to exercise by walking the quarter-deck.—Moore, Treason of Maj.-Gen. Charles Lee, (N. Y., 1860), 7. See D 30, 1777, and F 3, 1778. See A., Jl 2, 1777.

5 A Hessian officer, writing from Rhode Island on June 24, stated that his regiment, which arrived in New York harbour on June 3, was on the 5th quartered in the Dutch Church on Nassau St. "We also were obliged to spend a night in it, or rather among the tombstones, as we were unable to find another place for our equipage or any other shelter for ourselves—if a night in a graveyard could be called by that term." Commenting on the high prices, he says: "a loaf of bread (made of wheat, for corn is rarely raised here) and which at home costs one albus, costs here 5." New York, he says, is "one of the handsomest and pleasantest spots I have ever seen. . . . The houses, which are in the English style, regular and well built, are not only of a palatial character, but are most elegantly furnished and papered inside. It is therefore a pity that this country, which, by the way, is exceedingly fertile, should be inhabited by such brutish people—people who have been brought into their present position by sheer luxury and extravagance, and who owe their downfall solely to their own haughtiness."—From Letters of Brunswick and Hessian Officers during the Am. Revolution, ed. by Stone, 206–7.

" "The Somerset came up To-Day and landed Gen. Grey" (see Ap 19).—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35.

6 "The Light-Horse and many of the Troops embarked, but their Destination not known." On the next day he wrote: "The Embarkation continues;" and, under June 8: "The General's Horses put on board."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35.

8 "Some Men-of-War from England. The St. Albans said to be One."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35.

9 "This day the Gen[l] [Howe] left N: York & went to amboy—to take the Command of the Army in the Jersey's wh now consisted of all the Troops that could be brought together after leaving Proper Garrison in New York & Staten Islands & ca—Sr Wm Erskine Likewise left N. York this day. We arrived at Amboy about 10 at Night."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.), in N. Y. P. L. See also Montresor's Jour., 421. For Howe's movements in New Jersey, see Robertson op. cit. under Je 13, and Parl. Reg., XI: 408. See, further, Je 22.

" "Abraham Patten, a Spy from the Rebel Army, was executed at Brunswick last Friday. . . .At the Gallows he acknowledged all the Charges brought against him, and said he was a Principal in setting Fire to New-York, but would not accuse any of his Accomplices. . . ."—Upcott Coll., V: 35.

" The committee of Trinity vestry, appointed on April 1 to estimate the damage sustained by Trinity corporation by the fire of Sept. 21, 1776, reports a loss which totals £22,200, estimated as follows: "Trinity Church Including the Organ," £17,500; "Parsonage or Rectors House," £2,500; "Two Charity School Houses & Fenceings," £2,000; "Library," £200. To this is added the loss to the corporation of £536 per annum in annual rentals from 246 lots, "the Tennants Buildings being all Consumed by the Fire." The report is dated May 13, 1777. Cf. Dr. Inglis' letter under S 21, 1776. The vestry at once appoints a committee "to prepare Such Petitions Memorials or other papers to his Majesty and to such other persons as may be thought Proper in order to obtain some Compensation for the losses which this Corporation has sustained by the late Fire."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

10 A letter of this date from E. Oswald to Col. John Lamb states:

1777 June 10 "By intelligence from N. York, we learn that no goods are suffered to be landed—no stores opened in the City—about 2000 Troops at Kingsbridge and Ft Independence & but few Hessians in the Town —Part of their fleet has sailed for England, Ireland &c for provisions."—From the Lamb Papers at N. Y. H. S.

12 "Considerable firing heard this Day, supposed to be in Jersey. Ships daily arriving from England."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 36.

14 Congress resolves "That the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white: that the union be thirteen stars, white in blue field, representing a new constellation." —Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), VIII: 464. Regarding the development of the design of the American flag, see Preble, The Flag of the United States (1880); Harrison, The Stars and Stripes and Other Am. Flags (1906); Canby & Balderston, The Evolution of the Am. Flag (1909); The Am. Flag (pub. by the Dept. of Education, State of N. Y., 1910), and authorities there cited. See also N. Y. Jour., Ag 25, 1785. There was delay in the public announcement of the adoption of the flag, and the design was not officially promulgated by congress until Sept. 3, 1777.—The Am. Flag, op. cit., 20. See also Winsor, VIII: 483.

" "The [British] Subalterns in the Army at New York, who have no Fortunes, are obliged to eat the common Soldiers Allowance of Provisions as it is impossible, with their Pay to dine at the Sutlers, where fresh Provisions are so dear, that a Man even of small Fortune can hardly afford it."—St. James's Chron., Je 12–14, 1777.

16 The Quakers of the province of New York start a subscription "for the Relief of their distressed Fellow Subjects."—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1777.

" Francis Marschalk advertises "ship-bread" for sale, "Opposite the Post-Office, in Broad-street."—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1777. The post-office at this time was near No. 225 Broad St., as appears by the advertisement of John C. Knapp, a notary public, on Nov. 24. —Ibid., N 24, 1777.

" An advertisement makes mention of "the Jews-alley or Mill-street."—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1777.

19 Wm. Smith writes: "A Rumor that Gen[l] Washington has sent for Troops to attack the British & that Putman cross'd the River at Peak's Kill last Monday with 5000 as one says & 2600 according to the other. It comes up to us by Land & by Water—I suspect Mr Howe has sent Reinforcements to Jersey which have alarmed the American Army. Perhaps only to draw off part of the Forces at Peak's Kill before the asscent up the River."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 328.

22 The British army evacuates Brunswick, N. J.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Between this date and the 30th, Montresor records the movements of the British troops and supplies by ferry and flat-boats from New Jersey to Staten Island.—Montresor's Jour., 423-26. See also Parl. Reg., XI: 408.

24 "Mr Cuyler told me yesterd: that General Putman [Putnam] on the first news of the Fire at N Y 21 Sept was heard to exult that the Scheme was effected. And that Mr Volkers P Doune has said Men had been told and Power given by the Convention to the army to burn that Town."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 333.

29 "New York Company of Volunteers detached from King's Bridge towards White plains—killed 6 of the rebels and brought in Eight Prisoners—Twenty five head of Cattle and Eleven Horses." —Montresor's Jour., 426.

" "Seventy Prisoners, and three Pieces of Artillery were brought in from Amboy."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 38.

July 1 Gen. Howe, "with his Suite," arrives in New York.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 7, 1777; Kemble's Jour., 123–24.

" Among general orders issued from "Head Quarters, Camp at Richmond, Staten Island," are several regarding the transportation of troops back to New York, including this: "The want of Tonnage for Horses occasions the Necessity of leaving the 17th. Dragoons to follow the Army as soon as proper Transports can be procured; they are to encamp by Troops on York Island, extending from Greenwich to Bloomingdale; their dismounted [soldiers] along with them, Encamped in the same manner."

" "This evening Returned a party of our Provincial Troops that had been detached from King's Bridge [see Je 29] and brought in a Captain, one Subaltern, and 23 more Rebels."—Montresor's Jour., 426.

2 A letter from a New Yorker to a correspondent in London contains the following: "Our Affairs in this Country seem now to be just as bad as they can well be. The Rebel Washington plays his Game most admirably. Till lately I never thought that Americans had either Common Sense or common Spirit. I am convinced now they have both, in Spite of Parliamentary Assertions. England, I can tell you, was never in so ticklish a Situation."—St. James's Chron., Ag 12–14, 1777.

July 2 This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 41—see Jl 12, 1776), entitled "View from Staten Island 2d July 1777."

" Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "Many came to town daily; so that it grows quite full again for the present. The rebels have now the whole Jerseys again except Powless's Hook; and we are just where we were last year, after the being in possession of N. Y. Island. 'Tis very discouraging, may the Lord pity this poor country."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 127.

3 Gen. Howe, now in New York, directs, among the general orders of the day, that, "On application at the Donation Store, Wills's Wharf, Albany Pier, each British and Hessian Battalion may receive three pipes of Madeira Wine at £28.10 per pipe, which is to be paid for on delivery."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 460.

" During the celebration in Philadelphia of the first "Anniversary of the Independence of the United States of America," the "Hessian band of music, taken in Trenton the 26th of December last [q. v.], attended, and heightened the festivity with some fine performances suited to the joyous occasion, while a corps of British deserters taken into the service of the continent by the State of Georgia, being drawn up before the door [of the banquet room], filled up the intervals with feux de joie."—Penn. Gaz., Jl 9, 1777.

4 Kemble records: "Major General Vaughan to Command at Kings Bridge . . . Major General Jones to go to Canada. Lieut. Gen. Clinton to Command (as said) upon the Island of New York, and posts depending. . . . [see Jl 10].

" "Find from the general tenor of Officers Conversation that they are not well pleased with Affairs, but they often speak without thought. . . . "—Kemble's Jour., 124, 461.

" "Government actually sent over Bread to New York for the Service of the Navy, whereas last War they received all they wanted while there from Contractors in America."—St. James's Chron., Jl 3–5, 1777.

5 The "Liverpool," convoying six merchantmen, arrives with Sir Henry Clinton (see Ap 19) and his suite on board.—Montresor's Jour., 427.

" "There is this day a mighty Rideing with ye Inhabitants, down to ye Narrows after their Horses which had been drafted into ye Kings Service, but it seems they meet with but poor Success, for most of them come back with as few Horses as they went."— Fitch's Diary (MS.).

" A soldier is sentenced by court martial to receive 1,000 lashes for desertion, but, "in consequence of certain want of form in Part of the Proceedings," Gen. Howe remits the punishment and orders the man to his duty.—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 463.

6 Eleven "Sail-victuallers," all armed, arrive from Cork.—Montresor's Jour., 427. See Jl 7.

7 "A Fleet from Cork so long expected, and several Vessels from London came in, but little News by either. . . . The Soldiers busy embarking, but no Knowledge yet where bound."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 39.

" John Holt, having suspended publication of his Journal in New York City in August, 1776 (q. v.), and removed to Kingston, begins to issue it in that place, without change of volume numbering, with the title of The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser (No. 1757). "The last Kingston issue was that of Oct. 13, 1777, no. 1771, and four days later the town was burned by the British. The paper was then removed to Poughkeepsie, where it was revived May 11, 1778" (q. v.).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 263; Early Newspapers, II: 424.

8 "The Infantry of the Army embarked from Staaten Island on board their transports for the Expedition."—Montresor's Jour., 427.

9 The council of safety at Kingston, having examined the poll-lists and ballots (returned by the sheriffs of the respective counties) of the several elections held for governour and lieutenant-governour of this state, and for senators, announces the number of votes cast for the candidates. They declare that George Clinton has been elected governour and Pierre van Cortlandt, lieutenant-governour, and that certain senators have been elected. A letter is addressed to Clinton requesting him to come to Kingston "with all convenient speed" to take the oath of office.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 990.

1777 July 9 "The British and Hessian Grenadiers embarked, as also the 16th Light Dragoons, leaving for the defence of Staaten Island the 52nd and 2 of Hessians encamped in the rear of the Redoubt, round the watering place and the Provincials on the West side of the Island under the Command of Major-General Skinner. . . ."—Montresor's Jour., 427. (This journal, for this period, contains many items, regarding the forces and defences of Staten Island).

Under the same date, Gaine records: "The Embarkation I believe is near over, all but the Troops that are to remain on Staten-Island, and the Row Gallies are to take their Station round from Amboy to the Kills."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 39. See also the embarkation orders in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 455–66.

10 Gen. Howe orders that "Lieut-Gen. Sir Henry Clinton, in the Absence of the Commander in Chief, will take upon him the Command of New York Island and posts depending, of King's Bridge, Long Island, Staten Island, Paulus Hook, and Rhode Island."—Order-Book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 468.

11 William Eddis writes from New York: "On entering the Narrows [on board the "Emerald" from Annapolis], my mind was forcibly struck with the splendid appearance of a numerous, and formidable equipment. A grand fleet, attended with innumerable transports, arranged in their several divisions, lay at anchor off Staten Island. The island itself was covered with troops ready for embarcation, and every appearance indicated an expedition of the most decisive consequence. . . ."—Letters from Am., 418. For the departure of the grand fleet, see Jl 23.

14 Montresor accompanies Gen. Clinton to the Narrows and the works on Staten Island. "Signals made from the Eagle for the whole fleet to prepare to sail."—Montresor's Jour., 427.

" Clinton goes to Kingsbridge (to occupy the Morris house).—Kemble's Jour., 125. See Jl 18.

" "An Act to prevent hunting with Fire-Arms in the City of New-York, and the Liberties thereof," passed in 1763, is now published by order of Maj.-Gen. Pigot, commandant in New York.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 14, 1777.

15 Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones is appointed "Commandant of New York and Posts depending," in the absence of Maj.-Gen. Pigot.—Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 471.

" Capt. Robertson records that the British at New York "Received Intelligence of G[l] Washington having moved from Morris Town towards the N. River——& A Letter from G[l] Burgoyne dated 2[d] July that He had invested Tyconderoga. The Messenger s[d] it was taken two days after."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

16 The frigate "Brilliant" arrives from London with 200 artillerymen. The last of the fleet from Cork also arrives.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 40.

17 "This Evening Lord Howe went down to the Fleet at Staten-Island, in order to proceed on the intended Expedition."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 40. The objective point was the Chesapeake.—Montresor's Jour., 428. The expedition sailed from the Hook on July 23 (q. v.).

" To prevent cargoes of vessels, which are daily arriving, "from being clandestinely conveyed to the Rebels," Gen. Howe appoints Andrew Elliot by proclamation "to be Superintendant of all Imports and Exports to and from the Islands of New York, Long Island, and Staten Island (Transports, Victuallers, and Prizes excepted)." He orders that all masters of merchant ships, immediately upon arrival, shall "make Entry of the Vessels, and deliver in proper Manifests of their Cargoes, on Oath, at the Superintendant's Office." Any goods found on board, not entered in the manifests, "shall be seized and forfeited;" nor shall ship masters "break bulk" without written permission from the superintendent or his deputy, and any part of the cargo "so landed" shall be seized and forfeited, and the master held liable to imprisonment. All "Rum, Spirits, Sugar, Molasses, and Salt, imported, are to be stored at the Expence of the Owners or Importers, in Warehouses by them to be provided, under the Inspection of the said Superintendant or his Officers, with whom the Keys are to be lodged, who will grant Permissions when the same or any Part thereof is to be sold for the use of the Army, Navy, or Inhabitants, such Permission always specifying the Quantity, and to whom the same disposed."

Similar permission is required before goods are laden on any vessel, excepting those in the king's service; and it is ordered "That no Ship or Vessel (such as are in His Majesty's Service excepted), shall leave this Port, or its Dependencies, until the Master shall deliver in, at the Superintendant's Office, a Manifest, on Oath, specifying the Quantity and Quality of the Goods, and by whom shipped, together with the Permissions granted for the loading of the Vessels, as above directed." The superintendent is then to attach to a certified copy of the manifest a certificate stating that no fraud has been committed and that the requirements of the proclamation have been complied with, with permission to leave the port. This applies also to vessels in ballast. Forfeiture of vessel and cargo, and imprisonment of the master, are the penalties inflicted for failure to comply with this regulation. July 17

In order to prevent supplies from being conveyed to the "Rebels" by way of Long Island and Staten Island, it is ordered "that no Vessel or small Craft whatever shall carry from the Island of New York to Long Island or Staten Island, at one Time, without Permission from the Superintendant's Office, any larger Quantities of Rum, Spirits, Sugar, or Molasses, than one Barrel of each, and of Salt four Bushels, nor of any other kind of Merchandize more than may be judged sufficient for the Use of one Family," under the same liability for forfeiture and imprisonment as specified before. Any person giving "Information to the Superintendant, or his Deputies, of any Goods or Merchandize shipped, or imported, contrary to the Tenor of this Proclamation, so that the Person or Persons offending can be detected, such Informer or Informers shall be entitled to one Moiety of the Value arising from the Sale of the Goods or Merchandize so forfeited."

The superintedent, his deputy, and those acting under them, are paid salaries; "no Fees are to [be] offered on any account whatever."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 21, 1777. The provisions of this proclamation were continued by later proclamations on Sept. 26, 1778, and Oct. 24, 1780, the latter being issued by Sir Henry Clinton.—Royal Gaz., O 28, 1780. The provisions prohibiting the conveyance of salt to Long Island and Staten Island were renewed by orders issued on Aug. 7, Nov. 15 and Nov. 18.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 11, N 17 and 24, 1777.

The day's orders, "On Board the Eagle Man of War, off Staten Island," are: "An Ensign at the Mizen Topmast Head of the Adjutant General's Ship, the Roman Emperor, will be the Signal for all Majors of Brigade, Aid-de-Camps, and Adjutants to receive orders on Board of said Ship. 18

"Upon the Signal being made for dressing of Provision in order to land, two days' full allowance of Pork, four days' bread, and one day's Rum, is to be prepared to be taken on shore.

.

"As there is great Reason to hope that the Inhabitants of the Country to be taken possession of [Philadelphia] are Much inclined to return to their allegiance, The Commander in Chief thinks it incumbent upon him Once more to declare to the Troops, that he is determined upon no account whatsoever to pardon any man found guilty of Plundering, or being absent without leave from his Post.

"The Provost Martial has received Warrants to execute upon the Spot any Soldier or follower of the Army detected in Depredation of this sort. . . .

"All Officers and Soldiers of the Troops Embarked are to be on board their respective Ships this Evening at Gun firing, after which no person whatever is to go on shore without particular leave of the Commander in Chief. . . .

"All signals to be observed either with or without a Gun."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 472–73.

Further orders are entered on July 22. The fleet sailed from Sandy Hook on July 23 (q. v.) for Chesapeake Bay, being at sea until Aug. 23, when orders were re-commenced in Kemble's order-book.—Ibid., 474.

" Kemble, at the Morris house, records: "The Commander-in-Chief having Embarked the preceeding Evening, I came here this day to attend Gen. Sir Henry Clinton, being ordered for that Service Officially. Sir William Howe had upon this Service upwards of 13 thousand fighting Men."—Kemble's Jour., 125.

" Gen. De Heister sails for England, and the Hessian command devolves upon Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen.—Montresor's Jour., 428.

19 Kemble records in his journal: "Went to Kings Bridge, and Visited the Posts, No. 4, 7, and 8. Redoubts begun, but not finished."—Kemble's Jour., 125.

20 "The Fleet in Part went out of the Narrows: The most of the Men of War remain at the Island with Lord Howe."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 41

" A New Yorker writes: "There are frequent Desertions from 1777 July 23 the Continental Troops; about ten Days ago 21 came into Town, with their Arms and Accoutrements. . . .

"Report has doubtless starved us in this Garrison six Months ago; but I desire to be thankful my Stomach gives it the Lie. Our Markets are tolerably supplied with Meat, and of pretty good Quality, though dear. We have Plenty of excellent Fish, and Abundance of Vegetables, at a moderate Price."—St. James's Chron., S 27–30, 1777.

21 "The Men of War went down, with Lord Howe, and remain at the Hook, but cannot get out for want of a Wind."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 41.

23 Howe's army leaves New York by sea.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Kemble's Jour., 474; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 41; Winsor, VI: 379. Smith says that Washington moved on the 25th "from my Father's Farm in Scenemuck Clove [Smith's Clove in Calendar Washington's Corr. with Cont. Cong., 162–63] to Philadelphia upon advice that Gen[l] Howe's army of 16000 had sailed for that Place."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 195.

" Major-Gen. Valentine Jones, commandant in N. Y. City, issues a proclamation prohibiting small boats passing over to or from the Jersey shore without a pass. Offenders will be imprisoned and the boats confiscated.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 28, 1777; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 645–46.

26 Wm. Smith, writing in his diary at Livingston Manor (see Je 3), says: "Mr. Livingston's children are literally bare Foot. We have tried a month past to prevent it but not a Shoe maker will ingage to supply them. Some have no Leather. Others are forced from Home or occupied for themselves or unwilling to work for Paper money—we have for several weeks past bought Provisions with Gold or Silver and without it must have starved. The Country People will not barter even for Tea."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 195.

29 The body of Mrs. Franklin, wife of the governour of New Jersey, who died the day before, is buried in the chancel of St. Paul's Church.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 4, 1777.

30 Brig.-Gen. Geo. Clinton takes the oath of office as governour of the state, at Kingston.—N. Y. Jour., Ag 4, 1777. The council of safety of this state issues a proclamation (printed by John Holt, state printer), declaring Clinton governour.—See original broadside in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., 7052).

Aug. 5 In a message to the council of safety, meeting at Kingston, Gov. Clinton states that, while he wishes to prorogue the legislature until Aug. 20, this "cannot be done in the accustomed form, for want of a great seal;" he therefore asks the council regarding the propriety of proroguing the senate and assembly by proclamation, under his own "hand and seal at arms." The council approves of this method, and the proclamation is issued accordingly.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 1027. For other occasions when the governour used his private seal for official business, in the absence of a great seal, see Wilde's Civic Ancestry of N. Y., 52–53; and for a reproduction of this seal, see ibid., Pl. 13, opp. p. 54. Regarding the first great seal of the state, see Mr 16, 1778.

8 A report is current that "Gen[ll] Burgoine with his Army, are at a place call'd y[e] New City 10 miles above Albana, but this Rep[t] as yet, seems to gain but little Credit."—Fitch's Diary (MS.). On Aug. 14, he wrote that Burgoyne was said to be at Albany, and to have "lately had an Engagement of consequence, with y[e] Americans, which prov'd successful."—Ibid.

11 A dealer advertises his shop as at No. 986 Water St., "opposite the Crane."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 11, 1777.

" Mention is made in an advertisement of "his Majesty's hospital" at Harlem.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 11, 1777.

12 Charles Carroll of Carrollton writes from his Maryland manor to Benj. Franklin in Paris: "We have not yet confederated, but almost every member of Congress is anxious for a Confederacy, being sensible that a Confederacy formed on a rational plan will certainly add much weight and consequence to the United States collectively, and give great security to each individually, and a credit also to our paper money; but I despair of such a Confederacy as ought and would take place if little and partial interests could be laid aside."—Rowland, Life and Corresp. of Chas. Carroll of Carrollton, I: 209. The Articles of Confederation were adopted on Nov. 15 (q.v.).

15 Capt. Robertson records that he has been "for three Days employ[ed] In taking a Sketch of the ground where the Battle of Brandewine was fought."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See S 11.

16 Gen. Lincoln's official report of the battle of Bennington tells of the capture of about 650 of the enemy with 80 wounded and about two hundred slain. The American losses were between twenty and thirty dead and fifty wounded. He describes the battle.—From the official report to congress, published by order of the council, Aug. 16, and preserved in Emmet Coll., 8535, in N. Y. P. L.

" Wm. Eddis, writing from "York Island," thus describes the city: ". . . In several streets, trees are regularly planted, which afford a grateful shelter during the intense heat of the summer. The buildings are generally of brick and many are erected in a stile of elegance. The situation is said to be perfectly healthful, but fresh water is so very scarce, that the purchase of this essential article is attended with a considerable expense.

"Notwithstanding the war, New York is plentifully supplied from Long Island with provisions of all kinds. It must, however, be confessed, that almost every article bears an exorbitant price, when compared with that of former happy times. Both the north and east rivers abound with a great variety of excellent fish. Lobsters, of a prodigious size, were, till of late, caught in vast numbers, but it is a fact, surprising as it may appear, that, since the late incessant cannonading, they have entirely forsaken the coast, not one having been taken, or seen, since the commencement of hostilities.

"Into this place and neighbourhood, lobsters were introduced by accident; the province having been formerly supplied with them by the fishermen of New England, who brought them in well-boats, one of which, in passing Hell-Gate, striking against a rock, separated, and the lobsters, which escaped into their proper element, multiplied so exceedingly, that in a short time the markets were amply and reasonably supplied. . . .

". . . The new church is a noble structure: the college is spacious and convenient: the barracks are well built, and well accommodated. The Dutch churches, with several places of worship for Protestants of different persuasions, reflect great credit on the genius of their architects; and the general stile which predominates in this city, impresses the mind with an idea of neatness and taste.

"The numerous fortifications thrown up by the American troops in the vicinity of the capital, appear to be constructed with judgment and attention. Why they were so precipitately abandoned is difficult to ascertain: indeed the whole island forms a continued chain of batteries and intrenchments, which seemed to indicate the most resolute opposition.

.

"I have, in the course of my excursions, traversed the whole of York Island, and have even attended the relief of the piquet guard without Kingsbridge, which is the advanced post of the British army. It is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the interesting and noble objects which, in every direction, strike the curious and inquisitive eye. From the city of New York, to the extent of the island, we beheld a regular continuation of formidable intrenchments. The troops appear animated in the service; and, surely, if their operations are properly conducted, the event cannot but effectually re-establish our ancient happy constitution on a permanent foundation."—Letters from Am. (1792), 422–30.

A music school is opened at 43 Maiden Lane.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 18, 1777. 18

Col. Fitzgerald of the continental army, in a letter to Charles Carroll, says: "General Clinton remains on York Island, and from the best accounts we can get has not 3000 effective men with him, most of them Hessians. They are building redoubts and breastworks all along Harlem River, and appear very apprehensive of a visit from us."—Rowland, Life and Corresp. of Chas. Carroll of Carrollton, I: 214. 19

"The Rebels Attacked Staten Island, Long Island, and made a Diversion with about 1,000 Men, under the Command of Putnam, in the Kings Bridge Quarter."—Kemble's Jour., 127. Kemble records full particulars.—Ibid., 127–30. 22

Dr. Elias Cornelius, an American surgeon captured the day before by the British at East Chester, describes in his journal his march in captivity to the "Provost Jail" in New York. He says, in part: "As we came into the town, the Hesians, Negroes, and children insulted, stoned and abused us in every way they could think of. At that time two of our men had become so fatigued that we were obliged to carry them. In this way we were led through half the streets, as a show. At last we were brought before Gen Jones who ordered us to the Sugar House which formerly went by the name of Livingston's Sugar House which was the Prison the private 23

KIP'S BAY, SHOWING THE BRITISH TROOPS CROSSING THE RIVER ON SEPT. 15, 1776; DRAWN BY ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON ON AUG. 17, 1778, PROBABLY FROM A SKETCH MADE ON THE EARLIER DATE. SEE PP. 994, 1011 et seq., 1073.

1777 Aug. 23 Soldiers were kept in [see L. M. R. K., III: 963; and 1754]. Here one Walley a Seargent of the 20th Regt. of Irish troops in the British Service, had the charge of the prisoners. This man was the most barbarous cruel man that ever I saw he drove us into the Sugar house yard like so many hogs, from there he ordered us into the Sugar House which was the dirtiest and most disagreeable place that I ever saw and the water in the pump was not better than that in the Dock. The top of the House was open to the weather, so that when it rained the water ran along and through every floor and on that account it was impossible for us to keep dry." Continuing, he describes some of the cruel treatment he received from Sergeant Walley.

The next day he was taken to the "Provost Guard," where he was "taken down to a Dungeon." He describes the cruel neglect in this place also, where he was kept until Sept. 20 (q.v.).—Jour. of Dr. Elias Cornelius (1903), 5–7.

25 According to an advertisement, the "Main Guard" is located in Broad St.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 25, 1777.

28 There is a report that Gen. Howe has taken possession of Baltimore.—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

Autumn Col. Roger Morris, owner of the Morris house (the well-known "Jumel Mansion" of to-day), which he built in 1765 (q.v., Je 13), returns to New York from England, whither he fled on May 4, 1775 (q.v.). A place is found for him in the military government of the city.—Shelton, The Jumel Mansion, 20, 21.

Sept. 1 Fitch writes: "a little after 7 this morning, I observ'd a very brisk firing of Small Arms, much in y^e^ Direction of Hellgate from this place; I know nothing of y^e^ occasion of this fire, but conclude it is most likely y^e^ consequence of Fighting: this firing was observ'd by some to continue most of y^e^ forenoon."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

2 "We this day learn y^t^ Col: Allen & Capt: Bissel are both in y^e^ new City Hall, under y^e^ care of y^e^ Provoe; & y^t^ Col: Allen hath sent word to his friends y^t^ he is exalted to y^e^ 3^rd^ Heavens; by which we understand he is Assign'd y^e^ 3^rd^ Loft in y^t^ famous Building."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

6 "A Letter from New York informs us, that Governor Tryon has for some Time past held a private Correspondence with two Officers of Washington's Army, by which Means he was generally enabled to give Sir William Howe an early Account of the Motions of the Rebels."—St. James's Chron., S 4–6, 1777.

10 It is resolved by the council of safety "That His Excellency the Governor, and Chancellor of this State, be requested to devise and order to be made, a great seal for this State, and that in the mean time the seal of the Governor be the great seal of this State."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 1059. See, further, Mr 16, 1778.

" "We this day hear a Rep^t^ (various ways) of an Important Action between y^e^ two Northern Armys, which is said to have termenated greatly to y^e^ advantage of y^e^ Royallists."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

" Notice is given by the barrack-master general, Geo. Clerk, whose office is in John St., to "such inhabitants of this town as are in possession of houses, the property of people in rebellion (or supposed to be so), to provide themselves with others before the first of November next." This is to supply the troops with quarters.—N. Y. Merc., S 15, 1777; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 647.

11 The battle of Brandywine occurs. Kemble records by regiments, etc. the number of British killed, wounded, and missing, showing a total of 583, including Hessians.—Kemble's Jour., 135, 136–37. See Ag 15.

" "At Night the 57th. 63d. Detached Corps and Prince Charles's Regiment Embarked and crossed the North River to Fort Lee. The 7th. 26th. and 71st. with a Squadron of Light Dragoons, Marched to New York; supposed to go over to Paulus Hook. He describes the action in New Jersey."—Kemble's Jour., 132–33.

13 "We this day hear a Rep^t^ of several large divisions of y^e^ Kings Army's landing again in y^e^ Jerseys; & various Ac^ts^ are given of their Success, but none seem to carry any great degree of correctness or certainty as yet."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

15 "It is this day 12 months since y^e^ Americans Evacuated N. York."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

" "The remainder of the Cork Fleet, about twelve in number, came up To-day under Convoy of the British King."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 47.

" Maj.-Gen. Valentine Jones issues a proclamation stating that he is informed "that many persons take upon themselves to beat and abuse the people employed in the ferry boats between this city and Brooklyn, under pretence of delays committed by them, with the said boats." He forbids such conduct in the future, and orders that complaints of delays, etc. be made to him.—N. Y. Merc., S 22, 1777. Sept. 15

There is wanted for the hospital "a quantity of old sheets," for which "good allowance" will be given "at the King's medicine store, on the Old slip wharf."—N. Y. Merc., S 15, 1777. "

Congress adjourns from Philadelphia to Lancaster, Pa., on account of the approach of the British.—Jour. of Cong., II: 270. See S 30. 18

Dr. Elias Cornelius, continuing his narrative of his imprisonment in the provost jail (see Ag 23), states in his journal that, on this day, "Seargent Keith (the Provost Martial) came to the dungeon and took Capt Chatham, and Travis, and myself, and led us to the upper part of the prison, where I found my friends that were also prisoners, Viz, Ethan Allen, Major Williams, Paine & Wells and others. Allen was made prisoner near Montreal, in the beginning of the war. He was put on board a man of war, and kept chained flat on his back in the hole six months. He also told me he had twice been carried on shore in England to be hung, but was reprieved. He was likewise taken on shore in Ireland and at Halifax for the same purpose. After this he was brought to New York, where for a short time he had his parole, it was taken from him, and he put in the provost jail, as there was an antipathy against him. I left him in this goal on Jan 7, 1778. [See also S 2, 1777]. . . . While I was in this place, we were not allowed to speak to any friend, not even out of the window, I have frequently seen women beaten with canes and ramrods who have come to the Prison windows to speak to their Husbands, Sons or Brothers; and officers taken and put in the dungeon just for asking for cold water. Our provision was the same as in the dungeon with the exception of dried Peas, we however had no fire to cook them. . . ." He describes the manner of receiving the news of Burgoyne's surrender to Gates (see O 16), and the joy it caused in the prison.—Jour. of Dr. Elias Cornelius (1903), 8–9. See also O 12, 1777; Ja 9, 1778. 20

The anniversary of the king's coronation is celebrated. At twelve o'clock the guns on Fort George were fired; at one o'clock "the Colours of the Men of War and Vessels in the Harbour were displayed," and the guns of the fort fired a feu de joie. An "elegant Dinner was prepared at Loosely and Elm's Tavern, where a Number of Gentlemen dined . . ., and a Number of loyal Toasts were given. . . ." In the evening, "the Illuminations, consisting of upwards of 100 Spermaceti Candles, with the Statue of his Majesty on Horseback, crowned with Laurels, standing on a Pedestal, and Several other Figures, much surpassed any Thing of the Kind before exhibited."—N. Y. Merc., S 29, 1777. Cf. 22, 1780. 22

A published notice states that apprentices are wanted for "a ship of force." Applications are to be made to "Messrs Collins, at their store Kings Arms, upper Dock Street."—N. Y. Merc., S 22, 1777. "

A fleet arrives from England with about 3,000 soldiers and the following passengers: Maj.-Gen. Robertson, Maj.-Gen. Wilson, Maj.-Gen. Patterson, the Marquis of Lindsay, Lord Cathcart, Count Gabrouskie, Capt. Williamson of the Royal Artillery, James Rivington (see My 10 and N 23, 1775), etc. The fleet brings "167,000 l. Sterling in solid Coin." On this day also, the sloop "Dispatch" from "Chesepeak" comes into the harbour with dispatches from Gen. Howe. 25

In the evening, the "House of Loosley and Elms, Kings Head Tavern, was elegantly illuminated, to testify the Joy the true Sons of Freedom had on the Arrival of Mr. Rivington from England [see Ja 10, 1776]. This Gentleman, with unparallel'd Fortitude, having nobly disdain'd to Usher to the World any inflammatory Pieces, which might be productive of introducing Anarchy, instead of Constitutional Authority, into this once happy Country, felt, in the severest Degree, the Rage of popular Delusion.—Liberty he always firmly adher'd to, Licentiousness from his Soul he ever detested.—A Person in Honour to free Press, extemporary pronounced this:

"Rivington is arriv'd—let ev'ry Man
"This injur'd Person's Worth confess;
"His loyal Heart abhor'd the Rebel's Plan,
"And boldly dar'd them with his Press."

In the evening, after the arrival of the fleet, "a Duel, with Swords, 1777 Sept. 25 was fought at Hull's [City Tavern, 115 Broadway], between the Honorable J. Talmash (Brother to Earl Dysert) Commander of the Zebra, and Capt. Pennington (Son to Sir Ralph Pennington) of the Guards, who came Passenger in the Zebra; in which the former received a Wound . . . of which he expired immediately; the latter was wounded in 7 different Parts, but is like to do well. Captain Talmash's Corpse was decently interred in Trinity Church Yard last Saturday Evening" (S 27).—N. Y. Merc., S 29, 1777; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 48.

" "When the last Packet left New-York Provisions it is said were so scarce in that City that the Streets were daily filled with Poor begging from House to House for Sustenance."—St. James's Chron., S 23–25, 1777.

26 The British take possession of Philadelphia.—N. Y. Merc., O 6, 1777. This news reached New York by Oct. 1, for on that day Jabez Fitch wrote: "The currant News of y^e^ day seems to be, y^t^ Philedephia is Taken by y^e^ Kings Troops commanded by S^r^ W^m^ Howe."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

29 There is published at New York a letter from Maj.-Gen. Gates to Lieut.-Gen. Burgoyne, dated Sept. 2, describing the massacre of Miss Jane McRea and others by Indians at Fort Edward on July 23.—N. Y. Jour., S 29, 1777; Winsor, VI: 627. The same news, in a letter dated Aug. 4, was published in Philadelphia on Aug. 12.—Penn. Jour., Ag 12, 1777. This incident had a powerful influence in arousing the colonists in opposition to the British and their Indian allies.

30 Congress having held its last session at Lancaster (see S 18) on Sept. 27, now meets at York, Pa. Here it continued until July 2, 1778, when it reassembled in Philadelphia, which the British evacuated on June 18 (q.v.)—Jour. of Cong., II: 601, 616.

" The prisoners on Long Island learn of "an Express lately coming into N. York, who brings an ac^t^ of an Action between y^e^ Gen^ll^s Gates & Burgoyne, in which it is said y^t^ y^e^ former had 750 men kill'd on y^e^ spot, & 400 made prisoners."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

Oct. 3 "This day, at five in the Afternoon, 57th. 63d. Fanning's, and Bayard's Provincial Corps marched and Embarked under the Command of General Tryon in Spiking Devils Creek; the 7th. 26th. and 52d. having Embarked in Transports the day before."—Kemble's Jour., 133. Their destination was Forts Montgomery and Clinton, which they carried by storm on the 6th. Kemble records the incidents.—Ibid., 134, 138.

" Tryon writes from "King's Bridge Camp" to Germain that he has "raised a Troop of light Horse from the Westchester Militia to consist of fifty private Men to serve during the Campaign." Their captain is James De Lancey, who is also colonel of the militia of Westchester Co.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 717–18.

He advises that "The appointment of a Lieut^t^ Gov^r^ to this Province from the present appearances of Public affairs . . . may be postponed." Moreover, he knows no one to recommend, "while no Emolument or Salary is affixed to the Character."—Ibid.

4 The battle of Germantown occurs. Kemble records, by regiments, etc., the number of British killed, wounded, and missing, totalling 534.—Kemble's Jour., 137.

" James Rivington, having returned on Sept. 25 (q.v.) to New York from London, whither he fled after his printing-press here was destroyed by the Sons of Liberty on Nov. 23, 1775 (q.v.), renews publication of his newspaper, with the title Rivington's New-York Gazette: or the Connecticut, Hudson's River, New-Jersey, and Quebec Weekly Advertiser, giving it the next consecutive number, No. 137.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 487. See, further, O 18. Gaine comments upon it thus: "This Day has been entirely engrossed by the Publication of Mr. Rivington's Paper, which came out about 12 o' Clock, and Surprised almost every Body. The Fleet sailed up the N. R. To Day."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 50.

5 "Col. James De Lancey with 60 of his West-Chester Light Horse, went from Kings-Bridge to the White Plains, where they took from the Rebels 44 barrels of flour and two Ox teams, near 100 head of black cattle, and 300 fat sheep and hogs."—N. Y. Merc., O 13, 1777.

6 According to an advertisement, "the King's Stables" adjoin the store of Price and Salmon, No. 20 Queen St., above the Fly Market.—N. Y. Merc., O 6, 1777.

8 A New York broadside, printed by Rivington, announces that "Early this Morning Lieutenant Colonel Innes, Inspector General of Provincial Forces, arrived from Fort Montgomery with the agreeable News, that, on the Evening of the 6th Instant, that Fort, with Fort Clinton and its Dependencies, were taken by Storm by his Majesty's Troops under the Command of Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Clinton. . . ."—From broadside sold Mr 25, 1898, by Stan. V. Henkels, Phila. (facsimile printed in supp. to Cat. No. 809). The garrison of the fort were brought as prisoners to New York on the 11th (q.v.). Oct. 8

The council of safety appoints a committee of five to "cause all the public records which were transported to this place [Kingston] from the city of New-York, . . . to be put into proper packages or chests, and conveyed to Rochester," and orders that Samuel Bayard remain with them "till the further order of this Council, or future Legislature of this State."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 1066. According to a resolution of the provincial convention on April 28, the public records and treasury of the state, at Esopus Landing, were to be guarded by 200 men, to be raised for the purpose.—Ibid., 904. See Ja 3, 1783. 10

This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 40—see Jl 12, 1776), entitled "View of Morisinia, Haarlem, Montresor's & Buchannan's Islands, w^th^ Part of the sound, taken from our lines near M^c^Gowan's house—10 Oct^r^ 1777." "

The American soldiers, with their commander, Col. William Livingston, who were captured by the British forces at the fall of Fort Montgomery (see O 8), arrive in New York, having been brought down the Hudson River by ship. Maj. Abraham Leggett, who was in the company, kept a journal of his experiences while a prisoner. He recorded that the privates were sent to the Sugar House and the officers to the main guard house in the old city hall at the head of Broad Street. He further says: "all this Time we had nothing to Eat, but that night Col'l Wil'm Livingston sent a note to Mr Simons who Kept a Public House at the Corner of nassau St. By that means we was supply'd for that time."—Narrative of Maj. Abraham Leggett, ed. by Charles I. Bushnell (N. Y., 1865), 17–20. 11

The American prisoners of war, who arrived in New York on Oct. 11, are removed from the sugar-house prison and sent to the new jail of the provost guard. See also Ag 23 and S 20. As they are marched through the streets they are hooted at as vile rebels by many of the people. Maj. Abraham Leggett writes in his journal: "When we Got to Gard House we was Divided—12 of us was shut in the north corner room on the First floor and 13 was Put up on the second floor East Corner Room—after we was Shut in the Keeper Came In and Search'd and Took Everything we had about us not leaving a pen knife and on Wednesday they Threw in through the Hole in the Door Some Raw salt Beef and a little Damaged sea bread—as soon as the bread fell on the floor it Took legs and Ran in all Directions—so full of life—the flower was Very Filthy—more like Hog sty than anything else."—Narrative of Maj. Abraham Leggett, ed. by Charles I. Bushnell (N. Y., 1865), 20–21. 12

The quarterly meeting of the Marine Society is held at the "House of the Widow Doran."—N. Y. Merc., O 6, 1777. This tavern stood at what was then No. 49 Wall St.—See F 5, 1780. Mrs. Doran was the widow of Thomas Doran, who conducted a tavern on Brownjohn's wharf.—See Ja 15, 1770. 13

Kingston, Ulster Co., is burned by the British.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 1; N. Y. Merc., N 3, 1777; regarding the date, cf. N. Y. Packet, O 23, 1777. 16

Gen. Burgoyne, defeated by Gen. Gates, signs "Articles of Convention" at Saratoga. The original document is with the Gates Papers, in the N. Y. H. S., and was published in the society's Bull., Oct., 1919. There is a copy in the Emmet Coll. (No. 4367), in the N. Y. P. L. See also O 17. "

Burgoyne and his large force formally surrender at Saratoga to Maj.-Gen. Gates. The articles of capitulation (see O 16) were printed in Rivington's Loyal Gaz., N 8, 1777, and in the N. Y. Merc., N 10, 1777. A return of the army surrendered by Burgoyne is in the Emmet Coll. (No. 4372), in the N. Y. P. L. Kemble received the news in New York the next day.—Kemble's Jour., 139. Later, he recorded particulars, received from Lord Petersham.—Ibid., 142. See also Creasy's Decisive Battles, chap. 13 17

After this surrender, the American soldiers imprisoned in New York noted some change of treatment at the hand of their jailors. Maj. Abraham Leggett writes in his journal that they got the news "In Prizen before the matter was Known in the City Except by Some of Higher officers—the way the news was Convaid to the Prison was in a Large Loaf of Bread—the statement on Paper and 1777 Oct. 17 Placed in a loaf and Baked and was Sent Colonel William Livingston who was Taken with us—as soon as that was Read in the Congress Room, the whole Prizen Resounded with three Cheers—the Keeper was alarm'd with Such an uproar as he Call'd it—Hasten'd to the second floor to know what was the uproar—then He was Inform'd —he denide it and Said it was—D——d Rebel lie—after this was fully known we was offer'd our Parlows."—Narrative of Abraham Leggett, ed. by Charles I. Bushnell (N. Y., 1865), 21–22.

18 With the issue of this date (No. 139), Rivington changes the title of his newspaper (see O 4) to Rivington's New York Loyal Gazette.—Early Newspapers, II: 428. See, further, D 13.

" Kemble complains that "younger Majors" are "every day made Lieutenant Colonels," while he still remains a deputy-adjutant-general.—Kemble's Jour., 140. See, however, My 21, 1778.

22 In a letter to Germain, Gen. Howe expresses a desire to resign his command: "From the little attention, my Lord, given to my recommendations since the commencement of my command, I am led to hope that I may be relieved from this very painful service, wherein I have not the good fortune to enjoy the necessary confidence and support of my superiors, but which I conclude will be extended to Sir Henry Clinton, my presumptive successor, or to such other servant as the King may be pleased to appoint. By the return therefore of the packet I humbly request I may receive his Majesty's permission to resign the command." He repeated his request in a letter of Nov. 30.—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 437–38, 443. For Germain's answer, see F 4, 1778.

" A meeting of the "Old Loyal Church and King Club" is announced for this date, to be held at "Burrow's Tavern, opposite the late Presbyterian Meeting-House."—Rivington's N. Y. Loyal Gaz., O 18, 1777. This was Brock's Tavern on Wall St.—See My 29, 1758.

24 Frederick the Great, in a letter to the Margrave of Brandenburg-Bayreuth, refuses to allow the latter's German mercenaries to cross his dominions on their way to embark for America.—Kapp, Der Soldatenhandel deutscher Fürsten nach Amerika (Berlin, 1874), 259.

25 "The Afternoon there was a great firing of Cannon at N. York, on ac^{t} of his Majestys Accession &c."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.).

" Kemble is informed that Gen. Vaughan has "been as far as Livingston Manor," and "burn't Livingston's House and some others."—Kemble's Jour., 140.

26 Gen. Vaughan, with the troops under his command, returns from Livingston Manor. Kemble notes confirmation of the accounts of Burgoyne's being "Prisoner with his Army," and some of the particulars. He adds: "After the Reinforcement is gone to Sir William Howe we shall have 6,000 Men to Defend this place (Kings Bridge) and its dependancies, exclusive of the Troops expected from Rhode Island,—one thousand."—Kemble's Jour., 141. Gaine's record is: ". . . The Troops [Gen. Vaughan's] that went up the North River returned this evening having been as high as Esopus."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 53.

27 "No Barracks thought of, or anything else, for the defence of Kings Bridge, Redoubts, &c.; the Season advances fast."—Kemble's Jour., 142.

" It appears by an advertisement of "Lost Horses," signed by the "Assist. Comissary of Horse, to the Royal Artillery," that the artillery stables were near St. Paul's Church.—N. Y. Merc., O 27, 1777.

28 The markets are "extreme bad."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 53.

29 "Thoughts of demolishing the Redoubts at Kings-Bridge, and confining our defences to the Bridges, and making a Strong Redoubt upon Laurel Hill, near Knyphausen Fort."—Kemble's Jour., 142.

30 "The Troops Embarked and ready to Sail for Sir William Howe, at Philadelphia, Vizt. 17th. Dragoons, 7th., 26th., and 63d. Regiments, Recruits and Convalescents of the Army, making about 4,000."—Kemble's Jour., 142.

Nov. 2 "This Morning about 17 Sail came up from Cork, 3 from England, some from the West-Indies, and the Nautillus, with her Tender and two Prizes."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 54.

4 British forces are now drawn together at Philadelphia, where Washington designs to destroy them. To keep as large a body of British as possible at New York, he directs Gen. Dickinson to make a feint in that direction by having boats collected, troops assembled, etc.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VI: 173.

9 Wm. Smith writes from Livingston Manor to the council of safety asking permission to go to New York City to look after some personal affairs and "to contribute towards abating the acrimony of the present war, and exciting to overtures of peace." His request was refused.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 1079. Nov. 9

" Kemble records in his journal: "Left Morris's House and came to Town; Sir Henry Clinton taken up his Quarters in Kennedy's House. . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 143. See Jl 18. For Morris house, and Kennedy house, see L. M. R. K., III: 951, 950.

11 A British officer on board the fleet off New York writes to a correspondent in London: "Our Spirits, which were much elevated by the Success of General Howe in Pennsylvania, and the Detachments up the North River, are now depressed with the News of the devoted Burgoyne and his brave Handful of Men, being lost to their Country in this Quarter. The Provincials are grown so mighty upon this Business, that their Army has increased amazingly; they are said to have about 12,000 Men encamped and quartered in the Villages, within a few Miles of King's Bridge, where General Clinton commands with about 8000, no Way apprehensive of their Superiority."—St. James's Chron., D 30, 1777—Ja 1, 1778.

" Kemble records: "Our Troops for the defence of this Quarter, Kings Bridge, McGowan's pass, New York, Paulus Hook, Long and Staten Islands, consist of 6,200 Rank and File, 720 upon Staten Island, 180 Paulus Hook, 330 Long Island; New York, Mc Gowan's, and Kings Bridge, 4,970, exclusive of Artillery and a Detachment of Light Horse."—Kemble's Jour., 143.

" "No less than 8000 Men have been raised in New-York and its Dependencies for Government, since the King's Forces have been in Possession of that City."—St. James's Chron., N 8–11, 1777.

13 A New Yorker writes to a friend in Liverpool: "Washington is collecting a large Force to drive General Howe out of Philadelphia; and Putnam to attack this City; it is said he has assured the People of Success in three or four Weeks. The only practicable Way of getting Possession of this City is, they must first reduce the Forts of King's Bridge, which is now put in proper Repair, and the Fort on Long and Staten Islands. The Militia in this City is embodied, wherein twenty Volunteer Companies are already forming. News is just come in Town of Putnam decamping on a sudden from before King's Bridge, owing, it is said, to an Order he received from Washington to give him all the Assistance in his Power."—St. James's Chron., Ja 1–3, 1778.

14 Washington writes to Sir Wm. Howe regarding an exchange of prisoners, saying, in part: "You call upon me to redress the grievances of several of your officers and men, who, you are pleased to say, 'you are well informed are most injuriously and unjustifiably loaded with irons.' If there is a single instance of a prisoner of war being in irons, I am ignorant of it; nor can I find on the most minute inquiry, that there is the least foundation for the charge. . . .

"Now we are upon the subject of grievances, I am constrained to observe, that I have a variety of accounts, not only from prisoners who have made their escape, but from persons who have left Philadelphia, that our private soldiers in your hands are treated in a manner shocking to humanity, and that many of them must have perished through hunger, had it not been for the charitable contributions of the inhabitants. . . . I would propose, that I may be allowed to send a suitable person into the city under the usual restrictions, to examine into the truth of them.

"I must also remonstrate against the cruel treatment and confinement of our officers. . . . I appeal to you to redress these several wrongs; and you will remember, whatever hardships the prisoners with us may be subjected to will be chargeable to you. At the same time it is but justice to observe, that many of the cruelties exercised towards prisoners are said to proceed from the inhumanity of Mr. Cunningham, provost-martial, without your knowledge or approbation. . . ."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VI: 193. For fuller references to Cunningham's atrocities, see O 28, 1776.

" Wm. Smith writes in his diary: "There has been a Mutiny among the Soldiery near Fishkill—Washington calls upon Putman [Putnam] for as Many as he can spare. . . . This Mutiny occasioned the late Application to Col^{o} L[ivingston] for Money upon Loan. M^{r} Hancock passed Peaks Kill lately for Boston. . . . He said there was Money coming on the Road for the Troops in this Quarter. . . . I believe M^{r} Washington's Affairs are distressing. If Putman [Putnam] weakens his army here the Spirit of Indepen-1777 N 14 dency will lose Ground this Winter in the Northern Colonies."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 195.

" Fitch writes: "Inform'd y^t^ Gen^ll^ Washington is kil'd & buried at Morris Town in N. Jersey, but yet I hope to hear of his having or being made y^e^ Subject of a speedy, a powerfull & a happy Resurrection."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

15 The continental congress adopts the "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union." These provide for the sovereignty and independence of each state, the number and election of delegates to congress, restraints upon the separate states, the manner of defraying public expenses, the powers of congress, and the method of voting.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IX: 907–28. The "Articles" were not ratified by all 13 states until Mar. 1, 1781 (q. v.). For a list of works in which these articles are published, as well as the debates and later views regarding them, see Winsor, VI: 274.

16 "It is this day twelve months since y^e^ memorable Surrendery of Fort Washington, when y^e^ number of Prisoners were so greatly augmented."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

17 Maj.-Gen. Jones issues a proclamation stating that it has been represented to him "that the boatmen and others who bring firewood to this city exact the most exorbitant prices for the same, and that unless some regulation be made, there will be no bounds to their extortion." To remedy this, he orders that "no more than Five Pounds currency shall be demanded for a cord of wall nut wood," and "Four Pounds a cord for any other wood." In case any of these wood carriers, "to distress the inhabitants," cease bringing wood at these prices, "their boats will be seized and given to proper persons to be employed in bringing wood to this City." To prevent "impositions on the part of the proprietors of wood, and their detaining the same from the boatmen," he orders that they shall sell "at a reasonable price." If they refuse, "their wood will be seized and confiscated," and they will be punished.—N. Y. Merc., N 24, 1777.

" Maj.-Gen. Jones publishes this notice: "The price of Fine Flour is regulated at Forty-five Shillings, New York Currency, per Hundred Weight.

"The Assized Bread will be regulated by the Mayor, agreeable to the above Price."—N. Y. Merc., N 24, 1777.

18 A New Yorker writes: "General Putnam, in the 72d Year of his Age, is encamped within twelve Miles of this City with 10,000 Men. We are all Hurry and Confusion, and hardly know what to do. We have 17,000 Military and Inhabitants in the City, but a great Number of them are not to be depended upon. The Ships are stationed to cover as much of the City as they can, but when the Frost sets in they will be of little Service as they will be easily burnt by the Provincials."—St. James's Chron., Ja 8–10, 1778.

" "The Sheds in the Redoubts at Kings Bridge nearly finished for the Guards—much wanted for the Comfort of the Soldiers."—Kemble's Jour., 144.

19 The commander-in-chief having "prompted the principal gentlemen, inhabitants of this city and refugees from other provinces to form themselves into independent companies, twenty of which are nearly completed," several of them parade "on the fields at the upper end of Broadway, headed by the Worshipful David Mathews, Esq." These companies "will greatly add to the strength of the city and relieve the King's troops, who may be employed elsewhere."—Rivington's N. Y. Loyal Gazette, N 22, 1777.

26 "This Night, between the hours of 12 and 2, a party of Rebels landed from Jersey at Bloomingdale, ransacked and burnt Brig. Gen. Delancey's House, using his Wife and Daughter extremely ill. The cause of this to be Ascribed to General Tryon, who had given Capt. Emmerick Instructions, on a late Excursion, to burn some Houses at Tarrytown. General (Rebel) Parsons expostulated in a Letter to Mr. Tryon on the subject, and wished him to deny his knowledge of what was done by Emmerick, but he would not do it."—Kemble's Jour., 144–45.

The newspaper reports of this occurrance are as follows: "On Wednesday Morning, the 26th. of November, a Party of Rebel Troops landed at Bloomendale, about Six Miles from this City, near Brigadier General De Lancey's, robbed and plundered his House of the most valuable Furniture and Money, set the House on Fire before Mrs. De Lancey, her two Daughters, and two other young Ladies could remove out of it, which was effected through the Flames, in only their Bed Dresses, when they were most cruelly insulted, beat, and abused, and what Money they had, taken from them; an Infant Grandchild in a most barbarous Manner thrown on the Ground; at last, in their Fright and Distress, they ran different Ways in the Woods, where they remained till Day-Light, exposed to every Inclemency. Five White Men were made Prisoners, and two Infant Children consumed in the Flames. The whole exhibited such a Scene of Savage Barbarity as is scarcely to be met with in History or Romance. Nov. 26

"The Rebels who committed the above Outrage, we hear, were a Party of about twenty Continental Troops, sent from Connecticut for no other Purpose than to destroy General De Lancey's House, with Promise of Great Rewards should they compleat the Work. They retreated by Way of Seccacus, called at a poor Man's House there, and robbed him of all the Family cloathing, Blankets, etc., etc."—N. Y. Merc., D 1, 1777.

Another account, published at Fishkill, states: "Last week a small party of men made an excursion to Greenwich, about three miles from New York; they arrived there in the evening; advanced to Oliver Delancey's; a centry was at the door, whom they secured; found a few ladies and gentlemen in the house; the ladies were suffered to depart in peace, though in some haste; we hear five men were made prisoners; they set the house on fire, and, hearing the alarm guns in New York, thought it was time to decamp, crossed the river, and burnt their barge, and got safe off.

"You who are fond of burning works, how do you like it when it comes so near home?"—N. Y. Packet, D 4, 1777.

"Greenwich House," which stood on the bank of the North River, between 12th and 13th Sts., at Greenwich, belonged to Sir Peter Warren, but was occupied by Oliver de Lancey in Revolutionary times. It was to the north of the Mandeville homestead (shown on the Montresor Map, Pl. 40, Vol. I), and separated from it by the old road which then led back from the river. Ratzer's map (Pl. 41, Vol. I) shows it as "Oliver De Lancey Esq." A deed dated May 19, 1790, speaks of "the Road leading along the River to the house of the said Sir Peter Warren, formerly occupied by Oliver De Lancey," as if the house were still standing (Liber Deeds, XLVI: 149); but this may have been repeating an earlier description. Oliver de Lancey owned land at Bloomendall in 1732 (q. v., My 8), and in 1748–1757, but no house is mentioned.—M. C. C., V: 250, 287, 337.

" At about the same time, James de Lancey, until recently the Sheriff of West Chester and now colonel of loyalist militia, was captured by one of the American scouts. The report states that "the Colonel was found under a bed, and for a better defence, had himself surrounded with a bulwork of baskets. He was dragged from his humble redoubt, put under guard, and sent to a place better Secured."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), D 12, 1777.

27 The American officers billetted at New Lots learn that "a British Serg^t^ was come from N. Y. with orders for us to Repare there to morrow morning with our Bagage."—Diary of Jabez Fitch (MS.). On Nov. 28, Fitch wrote that they arrived at St. George's ferry about 1 o'clock, "& soon Embark'd in several Flatbottom'd Boats prepared for y^t^ purpose, being guarded by a strong party of Britains & Hessians, whom it seems took charge of us when we came into Brooklyn. The Boates carried us round y^e^ City & up N. River as high as opposite y^e^ old English Church, where they put us on board y^e^ Judith, a large Transport Ship prepare'd for y^e^ place of our confinment; we soon found our accomodations to be very Similar to those on board y^e^ Mentor y^e^ last year [see S 5, 1776]; there is now near 140 prisoners on board this Ship, & altho' our Births for Lodging are more tolerable than those in y^e^ Mentor, yet we are in a very dark durty & uncomfortable Situation, most of us destitute of Beds, & many have neither Blanket or watch coat, nor any other Lodging than ye Soft Side of a board."—Ibid.

28 "The People of the Country hear a report that Putnam has had a Battle near Kings Bridge, and was repulsed with the Loss of all his Cannon, part of which were gained from Burgoyne."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

30 Gen. Howe writes from Philadelphia to Germain: "I candidly declare my opinion, that in the apparent temper of the Americans a considerable addition to the present force will be requisite for effecting any essential change in their disposition, and the re-establishment of the King's authority, and that this army acting on the defensive will be fully employed to maintain its present possessions."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 442–43.

" "This Night the Head was broke off Mr. Pitt's Statue that stands in Wall Street."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 58. Stevens in 1777 N 30 " his Progress of N. Y. in a Century, 14–15, is therefore in error when he ascribes the date of this mutilation to 1776.

Fitch writes: "I took a view of ye Shiping around us; among which is ye Myrtle Laying next to us, on board of which is our Brotr Prisoners . . .; a little further distant lays ye Senturian a 64 in which it is said Genll Lee is confin'd; & on ye other side is another large Ship in which I am Inform'd our privates are confin'd; there is also a large number of other Ships near us, of different sizes &c." —Fitch's Diary (MS.).

Dec. 1 Mrs. Treville, who "formerly kept the assembly at Newport, in Rhode-Island, to the general satisfaction of the polite and gay, who resorted to that place," has now "fitted up (as elegantly as the times will permit) a large commodious room for the same purpose" at the London Coffee House, near the Exchange. Beginning Wednesday, Dec. 3, she will sell tickets at one dollar each, entitling each gentleman to bring his partner, and in return she will supply music, fire and candles till 10 o'clock, after which, if any are inclined to continue longer, the charge must be borne by them.—N. Y. Merc., D 1, 1777. Mrs. Treville had opened the London Coffee House on Oct. 20, 1777. The house was on Broad St. near Pearl.—Ibid., O 20, 1777.

2 Fitch writes: "At 8 in ye Evening ye Sargt of ye Guard came down & see all our lights out as Usual. This seems a revival of ye ancient custom in Britain, in ye Reign of William ye concouror, when ye Inhabitants were depriv'd ye use of lights in their Houses after Ringing ye Curfew Bell. This usage seems very disagreable to ye prisoners where near 130 of us are obleg'd to pass ye tedious night in ye dark, let what will happen, But yet as it is supported by ye precedent of an ancient custom in Britain, complaining will avail but little, & we therefore submit."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

3 Wm. Smith writes on Dec. 22 that "When Mrs Banyar left NY. 3d Decr they were fitting up the North Dutch Church for Barracks expecting more Troops Daily."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

6 "William Rowand, Portrait-Painter, (Lately from Glasgow) Proposes at his lodgings, No. 59 Wall-Street, . . . to begin painting in miniature, the weather not permitting painting in large, longer, and, to teach gentlemen and ladies the art of drawing . . ." —Rivington's Loyal Gaz., D 6, 1777; Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed., 1918), III: 331.

7 "Soon after we turn'd out, ye Seamen got ye Ship [the "Judith"] under way, and Remov'd round into East River, where she came too, opposite ye Chappel."—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

8 The Independent Company commanded by Mayor David Mathews has its "Alarm Post;" here it is summoned to meet on Dec. 10.—N. Y. Merc., D 8, 1777.

9 Fitch and two other prisoners receive orders "to go on shore in order to return to N. England." They land "near ye Fly Market" and go to the commissary's office for directions.—Fitch's Diary (MS.).

10 Fitch writes that, after he and his companions had settled their affairs with the British officers, "We then went down to ye Water near Whitehall, where we put our baggage on board ye Schloop Charming Polly . . .; This Vessel is appointed a Flag of truce to pass to N. Heaven for ye purpose of conveying supplies for ye British prisoners in Connecticut . . . after providing a small matter of stores &c, at about 2 o Clock we left N. York having ye Tide in our favour, & also a comfortable brieze of wind, altho' we were Obleg'd to beet up to Hellgate, where thro' ye deficiency of our Pilot, we pass'd through ye most Rapped part of ye pot with ye lid off, in ye strength of the Tide a little before Sunset, & were soon after Hail'd by a Man of war, but not long detain'd; We then proceeded as far as ye New City Island where we were brot' too by ye Scorpion, a british Ship of War, & detain'd ye Remainder of ye Night."—Fitch's Diary (MS.). Fitch reached New Haven on the 12th; he arrived home on Dec. 15.—Ibid.

13 With the issue of this date (No. 147), Rivington changes the title of his newspaper (see O 18) to The Royal Gazette.—Early Newspapers, II: 428. See, further, N 22, 1783.

18 "This is a Day appointed by the Congress for a general Thanksgiving which many will perhaps think ought to have been appointed for a Fast to deplore the Increase of the public Miseries." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

20 Sir Henry Clinton issues a proclamation to guard against extortion by farmers and others who raise the necessaries of life. He states that "the farmers on Long-Island, and Staten-Island are possessed of great quantities of Wheat, Rye, and Indian Corn, for sale, beyond what they want for their own consumption, and it is highly unreasonable that those who may stand in need of those articles, should be left at the mercy of the farmer." On the other hand, he also lays down the principle that "it is equally just and reasonable that every encouragement should be given to the industry of the husbandman, and that, in all public regulations respecting the price of the produce of his lands, regard should be had to that of the conveniences which he is obliged to purchase." He orders that the prices of these articles shall not exceed the following sums: A bushel of wheat, weighing 58 pounds, 12 shillings; a bushel of rye or Indian corn, 7 shillings; merchantable wheat flour, 35 shillings per hundred weight; rye flour, 20 shillings per hundred weight; Indian meal, 17 shillings per hundred weight." He also orders that the farmers hand in an estimate of the quantities of grain they have, and of the amounts they may need for their own families until the next crop comes in.—Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 651. Dec. 20

In his diary, on the same date, Wm. Smith writes: "Mrs S[mith] visits Mrs Banyar who agrees that the Citizens at N Y find a Scarcity but not the army there being Provisions for 40,000 for 17 Months."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" Maj.-Gen. James Robertson, the "Commandant of New York," who returned Sept. 26 (q.v.), issues the following harbour regulations by proclamation: All ship-masters coming into the harbour, "immediately on their Arrival (and before they haul their Vessel, to the Wharf) are to enter at the Port-Master's Office, an Account of the Powder they have on board," and "receive his Directions for stowing the same. . . ."

"No Ship or Vessel to be hove down to burn, at any Wharf, without Leave from the Port-Master, who will appoint Wharfs proper for this Purpose.

"No Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, or any Combustible to be heated on any Wharf to the Southward of Totten and Crossfield Wharf.

"No Fire to be kept on board any Ship or Vessel (alongside of any Wharf) on Deck, after Sunset; nor below the Deck after 9 o'clock at Night.

"No Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, or Spirits to be left on any of the Wharfs, but to be stored in some safe Place, clear of Danger from Fire.

"No Ballast, or any other Dirt, which is liable to sink, to be hove overboard from any Ship or Vessel lying alongside the Wharfs, nor to be hove off the Wharfs by any Person or Persons.

"No Ship or Vessel, while in the Harbour, to lay with her Gib-Boom run out, nor Sprit-sail Yards across.

"No Stove, Brick, Earth, or Timber to be taken off the Wharfs, as Ballast or Fuel.

"The Ships in the East River and at the Wharfs, are not to ring their Bells unless to make an Alarm in Case of Fire."—N. Y. Merc., D 22, 1777.

" James Rivington, publisher of the Royal Gazette, announces that he will open on this day a "Glove Store" and "The Stationary Warehouse," where paper, parchment, maps, books, etc. are for sale, also "A few very elegant Pictures of the King and Queen, in gold burnished Frames." In another paragraph he advertises the opening, also on this day, of "The Cane & Walking Stick warehouse," where the "gallant, gay Lothario, or worthy Master Balance, the plain and respectable Citizen, may find an elegant and useful Variety of those Articles."—Royal Gaz., D 20, 1778.

Later, Rivington added "Paper Hangings" and "Fishing Tackle," also "Breakfast Tea," to his store of goods. He dealt also in "Gentlemens Dress Frocks, of scarlet cloth" (ibid., Ap 4, 11, 1778), and in "French Rasberry Brandy."—Ibid., N 13, 1782. He later included still other articles, such as musical instruments.

" "Three Rooms and a Kitchen to be let in Cherry Street, opposite to the Rising Sun Tavern; for particulars apply to Thomas Levan, in William-Street, No. 468, corner of Golden-Hill."—Royal Gaz., D 20, 1777. As this is the only mention of the "Rising Sun," we may presume it had a brief existence.

22 The commandant (Robertson) issues a proclamation stating that he has appointed John Thompson, of Brooklyn, to employ persons to cut wood on Long Island, "that the poorer inhabitants of this city may receive some supplies of wood at a reasonable price." Those with proper recommendations will obtain orders from the commandant for a proportion of the wood, on their paying Thompson the charges for cutting and carting, "with an 1777 D 22 addition of four shillings per cord for his trouble in this service."—N. Y. Merc., D 22, 1777.

" A meeting is called for Dec. 27 of the "Loyal ancient free and accepted Masons" at the "Sign of the Globe, near the City Hall."—N. Y. Merc., D 22, 1777. For the earliest known meeting-place of the Masons in New York, see Ja 22, 1739. Regarding the first appearance of the Masonic Order here, see N 28, 1737.

24 On this Christmas Eve, forty poor widows, "Housekeepers, in this city," were presented by John C. Knapp with "forty weight of fresh Beef, and an half peck Loaf each."—Royal Gaz., Ja 1, 1778. Knapp made a similar donation the following year.—See Ag 14, 1778. See also De Voe, Market Book, 164.

26 William Fowler, the naval storekeeper, gives notice "That a Salvage will be paid for such Stores belonging to his Majesty's Ship the Mercury (lately wrecked in the North-River), as may be taken up and delivered into his Majesty's Store House at New York."—Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778.

27 Maj.-Gen. Robertson publishes the following announcement: "Whereas, it is represented to me that the Poor of this City cannot be properly relieved without some Provision be made for that Purpose, as there is not a Vestry at present in this City to assess the Quotas of the Inhabitants, and to Superintend the Poor as formerly; and it appearing to me highly reasonable that some Method should be adopted for their Relief, and Elias Desbrosses, Miles Sherbrooke, Isaac Low, Charles Nicoll, Gabriel H. Ludlow, James Jauncey, Richard Sharpe, Charles Shaw, Hamilton Young, Theophylact Bache, Rem. Rapalje, Jeronimus Alstyn, William Walton, William Ustick, Peter Stuyvesant, Nicholas Bayard, and John Dyckman, of this City, Gentlemen, having offered to take upon themselves the discharge of the Trust hereinafter reposed in them: I Have therefore thought fit hereby to authorize them to solicit and receive the Donations of the Charitable and well-disposed, and to appropriate the same to the Relief of the Poor according to their several Wants and Necessities."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 5, 1778.

They collected a sum sufficient to afford temporary relief. "These gentlemen with the Magistrates of Police were then formed into a vestry & the alms house & poor of the city were committed to their care & latterly the pumps, lamps, &c. This vestry had a Treasurer & Secretary the former to receive & pay monies on their account & the latter to keep minutes of their proceedings. Proper funds for the execution of the trust reposed in them were necessary —therefore the rents of such houses & stores as were not wanted for the service of government & the ferries & markets were appropriated to the funds for the vestry—the fees arising from licenses & excise, fines inflicted for breach of orders, Proclamations of the peace, or other offences were also added & ordered to be paid into the hands of their Treasurer. He was accountable for the payment & receipt of all monies on their account, not only to the Vestry, but when required, furnished the Commander in Chief & Commandant, with his accounts—When he gave a receipt for rent such receipt specified that the sum had been paid by orders of the Commander in Chief.

"Whenever the proprietors of houses so rented out by the vestry came within the British lines, & made application to the Commandant, their pretensions were referred to the vestry, & on their report & recommendation, the property was restored—and "When the Proprietors of houses or stores in the king's service or barrack department came in, & made similar applications their pretensions were referred to the Magistrates of Police, & Barrack Master & on their report the property was restored, unless in some instances, where his Majesty's service would not permit."—From the "Case of William Butler" in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 154–56. See F 7, 1775. See also Vol. I, p. 326; De Voe's Market Book, 170; and Henry B. Dawson's report on the city finances during the Revolution printed in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 208–27.

" Maj.-Gen. Robertson, in a proclamation bearing this date, states that, as the generous price allowed for wood by a former proclamation (see D 22) has been the means of bringing larger quantities of fuel to the city than was expected, therefore, after Jan. 10 next, there shall not be demanded or received more than £4 "for a Cord of Walnut Wood" or more than 55 sh. "for a Cord of Oak, or any other wood."—Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778.

" Patrick Blancheville, at his store "next door to the George and Dragon, opposite the lower end of the Fly-Market," offers for sale an assortment of wares.—Royal Gaz., D 27, 1777. As early as Nov. 1, 1735 (q.v.), a tavern with this name existed in New York. Among other taverns to which volunteers were directed, in 1778, was that of "Mr. John Davan, at the sign of the George, the corner of the Fly-Market."—See F 16, 1778. Dec. 27

"Washington's Army for Several Days Past has been encamp'd near the Valley Forge."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 28

Maj.-Gen. Robertson, the commandant, issues a proclamation which recites that the public cartmen are "declining, under various Pretences, carting for the Inhabitants, when required, as by the exorbitant and increasing Demands which they insist on receiving for their Services." Regulations are established prohibiting this practice, and prescribing what the "Fare" shall be for carting articles of various kinds.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 5, 1778. See, further, D 7, 1778. 29

Gen. Chas. Lee, who since Jan. 1 (q.v.) has been held prisoner by the British in New York, writes to Gen. Washington that he has been admitted to parole. His parole was dated Dec. 27. He states: "I have the full liberty of the City and its limits, have horses at my command furnished by Sir Henry Clinton and General Robinsen [Robertson]—am lodg'd with two of the oldest and warmest Friends I have in the world—Colonel Butler and Major Disney of ye 38th Regt. . . . in short my situation is rendered as easy, comfortable and pleasant as possible for a man who is in any sort of Prisoner."—Lee Papers in N. Y. H. S. (1873), II: 376. See, further, F 3, 1778. 30

1778

In this year, the death of Voltaire and Rousseau occurred, the former on May 30, the latter on July 2. Rousseau's Confessions appeared in 1782.—Dictionnaire Historique de la France. —

"A view of the City of New York from Long Island," evidently drawn during the English occupation, perhaps by Montresor, probably dates from this year. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 48. —

A view from Paulus Hook, showing Manhattan Island, probably drawn by Montresor in 1778, is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 6-b. —

"The Markets at New-York are so overstocked with Goods of English Manufacture, that they sell at London Prices, notwithstanding the heavy Charges on them by Insurance, Freight, &c."—St. James's Chron., D 30, 1777–Ja 1, 1778. Jan. 1

Announcement is made that, "By Permission of his Excellency Sir Henry Clinton, . . . The Theatre will be Open'd early next week, by a Society of Gentlemen of the Army and Navy, for the laudable Purpose of raising a Supply for the Widows and orphans of those who have lost their Lives in his Majesty's Service, as well as for such other generous Charities as their funds may enable them to perform; . . . Notice will be given in the next Paper of the first Night of Performance." Tickets may be bought "at Mr. Rivington's, Mr. Hugh Gaine's, and Mills and Hicks's Printing-Houses, at both Coffee-Houses; and at Marshal's Tavern, opposite to the Theatre in John-Street."—Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778. Marshall's tavern was later known as the "Shakespear Tavern," perhaps because of its proximity to the theatre. 3

The name of the actors are not given in the newspapers, but most authorities agree that André was among the performers during this year. Dunlap includes his name in the list of players (Dunlap, Hist. of Am. Theatre, I: 94, 101); and Seilhamer says: "When the season of 1778–9 opened Sir Henry Clinton was back in New York with the army that had spent the previous winter in Philadelphia. André was with him and had but recently been appointed his aide, with the Provincial rank of Major. That this gay young officer now took part in the theatrical preparations and activities of the season may be assumed with safety."—Seilhamer, Hist. of Am. Theatre, II: 38–39. The season of 1778 lasted from Jan. 6 to June 8.—Ibid., II: 36. See Ap 21.

There is preserved in the N. Y. H. S. the account-book of the managers of the theatre; it is a manuscript volume, bound in vellum, and records, among other things, the receipts for each performance and sums paid out in charity. Ticket sales averaged about £200 a night; they mounted to £298:15:8 at the first performance of "The West-Indian," on Jan 15. At times a memorandum appears of "Light Gold taken at the Door." Payments appear to John Slidell, the chandler, and to John Mowatt, the ironmonger, and for his season's box Sir Henry Clinton pays "50 Guineas."

A lottery scheme is launched, by permission of Maj.-Gen. James Robertson, to raise £1,080 for "the poor and distressed objects in the alms-house of this city."—Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778. "

1778 Jan. 7 Robert Steel and Co., London, write to a New York merchant: "We do not so much as think of shipping any thing to any body till we see affairs wear a very different aspect . . . Twelve Guineas per cent. premium is now giving here to insure goods at New York from fire and the enemy till 1st of April next, and Twenty Guineas per cent. have been given to pay the loss if our troops are not in possession of New-York the first of this month, and we have every appearance of a French and Spanish war."—N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), Je 8, 1778.

9 "The Whigs rail at Gen[l] Putnam without the least Restraint . . . They charge the Loss of Fort Montgomery to him . . . & now they alledge that it is his Fault that NYork is in Peace and not taken this Winter."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

" Dr. Cornelius (see Ag 23, S 20, 1777) refers, in his journal, to his return to the Livingston sugar-house, of which he says, in part: "This prison was much worse than when I left it before, from the fact that there were nearly thirty soldiers, who went around to the other prisoners and stole from them the few comforts they had, and take the sick from their beds and take their bed clothing, and beat and kick them almost to death. The articles which they took from us they would carry to Mr. Walley [who had charge of the prisoners] and sell them for rum." On Jan. 13, being ill, he went to "the hospital, which was the brick Meeting House." He remained here until Jan. 16, when he made his escape. This he describes at length.—Jour. of Dr. Elias Cornelius, 10.

12 Among the taverns maintained during the British occupation of the city, was one on Water St., generally known as "Smith's Tavern." It was first designated as "opposite Commessary Loring's," then as No. 939 Water St., and still later as No. 35 Water St. It stood near the Fly Market. Richard Wetton first opened the house as the "London Chop-House, at the sign of the Earl of Percy's arms."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 12, 1778. He was soon succeeded by Ephraim Smith (ibid., Ag 10, 1778), and he in turn by Mrs. Sarah Shaw, "late in partnership with Mr. Smith."—Royal Gaz., D 23, 1778. Mrs. Shaw turned over the tavern to Charles Roubalet the following spring (ibid., My 22, 1779); but within a year Ephraim Smith had returned—See Je 5, 1780. The rapid succession of tenants suggests that the tavern was not a profitable one, and when the house was advertised to let on Jan. 31, 1781, it was distinctly specified that "No tavern-keeper need apply."—Ibid., Ja 31, 1781. It had become an auction-house by Nov. 17, 1781.—Ibid., N 17, 1781.

" Geo. Forbes, commonly called "Black George," offers "at the White Hall" fried and pickled oysters for exportation to the West Indies or elsewhere. He also "keeps good entertainment for Gentlemen" at his house at Whitehall.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 12, 1778. Forbes may have acquired the house with the "Sign of the fry'd Oysters" which we know stood at Whitehall.—See My 20, 1773. In 1780 (q.v., Je 3), he removed to Little Dock St.

" Doran's tavern (see Ja 15, 1770; Mr 24, 1777) is now kept by "the widow Doran," according to a notice for the Marine Soc. to meet there.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 5, 1778.

15 "Resolved . . . a Committee to View that part of Trinity Church Yard that lays on the South side of the Church and that was formerly appropriated and set apart for Building of Vaults and report how much of the said Ground they think Sufficient for that purpose and whether it will not also be necessary to reserve a Slip or piece of the said Ground adjoining to Thames Street in order to Widen and make the said Street more Commodious than it is at present."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

" On the departure of James Robertson for Philadelphia, the publication of his newspaper, The Royal Am. Gaz. (see Ja 16, 1777), was continued by his brother, Alexander Robertson. James returned to New York, and with the issue of Oct. 6 of this year the paper was published by Alexander and James Robertson.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 489. See Je 27, 1780.

17 Robert Hull, "intending shortly for England," announces that he has "declined the business of tavern keeping," and wishes to settle all accounts.—Royal Gaz., Ja 17, 1778. Hull had been proprietor of the City Tavern since 1771. He apparently left during the month, for, by Jan. 31 (q.v.), William Hick had taken the house, renaming it the "Bunch of Grapes."

18 Capt. James Cook discovers the Sandwich Islands.—Alexander, Brief Hist. of the Hawaiian People (1891), 104.

20 News reaches England that "a Conspiracy had just been discovered at New York. Many of the Inhabitants, who had taken the Oaths of Allegiance to his Majesty, had entered into a League with the Commander of the Rebel Troops in the Neighbourhood, that on a certain Night, on his making an Assault on the Place, they would set the City on Fire in several different Parts, in order to throw the Whole into Confusion, and make it the more easy Conquest. Happily this diabolical Plot was timely discovered, and forty of the Ringleaders are now in Irons."—St. James's Chron., Ja 17–20, 1778. Jan. 20

" Wm. Smith writes: "My Brother has heard that Col[o] Roger Morris is under Guard at NY. for declaring that the People of England wonder at the Generals' and Lord Howe's with holding overtures [of peace] in his power to make, and that they began to riot upon the Prolongation of the War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. On Feb. 8, he added: "The Report of Roger Morris's Imprisonment at NY. gains Credit & tis said that Beverly Robinson his Brother in Law died lately in Town."—Ibid.

21 "If America can neither form an army to drive the British Force off of the Continent nor to disturb them at N Y Philad: nor Rhode Island this Winter the Prospect of general Devastation next Summer will wean the People from the Congress & all will then be over with their present Leaders. If they make an Attempt to raise Forces for this Purpose and do not succeed the Delusions will vanish before the Season for opening the Campaign. . . . Tis said Gen[l] Lee is exchanged and come out—Perhaps he is to be made use of to bring about a Treaty. . . . Strange Duplicity. Not many Weeks ago the Patriots denied that Lee had ever urged since his Captivity to Overtures of Peace. M[rs] Wattkins who came lately from NY saw Lee walking the Streets. He would not have had that Privilege if it was not known that he had changed his Sentiments—They would not have suffered him to procure Information & inspect their Condition if they were not confident of his Conversion."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

26 "Supposing the Cont[l] Emissions to amount as M[r] Duane says to 34 Millions of Dollars or as M[r] Law of Connecticut who left the Congress with him in Dec[r] to 38 Millions, tho' I believe they are more [,] even then our Colony is under a Debt of near Two Millions Currency. . . . Compare this to our largest Public Debt in 1762 then about 323,000—Our Annual Levies were then a little more than £40,000 and the Complaints of the Burden were universal—Parliament reimbursed us in Part. The Congress have ordered us to raise 100,000 Dol[s] this Year viz[t] £80,000 What Clamours must arise—Then [in 1762] we had a Successful Trade & immense Gains by Privateering & a clandestine Commerce by Flags to Hispaniola—Besides we now cast the whole Burden upon Dutchess Ulster Albany & Tryon & the North Half of Orange for the Southern Counties cannot or will not contribute & as to Charlotte Cumberland & Gloucester they were never taxed as unable to bear any Burden & now claim to be a separate State under the Name of Vermont.—The City of NY general[ly] bore ⅓ of all public Colony Levies—With Respect to this Province the Congress may percieve the End of their Thread.—What will the Burden be in another Year. They owe even now more than 38 Millions of Dollars. There are great arrears due to all who serve under them."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

31 "William Hick returns his sincere thanks to all those who were pleased to favour him with their company when he liv'd in the Jerseys, and takes the liberty to acquaint them that he now lives at the Bunch of Grapes in the Broad Way, lately Kept by Mr. Hull [the City Tavern, 115 Broadway], where they, and the public in general may depend on his utmost endeavours to make their entertainment agreeable.

"N. B. Jellies to be had every day."—Royal Gaz., Ja 31, 1778. Hick, or Hicks, seems to have been occupying a house, prior to taking over the City Tavern, at "No. 326, opposite Mr. Isaac Low's in Dock-Street," where, on Feb. 5, he sold his household furniture by public vendue.—N. Y. Merc., F 2, 1778. According to Jones, Hicks remained at the City Tavern until the spring of 1780 (see N. Y. Merc., Mr 27, 1780), when Gen. Pattison, at the request of Commissary Loring, turned him "out of his house, into the street, with his family, his furniture, and effects, and substituted in his place one Roubalet, a pimp, a defendant, and a servant of the Commissary."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y., II: 86. Roubalet remained until the end of the Revolution.—See O 13, 1783.

Feb. — A captain of a victualling transport who left New York in this month reported in London that "there were then Provisions enough for the Soldiery and Inhabitants for more than three Years, and 1778 Feb. — that the Warehouse and Stores were so full that he lay three Weeks at the Quays before he could deliver his Cargo, and that the Wharfs were then covered with Casks of all Kinds."—St. James's Chron., O 8–10, 1778.

3 Elias Boudinot, who had been appointed by Gen. Washington a commissary-general to look after the prisoners of the continental army held by the British, goes from New Jersey to Staten Island, "in my own sloop," as he states in his journal, and thence to "the Wharf in New York." He relates his experiences in the city, commenting upon the fact that he was treated by Gen. Robertson, commandant of the city, Commissary Loring, and other British officers, "with the greatest Civility & good Humor," and was afforded every opportunity to see the prisoners, converse with them freely, and ascertain the conditions of their captivity. Accompanied by a British officer, he first visited the Provost prison where, he writes, he found "near 30 Officers from Colonel downward in close confinement in the Goal." These officers complained that "they had been confined on the most frivolous Pretences," and that "they had received the most cruel Treatment from the Provost Marshal [Cunningham]," being, on the most trifling occurrences and on false charges of misconduct, "locked up in the Dungeon, . . . 10, 12 & 14 weeks" or in some instances 11 and 18 months. The provost marshal, upon examination, "with great Insolence answered that every word was true," and "swore that he was as absolute there as Gen'l Howe was at the head of his Army." Mr. Boudinot continues: "After this I visited two Hospitals of our Sick Prisoners and the Sugar House: in the two first were 211 Prisoners & in the last about 190—They acknowledge that for about two Months past they fared pretty well. . . . They all agreed that previous to the capture of Gen[l] Burgoyne, and for sometime after, their Treatment had been cruel beyond Measure—That the Prisoners in the French Church, amounting on an Average to 3 & 400, could not all lay down at once—That from the 15th of Oct[r] to the 1st of Jany. they never recd a single stick of Wood, and that for the most part they eat their Pork raw When the Pews & Door & Window facings failed them for fuel." Mr. Boudinot records that, as a result of this examination, "Measures for alleviating the Miseries of War" were agreed to by the British authorities.—Jour. or Hist. Recollections of Am. Events During the Rev. War, by Elias Boudinot, from his original manuscript (Phila., 1894), 9–19; Life, Public Services, Addresses and Letters of Elias Boudinot, Pres. of the Cont. Cong., by J. J. Boudinot (Boston, 1896), I: 90–99. See My 13, 1778.

Boudinot writes of his successful efforts to secure the exchange of Gen. Lee from the British, who had captured him at Baskingridge on Dec. 13, 1776 (q.v.). Lee had been "confined to a handsome House under Care of 4 or 5 officers who lived with him & Kept a genteel Table." He particularly describes his visit to Lee in Jan. (evidently error for Feb.), 1778, when he was sent to New York by Washington to examine into the condition of the American prisoners there, saying: "The Morning after my Arrival, I waited on Genl Lee who received me with great pleasure indeed, and asked me to breakfast with him the next day. This I did in Company with the officers who had the Care of him, and was treated with great politeness & affability. When Breakfast was over Gen[l] Lee asked me up into his Room. He soon began to complain very heavily of the treatment he had rec[d] from Congress, in not complying with his request," which had been that a committee of members of congress should be sent to New York to confer with him. Boudinot gives in detail his conversation with Lee, who said that he wished to reveal to congress the plans of the British summer campaign; that he considered it improbable that the Americans "under such an ignorant Commander in Chief" (meaning Washington) could ever withstand the British, and that he desired to send to congress a plan for military operations that he had drafted. Boudinot says that he declined to undertake such a mission, and adds: "I endeavored to negotiate his Exchange and it was agreed (hypothetically) that it should take place for Major General Prescott, subject to Genl. Howe's approbation. Genl. Howe objected and ordered Genl. Lee . . . to Philadelphia."—Life, Pub. Services, Addresses and Letters of Elias Boudinot, by J. J. Boudinot (Boston, 1896), I: 138–42. See Ja 1, Je 4, D 30, 1777.

Boudinot's care for the American prisoners of war in New York did not end with his departure from that city in February, 1778. He formed a plan of requiring Gen. Burgoyne to pay "hard Money" for the support of the British prisoners whom the Americans supplied with daily rations. In the meantime he proceeded to borrow money or take goods in New York on his own credit. "Thus," he said, "I furnished 300 Officers with a handsome Suit of Cloathes each and 1100 Men with a plain Suit, found them Blanketts, Shirts, &c, and added to their Provisions found by the British a full half ration of Bread & Beef per Day for upwards of 15 Months. Part of this I supplied by sending Wheat & Flour to New York & selling them for hard Money under leave from General Robertson." Feb. 3

Subsequently, in 1778, he applied to the continental congress, sitting in Philadelphia, for a settlement of his accounts, explaining that as a result of his undertaking in behalf of the prisoners in New York, he had advanced from his private resources and owed on expenditures ordered a total of $26,666.66. When congress took no action to settle the account, he wrote: "I sent orders to my Agent in New York [Lewis Pintard] and all further Issues were stopped accordingly."

The final outcome of the affair is thus described by Mr. Boudinot: "The latter End of July I rec'd a very affecting Letter from my Agent painting the Distresses of the Prisoners in so striking a Manner and the Death of Several more than had been usual, that I could not longer persist in my Determination of Silence on the Subject.—Having rec'd their Letter in Congress I arose with Tears in my Eyes, and reminding them of my former Promise begged Leave to break thro' it, so far as to read the Letter which I did—On this Mr. [Wm.] Duer (a Man of much Feeling) arose and in a speech of more than half an Hour declaimed so severely agt the ungrateful Conduct of the House that a unanimous Vote immediately passed for a Warrant in my Favor of £10,000 in Specie, which was immediately sent to New York."—Life &c of Elias Boudinot, by J. J. Boudinot (Boston, 1896), I: 158–61; Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), XI: 736. See F 7 and My 13, 1788.

4 In reply to Howe's letter of Oct. 22, 1777 (q.v.), in which he sought the king's permission to resign his command, Germain writes that the king has been "pleased to order me to signify to you, his royal acquiescence in your request of leave to resign the command, provided Sir Henry Clinton shall be in America when this letter reaches your hands, to whom you are to deliver up the command, and put him in possession of all the orders and instructions, which you have received from me or any other of the King's servants, respecting the troops, or the operations in which they have been or were to be employed."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 461. See My 2.

6 Treaties of "Amity and Commerce," and of "Alliance, Eventual and Defensive," are agreed upon at Paris by France and the United States. They are signed, on the part of France, by C. A. Gérard, and on the part of the United States, by Benjamin Franklin, Silas Deane, and Arthur Lee.—Jour. Cont. Cong., XI: 421–53. The treaties were unanimously ratified by congress on May 4.—Ibid., XI: 457. They were printed together as a folio broadside, a copy of which is in the N. Y. P. L.

7 Joshua Loring, British commissary of prisoners, writes from New York to Gen. Howe "that Mr. Boudinot, Commissary of the Rebel Prisoners, came to New York by permission of Sir Henry Clinton a few days ago [see F 3], to visit the Prisoners and settle his acco[t] with Mr. Pintard." Loring states that he accompanied Boudinot "thro' the Hospitals, Sugar House and Provost, and he is perfectly satisfied in the Treatment they meet with."—Report on Am. MSS. in the Royal Institution of Gt. Brit. (1904), I: 191.

9 As some British sailors recently "attacked, and with knives wounded and defaced three Hessian soldiers," and as other acts have been committed tending to raise discord between the Hessians and the British, Maj.-Gen. Robertson by proclamation orders that the Hessian troops be treated "with the civility due to strangers, and the kindness we owe to our faithful allies and friends," and offers a reward of £20 for the discovery of the perpetrators of the attack. —Royal Gaz., F 14, 1778. Commodore Hopham later ordered that no sailors appear in the streets after dark, and Robertson directed that any who disobeyed this order be sent "to the Main Guard." —Ibid., F 21, 1778. See A., S 7, 1776, Vol. V.

16 "All Gentlemen Volunteers, That are able and willing to serve his Majesty King George the Third, for two years, or during the rebellion, in the Prince of Wales's American Volunteers, commanded by his Excellency Brigadier-General Brown, now lying at King's-Bridge, let them repair to Mr. John Burrow's, at the sign of the globe [Wall St.], near the main guard; Mr. James Webb, at 1778 Feb. 16 the lower end of Maiden-Lane; Mr. John Davan, at the sign of the George, the corner of the Fly-Market; at Mr. John C. Brannon's, at the upper end of Chapel-street, opposite the New Brick Meeting, or to Mr. White, near the Main Guard: At either of these places, gentlemen volunteers will be Kindly entertained and receive their full bounty, appointed by his Majesty, (as an officer will attend the several houses for that purpose, to inform them of advantages belonging to that Corps in particular.)"—N. Y. Merc., F 16, 1778.

19 Lord North's conciliatory bills are presented to the house of commons and read for the first time.—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XIX: 775–815. On the same day Germain wrote to Gen. Howe: "The King commands me to send you copies of those bills . . . and to signify to you his royal pleasure, that you do cause them to be printed and dispersed throughout the Colonies, by such means as shall be most likely to make them generally known and considered, and that you embrace every opportunity of circulating them by flag of truce, or private persons among the rebel troops, and in those parts of the country, where the authority of the Congress prevails. And this you are to do with all possible expedition, so as the people at large may be acquainted with their contents, before ill-intentioned persons can have time to diffuse prejudices against them, or, by misrepresenting their tendency, excite jealousy and distrust of the favourable disposition of Great Britain towards the American Colonies."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 463. After these bills had been passed and had received the king's assent, printed copies were forwarded by Germain for further distribution.—Ibid., XI: 469. For Howe's answer, see Ap 19.

22 Smith writes that "a late Flag from NY brings News that General Howe is displaced & the Command given to General Clinton."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. The news was premature (see My 8).

27 Four members of Lamb's battalion of artillery arrive in New York from New Windsor, and declare "that the Remainder of that Corps have determined to quit the Service of the Congress."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 2, 1778.

Mar. 2 A New Yorker writes: "The martial Spirit which at present shines forth amongst the Inhabitants of this City, reflects the highest Honour upon them, and is at once a Proof of their Loyalty and Gratitude. Ever since the Arrival of the King's Troops, the greatest Harmony and most cordial Friendship have subsisted between them and the Citizens, nor has the martial Law been a Grievance to any. None have been required to take Arms, not even the most apostate amongst those who have taken the Benefit of the Proclamation and came to this City for Protection. . . . The Indulgence of the Commander in Chief has prompted the principal Gentlemen, Inhabitants of this City, and Refugees from other Provinces, to form themselves into independent Companies, twenty of which are nearly completed. Several Companies of them have paraded on the Fields, at the upper End of Broad-Way, headed by the Worshipful David Matthews, Esq. and made a very fine Appearance. These Companies, together with the Militia, will greatly add to the Strength of the City, and relieve the King's Troops, who may be employed elsewhere."—St. James's Chron., Ap 10–18, 1778.

3 The following announcement is made by the commandant at New York: "Whereas there are many houses and stores in this city belonging to Persons not under the protection of government which are occupied by merchants and others not entitled to quarters as constituting part of this garrison and whereas large sums of money are requisite towards assisting the poor, lighting the lamps, repairing the pumps, cleaning the streets . . . and there being no reason why the aforesaid persons should not pay rent. . . . I have . . . thought fit to authorise and appoint . . . John Smyth to demand ½ years rent ending 1st of May next . . . rents when received are to be paid by Said John Smyth into the hands of Mr Elias Desbrosses . . . treasurer."—Report on Am. MSS. in the Royal Institute of Gt. Brit., I: 203. See also Jl 13.

5 Gen. Howe writes to Germain: "The rebel army continues . . . hutted at Velley Forge, where their men suffer exceedingly from the very inclement weather that has prevailed, this winter, which has induced numbers to desert.

"Great struggles are making throughout the provinces to assemble a numerous army in the spring, and the most oppressive and arbitrary means exercised, to draw the people to the field, who almost generally shew extreme backwardness to their service, and in some instances have forcibly resisted the tyranny of their rulers."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 457. Mar. 5

7 Rivington publishes a report that Benjamin Franklin has been desperately wounded by a secret enemy, and there is no prospect of his recovery.—Royal Gaz., Mr 7, 1778. An announcement that this "chief prop of rebellion" was dead had appeared earlier in the year.—Ibid., Ja 31, 1778. These are samples of the falsehoods circulated to stimulate optimism among the Loyalists in New York. Other examples have been cited by Van Tyne in The Loyalists (1902), 251–52, as follows:

"Another day brought the golden tidings that Robert Morris had left Congress in disgust, having first made a motion 'for rescinding independency' [citing Royal Gaz., Ja 3, 1778]. Wild reports got abroad that Washington had been made Lord Protector, or, again, this 'Caesar,' this 'Cromwell,' was dead or, at least, captured [Jour. and Letters of Samuel Curwen (1864), 125]. Sometimes 'court cookery' prepared for the gazette the news of a treaty with Russia by which 36,000 Cossaks—a most plausible number—had been taken into British service. The King of Prussia, too, had yielded to British diplomacy [Royal Gaz., N 1, 1777]. 'Poor Rivington,' sneered a Boston editor, was hard put to it to keep up the spirits of the Loyalists in their confined district in New York [ibid., D 1, 1779]. Another editor observed that the printer of the London Gazette had been thought the greatest liar on earth, but Rivington had far exceeded in this curious art his more respectable brethren in England [North Carolina Gaz., D 12, 1777]. [See A., Jl 13, 1777, Vol. V.]

"Not only did the loyal papers publish these cheering items of news, but they gave to a hungry world morsels of political argument filled with bold antithesis, turbulent eloquence and the 'cant of passions which the writers never felt.' The peaceful citizens of New York, in nightly terror of the sailors from the British ships, who rioted in the streets and disturbed the loyal slumber [Royal Gaz., Ap 14, 1779], were told of the terrible scenes of anarchy in the Whig centers. The refugee, groaning under the war prices, which were fast consuming the few funds that he had brought with him, was made content by the tale of grinding taxes in the provinces. There was, asserted one writer, hardly one article of live or dead stock, or of the produce of the earth or waters, or the result of industry or labor that was 'exempt from the fangs of those devouring locusts,' the Whig legislatures. America was mortgaged for ages to come. They had incurred this intolerable burden because, forsooth, England had laid that 'most exorbitant and grievous tax' of three pence on a pound of tea [ibid., Mr 20, 1782]."

"General Lee is still in New York tho' discharged. He begins to be considered as a Deserter and probably will not come out till the Work of Reconciliation is advanced & the Minds of the Multitude turned to Peace. His Letters have estopped him from serving the Congress any longer as a Soldier. His Captivity may have saved his Life."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. See My 4. 9

A London news item reads: "Our Readers have heard that the Provincials have melted the leaden Statue of their most gracious King, at New-York, into Bullets; but they were guilty also of a Joke, for they reserved the leaden Head, and consigned it, by the next Opportunity, to one of his Majesty's principal Ministers, who, upon the Receipt of the weighty Parcel, could not easily imagine what were its Contents."—St. James's Chron., Mr 7–10, 1778. 10

The royal assent is given to Lord North's conciliatory bills providing for the appointment of commissioners "to treat and agree upon the means of quieting the disturbances now subsisting in certain of the American colonies," and for a parliamentary declaration "concerning the exercise of imposing taxes in the American colonies."—Ann. Reg. (1778), 130–42, 171; Parl. Hist., XIX: 867. See Ap 15. 11

The French ambassador informs the British court that France has signed "a Treaty of Friendship and Commerce" with the United States.—St. James's Chron., Mr 17–19, 1778; Winsor, VII: 48, 84. 13

The legislature, sitting at Poughkeepsie, passes "An Act further to organize the Government of this State." It defines the powers and duties of the council of revision. The state courts are regulated. The secretary of state shall be, ex officio, the clerk of the council of appointment. Regarding the arms and seals of the state, it states: "Whereas, Arms have been devised for this State, and two several Seals have been devised and made, one of the said Seals, as and for the Great Seal, and the other, as and for the Privy 16

1778 Mar. 16 Seal of this State, (and which said Seals are now in the Custody and Possession of his Excellency the present Governor;)

"Be it therefore further enacted . . . That the said Arms and Seals, shall severally be, . . . the Arms, the Great Seal, and the Privy Seal of this State, . . . That the said Seal, hereby declared to be the Privy Seal shall be the Seal for military Commissions; and all such Matters and Things as heretofore, while this State, as the Colony of New-York, was subject to the Crown of Great-Britain, were issued, under the Seat at Arms of the Governor or Commander in Chief, of the Colony for the Time being, shall issue under the said Seal, hereby declared to be the Privy Seal of this State. And that all such Matters and Things, as heretofore, while this State, as the Colony of New-York, was subject to the Crown of Great-Britain, were issued under the Great Seal of the Colony, shall in future, (the Proceedings in the Court of Chancery hereinafter mentioned excepted) [be] issued under the said Seal, hereby declared to be the Great Seal of this State; and shall be made out and entered of Record, in the office of the Secretary of the State, in the same Manner as, when this State, as the Colony of New-York, was subject to the Crown of Great-Britain, the same were made out and entered of Record, in the Office of the Secretary of the Colony. . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1778), chap. 12.

Impressions of the arms and privy seal, used on a document of April 2, 1778, are reproduced in Wilde's Civic Ancestry of N. Y., Pls. 15 and 16. The great seal is reproduced in ibid., Pl. 17, and Mr. Wilde traces the design to early Dutch models.—Ibid., 56–59.

The great seal is thus described: "A rising sun, over three mountains; motto underneath, 'Excelsior'; legend, 'The Great Seal of the State of New York.' The reverse is a huge rock rising out of the sea, and the legend, 'Frustra, 1777.' . . . There is a record of the adoption, in 1778, of a coat of arms designed by Lewis Morris, John Jay, and John Sloss Hobart, and three copies made before 1785, are known. One is upon a military commission issued by Governor Clinton in 1778; a second was painted on the flag of the Third Regment; and the third is a picture hung over Governor Clinton's pew in St. Paul's Church, in this city, in 1785."—Preble, Hist. of the Flag of the U. S., 616–17. See also "The Arms and Seals of New York—a defence," by Homes (Henry A.), in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Record (1886), Vol. XVI; and "The Arms of the State of New York," by Howell (Geo. R.), in ibid. (1888), Vol. XIX. On May 18, 1892, "The State Law," constituting Chap. II of "The General Laws" of the state, prescribed, among other things, the arms and great seal of the state. The device of the arms of this state, as adopted March 16, 1778 was there correctly described.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 678, § 40.

19 "Letters from London mention, that a naval-yard is about to be established in this city, and that Capt. Le Cras is to be appointed Commissioner."—Royal Am. Gaz., Mr 19, 1778.

23 Gen. Robertson orders a general cleaning-up of the city.—N. Y. Merc., Mr. 23, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 658.

" An advertisement offers "the farm called the Hermitage" for rent. It is "situate between the Bloomingdale and Greenwich roads, about four miles from town, containing near 25 acres with an house and garden, . . . barn and stables, and two large bearing orchards. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 23, 1778; Landmark Map, Pl. 176, Vol. III.

24 The assembly concurs in a senate resolution of March 23 "That the Secretary of this State and the Clerks of the several Counties in the same, be respectively authorized to put or cause to be put, the Records and Papers belonging to their respective Offices, into strong and light Inclosures, sufficient to exclude Rain, and to keep or cause them to be kept, and from Time to Time to be removed in the same respectively, to such Place and Places, as they shall severally think most conducive to the Security of such Records and Papers." The commanding officer of any regiment of militia shall furnish such guards as the secretary of state and the clerks of the counties may require.—Votes and Proc. of the Assembly (John Holt, 1777), 90.

27 New York State passes an act to regulate elections.—Laws of N. Y. 1st sess., chap. 16 (printed by Holt, 1782).

30 Smith writes: "Rec^{d} a Letter from Brother Tho^{s} of 22^{d} Inst^{t}—General Sullivan there 18 In^{s} & gone to form an Army in N England where they expect the British will attack & leave another Army in Pensilvania. He owned the arrival of Com^{rs} of Peace at NY—Informed him of Conversation with Lord Howe & that he brought out Instructions to settle Terms to be laid before Parliam^{t}. . . . A Fleet arrived a few [days] before 22 Ins^{t} at NY whether with Troops or Provisions not known. A Fleet sailed from there the Week before supposed for Philad. Talk in NY of coming up the River but most of going to N England to relieve Burgoyne."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. Mar. 30

Apr. — Du Simitière makes a memorandum that he has added to his collection "a Cast of plaister representing in basso relievo the model of the equestrian Statue of the King that was erected in New York in August 1770 & destroyed in July 1776." He describes it as "gilt on a Skie blue ground, this cast was from a chasing on Copper done by a genevois [resident of Geneva] nam'd Goau a wortless [sic] fellow but what became of the original I know not." From Du Simitière's "Memoranda," MSS., Vol. II, in Library of Congress. Du Simitière began to inquire what became of the fragments of the statue by asking Col. John Lamb by letter of Nov. 24, 1778.—Ibid. As shown in the summary under date of July 9, 1776 (q. v.), he was evidently in possession of the information by Feb. 22, 1779

5 Frederick Earl of Carlisle, Wm. Eden, one of the commissioners for trade and plantations, and Geo. Johnstone, captain in the royal navy, are named by the king to act with the Howes as commissioners "to treat, consult, and agree upon the means of quieting the disorders now subsisting in certain of his Majesty's colonies, plantations, and provinces in North America."—Ann. Reg., XXI: 222. In a letter of Apr. 12 to Howe, Germain enclosed "A copy of the instructions his Majesty has thought fit to give his commissioners for their guidance in this most important business," and declared: "They are so particular and comprehensive, that it only remains for me to add my sincere wishes for the success of your negociations, and that peace may be restored between Great Britain and the Colonies upon the ground of that connection which, so happily for both, formerly subsisted between them."—Parl. Reg. (1779), XI: 470.

An item of London news of May 9 stated: "The Emoluments of the American Commissioners are as follow:—1000 l. each for a Service of Plate: 5000 l. each for Sea-stores &c.—and 100 l. each per Week Salary, except Lord Carlisle, the President, who has thrice that Sum."—St. James's Chron., My 7–9, 1778. The commissioners reached America on June 3 (q. v.).

7 The Earl of Chatham makes his last appeal in the house of commons against giving up the sovereignty of America. The Duke of Richmond answered in a long speech to the effect that England could not fight single-handed against France, Spain, and America. Chatham rose to reply, but swooned and was carried from the house. He died four days later (April 11).—Winsor, VII: 51–52, and authorities there cited; St. James's Chron., My 9–12, 1778.

9 Mr. Hartley, in the house of commons, moves to put an end to the American war. After figuring that the expense of the war, if concluded at the end of 1778, will be £32,990,000, he says: "This sum, enormous as it is, will, I fear, be very short of the reality. At what rate shall I set the loss and destruction of the trade of this country, with all its rich resources and produce? At what rate shall I set the loss of 13 provinces, once the pride and strength of the parent state? At what rate shall I set the ruin of the British navy, which has hitherto been the bulwark of this country? At what rate shall I set the lives of many thousands of British subjects, whose valour might have been reserved for the defence of their country instead of being thrown away in the attempt to entail slavery upon the new world? These are losses not to be estimated in the vile trash of pounds, shillings, and pence. When will these follies come to an end? The trade, the revenues, and all the strength and resources of this country, are sacrificed to the pursuit of this mad and ruinous war."—Parl. Hist., XIX: 1068–71.

11 An advertisement offers to let "The House, Garden, Stable and Coach-House, at Belvoir, The most delightful situation within the environs of this city. The House consists of eleven rooms, seven fireplaces, a Hall, Lobby, Kitchen and garret, with three commodious cellars." Applications are to be made to Mr. Rivington, or to "Mr. Howard, in King-Street."—Royal Gaz., Ap 11, 1778. This was Belvoir, later called the White Conduit House, and still later, Ranelagh, for history of which see Mr 24, 1777.

15 Gen. Tryon causes to be "printed and dispersed" the draft of a bill, read in the house of commons on Feb. 19 (q. v.), "declaring the Intentions of the Parliament . . . concerning the Exercise of the Right of imposing Taxes within his Majesty's Colonies, . . ." The bill states, in part, that the exercise of the right of 1778 Apr. 15 taxation by Parliament has caused "great uneasinesses and disorders;" that it "has, by sundry misrepresentations, been made the means of misleading many of his Majesty's faithful subjects, who yet acknowledge the justice of contributing to the common defence of the Empire, provided such contributions should be raised under the authority of the General Court or General Assembly of each respective Colony, Province, or Plantation." To restore peace, etc., it is therefore deemed "expedient to declare that the King and Parliament of Great Britain will not impose any duty, tax, or assessment, for the purpose of raising a revenue within any of the said Colonies . . ."—From original broadside, in N. Y. P. L.; Evans Bibliography, No. 15827.

" Kemble records: "Sir Henry informed me he was appointed to the Command, Vice Sir William Howe; General Robertson and others informed of the circumstance, and made publick by them." The ship-of-war "Andromeda" brings "an Account of ten thousand Men being ordered to America, of which 7,000 are Highlanders, and of terms to be offered the Americans."—Kemble's Jour., 149.

18 A "Bathing Machine, Upon the plan of those used at Margate, and other Watering-places in England," is to be established on the North River near Vauxhall by June 1. The subscription price is a guinea a season, or five shillings a bath. "The benefit of bathing in Salt-Water, being universally acknowledged, is it not astonishing that the Inhabitants of New-York, who have the means at hand should never yet have provided a conveniency for the purpose? The Gentlemen could scarce find a place to bathe in with decency, and the Ladies, though it is known to be of the greatest advantage to their delicate frames, have been totally excluded. . . ." It is to be open from June 1 to the end of September from 6 A.M. until 12 noon.—Royal Gaz., Ap 18, 1778. By Aug. 1 (q.v.), the bathing-machine was in operation "behind Mr. Harrison's Brewhouse."

19 Howe writes to Germain from Philadelphia: "The Drafts of the [conciliatory] bills inclosed in your Lordship's letter of the 19th February [q.v.], have been published, and dispersed in obedience to his Majesty's commands, and will, I have no doubt, be shortly spread over this continent.

"The enemy's position continues to be at Valley Forge and Wilmington; their force has been diminished during the course of the winter by desertion, and by detachments to the back settlements, where the Indians make constant inroads; but the want of green forage does not yet permit me to take the field and their situation too strong to hazard an attack with a prospect of success, which might put an end to the rebellion; whereas a check at this period would probably counteract his Majesty's intentions of preparing the way for the return of peace, by the bills proposed."—Parl. Reg. (1779). XI: 465.

20 Henry Law, the master of the port, issues a notice to all ship masters to "wait on the commandant" (Gen. Robertson) on their arrival in port, and report in writing the names of their passengers, and other information "that may be conducive to the public safety."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 20, 1778.

" According to the advertisement of one Christian Werner, "Verlettenbergh" is now one of the recognized place-names of the city. It was "formerly called Flattenbergh-Hill." Werner's shop, where he sells "Butter Biscuits," is "No. 224, corner of Broad-street," at the "bottom" of this hill.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 20, 1778.

" The advertisement of one Thomas Smith, a ship and house joiner, gives his address as "north-east of Schuyler's sugar-house, on Cowfoot-Hill, King-George-Street."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 20, 1778.

21 The military "Thespians" act "The Rivals" at the Theatre Royal in John St. This was the first performance of that play in America.—Royal Gaz., Ap 18, 1778. See Ja 9, 1779

23 The "Sons of St. George" celebrate the anniversary of "their Tutelar and thrice renowned Patron," in full assembly in the "Long Room" of Hick's Tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 27, 1778. It was announced before the meeting that Gen. Tryon would preside; and that the dinner would be at 4 o'clock.—Royal Gaz., Ap 4, 1778.

25 A woman living in New York writes to her son in Philadelphia: "Sir Henry Clinton leaves this [city] in a few days for Philadelphia to take the command [see My 2], when I suppose Sir W. Howe will, decamp. We are all here in the greatest consternation at the pacific measures the Ministry seem disposed to take with the Americans. General Tryon lately sent a copy of the acts [see Ap 15] to Governor Livingston in the Jerseys, who returned them with the greatest contempt imaginable, desiring him to make use of the paper. By all accounts, a French war is inevitable, which is an alarming circumstance. Lord North appears, by his speech, to be frightened out of his wits. I am most wretched that I cannot get away."—N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), Je 8, 1778. Apr. 25

Sir Henry Clinton, Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones, Maj.-Gen. Tryon, and Maj.-Gen. Valentine Jones, with their suites, review the troops in the vicinity of Kingsbridge, passing along the lines to Fort Independence, and from thence to Capt. Emmerick's quarters. Here a sham fight is presented, "by firing from within a House, to defend it against many fierce Attacks made upon it. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 27, 1778. 27

"Sir Henry Clinton sailed this day to Philadelphia, to take upon him the Command."—Kemble's Jour., 150. May 2

Volunteers of Irish extraction, wishing to join a corps being raised by Lord Rawdon, are requested to apply at certain places, including "Mr. Dean's, at the Sign of the Ship, near the Fly-market."—Royal Gaz., My 2, 1778. See also Ap 28, 1781. "

Kemble records: "General Daniel Jones succeeded to the Command of York Island and Posts depending; find him as precise and Exact as Sir Henry was on the Contrary; . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 150. 3

Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones, commanding the British troops "on New York Island and Posts Depending," states in a proclamation that "Maj-Gen. Valentine Jones being Appointed to succeed Maj-Gen. Robertson as Commandant of this City, he will be assisted in the Civil Department by Andrew Elliot, Esq., Appointed Superintendent General of the Police, and David Mathews, Esq., Mayor of this City."—Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 605. The "Superintendant General of Police" will have "Powers and Authorities to issue such Orders and Regulations, from Time to Time as may most effectually tend to the Suppression of Vice and Licentiousness—the Support of the Poor—the Direction of the nightly Watch—the Regulation of Markets and Ferries, and all other Matters in which the Oeconomy, Peace, and good Order of the City of New-York, and its Environs are concerned. The Superintendent General will be assisted in the Administration of the Police by David Mathews, Esq; Mayor of this City. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., My 4, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 659. 4

It is announced that certain British officers in the hands of the American forces have been exchanged for Maj.-Gen. Lee and Ethan Allen.—N. Y. Merc., My 4, 1778. See My 13. "

Col. Ethan Allen, who has been a prisoner in the provost-jail [see S 20, 1777), is exchanged for Lieut.-Col. Campbell.—"Report on Exchange of Prisoners," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proc. (1860–62), 338. 5

Continuing his diary under this date in Vol. 3, Wm. Smith writes: "I have Kept notes of the public Transactions of this Colony in other Books & a part of last year on loose Sheets. We have arrived now to the 6th May 1778 from which Time I shall preserve my memoranda in this Book, and I hope the war will end before I have blotted many Pages with the Occurrences I am often obliged to set down from very muddy Streams of doubtful Information which if I have Time I will hereafter digest preserving a new Picture of the Times."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 43. 6

General orders contain, among others, the following references to shooting-grounds: "The four Hessian Regiments will fire to-morrow morning, between the Hours of 8 and 10 upon the Common beyond the Jews Burying Ground."—Order-book in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 607. The same order, repeated on May 10, has this added: "and the Regiment of Mirbach upon the Bloomingdale road between seven and eight in the Morning."—Ibid., 608. On May 15, the orders assign the Greenwich Road as the shooting-ground for the 38th Regiment.—Ibid., 611. On May 19, an order reads: "The Grenadier Battalion of Kohler will fire Ball to-morrow morning at 8 o'Clock near Fort Knyphausen."—Ibid., 614. On May 21, "The 52d. Regiment will fire this afternoon between the hours of 5 and 7 on the Common, to the right of the Bowery Road, and the Regiment of Wissenbach between the hours of 7 and 10 to-morrow morning upon the Communication to McGowan's, East River."—Ibid., 615. On May 28, it is ordered that "The 57th. Regiment will fire to-morrow morning between the Hours of Six and Nine, on the Common, to the Right of Bunker's Hill."—Ibid., 621. 7

From a British officer Smith learned on June 3 "That there arrived at NY on the 7th May 16000 men from Great Britain— "

1778 May 7 Two Expeditions were preparing from thence. It was believed one to N England & another up this River and he guessed they would be ready to act by Sunday next [Je 7]. That before the 16000 arrived there were at NY 7000 Regulars & 3000 Militia. That 20 Vessels had sailed from France with Stores for the Congress 17 of which were taken and brought to New York 5 of which he had seen there & the other 12 were at the Hook & coming up." Smith says of this information "As this Man's Intelligence on 26 March . . . were probably false I give him very little Credit for what he says now." From another source Smith learns "that the Reinforcem^{ts} which arrived at NY on the 7th May amounted to 22000."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 67–68.

8 Sir Henry Clinton arrives at Philadelphia to take command of the British army in place of Gen. Howe.—Robertson's Private Jour. of the Campaign 1778 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library; Winsor, VI: 396. See My 11.

" "If the British General & Commissioners are wise they will now publish a Relation of all the Attempts that have been made to induce the Congress to come to a fair Settlement with the Colonies & at the End threaten Desolation as the consequence of the last Rejection. This would convert Multitudes and totally destroy the Confidence of the Multitude in all those Leaders who have been in the Secret of the various overtures they have received."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 48.

9 Wm. Smith writes: "If France is really a Friend [to] the Liberties of America let her declare War & send her Fleet and Armies here. A Treaty of Commerce is Nothing. The News of A Treaty of Commerce with the Contents unknown less than Nothing. She is an old Cunning Monarchy proceeding on an antient well digested Policy & not to be diverted from her Interest by upstart Politicians."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 49.

10 Among general orders is this: "Officers or non Commissioned Officers Commanding Guards are to send Patrols to apprehend any Persons Gaming in the Streets or Ruins near their Posts; They are to send such prisoners to the Main Guard, and a Report is to be made immediately to the Commandant of the City."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 609.

11 General orders, from "Head Quarters, Philadelphia," are as follows: "Gen. Sir William Howe having obtained his Majesty's permission to return to Europe, the King has been pleased to appoint His Excellency Sir Henry Clinton to succeed him, upon his departure, as General and Commander in Chief of the Army in this district of America, and all orders issued by Gen. Sir Henry Clinton are to be obeyed.

"Gen-Sir William Howe cannot think of taking leave of the Army without expressing in the strongest terms the very high sense he entertains and ever shall entertain of the distinguished Spirit, alacrity, and unanimity exerted upon all occasions by every Officer and Soldier he has had the honour to Command, as well Foreign as British, in the course of a service attended with much fatigue and hardship.

"At the same time he feels a real satisfaction in being able to congratulate the Army on his being succeeded in so important a Command by a General who, he is fully persuaded, will not only add Lustre to His Majesty's Arms, but acquire great Honour to himself and to the Army under his Command."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 579–80. See My 24.

" John Holt having suspended publication of The New-York Journal at Kingston with No. 1771, which was the issue of Oct. 13, 1777 (see Jl 7, 1777), now begins publishing it in Poughkeepsie, with No. 1772, and with the title The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser. "It was suspended from Nov. 6, 1780 to July 30, 1781, because of scarcity of paper and lack of financial support. After being resumed with the issue of July 30, 1781, it was suspended with the issue of Jan. 6, 1782, No. 1926, to allow Holt to print the State Laws."—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1918), 90; Early Newspapers, II: 424; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin, S, 1920. For its re-establishment in New York City, see N 22, 1783.

12 Steuben enters the American service as inspector-general. For his oath of office, signed "de Steuben," and attested by Washington, see Winsor, VII: 36.

13 Elias Boudinot (see F 3) writes to Gen. Washington of his success in securing an exchange of prisoners. Col. Campbell had been sent out from New York by Gen. Howe to confer with him, and he relates that, having received permission from Gen. Clinton, he returned to New York with the British officers. There he met "Major Gen^{l} Daniel Jones in the Command & General Valentine Jones Commandant of the City," and he reported: "They treated me with uncommon Civility & granted me everything I Asked. The Exchange I took with Me was compleatly carried with Execution, with the addition of twenty-five Officers & about Twenty Privates being for the Servants of Gen^{l} Burgoyne, Coll. Campbell & others. Gen^{l} Jones has given me the strongest assurance that our officers & Privates shall not have reason again to Complain of unnessary Severity; indeed their whole System appears to be changed or at least in Confusion."—Life, Pub. Services, Addresses and Letters of Elias Boudinot, ed. by J. J. Boudinot (Boston, 1896), I: 118. May 13

" Rivington's newspaper, The Royal Gazette (see Dec. 13, 1777), is changed from a weekly to a semi-weekly publication.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 491. See, further, N 22, 1783.

14 The "Superintendent General of Police" (see My 4) issues a notice that inhabitants who want to buy flour are required to leave their names at his office in Wall St. every Tuesday and Friday at ten o'clock.—Royal Gaz., My 27, 1778.

15 Smith receives the following news: "At & about NY 10,000 [British] Troops. . . . The greatest Confidence at NY. of terminating the War this Year. A great Dockyard to be set up at NY. the Managers and artificers & Stores hourly expected."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 53. See My 18.

18 Maj.-Gen. Alexander McDougall sends to Gen. Gates a tabulated statement showing the "State of the Enemy's Strength in New York, and its Dependencies." This he has "Collected from Deserters, & friends to our Cause, who have come from Long Island, & New York." It shows a total force of 6,303 men, of whom 2,060 are British, 1,250 Hessian, 2,893 new levies, and 100 Anspackers. These are stationed at Brooklyn, City of New York, Fort Washington, York Island (Manhattan), Long Island, Paulus Hook, Kingsbridge, etc.—From the original MS. with Gates Papers, in N. Y. H. S.

21 Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones orders that "The three British Regiments in New York are to furnish an extraordinary Picket each . . . to Assemble to-Night at Nine on the Parade of the 52d [Regiment] among the Ruins near Broad Street."—Kemble Papers, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), XVI: 615. The occasion is what Smith calls a "Feu de Joie at New York."—Wm. Smith's Diary, III: 65.

" Embarkation orders contain the following: "Three Women per Company will be allowed to Embark."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 615.

23 Smith writes in his diary: "M^{r} and M^{rs} Banyar visited us on Friday . . . We both apprehend that this Colony will soon become the main Theatre of the American War & that Sir H Clinton will correct Howe's Blunder by a greater if he draws all the Troops from Pensilvania where it will be his Interest to avail himself of the Disaffection complained of by the Independ^{ts} to overturn the Congressional Authority."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 60.

24 The first of the general orders recorded under Clinton (see My 11) is as follows; at "Head Quarters, Philadelphia:" "His Excellency Gen. Sir William Howe having taken his departure for Europe, all Reports and Returns are in future to be made to Gen. Sir Henry Clinton, as Commander in Chief of the Army."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 586.

" General orders from headquarters at New York, on this Sunday, contain the following: "The Battalion of the 71st. Regiment on Long Island are to March to Hallett's Cove on Tuesday Morning, to Pass in boats to Horn's Hook, on this Island, and March from thence to the Ground appointed for their Encampment on the left of the Redoubts of McGown's, near Jones's House." At the same time, it is ordered that "The King's American Regiment, Commanded by Col. Fanning, are to March on Tuesday Morning, at Five o'Clock, to Horn's Hook, from whence they are to pass in boats to Hallett's Cove, and are to be Quartered in New Town, where they will receive Orders from Maj.-Gen. Tryon."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 618.

25 It is reported in Poughkeepsie by people who left New York about ten days ago that provisions, both fresh and salt, were very scarce, and, though prices are limited by martial law, yet the seller usually found means to obtain more; that a good quarter of veal might be sold for "half a joe," and other provisions in proportion, and that even the soldiers were stinted to half allowence of salted meat. It was supposed the scarcity would increase, as 42 transports had just arrived from Philadelphia, with invalids and tory inhabitants.—N. Y. Jour., My 25, 1778.

1778
May 25 It is also reported that "there seemed to be some relaxation of the severity with which our prisoners [Americans] had been used, many of them being now allowed the liberty to walk the streets. . . ."—Ibid.

" Wm. Calsworthy announces that he "has erected a Stage Waggon, to go between New-york and Kingsbridge, which sets out from this City every Monday, Wednesday and Friday Morning at 9 o'clock, and from Mr. M' Fraser's at the camp, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon; each passenger to pay Six Shillings going, and Six returning . . . at the entering of the stage." His headquarters are at "Mr. Sommerdyke's, near the Tea-Water pump."—N. Y. Merc., My 25, 1778.

29 Smith learns that "the British Troops have abandoned Fort Independence near King's Bridge. Gen[l] Gates gone with 700 Men to the White Plains."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 63.

" Gen. Jones orders that "The 38th. Regiment is to Encamp to-Morrow at ten o'Clock, on the Ground ordered near the Reservoir Redoubt."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 622.

30 Among the general orders issued from headquarters by Gen. Jones is this: "The Commanding Officers of Regiments are to be answerable that no fences Near their Camps are Damaged, Nor Gardens and Cultivated Grounds trod down or injured. The Regiment shall be Obliged to make good the Damage, and any Soldier disobeying this Order shall be severely punished."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 623.

June 1 Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones, "Commanding His Majesty's Forces on the Island of New-York, Long-Island, Staten-Island, and the Posts depending," issues a proclamation to prevent the practice of conveying "Wet and Dry Goods" out of New York without first obtaining permission from the superintendent of exports and imports or one of his deputies. He authorizes anyone to seize such goods, when such person discovers them "on board any trading Vessel or small Craft, or carrying by Land on Long-Island," and to send them to the office of the superintendent, in New York, who, on their sale at public vendue, will pay one half the net proceeds to the person or persons making the seizure, the remainder to be disposed of in charitable uses.—Royal Gaz., Je 3, 1778.

" A British soldier, court martialed at Fort Knyphausen for desertion, is sentenced to suffer death. Two others, found guilty of murder and rape, are sentenced to be "Hanged and Gibbeted on the Spot where the Murder was committed."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 624–25.

2 Gen. Jones orders that "The Corps of Artillery will fire a Royal Salute of Twenty One Guns on Thursday [Je 4, q. v.] at One o'Clock, in Honour of His Majesty's Birthday." To this is added: "The Commanding Officers of Regiments are to Order the Men of their Corps off Duty to be dressed on His Majesty's Birth day as for Parade."

The orders of the day also contain the following: "The Commanding Officers of Regiments are to Order an Exact return to be made out every Saturday of the number of Rations to be drawn for their Effective Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, Soldiers, Servants, Women, and Children for the ensuing Week, which Return they are to sign themselves and transmit to the Deputy Adjutant General.

"The Variations in these Returns from Week to Week to be accounted for in the next Return. No Rations are to be delivered but for the present time.

"The Commandant of New York is desired to Order an Exact Return to be made of all the Women and Children belonging to the Army, not attached to Regiments here, to prevent frauds in drawing Provision, for which purpose it will be necessary that they are seen by such Officers as he shall please to appoint."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 625–26.

3 The three royal commissioners—the Earl of Carlisle, Geo. Johnstone, and Wm. Eden—appointed to act with the Howes to endeavour to conciliate the American colonies (see Ap 5) arrive in the Delaware. They reached Philadelphia just as Sir Henry Clinton was about to evacuate that city.—Winsor, VII: 50; see also Je 18. "A sketch of the proposals, of which they were the bearers, had been received a considerable time before by Governor Tryon at New York who had used every means to give it circulation; which being regarded as an insidious attempt to break the colonial union, the congress showed how little they apprehended its effects by publishing the paper in their gazettes. The commissioners immediately [Je 9, q. v.] dispatched a letter to the president of congress, with the late acts of parliament, and a copy of their commission: their secretary, Dr. Ferguson, was intended to have been the bearer of these documents, but was refused a passport."—Aikin, Annals of the Reign of George III, I: 217. June 3

" It is announced that the "sum of Three Pounds, Will be given above the usual Bounty," and a "Suit of New Cloathes," to gentleman volunteers, "during the present wanton and unnatural Rebellion." Those who are "willing to shew their Attachment to the King and Country by engaging in the above Regiment" are urged to call at "Major Sheridan's Quarters, next the Post-Office in Broad-Street, at Captain Howard's at Kingsbridge, or at the Regiment stationed at Powles-Hook."—Royal Gaz., Je 3, 1778.

6 Henry Lake and Charles Roubalet announce the opening of the "White Conduit House at Belvoir near the new hospital in the Fields."—Royal Gaz., Je 6, 1778. The next year, Lake advertised that he alone had "opened" the house, and would fit up the gardens in the spring.—Ibid., F 13, 1779. See also Mr 24, 1777.

8 Smith learns from a man who has just come from New York that "War is not yet declared ag[t] France [see Je 17]. No Com[rs] arrived. That 26 Vessels laden with Stores for the Continent are brought in there as Prize. The Streets full of French men. The Inhabitants and Army in high Spirits. A Fleet arrived with Baggage &c from Philad: 4000 Troops arrived at Philad from Great Britain who are expected at NY. Sir H Clinton to move with his whole army thro' Jersey to the Hudson's River in Pursuit of or to intercept General Washington's . . . Said publicly at NY that Sir H Clinton had notified his Intention to make this March to Gen[l] Washington."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 75.

9 The royal commissioners, recently arrived in Philadelphia (see Je 3), send the following letter to congress: "With an earnest desire to stop the further effusion of blood and the calamities of war, we communicate to you, with the least possible delay after our arrival in this city [Philadelphia], a copy of the commission with which his Majesty is pleased to honour us, as also the acts of parliament on which it is founded; and at the same time that we assure you of our most earnest desire to re-establish, on the basis of equal freedom and mutual safety, the tranquility of this once happy empire, you will observe, that we are vested with powers equal to the purpose, and such as are even unprecedented in the annals of our history. . . .

"More effectually to demonstrate our good intentions, we think proper to declare, even in this our first communication, that we are disposed to concur in every satisfactory and just arrangement towards the following among other purposes:

"To consent to a cessation of hostilities, both by sea and land. To restore free intercourse, to revive mutual affection, and restore the common benefits of naturalization through the several parts of this empire. To extend every freedom to trade that our respective interests can require. To agree that no military force shall be kept up in the different states of North America, without the consent of the general congress, or particular assemblies. To concur in measures calculated to discharge the debts of America, and raise the value and credit of the paper circulation.

"To perpetuate our union, by a reciprocal deputation of an agent or agents from the different states, who shall have the privilege of a seat and voice in the parliament of Great Britain; or, if sent from Britain, to have in that case a seat and voice in the assemblies of the different states to which they may be deputed respectively, in order to attend to the several interests of those by whom they are deputed.

"In short, to establish the power of the respective legislatures in each particular state, to settle its revenue, its civil and military establishment, and to exercise a perfect freedom of legislation and internal government, so that the British states throughout North America, acting with us in peace and war, under our common sovereign, may have the irrevocable enjoyment of every privilege that is short of a total separation of interest, or consistent with that union of force, on which the safety of our common religion and liberty depends . . . for further explanation and discussion of every subject of difference, we desire to meet with you either collectively or by deputation, at New-York, Philadelphia, York-Town, or such other place as you may propose. . . ."—Ann. Reg. (1778), 327–29. These proposals led a Boston paper to say: "The commissioners are arrived, but not with the olive branch—Unless they return speedily to their master, it may be too late for them."—

1778 Boston Gaz., Je 29, 1778. For further comment in a later issue, see
Je 9 Jl 6. Congress replied on June 17 (q.v.).

12 Smith learns that "the British have 5 Reg^{t} at Kingsbridge 4 at Fort Washington or Kniphausen and that Troops had been for several Days imbarking at Hoorn's Hook."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 78.

13 "The Game of Cricket, to be played on Monday next, the 14th instant, at Cannon's Tavern, at Corlear's Hook. Those Gentlemen that choose to become Members of the Club, are desired to attend. The Wickets to be pitcht at two o'Clock."—Royal Gaz., Je 13, 1778. Later, the cricket grounds were "where the late Reviews were, near the Jews Burying Ground."—Ibid., Je 17, 1780.

14 "About 2 o'Clock this Morning a party [of Americans], said to be about 20 Men, some Armed, others not, with their Faces blacked, and otherwise disguised, came into Flatbush, took off Major Moncreiffe and Mr. Bache; attempted the Mayor, Mr. Matthews's house, but it being well fastened, and a Shot being fired which they Apprehended might give the Alarm, induced them to go off with the two first mentioned Gentlemen, supposed into Jersey, . . ." —Kemble's Jour., 151–52. Major Moncreiffe was the father of the young lady who came as a spy into the household of Gen. Putnam. See S 14, 1776; Memoirs of Mrs. Coghlan (London 1794), and The Social Ladder, by Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer (1924).

17 Hostilities between England and France begin with a naval battle off the French coast.—Guizot, Hist. of France, V: 380. The outbreak of war had been expected since the French alliance with the United States on Feb. 6 (q.v.).

" In answer to the letter of the British peace commissioners (see Je 9), congress by unanimous voice declares: "Nothing but an earnest desire to spare the further effusion of human blood could have induced them to read a paper containing expressions so disrespectful to his most Christian majesty, the good and great ally of these states, or to consider propositions so derogatory to the honor of an independent nation.

"The Acts of the British parliament, the commission from your sovereign; and your letter, suppose the people of these states to be subjects of the crown of Great Britain, and are founded on the idea of dependence, which is utterly inadmissable.

"I am further directed to inform your excellencies, that Congress are inclined to peace, notwithstanding the unjust claims from which this war originated, and the savage manner in which it hath been conducted. They will, therefore, be ready to enter upon the consideration of a treaty of peace and commerce not inconsistent with treaties already subsisting, when the King of Great Britain shall demonstrate a sincere disposition for that purpose. The only solid proof of this disposition, will be, an explicit acknowledgment of the independence of these states, or the withdrawing his fleets and armies."—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), XI: 615. A poem on the commissioners' "Peace Offerings" was published subsequently, the closing lines of which read:

> "Our Birth rights which our God to us did give
> We can't give up while we have Life to breathe.
> Our Faith we've pledge'd with France, henceforth no more,
> Shall we ask Favors from the British Shore.
> Take all the dastard Tories; none but God
> Shall bind us in all Cases by his Word.
> Tell your perfidious King soon as you please,
> That Yankee's won't accept such Terms as these."

—Boston Gaz., O 2, 1780.

18 The British evacuate Philadelphia.—Penn. Packet, Jl 4, 1778; Winsor, VI: 397. Sir Henry Clinton withdrew with his forces across New Jersey to New York—See Je 28, Jl 5. About 3,000 Tories left Philadelphia with the British troops.—Winsor, op. cit., VII: 195. Washington notifies congress.—Jour. of Cong., II: 596.

" The following order is found among the general orders of the British army, issued from headquarters at Haddenfield: "The Women of the Army are constantly to march upon the flanks of the Baggage of their respective Corps, and the Provost Martial has received positive Orders to Drum out any Woman who shall dare to disobey this order."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 595. For other references to the women of the British army, see ibid., 596, 598.

" The city watch, "which was established soon after the King's Troops took Possession of New-York," is complimented in orders from headquarters. The "inferior Officers, Artificers, Labourers etc. employed in the various Branches of his Majesty's Service (whose Duty will permit of it)" are required "to take their Share of the City Watch."—N. Y. Merc., Je 18, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 660. June 18

Kemble records: "The Troops expected daily from Philadelphia. The Hospital arrived with about six hundred sick and Wounded, but most of the former."—Kemble's Jour., 152. 19

Kemble records that there are "two Battalions of Delancy's on Long Island, to hold themselves in readiness to Embark, and two Battalions of Anspach arrived from Philadelphia."—Kemble's Jour., 152. 20

Congress, at York (see S 30, 1777), adjourns to Philadelphia.—Jour. of Cong., II: 610, 616. The first session there was held on July 2, and adjourned from day to day until July 7, when business was again transacted.—Ibid., II: 616. 27

The battle of Monmouth occurs, the "last general engagement fought on Northern soil" during the Revolution. Clinton, after evacuating Philadelphia (see Je 18), retreated across New Jersey toward New York. Washington followed, in an attempt to capture or destroy the British army, but his plans were frustrated by Gen. Lee, who disobeyed his orders to attack the enemy at a crucial moment in the vicinity of Monmouth court-house.—Winsor, VI: 397–400; Fiske, Hist. & Lit. Essays, essay on "Charles Lee." Under date of July 11, Smith writes in his diary: "Lee under an arrest—for not attacking according to Orders—retreating unnecessarily & for disrespectful words to Washington."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 195. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under Je 28. Kemble records details of the action, with a "Return of Killed, Wounded, & Missing." The British loss was 299, of whom 56 "died of severe heat of the Weather."—Kemble's Jour., 154. See Jl 20. 28

Holt prints in the Journal a letter to Lord North signed by William Smith, which reads: "My duty to the King, and the melancholy state of his affairs on this Continent, command me to deal plainly and truly with your Lordship. The overthrow and capture of Gen. Burgoyne and all his army, has inspired the base rebels of this country to such a degree of insolence; that they are determined to attack Gen. Howe in Philadelphia. In short, my Lord, if France enters into treaty with the rebels, I am afraid America will be forever lost to Great Britain; to prevent which permit me, my Lord, to say, that I think the only means left are to cede to France forever, 29

"1. All Canada, in the state she possessed it before the late war.

"2. To give up Cape Breton and St. Johns, with their dependencies.

"3. To cede to them Nova Scotia.

"4. A right to fish on the banks of Newfoundland, as possessed by them before the late treaty of Fontainebleau.

"In consideration of those concessions, France on her part,

"1. To cease all connection, correspondence, & commerce with the rebel colonies.

"2. To call home all her subjects, that are now in actual service of the rebels, and prevent them in future.

"3. To assist G. Britain with a corps of 12,000 auxiliary troops, to be employed in the service of Great Britain, with the British Army, in order to reduce the rebels to obedience.

"The honour I have of being one of his Majesty's council as well as duty and gratitude, have all called on me to give you the best advice for his Majesty's service in my power, in this dreadful situation of the King's affairs here, which are such as require some cessions to be made."—N. Y. Jour., Je 29, 1778, reprinted in Conn. Gaz. (New London), Jl 3, 1778. In his diary Smith declared this letter a "wicked Forgery," and penned this record: "Wrote a Letter to London to defeat the Design of the Forgery in Holt."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Jl 1 and 2, 1781. In a later issue of the Journal the letter was branded by Smith as a forgery.—N. Y. Jour., Jl 27, 1781.

The legislature of the state of New York passes a banishment act against Tories, entitled "An Act more effectually to prevent the Mischiefs arising from the Influence and Example of Persons of equivocal and suspected Characters in this State." It requires that, on the refusal of such persons to take an oath of allegiance before "the Commissioners appointed for inquiring into, detecting and defeating all Conspiracies," they shall be removed "to any Place within the Enemy's Lines." If they fail to appear within 21 days, they shall be adjudged, upon conviction, when found, to be guilty of "Misprision of Treason;" and their lands shall be charged with 30

1778 June 30 double taxes.—Laws of N. Y., 1st sess. chap. 47 (Gaine ed., 1789, I: 30). A probable origin of this legislative measure is given by Wm. Smith in his diary: "The popular Zealots have latterly been sanguine. They are elevated by the Report that the British army have evacuated Pensilvania and that Arnold is in Possession of it—They probably imagine that such [as] have not joined them may in the moment of Despondency be induced to it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III, under Jl 3. Regarding the banishment of Tories, see Winsor, VII: 201.

A list of those receiving sentence of banishment, which includes the name of "William Smith, Esq. [see Jl 3], one of the members of the late Council of the King of Great Britain for this State," is preserved in the secretary of state's office.—Mag. Am. Hist., June, 1881, pp. 428, 433. See, however, My 4, 1780.

" Maj. John André, having recorded in his daily journal an account of the withdrawal of the British troops under Sir Henry Clinton from Philadelphia through New Jersey to New York, concludes his report with the arrival in the city on this date (it is probably this date André meant when he wrote "June 31") of the "Guards Hessians and Cavalry." He says: "Thus was completed a March of many miles thro' the Enemy's country in defiance of every obstacle they threatened or attempted to throw in our way; nor was it only by repelling and pursuing them at Freehold [Monmouth—see Je 28] that a superiority both of skill and powers was shewn; but throughout the march they were perplexed in their conjectures by the secrecy observed respecting our route and by false movements made to deceive them; neither could their Militia or Light Troops with their boasted knowledge of the country and dexterity in hovering round us, find an opportunity to give the least annoyance to a Column of eight or nine miles in length."—André's Jour., from the manuscript in the library of Wm. K. Bixby, St. Louis, ed. by Henry Cabot Lodge (pub. by The Bibliophile Society, Boston, 1903), II: 16–17.

July — In this month, John Wilson, ensign of the 71st Regt. and assistant-engineer of the British army, drew a topographical plan of the upper end of "The Island of New York from Horn's Hook to the Advanced Posts in Front of Kingsbridge from a Survey in July 1778 . . ."—See facsimile reproduction in André's Jour., ed. by Henry C. Lodge (Boston, The Bibliophile Soc., 1903), II: following p. 50.

3 On July 1, 2, and 3, the British, embarking at "the Hook," landed the "1st. and 2d. Brigades upon Staten Island; 3d. 4th., and 5th. New Utrecht, Long Island; the rest of the Army upon New York Island."—Kemble's Jour., 154.

" In accordance with the act of June 30 (q. v.), Wm. Smith receives an order to appear at Poughkeepsie before the commissioners for detecting conspiracies, to take the oath of allegiance. On the same day he wrote in his diary that he did not intend to take the oath, and added: "I shall imitate the Conduct of Metellus Numidicus. I shall have his Fate and be banished. His refusal of an arbitrary Oath contributed to his Honor. Of this I am clear that my Submission to it would not only wound my Innocence but disgrace my Character. What shallow Policy! The Act will turn the distressed Exiles into bitter Enemies, such as take it [the oath] for Force will be less friendly than if it had not been tendered. It is oppressive & impolitic."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III.

Smith appeared before the commissioners on July 6 and refused to take the oath.—Ibid., V, Supplement. He came to New York City in August (see Ag 26).

4 "The number of deserters, chiefly Hessians, who have left the British army since they left this city [Philadelphia—see Je 18], amounts to upwards of 1500.

"We hear that the British troops now in New-York, are preparing to evacuate that city, and that the whole of the troops now on the Continent, will soon be drawn off to Britain or the West-Indies.

"When Sir William Howe, General Burgoyne, and Sir Henry Clinton embarked for America in the year 1775, the following lines appeared in a London Paper:

"'Behold! the Cerberus the Atlantic plough,
'Her precious cargo—Clinton—Burgoyne—Howe.
'Bow—Bow—Bow!'

"We leave it to our readers to determine, whether those military 'dogs of war' have done any thing but bark ever since they came to America."—Penn. Packet, Jl 4, 1778.

" A reward is offered for the return to John Bouser's "English Tavern," at the 4-mile stone, of a "black sprig'd Sattin Cloak."—Royal Gaz., Jl 4, 1778. The 4-mile stone stood on the north side of the present 46th St., west of Third Ave. The "English Tavern" may be the old Union Flag which, as we know, stood on the Bowery or Post Road four miles from New York.—Bayles, 158, 176. July 4

Sir Henry Clinton, "Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Forces in North-America," arrives in New York from Philadelphia (see Je 18).—N. Y. Merc., Jl 6, 1778. 5

The British army establishes headquarters at Sandy Hook, where its march is completed, and orders are issued for the disposition of the troops. Those assigned to Manhattan Island in the orders of this day are the "16th. and 17th. Dragoons, and the three Provincial Troops, the Guards, Queen's Rangers, Flank Companies of 22d., 43d., and Marines, and all the Hessian Corps."—Order-book, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1883), 603. "

A letter from Poughkeepsie states that Samuel Broome has donated £100 to Mr. Jay for "the distressed prisoners confined at New-York;" and that the governour of the state has undertaken "to transact this business," as soon as military operations "will admit of any communication with the enemy." All intercourse with them has been suspended "for several months."—N. Y. Jour., Jl 6, 1778. 6

Congress reassembles at Philadelphia.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), XI: 671–62; Winsor, VI: 401. 7

The king's commissioners having arrived in New York "last week" (cf. Je 3), with power to appoint governours, Tryon writes to Germain asking that he may be recalled.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 747. The request was refused.—Ibid., VIII: 749. 8

Capt. Archibald Robertson is "Employ'd in making a sketch of the Attack at Monmouth [see Je 28] to be sent home by the Genl."—Robertson's Private Jour. of the Campaign 1778 (MS.). He made a second sketch later (see O 24). "

Montresor accompanies Sir Henry Clinton and the general officers to the Narrows, both on Staten and Long Islands, and explains a project of his "for defending that Pass, for preventing an Enemy's Fleet passing to New York."—Montresor's Jour., 504. 10

Washington, writing to Gov. Clinton from headquarters at Paramus, says, in part: "By the latest accounts from New York it does not seem possible that the Enemy will operate anywhere suddenly; They have been much harassed and deranged by their march thro' Jersey, and are at present encamped upon Long, Staten and York Islands. 11

"We have this day a rumor that a French Fleet has been seen off the Coast, and that the English is preparing to sail from New York in pursuit of them. But it is but a rumor."—From Letters of Geo. Washington to Geo. and Jas. Clinton, 28.

Kemble records: "The Count D'Estaing, with 13 Ships of the Line, came to Anchor off the Hook; our Fleet under Lord Howe drawn up within the Hook to receive them."—Kemble's Jour, 155. Montresor states that the French fleet consisted "of 11 Sail of the Line and 3 Frigates, they took 12 out of 13 of our Fishing Boats."—Montresor's Jour., 504; and foot-note, showing list of the Toulon fleet off Sandy Hook under command of Count D'Estaing. See also Robertson's Private Jour. of the Campaign 1778 (MS.). A carefully executed sepia drawing of the French fleet lying off Sandy Hook, drawn by Ozanne, the official French artist attached to the fleet, is preserved in the Library of Congress with 21 other drawings by the same artist showing the fleet in various American ports. These drawings were bought in Paris in 1911 by the author.

Several letters passed between Lafayette and the admiral while his fleet was anchored off Sandy Hook.—Doniol, Correspondance inédite de La Fayette avec Le Comte D'Estaing (1892). For an account of the movements of the French fleet during this and the following year, see Pluyette; "Etude critique des opérations de l'amiral d'Estaing aux Etats-Unis et aux Antilles (1778–1779)," in Bulletin Historique et Scientifique de L'Auvergne, Sept. 1921, and succeeding issues.

Clinton, and the British commissioners, Carlisle, Eden, and Johnstone, at New York, address the following letter to the continental congress: "We received soon after our arrival at this place, your answer [see Je 17] to our letter [see Je 9] . . ., and are sorry to find on your part any difficulties raised which must prolong the calamities of the present war. "

"You propose to us as matter of choice or other of two alternatives, which you state as preliminaries necessary even to the beginning of a negociation for peace to this empire.

"One is an explicit acknowledgement of the independence of 1778 July 11 these states. We are not inclined to dispute with you about the meaning of words; but so far as you mean the intire privilege of the people of North America to dispose of their property, and to govern themselves without any reference to Great Britain, beyond what is necessary to preserve that union of force, in which our mutual safety and advantage consist: We think, that so far their independency is fully acknowledged in the terms of our letter. . . . And we are willing to enter upon a fair discussion with you, of all the circumstances that may be necessary to ensure or even to enlarge that independency.

"In the other alternative you propose, that his Majesty should withdraw his fleets and his armies.

"Although we have no doubt of his Majesty's disposition to remove every subject of uneasiness from the colonies, yet there are circumstances of precaution against our antient enemies, which joined to the regard that must be paid to the safety of many, who, from affection to Great-Britain, have exposed themselves to suffer in this contest, and, to whom Great Britain owes support at every expence of blood and treasure, that will not allow us to begin with this measure. . . .

"You refer to treaties already subsisting, but are pleased to withhold from us any particular information in respect to their nature or tendency.

"If they are in any degree to effect our deliberations, we think that you cannot refuse a full communication of the particulars, in which they consist, both for our consideration and that of your constituents, who are to judge between us whether any alliance you may have contracted be a sufficient reason for continuing this unnatural war. We likewise think ourselves entitled to a full communication of the powers by which you conceive yourselves authorized to make treaties with foreign nations.

"And we are led to ask satisfaction on this point, because we have observed in your proposed articles of confederation, No. 6 and 9, it is stated that you should have the power of entering into treaties, yet we do not find promulgated any act or resolution of the assemblies of particular states conferring this power on you.

"As we have communicated our powers to you, we mean to proceed without reserve in this business, we will not suppose that any objection can arise on your part to our communicating to the public as much of your correspondence as may be necessary to explain our own proceedings. At the same time we assure you, that in all such publications, the respect which we pay to the great body of people you are supposed to represent, shall be evidenced by us in every possible mark of consideration and regard." On July 18, congress resolved that as neither alternative suggested in the letter of June 17 (q. v.), had been complied with, "no answer be given to the letter of the 11th instant from the British commissioners."—Penn. Eve. Post, Jl 21, 1778. For reproduction of the last page of the commissioners' letter, made from the original in the Library of Congress, see Avery, Hist. of the U. S., VI: 145. A final "Manifesto and Proclamation" was issued by the commissioners on Oct. 3 (q. v.).

12 The French ambassador, Gérard, arrives at Philadelphia.—Winsor, VI: 401.

" Maj. John André records in his military journal the preparations made to meet the offensive of the "French Fleet" of "twelve Sail of the Line and four or five ships of inferior force" that came to anchor off Sandy Hook on the preceding day. He says that troops under command of Col. O'Hara were embarked for Sandy Hook. "They were here employed," he adds, "in throwing up a battery of two 8-inch howitzers and three 32-pounders. Eight companies from the Light Infantry and Grenadiers were distributed on board the ships of war. The companies were chosen by lot and the whole drew at their own request. The ardor to serve and the confidence in Lord Howe were as conspicuous in the seamen of the transports who almost to a man were Volunteers to go on board the King's Ships," which at that time were eighteen in number, "with three sloops, three fire-ships, two bombs and three galleys."—André's Journal, II: 17–18. Under date of July 13, Montresor writes: "I detached 3 Engineers to Sandy Hook to construct 2 Batteries for three 18 pounders and two Howitzers, with Tools and materials."—Montresor's Jour., 505; Robertson's Private Jour. of the Campaign 1778 (MS.). See also sketch appearing in Montresor's Jour. as an insert between pp. 504 and 505, showing this battery and the positions of the opposing fleets.

" "At 4 o'clock this morning Sir Henry Clinton went from New York down to Lord Howe at Sandy Hook."—Montresor's Jour., 504. July 12

" Von Krafft records in his journal: "I was sent with one Corporal and 18 privates a distance of 3 English miles from our camp to Yorck on watch on the road at a place called Tortellbey [Turtle Bay] to guard three powder-magazines. Never until then did I eat so many cherries and oysters as in this place. A very pleasant place."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 54.

13 Encouragement is offered to win recruits to the "Roman Catholic Volunteers." The recruiting stations are at "No. 51, in Cherry-street, near the Ship Yards," and at an encampment "at Yellow-Hook."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 13, 1778. It appears by this that the British military authorities disregarded the provincial statute which suppressed Catholicism.—See Eccles. Rec., III: 1450.

16 "The French Fleet [is] still at Anchor & taking a good many Ships bound for this Port [New York]."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Sir Henry Clinton changes his headquarters from the Narrows to New York.—Montresor's Jour., 505.

" "By a person who came out of New York last Saturday, we are informed the tories were in the greatest consternation.—Their insolence had quite vanished—and now they begin to send toast and butter to the prisoners by way of making fair weather for themselves against our army takes possession of that city, which time is near at hand."—Penn. Packet, Jl 16, 1778.

17 "This day the 1st. Brigade and 2d. Battalion 71st. were brought from Staten Island, the 71st. to proceed to Kings Bridge, the 1st. Brigade to occupy Mc Gowan's Pass. We have now on this Island: 1st. Brigade, 4th., 23d., 27th., and 49th., 35th., 52d., 45th., 71st. Regiments, 13 Battalions Hessians, Queen's Rangers, 2d. Brigade Delancy's and Robinson's Provincials; in the whole about 9,000 fit for Duty."—Kemble's Jour., 156; see also Montresor's Jour., 505.

" Smith writes in his diary: "The Confidence of the Whigs is at its highest Elevation if we were to judge from their Words—But I impute this. . . . Language to Fear in the Leaders of a Rising of the People—Great Pains are taken to render it credible that the British loss in Jersey is 3000 and that a French Fleet & 12000 Troops are arrived in Delaware & the Kings Army leaving NY. for Hallifax. Yet melancholy Truths slip out which the Whigs affect to disbelieve—The advance of an army to Fort Stanwix—The cutting off of Wioming by Indians. . . . The Assembling of an army at Ticonderoga—That the Loss in Jersey was Trifling & no Victory—See Washington's & Lee's Letters in Loudon's Paper of yesterday. Many suspect that the fleet said to be in Delaware on the 12 Inst & gone to Sandy Hook is an English one—See Franklins & Adams's Letters dated at Paris 18 May advising of 11 Ships of the Line [see Jl 12] ready to sail for America."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 195.

18 A private letter of this date states, in substance, that New York is blockaded by the French fleet: "If the French fleet should preserve its present station, a famine must, I think (and very soon) ensue in the enemy's army, as all their supplies must be cut off. Nothing but rice, instead of bread or flour, has been dealt out to the soldiery since their arrival in New York. A loaf of bread that used to cost 4 d. now sells in the city for a dollar. In short, it appears to me, not at all impossible, that if they should be thus kept hem'd in on the sea and land side, they will be reduced to the necessity of surrendering the city in less than a month, without any enterprise of General Washington against them."—Penn. Packet (Phila.), Jl 25, 1778. In the same paper it is reported that Washington has crossed the North River to unite with Gates above Kingsbridge. "Thus are the enemies of America surrounded on all sides, by the forces of the magnanimous and Most Christian King, and the virtuous citizens of America. It is therefore more than probable that the destruction which the emissaries of Britain had concerted for the free and independent sons of America, will, ere long, fall with tenfold misery upon their own heads.—Ibid. Montresor records that the French fleet has already taken "Eleven sail of our [British] vessels besides the Fishing Craft."—Montresor's Jour., 506. André records the capture of a still larger number (see Jl 22).

19 Smith says there are many negroes in Washington's army; "they mix, march, mess & sleep with the Whites." The soldiers complain of a "want of Pay." Many are "in Raggs without Shoes & Stockings" and "wish the war ended."—Wm. Smith's MSS., folio 195.

20 Sir Charles Blagden, an officer in the British hospital service, writes from New York to Sir Joseph Banks: "In the affair of the

BY THE KING.

A PROCLAMATION,

Declaring the Ceſſation of Arms, as well by Sea as Land, agreed upon between His Majeſty, the Moſt Chriſtian King, the King of Spain, the States General of the United Provinces, and the United States of America, and enjoining the Obſervance thereof.

GEORGE R.

WHEREAS Proviſional Articles were ſigned at Paris, on the Thirtieth Day of November laſt, between Our Commiſſioner for treating of Peace with the Commiſſioners of the United States of America, and the Commiſſioners of the ſaid States, to be inſerted in and to conſtitute the Treaty of Peace propoſed to be concluded between Us and the ſaid United States, when Terms of Peace ſhould be agreed upon between Us and His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty: And whereas Preliminaries for reſtoring Peace between Us and His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, were ſigned at Verſailles on the Twentieth Day of January laſt, by the Miniſters of Us and the Moſt Chriſtian King. And whereas Preliminaries for reſtoring Peace between Us and the King of Spain, were alſo ſigned at Verſailles, on the Twentieth Day of January laſt, between the Miniſters of Us and the King of Spain: And whereas, for putting an End to the Calamity of War as ſoon and as far as may be poſſible, it hath been agreed between Us, His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, the King of Spain, the States-General of the United Provinces, and the United States of America, as follows; that is to ſay,

THAT ſuch Veſſels and Effects as ſhould be taken in the Channel and in the North Sees, after the Space of Twelve Days, to be computed from the Ratification of the ſaid Preliminary Articles, ſhould be reſtored on all Sides; That the Term ſhould be One Month from the Channel and the North Seas as far as the Canary Iſlands incluſively, whether in the Ocean or in the Mediterranean; Two Months from the ſaid Canary Iſlands as far as the Equinoctial Line or Equator; and laſtly, Five Months in all other Parts of the World, without any Exception, or any other more particular Deſcription of Time or Place.

AND whereas the Ratifications of the ſaid Preliminary Articles between Us and the Moſt Chriſtian King, in due Form, were exchanged by the Miniſters of Us and of the Moſt Chriſtian King, on the Third Day of this inſtant February; and the Ratifications of the ſaid Preliminary Articles between Us and the King of Spain, were exchanged between the Miniſters of Us and of the King of Spain, on the Ninth Day of this inſtant February, from which Days reſpectively the ſeveral Terms above-mentioned, of Twelve Days, of One Month, of Two Months, and of Five Months, are to be computed: And whereas it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure that the Ceſſation of Hoſtilities between Us and the States General of the United Provinces, and the United States of America, ſhould be agreeable to the Epochs fixed between Us and the Moſt Chriſtian King:

We have thought fit, by and with the Advice of Our Privy Council, to notify the ſame to all Our loving Subjects: and We do declare, that Our Royal Will and Pleaſure is, and we do hereby ſtrictly charge and command all Our Officers, both at Sea and Land, and all other Our Subjects whatſoever, to forbear all Acts of Hoſtility, either by Sea or Land, againſt His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, the King of Spain, the States General of the United Provinces, and the United States of America, their Veſſels or Subjects, from and after the reſpective Times above-mentioned, and under the Penalty of incurring Our higheſt Diſpleaſure.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the Fourteenth Day of February, in the Twenty-third Year of Our Reign, and in the Year of Our Lord One Thouſand, Seven Hundred and Eighty-three.

GOD ſave the KING.

LONDON: Printed by CHARLES EYRE and WILLIAM STRAHAN, Printers to the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty. 1783.

NEW-YORK: Re-printed by JAMES RIVINGTON, Printer to the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty. 1783.

A GENERAL PEACE.

NEW-YORK, March 25, 1783.

LATE laſt Night, an EXPRESS from New-Jerſey, brought the following Account.

THAT on Sunday laſt, the Twenty-Third Inſtant, a Veſſel arrived at Philadelphia, in Thirty-five Days from Cadiz, with Diſpatches to the Continental Congreſs, informing them, that on Monday the Twentieth Day of January, the PRELIMINARIES to

A GENERAL PEACE,

Between Great-Britain, France, Spain, Holland, and the United States of America, were SIGNED at Paris, by all the Commiſſioners from thoſe Powers; in conſequence of which, Hoſtilities, by Sea and Land, were to ceaſe in Europe, on Wedneſday the Twentieth Day of February; and in America, on Thurſday the Twentieth Day of March, in the preſent Year One Thouſand Seven Hundred and Eighty-Three.

THIS very important Intelligence was laſt Night announced by the Firing of Cannon, and great Rejoicings at Elizabeth-Town.---Reſpecting the Particulars of this truly intereſting Event no more are yet received, but they are hourly expected.

Publiſhed by James Rivington, Printer to the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The foregoing "Broadside" has been compared with the original, in the Senate House, Kingston, N.Y., and found correct.

JULIUS SCHOONMAKER, Custodian.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 13th day of October, 1898.

C. HUME, Notary Public.

A. RIVINGTON'S REPRINT OF THE KING'S PROCLAMATION OF FEB. 14, 1783, TERMINATING THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR. SEE P. 1156.

B. REPRODUCTION OF RIVINGTON'S BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING THE SIGNING OF THE PEACE PROTOCOL AT PARIS ON JAN. 20, 1783. SEE P. 1158.

1778 July 20 28th of June [q.v.] we lost upon the whole between three & four hundred men: & about the same number had deserted during our retreat before that day; afterwards very few deserted. Washington condemned Lee's conduct in that action so much, that the latter insisted upon a court-martial, which acquitted him. Our Commissioners have issued a Proclamation, relating their application to Congress & the manner in which it was treated, & appealing to the people of America; but it will all be fruitless without success in arms. Indeed our present situation is so ignominious, that the whole Continent must view us with contempt; almost all the British Force in America blockaded by sea, & invested by land. . . . The French force is so much prepared that we cannot presume to attack them; they effectually block up the harbour, & have taken several of our vessels; but the communication with the Sound is still open, & the Packet-Boats now go that way. It is a matter of astonishment to every person here, that a month after the French Fleet had sailed from Toulon we had no Fleet out in pursuit of them, but lay all asleep at Spithead."—From the original letter in the N. Y. P. L. printed in Library Bull. (1903), 422–24.

21 Lord Carlisle writes from New York to Lady Carlisle: "The common people hate us in their hearts. . . . Formerly, when things went better for us, there was an appearance of friendship, by their coming in for pardons; but, no sooner was our situation the least altered for the worst, but these friends were the first to fire on us; and many were taken with their pardons in their pockets."—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, III: 404.

22 The French fleet, which has been lying off Sandy Hook since the 11th inst., weighs anchor and sails for Rhode Island, as recorded in the military journal of Maj. John André, who adds that while the French ships were off the Hook "they landed a considerable body of men in Shrewsbury River and took in water. They captured about twenty Sail of trading vessels and one or two sloops of war, an object of no consequence, compared with the expectations they well might have."—André's Jour., 17–18; see also Montresor's Jour., 506; and Kemble's Jour., 156.

Channing says that during the eleven days the French had been "busily engaged in sounding the channels leading over the bar. . . . Suddenly, on July 22, when the depth of water on the outer bar rose to thirty feet—ample for the passage of the biggest French liner—D'Estaing stood out to sea. . . . Treachery or unwillingness of pilots has always been alleged as the reason for this sudden turn-about; but the necessity of keeping his fleet intact, or possibly some knowledge of the approach of Commodore Byron, may have impelled him to this action."—Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 298–99. A recent French treatise, Etude critique des opérations de l'amiral d'Estaing aux Etats-Unis et aux Antilles (1778–1779), by Col. Pluyette, defends the admiral thus: "D'Estaing préoccupa immédiatement de faire rechercher des pilotes et de faire reconnaître les passes conduisant dans la rade intérieure. Ces passes, situées entre la presque'île de Sandy Hook et Long-Island, sont au nombre de quatre; mais une seule est accessible aux navires. Les pilotes consultés prétendirent que la passe en question ne pouvait être utilisée par les vaisseaux de 74 canons. En vain, d'Estaing insista; en vain, promit-il cent cinquante mille francs au pilote qui ferait passer l'escadre. Tous refusèrent. L'amertume au cœur, d'Estaing dut renoncer à son projet. . . .

"Il semble que d'Estaing se soit heurté dans cette affaire a la mauvaise volonté des pilotes américains. . . . Le concours des pilotes du pays était donc absolument indispensable; or, il semble que la plupart de ces pilotes aient voulu nous refuser l'occasion de remporter des succès, soit que certains d'entre eux fussent secrètement à la solde des Anglais, soit par jalousie de race."—Bulletin Historique et Scientifique de L'Auvergne (O, 1921), 200.

Kemble avers that "want of Water may have induced Count D'Estaing to leave His position without the Hook, as well as having Effected his present business, the Opening Southern Ports, and taking the Tobacco Trade under his Convoy, which may, by this time, be prepared and ready to Sail. If Mr. Byron is near, he [D'Estaing] never will venture himself in Rhode Island Harbour."—Kemble's Jour., 157. On the 24th, the French fleet was said to have been seen "off the Delaward."—Ibid. Its destination, however, was Rhode Island.—See Ag 6.

" Lieut. Von Krafft describes a section of the country near Kingsbridge (evidently on Manhattan Island): "We lost our way in the woods and arrived at some huts, in which and in the adjoining little gardens many things, but no people were to be seen or heard. Presumably it all belonged to negroes. We left everything untouched. Everything seemed to me as if belonging to housed hermits."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 56. July 22

"Arrived thro the Sound 15 Transports from Rhode Island that lately took the Reinforcements there. Their approach creating an alarm, a Battery was erected at Horen's Hook near Hell-Gate. Sent an Engineer likewise to Staaten Island to make a redoubt near the Flag Staff."—Montresor's Jour., 506. 23

"General Knyphausen gone this day to Kings Bridge, to Command there. The Rebels alarmed our out Posts last Night by firing upon the Sentries, but nothing more. General Tryon's March to the East End of Long Island Countermanded."—Kemble's Jour., 157. "

The following orders referring to the movements of the British troops are drawn up: "The Regt of Landgrave to march to Kingsbridge tomorrow morning; to be posted there, as Gl Knyphausen shall think proper. 25

"The 54th Regrs to march tomorrow morning with the Park of Artillery, towards New York.

"Commissaries, &c. to be within Kingsbridge, by the 27th at Night.

"The Army to march on the 28th, & to be posted as follows.

"Light Infantry, near Horn's Hook.

"British & Hessian Grenadiers, at Mc Gowan's.

"Volrs of Ireland, within Kingsbridge.

"7th & 23d Between the Redoubts, on the Heights of Fordham.

"Jagers, upon Spiten Devil. . . .

"17th Dragoons, near Kingsbridge; within.

"Queen's Rangers, Legion, & Everick's, beyond the Redoubts.

"Flank Companies of the Guards, in New York."—From a MS. among the Robertson loose papers in the N. Y. P. L.

"Return of the Sick in the General Hospital" consists of 850 men.—Montresor's Jour., 507. "

"About 800 British and Hessian Prisoners arrived here from New-Jersey and Connecticut" since the last issue of the newspaper. "The same Number of Americans are to be sent out in their Room."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 27, 1778. 27

Volunteer companies of gentlemen, in uniforms, parade in the Fields, and are reviwed by Maj.-Gen. Robertson, who addresses them, stating his intention "of acquainting his Majesty and their fellow Subjects in Britain, with their loyal and military Ardour."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 3, 1778. "

The "Provincial Secretary's Office is removed from Broad Street, to No. 163, the upper End of Queen-Street."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 27, 1778. "

Maj.-Gen. Valentine Jones, the commandant of New York, publishes a notice forbidding persons "to wash cloathing of any kind in the Fresh Water Pond, or heave filth, carbage [sic], or dirt, in or near the same."—Royal Gaz., Jl 29, 1778. 28

"Sir Henry gone to the Hook, supposed to Consult with Lord Howe on the Operations necessary to pursue if the French are gone to Rhode Island. 29

"We have now on New York, Staten, and Long Island, 20,000 Rank and File fit for duty."—Kemble's Jour., 158. Cf. letter in N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), Ag 10, 1778.

"The Cornwall, of 74 Guns, one of Admiral Byron's Fleet, arrived and at anchor in the Hook; parted Company the 3d. or 4th. of this month in a Gale of Wind. The Centurion and Raisonable also arrived from Halifax. Strongly Conjectured that the French Fleet is going to Rhode Island."—Kemble's Jour., 158. 30

"A Legion now raising of 700 men under the Command of Lord Cathcart."—Montresor's Jour., 507. "

"The Rebels have detached 4500 men from their Grand Army at and about the White Plains to proceed to the Eastward."—Montresor's Jour., 507; see also Kemble's Jour., 158. 31

Kemble records that it is "Reported that Mr. Washington had Detached 3,000 Men to Rhode Island." Kemble sails "for the Hook."—Kemble's Jour., 158. Aug. 1

It is announced that the "Bathing Machine" is "ready at the North River, behind Mr. Harrison's Brewhouse, when [where] Attendance will be given every Morning during the Summer Season."—Royal Gaz., Ag 1, 1778. The first mention of this machine was on April 18 (q.v.), though apparently in another location. "

Kemble records: "About two o'Clock this day, Lord Howe made the Signal for the Fleet to Weigh; in twenty Minutes the whole were under Sail, Consisting of one 74, seven 64, five of 50 2

1778 Aug. 2 Guns, with two forty Gun Ships, several frigates, and three fire Ships; but the Packet coming in and the Wind Scanty, the Fleet came to Anchor in half an hour. . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 158.

3 Another large fire occurs in New York. The following is the first newspaper report of it: "About 1 o'Clock this morning, a most dreadful Fire broke out, in the Store of Mr. Jones, Ship Chandler, on Cruger's Wharff [now Front St.], in this City, which, notwithstanding the utmost Efforts of the Navy, Army and Inhabitants, soon consumed all the Buildings on the East, South, and West End of said Wharff, and every House on the South Side of Little Dock Street. The Street being narrow, the Flames soon communicated to the North Side of Little-Dock-Street, and consumed the whole (five Houses excepted) at the W. End. The Fire soon caught the Back Buildings in Dock-street [now Pearl St.], and burnt every House to the East of Mr. Isaac Low's as far as the Old-Slip, and three opposite the Slip. Mr. Low's House, tho' not burnt entirely, is greatly damaged, as well as that next to it on the West.

"The Loss . . . is great, there being no less than 64 Dwelling Houses, besides Stores, consumed.

". . . two small Vessels burnt, but . . . no lives . . . lost.

"Col. Coburn and the Officers and Men of the 35th Regiment were the first of the Military that attended the fire, and they, with the other Gentlemen of the Army gave their Assistance during the whole time."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 3, 1778. The account in the Royal Gaz., of Aug. 5, is the same as this, excepting that, in place of "the Store of Mr. Jones, Ship Chandler" is substituted "the House of Mr. Stewart." See, however, Ag 7.

Kemble states in his journal that the fire broke out "near the Square upon the Wharves, and destroyed all the block of Houses and Stores between that and Mr. Isaac Low's, with some King's Stores, Provincial Clothing, &c."—Kemble's Jour., 158. The quartermaster-general's store-house was one of these.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 775. Provision and bake-houses were among those burned. A few suspected persons, including Frenchmen, were arrested.—Von Krafft's Jour., in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 58. The building where the fire broke out was "on the Dock near the old Slip Market." Three topsail vessels, besides the store-houses, were burned. The total loss is supposed to be £250,000.—Montresor's Jour., 508. Another report stated that "it consumed all the houses between 'Coenties' and the 'Old Slip Market,' from the water-side to Dock [Pearl] Street."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 24, 1778.

The owners' names, and the number of houses owned by each that were burned, were published a week later. Col. Wm. Bayard, who lost several houses in the fire of 1776, lost six in this, the income of which was £520 a year.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 10, 1778. One of the heaviest losers was Peter "Meyfier" (Mesier). He and his relatives, in the last 23 months, have lost 15 houses and stores, "some of them large and elegant Buildings."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 17, 1778. A letter of Aug. 8 from White Plains, quoting a young Hessian (whose brother is aide-de-camp to Gen. Clinton), who saw the fire, states that "it began in a house filled with King's stores—68 houses consumed and a vast quantity of stores, amongst which 30,000 blankets or pairs of blankets, . . . 10,000 suits of cloaths, and a great deal of provisions, computed at four weeks supply. . . ."—Penn. Packet, Ag 15, 1778.

Mayor David Mathews, who did service at the fire, was dangerously wounded, but recovered.—Ibid., Ag 10, 1778.

See the plan of the city, drawn and described by David Grim, showing the locality and course of this fire (and also that of 1776), owned by the N. Y. H. S., and reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), opp. p. 766. He states: "The cause of so many houses being burned at this time was the Military Officers taking the ordering and directions of this fire from the firemen. The citizens complained thereof, to the Commander-in-Chief. Who immediately gave general orders that in future, No Military man should interfere with any fire that may happen in the City, and leave the extinguishing thereof to the entire directions of the firemen and inhabitants."—Ibid., 768.

" Referring to Howe's having gone to New York and formed his lines, "with the left on the Hudson and the right on the East river, about a mile in front of the city," Von Elking writes: "The mob had again set fire to many of the best houses and churches, while the garrison was quartered in other churches, and in Fort St. George and in wooden barracks. The party feeling ran high in the city; its civil government was in loyal hands, and the Germans found evidences of luxury and hospitality in the well-furnished houses on Queen street and Watter street, where the rich merchants then lived; . . . The city was divided into seven sections, and a mayor, with seven councillors and seven aldermen—loyalists, of course—had charge of the civil government. Many of the citizens were supplied with arms and employed as militia, to guard the city."—The German Allied Troops in the North American War, 54. Aug. 3 "

A London news item, on Oct. 15, stated: "The Fire which has happened at New-York was foreseen by several Merchants in London, who as soon as they had Advice of Clinton's Return to New-York from Philadelphia, immediately insured their Goods there from Fire. The Premium given on this Account, for three Months was Five Guineas per Cent."—St. James's Chron., O 13–15, 1778. A New York letter which reached England in November stated that "14,000 Suits of Clothes and 30,000 Stands of Arms were destroyed in the Fire."—Ibid., N 10–12, 1778.

The British ordnance sloop "Morning Star," lying "off the Coffee House in the East River," with 248 barrels of gunpowder on board, blows up. It is supposed to have been struck by lightning. Considerable damage is done to windows and the roofs of houses, and many people are knocked down by the shock.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 10, 1778. Dunlap published in Hist. of the New Netherlands, II: Appendix, CCXXV et seq., the letter of an old man (dated 1836) giving interesting details of this occurrence. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Ag 7. 4

A "Gentleman high in Office at New-York" writes to a correspondent in London: "The Conciliatory Bills [see F 19 and Ap 15] have been productive of great Evils, and lost us Opportunities not again to be expected. . . . I am astonished that Ministry could have any Expectations from the Measure, acquainted, as they must have been, of D'Estaing's Destination, and the Appointment of a Minister Plenipotentiary from France to Congress. In short, there is no Alternative but Conquest, or avowing absolute Independency, and we dread the Evacuation of Philadelphia will be followed by that of New-York. 5

"We have been relieved in the Midst of this Distress, and the Dread of Famine coming, upon us, by the miraculous Arrival of the Cork Fleet, . . . which escaped the greatest Risk of being taken and converted to Mr. Washington's Use. . . . They are safe now in the East River, and come very opportunely to supply several Sorts of Provisions, which were entirely deficient."—St. James's Chron., O 20–22, 1778. Regarding conditions in New York, see also letter in N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), Ag 10, 1778.

Monsieur Gérard, ambassador from France, the first from any nation, is introduced to congress.—Jour. of Cong., III: 6. 6

"Arrived this evening an Express from Major General Pigot from Rhode Island to Sir Henry Clinton dated the 3d and that (sic) he was invested by the French Fleet and 30,000 Rebels and expected the Rebels would open their Batteries against him, on this day. Lord Howe with the Royal Fleet consisting of 31 sail, weighed anchor again [see Ag 2] and proceeded with a fair wind to attack the French Fleet at Rhode Island."—Montresor's Jour., 508. See also Kemble's Jour., 159, "

This date is found on one of the finest of Archibald Robertson's drawings, entitled "New York from Brooklyn Heights." This beautiful sepia drawing, and the one made from Mt. Pitt and bearing the date April 11, 1779 (q. v.), probably never belonged to the series described under July 12 (q. v.); they were separately purchased by the author some time before the portfolio collection was found and are of somewhat larger size. When found these two drawings were mounted on strainers, and framed. See Frontispieces, Vol. V. "

For the safety of the city and shipping, Maj.-Gen. Jones issues an order requiring that vessels shall not lie near any wharf without permit from the superintendent of the port, and then only to load and unload, and with anchor astern, "to be able to haul off immediately when ordered, or in case of fire."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 24, 1778. 7

In an open letter, John Stewart publishes a contradiction of a statement, which John Jones printed in Robertson's Gaz. of Aug. 4, that the fire of Aug. 3 (q. v.) originated in Stewart's house. In support of this contention, he publishes the following order from the provost-marshal's aide-de-camp: "John Stewart having been confined in the Provost at his own Request, until it could be proved that the Fire was not occasioned by any Neglect of his; it appearing that the Fire did not begin at his House, he is discharged by the General's order."—Royal Gaz., Ag 8, 1778. "

"This morning arrived the Rebel Commissary General of 8

1778 Ag 8 Prisoners."—Montresor's Jour., 509. This was Elias Boudinot.—See F 3.

10 "L[d] Howe got off the Mouth of the Harbour near Block I[d] the French Fleet immediately came out 12 Sail of Line of Battle ships, The Two Fleet were in sight for near Two Days & Just as they were going to Engage a very heavy storm came on w[h] seperated them all & lasted two days."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" It is announced that a general exchange of American marine prisoners has been agreed upon, and 200 have already been sent to Elizabeth-Town. Those remaining, whether on parole or on the prison-ships, will be sent there on or before Aug. 13. Those prisoners, whom agents for prizes may wish to use as witnesses in condemning prizes, will be detained.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 10, 1778.

11 "A Flag of Truce from the Rebels came in. Smith the Counsellor and Mr. Cadwallader Colden sent in for not taking the oath."—Montresor's Jour., 509. See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III: 88–91; also his Vol. VI, under date of Ag 26.

13 The Penn. Packet prints a "genuine copy of an Advertisement lately printed, and pasted up in New-York, at all the public places in the city." The advertisement reads: "To be Sold at Private Sale; The British Rights in America consisting of, amongst other articles, The Thirteen Provinces now in Rebellion, which Britain, in the hour of her insolence, attempted to subdue; the reversion of the government of Quebec, Nova-Scotia, Newfoundland, East and West Florida; the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company; a respectable body of his Majesty's troops, and a considerable part of the royal navy, together with all the loyal subjects of America.

"The British West-Indies will be included in the sale, if agreeable to the purchasers.—Apply to George Johnstone, Esq; who is desirous of concluding a private bargain. The conditions of sale to be seen in the hands of Henry Laurens, Esq; President of Congress.

"P. S. To make it easy to purchasers, a seat in Congress will be taken in part payment, the rest in Continental Money.

"N. B. Discount will be allowed for all Loyalists which have been murdered since the tenth of April, 1773.

"The British army and navy, all printers and news-writers, and all mobs and disorderly persons, are forbid to obstruct the sale."—Penn. Packet, Ag 13, 1778.

14 A proclamation is issued by Maj.-Gen. Jones, offering a reward of 100 guineas for the discovery of the incendiaries who, it is believed, started the recent fire. If the informer is an accomplice, the commander-in-chief offers him a pardon for his crime. "It is reported that a Man suspected to have been concerned, being pursued, was wounded in the Back with a Bayonet, immediately after the Fire broke out."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 17, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 661; ibid. (1866), 785. The next day, John C. Knapp, offered to pay an additional reward of 20 guineas on the same conditions.—Royal Gaz., Ag 22, 1778.

15 "Our Fleet [British] came to Sandy Hook hav[g] received some Damage the Appollo Frigate was entirely Dissmasted L[d] Howe was on board of her—Two of the French Fleet were Dissmasted—The Iris a 50 engaged their Rear Adm[l] in a 74 & made her steer off Two others of our 50[s] were a little engaged—The French Fleet came to an Anchor off the Mouth of the Delaware."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). "Commodore Hotham also fell in with another 74 French Ship dismasted, and would have taken her if some of his Squadron had not appeared to rescue him."—Kemble's Jour., 160.

" "The inhabitants [of New York] are most distressed at their present situation, and a vast many want to take their chance in the country, but cannot obtain permission."—Extract from letter from White Plains in Penn. Packet, Ag 15, 1778. See also De Voe, Market Book, 109.

16 Montresor states: "Our army at New York and its Dependencies and that at Rhode Island consist of Twenty five Thousand Men."—Montresor's Jour., 510. Regarding the campaign in Rhode Island, including the siege of Newport, with maps, see Winsor, VI: 592, 593, 595, 596, 598, 600, 602.

17 "The Battalion American Loyalists [of New York] embarked on board of Transports from Flushing."—Montresor's Jour., 510. On the 20th, they were ordered to disembark "and take up their old Ground."—Ibid.

" This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (No. 42—see Jl 12, 1776), entitled "Kepps's Bay 17[th] Aug[t] 1778, where the Troops landed 15[th] Sept[r] 1776." "Phoenix 44, Cap[t] H Parker Roebuck 44, Hammond, Carisford 28. Finisham [?], Rose 20, J. Walton." Aug. 17

"All our fleet assembled at the Hook preparing to go to Sea as soon as possible."—Kemble's Jour., 160. 18

Kemble records a report that "the French fleet left all their Troops upon Conanicut Island in Rhode Island Harbour, said to be about 2,000 under Command of the Marquis De Lafayette;" and he adds: "All this time our Army lays idle."—Kemble's Jour., 160. He records on Aug. 24 a report that, on Aug. 21, "the French fleet [was] still in the Offing, but had not entered the Harbour of Rhode Island."—Ibid., 161. 21

"The general calculation made of the sick in our Military Hospitals [N Y. City] is that seven men die out of every hundred." This is due to the season of the year, when the number of patients increases.—Montresor's Jour., 511. 22

The "Experiment," a British ship of 50 guns, having been chased from sea by some of the French fleet, arrives through the Sound. "In consequence Sir Henry Clinton went from hence to Lord Howe at Sandy Hook."—Ibid.

Inhabitants of New York and vicinity are cautioned not to purchase "any articles of cloathing, linen, or any part of the appointments or necessaries of a soldier." They are subject to fine or imprisonment for doing so.—Royal Gaz., Ag 22, 1778. "

Two British fire-ships are sent from New York to Sandy Hook.—Montresor's Jour., 511. 23

Deserters from the Americans come daily to New York.—Ibid.

Kemble records: "Went down to the Hook and Dined on board Commodore Hotham, with a number of Captains of Men of War, whose Unanimity and Confidence in Lord Howe is most pleasing, who they talk of as the best Officer ever known."—Kemble's Jour., 160. "

"Lord Howe sailed out of the Hook with his fleet and Anchored about six or eight Miles off; in the Evening the Experiment joined them, who had Sailed about eight days before for Rhode Island, but was Chased on her arrival there by three 74 Gun French Ships, and obliged to come thro' the Sound, and was the first 50 Gun Ship ever known to come through Hell Gate."—Kemble's Jour., 160. Possibly this event is depicted in A. Pl. 7-b, Vol. III. 24

There was a skirmish this morning "between Emmerick's Chasseurs and some Indians and Rebels dressed like them near King's bridge—9 were killed and 2 taken—we had 2 men wounded."—Montresor's Jour., 511. "

Two sloops arrive at New York, "as Flags of Truce," loaded with "Inhabitants from the country that have refused the Test Oath."—Ibid.

An item of Boston news states: "By a gentleman who has been some time a prisoner at New-York, but left that place about a fortnight, we learn, that all the American prisoners were at last sent out of the city; not from motives of generosity, but because the enemy found it difficult to subsist them there in their present situation, and because under the apprehensions they are now in, of an attempt to dislodge them from that place, they thought themselves safer without such a body of Americans among them, though unarmed and confined. . . . According to the account of this gentleman as well as that of others, though the severe treatment of our prisoners has been lately mitigated, it has yet to the last been hard; sick and well have been crouded together, and no difference allowed respecting rank, while the French have been treated in another manner; particular attention having been paid to their rank, and compliance shewn them in many instances. . . . Upon the appearance of the French fleet at the Hook, the French and American prisoners discovered their joy as far as they dared, but every countenance in New-York, friendly to the British cause was appalled. The merchants were solicitous to turn their goods into money at any rate, or to conceal them, or to exchange them for the least bulkey and most portable articles. The heavy cannon, and other things were already embarked, and the transports had taken on board provisions, and were wooded and watered for three months. . . . "

"The enemy now freely acknowledge that the tables are turned, and they are put on the defensive and have nothing to do but to provide for their own safety at every quarter, in the best manner they can."—N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), S 7, 1778.

In Holt's N. Y. Jour. of this date, De Voe finds the latest definite mention of the Old Slip Market in the account of the fire of Aug. 3 (q.v.). He thinks this market was probably pulled down between "

1778 this time and 1780.—Market Book, 107, 109. See Ap 18, 1691; Jl 8, Ag 24 1701; O 21, 1736; L. M. R. K., III: 959; Pl. 174.

25 "Some Rebel Light Horse came to Phillips house near King's bridge—3 were shot by the Yagers."—Montresor's Jour., 511.

"This evening arrived the fleet of Victuallers from Corke in most Excellent time, as this army [at New York] had but 5 weeks provisions left, and this Fleet had been at Reedy Island in Delaware river, in a mistake not having been informed of our evacuating Philadelphia though they left Corke so late as the 31st March."—Ibid.

26 Kemble is informed that the French fleet has left Rhode Island, and is supposed to have gone to Boston. He adds:

"One Battalion Grenadiers (1st.), one of Light Infantry (1st.), and 3d. and 4th. Brigades Marched this day from Bedford towards Flushing, under Command of General Grey, supposed to Embark there for Rhode Island. Sir Henry Clinton went this day to Flushing, . . ."—Kemble's Jour., 161. See Ag 30.

" William Smith continues his diary under this date in a new book, Vol. VI. He heads it "New York Bowery at Mr Stuyvesant's," and then gives an account of his trip from Livingston Manor, which he left on July 31. Stops were made at "Poghkeepsing" (Poughkeepsie), Fishkill, and Haverstraw. At Fishkill he was given over "to the Care of Lt Colo Burr an officer . . . from General Washington to conduct the Flag to N. York." He gives a description of the fortifications along the river shore between "the Highland Forts" and Haverstraw, at which place "Spent the 7 & 8th Augt in lading my Effects and imbarked Sunday the 9th. Came to that Night below Dobbs Ferry which is now poss'd by the Continental Troops, in Sight of the Ships laying near Spuyten-Devil.—We fell down to them in the Morning & were ordered to anchor a Head of the Swift Ship of War & soon after visited by an Officer who took Capt Redmond on Board & forbid us to proceed till we had the Admiral's Leave. I went down in the Ship's Boat with a Lt and Mr Colden & reached the Town about Noon Monday 10th."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See Ag 11.

During the pre-Revolutionary excitement Smith deprecated the unreasonable views held by king and parliament on the taxation of the colonies; likewise he condemned the immoderate utterances and the violence of the colonists, and worked tirelessly for conciliation (see Je 5, 1775). Any one taking such an intermediate position in time of war is readily maligned, and Smith was characterized by a London paper (see Ja 13, 1776) as one of a number of "American informers" who have deceived Lord North. When it became necessary for him to take sides, he declared to the council of safety which questioned him "that he did not conceive himself discharged from his oaths of fidelity to the crown." Thereupon, he was ordered "to be confined within the manor of Livingston" (see Je 3, 1777), where he remained until his return to New York at this date.

Smith's diary, from this time until the close of the war is a most valuable manuscript source, and copious material from it is published for the first time in this Chronology. Smith was intimate with the British official family. Sometimes "dining at Headquarters," again "walking with the Gen[l] at the Battery," often called on for advice, frequently requested to draft letters or proclamations, at all times he recorded his characterizations of men and events with the utmost frankness. Appointed to the office of chief-justice (see My 4, 1779) at a time when visions of displacing the military government by a civil one were entertained, he never actually served in that capacity because the change to civil government was never made. He was one of the British embassy to confer with Washington concerning André's case (see S 30, 1780). He assisted Benedict Arnold to prepare the latter's letter to Lord George Germain, also his "Address to the Public" (see O 4, 1780). He helped in receiving and entertaining Prince William Henry during the latter's visit here (see S 25, 1781, et seq.).

The diary, also, for the first time, reveals Smith as the author of many newspaper letters and articles, and, above all, of the pamphlet, A Candid Retrospect, published anonymously, first in Charleston, Sept. 30, 1780 (q. v.), subsequently reprinted in New York, Jan. 30, 1781 (q. v.).

Inserted between pages in the diary are many newspaper clippings and sometimes letters to which the writer makes reference. He often mentions articles appearing in newspapers—New York, New Jersey, New England, Pennsylvania, London—and offers comment. Again he will record the appearance in print of something he has contributed anonymously; indeed, his contributions were rarely signed and his authorship of them is revealed for the first time in this volume. Aug. 26

When Smith was appointed by Sir Henry Clinton on the latter's council, Dec. 23, 1779, he expressed the hope that "the Station you have assigned me will enable me to manifest a Zeal for the King's Service in some Degree answerable to your Expectations." Subsequent to this appointment, there are few proclamations or orders issued from headquarters which Smith did not personally draft. Judge Thomas Jones, about this time, took occasion to write: "The General had an adviser, William Smith, Esq., in whom he placed implicit confidence, a pretended loyalist, a correspondent of some of the leaders of rebellion. By this man Clinton was absolutely governed. By this man's advice the General lost America."—Jones, Hist. of the Rev. War in N. Y. C., I: 368–69. The reader of the diary finds such a derogatory statement impossible of belief, and is forced to conclude that envy or malice engendered it. On the other hand, the sincerity of the chief-justice seems unquestioned when he writes (Wm. Smith's Diary, Jl 1, 1781, q. v.): "I will persevere nevertheless in what I conceive to be the true Interest of the whole empire & if possible bring on an American Parliament."

The above appreciation was prepared by Dr. A. E. Peterson, who has spent several months in looking through this fine collection, which was acquired, in 1918, by the N. Y. Pub. Library. This is the first time that these papers have been comprehensively and critically examined, and the new material which they have yielded constitutes a noteworthy contribution to our knowledge of the period covered, especially for the years 1778–1783.

Two private "Victuallers," much needed by the British forces at New York, arrive from Glasgow, after 13 weeks' passage. There also arrive six 74-gun ships, "being part of Admiral Byron's squadron."—Montresor's Jour., 512. 28

Samuel Fraunces, at "the corner of Dock street, near the Royal Exchange," offers for sale "One clock, one desk and book case, one chest of drawers, a variety of kitchen furniture, looking-glasses, some table China, a few mahogany tables, a few boxes of spermaceti candles, one mahogany desk, and a variety of other articles too tedious to mention; likewise, a Negro Boy, about 14 years of age, hearty and strong, and is used to houshold work. N. B. He has had the small pox."—Royal Gaz., Ag 29, 1778. 29

Fraunces turned the Queen's Head over to John and William Smith before Nov. 14 (ibid. N 14). He offered it for sale in the spring of 1781 (see Mr 19, 1781), but it was not until April 23, 1785 (q. v.) that he succeeded in disposing of the house. Just prior to this, congress leased the property for two years, paying Fraunces $1,625 for the lease, besides $2,000 to repay advances made by Fraunces to American prisoners.—See Ap 4, 1785.

" It appears from an advertisement for the recovery of a stray horse that there was a Hessian camp at Belvoir. The horse, when found, was to be brought to the Bull's Head Tavern.—Royal Gaz., Ag 29, 1778. For the location and history of "Belvoir," see Mr 24, 1777.

"Sir Henry Clinton Sailed this day for Rhode Island with near four thousand Men" (see Ag 26).—Kemble's Jour., 161. See S 7. 30

The "Rebels" send a detachment "to attack the Yagers' outpost in the Front of Spiten Devil near King's Bridge," which was obliged to be re-inforced by the rest of the Yagers. This incident occurred at Valentine's Hill. Prisoners were brought into New York the next day.—Montresor's Jour., 512. 31

Admiral Parker "and four Ships of Byron's fleet, all 74's," arrive in New York harbour.—Kemble's Jour., 161. Sept. 1

"Walker's Charing-Cross Tavern, In the Broad Way," is offered to be let, and the furniture for sale.—Royal Gaz., S 2, 1778. John Walker was listed in 1776 as a tavern-keeper, at the upper end of Broadway. 2

About 40 vessels are fitting out in New York as privateers. Tryon arrives in town with a detachment of about 1,000 provincials, bringing about 1,000 fat cattle.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 750. 5

Sir Henry Clinton arrives in New York from Rhode Island, having come in the "Galatea" to Huntington, L. I., and from there by land. He had landed troops on Rhode Island on the 3d, the "Rebels" having evacuated it on the 1st and 2d of September.—Montresor's Jour., 512–13. Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Kemble's Jour., 161. 7

1778 Sept. 7 An auctioneer advertises to receive goods at his house, "the sign of the Red Lion, near Fresh-Water" (No. 115 Queen St.), and also at the Merchants' Coffee House.—N. Y. Merc., S 7, 1778.

8 Nicholas Jones, in a manuscript memorandum, lists the names of 121 "Vessels Commissioned by General Tryon from the Port of New York Since the 8th of Sept, 1778," and adds: "by March '79, upwards of £600,000, taken." Each ship's master and number of guns are listed.—Stewart and Jones, New-York Merchants Letter-book, etc. (MS.), in N. Y. P. L.

" Wm. Price, junior surgeon of the "Lord Hyde," writes on his arrival at New York that "to be set down at a Place so beautifully situated, and where Nature was so much more luxuriant in the vegetable Kingdom then I had ever yet seen, gave me a Satisfaction unfelt before: And if so lovely now, what must it have been in its Prosperity, in the Enjoyment of every Blessing which Peace, Commerce, and a well regulated Government could bestow upon the Inhabitants. . . .

"The bad Success of the Commissioners, and the War which we must be engaged in, in Europe as well as here, leaves very little Hopes of ever bringing this Country again to a Dependance: It will be well if we can keep what we now have, for in giving them these Provinces, and especially this Port, we exclude almost a Possibility of retaking any Part, the Situation of New-York render ing it the best Key to North America in general."—St. James's Chron., O 17–20, 1778.

9 Kemble records: "General Grey's Aid-De-Camp, Capt. André, arrived this day, having left the General at Block Island, and informs that the Troops, those Embarked for Rhode Island, with Sir Henry Clinton [see Ag 30], and left under General Grey's Command, had landed at Bedford, in Clark's Cove, to the Eastward of Rhode Island, and destroyed a great quantity of Stores at that place and in it's Neighbourhood, with upwards of sixty Sail of Shipping, some of them armed."—Kemble's Jour., 162.

10 An item of Fiskkill news declares: "Deserters to a considerable number come out to our camp from Kingsbridge from day to day. 'Tis said Delancy's corps is reduced to less than 300.

"Accounts from New-York by deserters, as well as persons come out of the city in exchange—That the enemy by appearance, are preparing to leave the city—their heavy baggage and artillery being embarked. They are selling of[f] the fire-wood, salt, &c. which was stored for public use,—all their flour is delivered to the bakers to be made into biscuit."—N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), S 14, 1778.

11 "Lord Howe arrived with his fleet, and to go home immediately."—Kemble's Jour., 162. See S 21.

12 "This day Lord Howe resigned his command to Admiral Gambier, whose commission was filled the Eleventh of September."—Montresor's Jour., 513.

" In another letter to Sir Joseph Banks, Sir Charles Blagden says: "Our Fleet either through the fiddle-faddle preciseness or designed backwardness which have prevailed in our movements, has failed in the attempt to intercept D'Estaing's Squadron on their way to Boston. . . . Numerous parties of Indians & Whites, all of whom seem to have some connexion with Col. Butler, commit great devastations on the Frontiers. Congress, however, do not relax, as you will see by their late resolves. . . . The people in power all give out that New-York is to be kept this winter; & several circumstances concur to shew that it is intended, unless they are meant as a blind. An expedition seems preparing, but whether to the W. Indies, as was intended in the summer, or up the North River, as some imagine, nothing enables me to judge. The principal people of the army have no cordiality; they are disgusted with Clinton's favourites. Washington insults us on the White Plains with scarcely 10,000 men. . . . Our commissioners act toward the rebels with great Temper, &, we should say in any other state of affairs, with degrading condescention. They seem to entertain hopes that the people will at length compel the Congress to negotiate, without considering perhaps sufficiently the strong Despotism established by these demagogues, who have contrived to put all the arms of the country into the hands of their friends. The principal officers of the rebel army indeed are quarreling, but that is only a proof how much they now despise us. Danger wod reunite them." —From the original in the N. Y. P. L., printed in the Library's Bull. (1903), 430.

14 Congress sends Franklin to France as minister plenipotentiary. —Jour. of Cong., III: 56.

16 "This morning the Rebel Army with Washington retired from the White Plains [see S 22]—3 Brigades of which went to New England—part crossed the North river to Morristown and some to Fish-Kill where Washington went."—Montresor's Jour., 513. Sept. 16

17 The fact is published as news in London that "Several fine Frigates have been built at New-York for the Service of Government, two of them of 28 Guns each, viz. the Virgin and Iris."—St. James's Chron., S 15–17, 1778.

19 Maj.-Gen. Grey returns to New York from an expedition to New England, bringing with him livestock and money. In his report he states that at Martha's Vineyard he took "10,000 sheep, 300 cattle, and £950 Continental currency, a tax levied by ye Congress."—André's Jour., II: 39–44; Montresor's Jour., 513. Trevelyan says of Grey: "The best officer in Howe's army, short of Cornwallis, was Charles Grey. . . ."—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, Part III, 252–53. Cf. Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 278, 287.

" A London news item reads: "A Number of Houses at New-York having been quitted by the Disaffected, when that City was taken, a great many People who came with the King's Army took Possession of them, and since that Time lived Rent free: There being no Funds to relieve the Refugees and Poor, the Magistracy petitioned the General to oblige such Holders of Houses to pay Half a Year's Rent for the Purpose of relieving the Distressed, which was complied with, it being thought but reasonable; all Persons therefore who could not prove any Title to their Houses, were accordingly assessed Half a Year's Rent [see Mr 3], and Two Thousand Pounds were collected thereby for the above Service."—St. James's Chron., S 17-19, 1778.

21 Kemble records: "Colonel Sherriffe Embarked this day for England on board the Eagle, with Lord Howe.

"The First and Second Light Infantry, 1st. and 2d. Grenadiers, 3d. and 4th. Brigades, Lord Rawdon's Corps, Guards, and Bushkirk's Jersey Volunteers, proceed this Night on some Service under the Command of Lieut. Gen. Earl Cornwallis, supposed on a Foraging party into Jersey; the same day ordered to attend Lord Cornwallis." —Kemble's Jour., 162. The troops under Cornwallis "crossed the North River to Bergen." Kemble recounts particulars of this expedition, which led to the surprise and capture by the British, on the road to Tappan, of a party of American dragoons called "Lady Washington's."—Ibid. See S 28.

" A reward is offered for the recovery of "a milch Goat" which was "Stolen, Out of Trinity Church yard."—N. Y. Merc., S 21, 1778.

22 "This Morning Sir Henry Clinton, with 12,000 Men, went up the North River in Transports, escorted by three Men of War, supposed to be with a Design to destroy the Magazines, Stores, and Shipping, belonging to the Americans, and to get Live Cattle."—From a New York letter published in St. James's Chron., N 7–10, 1778.

" "The Town is full of Expectation from a Detachmt of 7000 into Jersey While a Body move from King's Bridge into West Chester—As a Party went up Hudsons River & some to Paulus Hook last night I suspect there is to be a Landing at Haverstraw to advance downwards & drive in Cattle & join & return by Paulus Hook. . . .

"The Populace are in Spirits. They believe (I know not upon what Authority) That Washington's army are in great Dissentions —murmuring about the French Alliance & that he has in a Fright retired from White plains to the Highlands & sent a Part of his army to the New England Coast. That offence is taken at D Estainge's leaving Rhode Island—asking Supplies from the Congress & behaving with a Hauteur disgusting to the Levelling Principles of New England."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Lord Carlisle writes from New York to Lady Carlisle: "How people exist in this town is to the greatest degree wonderful. All the necessaries of Life are dear beyond conception. Meat is from fifteen to seventeen pence a pound, and everything else in proportion. My weekly bills come to as much as the house-account at Castle Howard when we have the most company."—Trevelyan, The Am. Rev., II: 154 (footnote).

23 A New Yorker writes: "Generals Lee and Mifflin have raised such Dissentions in the Rebel Army, that General Washington's Authority is much curtailed; and the Rebel Soldiery say publicly, that he and the Congress aim at absolute Power, and mean to sell their Country to the French; they like wise add, if America is to be subject to Monarchy, a British King shall rule them. This 1778 Sept. 23 " is the prevailing Topic of Conversation at present, and the Members of the Congress are greatly divided amongst themselves."—St. James's Chron., N 3–5, 1778.

Daniel Horsmanden, formerly president of the council, and chief-justice of the province of New York, dies at Flatbush, L. I., in his 88th year. His body was buried in Trinity Churchyard on Sept. 25. He was a native of Great Britain, but had resided in America over fifty years.—N. Y. Merc., S 28, 1778. See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Vol. VI, under date of Sept. 25.

Horsmanden left by will "£1,000 to rebuild the Rectory of Trinity Church; £200 to rebuilding the Charity School House; £100 towards buying a bell for St. Paul's Chapel; £200 towards building a pulpit and desk in Trinity Church, when the same shall be rebuilt; £500 to King's College."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VII: 528 (footnote), citing Liber Wills, XXXII: 57. For interesting references to him in 1763–4, see Houghton, Coaches of Colonial N. Y. (1890), 23; Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 585.

28 "A rebel Regiment of Lighthorse [is] surprized and cut to pieces near Tappen by the 2nd Light Infantry—this choice and pattern Regiment was commanded by Colonel Baylor and called Lady Washington's Regiment and Washington's Guards and third Virginia Regiment of Horse."—Montresor's Jour., 513. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under dates of S 27 and 28.

Oct. 3 A "Manifesto and Proclamation" is issued to the members of the congress and of the provincial legislatures, and to the inhabitants of the several colonies, by the king's commissioners. Congress is assured that the re-establishment of peace will be accompanied by "exemption from any imposition of taxes by the Parliament of Great Britain." Legislatures in the several colonies are urged to meet "expressly for the purpose of considering whether every motive, political as well as moral, should not decide their resolution to embrace the occasion of cementing a free and firm coalition with Great-Britain." The colonists in general are reminded of "their own solemn appeals to Heaven in the beginning of this contest, that they took arms only for the redress of grievances and that it would be their wish as well as their interest to remain for ever connected with Great-Britain," and they are asked "whether all their grievances, real or supposed, have not been amply and fully redressed."—From an original in the N. Y. P. L. Wm. Smith wrote anonymously of this effort for peace: "The transactions of the Commissioners, and the manner in which they have been treated, and the miseries of America slighted by the Congress, will never be forgotten. Let the suffering American peruse the pamphlet published by the Royal Commissioners before they took their departure in November 1778 [see N 25], and for himself determine in his enquiries concerning the authors of his own, and of the present and future calamities of his country."—Candid Retrospect, 27, footnote, a pamphlet published by Rivington, Jan. 30, 1781 (q. v.), and preserved in N. Y. H. S. See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under O 1, 2, and 5.

Commenting on the "Manifesto," a Philadelphia newspaper said: "The contemptible figure which the British king and ministry have cut in the present war, cannot be better shewn than in the . . . proclamation, which has been lately published at New York by Carlisle, Clinton and Eden. Those gentlemen seem to consider their master's commission as a sort of a pass to go a begging with; for if any thing can justly be called begging, this last performance of theirs deserves that name. It is in the true stile of 'God bless your honors, bestow your charity for the Lord's sake.' Poor devils! Why don't they go home and mind their hardware and broadcloth, and not pester us with scribbling letters and petitionery proclamations."—Penn. Eve. Post, O 16, 1778.

5 Lafayette sends a letter to the Earl of Carlisle, in New York, challenging him, as chief commissioner, to answer in the field for some insults to France contained in the commissioners' letter to Congress of Aug. 26.—Ann. Reg. (1779), 317. For facsimile of the challenge, see Avery, Hist. of the U. S., VI: 146. On Oct. 11, Carlisle rejected the challenge, stating: "The injury alluded to in the correspondence of the King's Commissioners to the Congress, I must remind you, is not of a private nature; and I conceive all national disputes will be best decided by the meeting of Admiral Byron and Count d'Estaign."—Ann. Reg. (1779), 317–18.

7 "Elizabeth Powers, Late from Philadelphia; From her strong attachment to the army and navy, has opened a house in Smith-street, the Sign of Cornwallis's Arms, where she proposes to entertain those gentlemen, and the public in general, who will be pleased to favour her with their company. . . . She has provided excellent Waiters, and a Cook not inferior to any in America. Public Dinners at half past two o'clock, private Dinners at any hour, bespoke; . . ."—Royal Gaz., O 7, 1778. Cf. Ja 6, 1783. Oct. 7

"The Savage Sloop of War arrives. Orders for Reprizals both by Great Britain & France. . . . Orders come to send home Transports for Provisions for 30,000 for Twelve Months."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 10

Hugh Gaine advertises "A Map of the Provinces of New-York and New-Jersey, with Part of Pennsylvania and the Province of Quebec, drawn by Major Holland, Surveyor General."—N. Y. Merc., O 12, 1778. 12

Sir Charles Blagden writes again from New York to Sir Joseph Banks. He says: "The Army here is now breaking up, & no more men seem likely to be left than are necessary as a garrison to the place. . . . 15

"T[he Com]missioners meet with no success, but [on] the contrary are treated with great rudeness, & the [Com]mander in Chief with still greater, by demagogues of America. They are preparing to go home."—From original letter in N. Y. P. L., printed in the Library's Bull. (1903), 437.

A letter from a field officer in Maxwell's Brigade (American) at Elizabeth Town states that "The enemy have embarked 10 full regiments, and the vessels have fallen down with them to the Hook;" also that they "have information by deserters this day, that the enemy have evacuated Powles-Hook and Hoebuck; if so they have no post left in Jersey. They were also evacuating fort Washington, fort Independance, and their other works without Kingsbridge, they had abandoned some days ago."—N. Y. Jour., N 2, 1778. It is even supposed by the Americans that "New York will be evacuated by the enemy in the course of this week, wind and weather permitting."—Ibid., N 9, 1778. 17

Admiral Byron's squadron, "consisting of 13 Line Ships and one 50," sails "to Cruise for Monsr. D'Estaing off Boston."—Kemble's Jour., 164. 19

A fleet of 122 sail, under convoy of the "Leviathan," puts to sea.—Ibid., and Montresor's Jour., 514. See also O 23.

An advertisement reads: "All Gentlemen Volunteers, That are able and willing to serve his Majesty King George, III. For two Years, or during the Rebellion, in the Honourable Corps of Pioneers, now lying at New-York, under his Excellency Sir William Erskine, And Commanded by Major Simon Frazer, Let them repair to the Bull's Head, in the Bowery; or at the Tryon's Arms, in the Broad-way; or at the Queen's Head, Brooklyn Ferry; or at the Suttling House, Kings-Bridge. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., O 19, 1778. "

Beginning on this day (according to Valentine), Gen. Clinton occupied the country-seat of Dr. James Beekman, on the East River near 52d St., for three years and a half.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 554. 20

Washington writes to a friend: "The Enemy have been very busy since their return from the Jerseys in Imbarking Troops—Nine Regiments are compleated to their full establishment by drafts from some others which are reduced, & these I am persuaded are destined for the West Indies—whether the rest of the Troops will remain in New York—return to England—or go to Hallifax is yet matter of uncertainty.—Appearances seem to favour a genel evacuation of the City but the Matter is by no means certain."—From original letter in Emmet Coll. (No. 9220) of N. Y. P. L. 21

Gen. Alexander Macdougal writes from Fredericksburg to Gov. Clinton at Poughkeepsie: "The Enemy have sent from New York a Fleet of 150 Sail of Transports with troops on board under convoy of a number of men of war [see O 19]. As their destination is uncertain and the Fleet at Boston may be their object, and the release of Gen. Burgoyne's Army, General Gates with his Division has marched from Danbury to Connecticut River there to wait events. Three Brigades march this morning for Farmington under my orders for the like purpose; but I am confident we shall soon return as the Enemy cannot be guilty of so much Folly as to attempt an Enterprise of that Nature at this late season. As the merchants are not preparing up in New York, nor the Hospital removed, the Enemy do not yet intend a total evacuation. But I think it must take place, when the Court of Great Britain are advised of the Loss of Dominica. General Putnam is playing the old preposterous Game with Flags, attended with such Circumstances as indicate more than mere Folly. In short I begin to suspect his 23

1778 integrity."—From the original letter, item No. 342, sold with the O 23 Joline collection at the Anderson Galleries, N 23, 1915.

24 Capt. Robertson, having gone to Jamaica, L. I., to arrange for winter cantonments, receives "an Express to return to N. Y^k to make a Sketch of the Affair of Monmouth" (see June 28). He arrived at New York about 10 p. m. and finished the sketch the next day.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" The "Old Mansion House belonging to Mr. Nicholas Stuyvesant, in the Bowery," is destroyed by fire at about two o'clock in the morning. It is "burnt to the ground, with part of the furniture in the house. . . . Colonel Munickhausen, of the Hessians, ordered a guard for the protection of the property rescued from the flames, and was present, with several of his officers, during the greater part of the night, and when he retired left the guard entirely at the direction of the family interested until all the effects were removed and secured."—N. Y. Merc., O 26, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 657. In his diary (MS.), Vol. VI, Wm. Smith gives the date as the night of Oct. 22. That this was "the mansion originally erected by the Governor is corroborated by the original diagram of the laying-off of the farm into streets, made in 1803 (a fac-simile of which was published in the Manual of 1862), where the site of the house is pointed out as between the present Second and Third avenues and Tenth and Eleventh streets, in a memorandum indicating that it was burnt in 1777 [sic]."—Ibid. (1866), 578–79. The property saved from the fire probably included the paintings described by Du Simitière in July, 1768 (q. v.). The residence thus destroyed was not "Petersfield," as there stated,—for situation of which, see L. M. R. K., III: 952.

25 The "anniversary of his Majesty's Accession to the Throne," when he entered the 19th year of his reign, is observed here "with the usual Demonstrations of joy."—N. Y. Merc., O 26, 1778.

" Lord Stirling writes from Elizabeth Town to Henry Laurens regarding the destination of the fleet which sailed a few days ago (see O 19).—See the manuscript letter preserved in L. I. H. S.

26 "A Flag [of truce] arrived here last Saturday Night with 150 British Prisoners from Elizabeth-Town, where they left about 400 more: They are from Philadelphia, where there has been a goal Delivery."—N. Y. Merc., O 26, 1778.

27 Kemble records: "The ten Regiments under the Command of Major General Grant, . . . ordered to Embark the next day. Five Provincial Regiments, . . . ordered for the same service, but not on board." He adds that "the Hessian Regiments of Seitz, and Bayard's Provincial Corps" have "Sailed with Admiral Byron for Halifax."—Kemble's Jour., 164–65. See N 3.

" In a letter to a correspondent in London, a New Yorker says: "A Report has been current here these two Days past, that one Allen, a Man of some Consequence among the Rebels, had detached himself with some of his Party, and set up a Monarchy of their own. However this maybe, it is certain that the Americans are at present in the utmost Confusion."—St. James's Chron., D 12–15, 1778.

Nov. The troops under Gen. Grant's command (see O 27) sail from 3 the Hook. "Brig Gen. Campbell, with the Waldeck Regiment, Chambers' and Allen's Provincial Corps, sailed at the same time—supposed for Pensacola."—Kemble's Jour., 165.

" After having been "encreased to 108 sail Men of War and transports," the fleet at Sandy Hook set sail at about seven in the morning. Lord Stirling intends to make it his "particular busyness to know what remains at New York, their intentions and Motions."—From a letter written by Lord Stirling to Henry Laurens, perserved in the L. I. H. S.

4 Kemble records: "Our Troops on Long Island, consisting of Light Infantry, Grenadiers, 33d., and 42d. Regiments, Dragoons and Queen's Rangers, ordered to their respective Cantonments for the Winter."—Kemble's Jour., 165.

6 "All Refugees, etc. within the protection of the British army, who are out of employ, and want assistance from government, are desired to call on Col. Beverley Robinson, in King-Street, No. 21, on or before the 16th of this instant November, where something will be proposed to them for their advantage and subsistence during the ensuing winter."—Royal Gaz., N 7, 1778. See N 9.

7 Kemble records: "71st. Regiment, Woolworth's and Wissenbach's, 1st. and 2d. Battalions Delancey's York Volunteers, and 1st. and 3d. Battalions Skinner's, Sailed to the Hook. The whole under the Command of Lieut. Col. Campbell, destined for St. Augustine, and to proceed from thence to Georgia or South Carolina.

"This Command to Lieut. Col. Campbell gives cause of great Nov.
Complaint to Brigadier Leslie, Col. O'Hara, &c., of the Guards, 7
Senior Officers."—Kemble's Jour., 165–66.

"General Officers and Commander in Chief in general upon 9 bad terms; want of steadiness in Commander in Chief. The Sailing of Transports with Troops and their destination not secret enough, for tho' no absolute publication of them, yet from circumstances they may be guessed at. Commissioners and Commander in Chief on not the most Cordial footing; neither is the former with the Admiral; but that does not surprise."

"This day Colonels O'Hara and Stevens, of the Guards, proposed to go and settle a mode of Exchange of prisoners with the Rebels.

"Mr. Washington has crossed the North River, and proposing to proceed to the Southward; thought in consequence of our Expeditions going to that part of the Continent. Our prisoners removed also from the East to the Southern Colonies."—Kemble's Jour., 166. Regarding the dissatisfaction with the commander-in-chief, see also ibid., 156.

"Permission will be granted by the Commandant, to Refugees " and others, to cut Wood on Long-Island, for the use of this City, on the Lands of Persons not under the Protection of Government."—Royal Gaz., N 14, 1778.

"J[ohn] Colles," at "No. 20, Golden Hill, opposite the sign of " the Unicorn," advertises to make "Miniature Profiles." He says: "Having had the honour of taking off the Profiles of many of the Nobility in England and Ireland, begs leave to inform the ladies and gentlemen in New York, that he takes the most Striking Likeness in Miniature Profile, of any Size, at so low a price as Two Dollars each, framed and glazed: A specimen only (which may be seen at Hugh Gaine's) can furnish an idea of the execution.

"Hours of attendance from 10 o'clock in the morning till 4 in the afternoon. It requires only a moment's sitting."—N. Y. Merc., N 9, 1778; Cf. Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed., 1918), III: 291.

Lord Stirling informs Henry Laurens that Sir Henry Clinton 11 is absent from New York; he believes that Clinton sailed with the fleet on Nov. 3 (q. v.). Stirling adds: "On Monday and Yesterday Ships have been droping down from New York to Staten Isle they amounted Yesterday afternoon to near one hundred Sail, a Considerable Number of Hessians besides other troops are on board, but very few Ships remain in the harbour of New York." From the testimony of "a British Soldiers wife whom we took near poules Hook," it appears "that the Hessians Embarked three days ago, that the troops had all Marched from Kingsbridge leaveing their Huts Standing and that there remains no troops above three or four miles above New York."—From a letter preserved in the L. I. H. S.

The third New York fleet "is Now in Motion, thirty Eight Sail 13 of Ships droped down from Staten Island to Sandy hook Yesterday Afternoon, and I doubt not the rest, making in the whole about One hundred Sail, will follow with this Mornings Tide."—From a letter from Lord Stirling to Henry Laurens, in the L. I. H. S.

"Captain Fielding, of the Diamond Frigate, one of Admiral "
[Byron's] Squadron, came in this day," bringing recent news of the British fleet. "Captain Fielding thinks he saw the French Squadron, and supposes by their Course intended for the West Indies; should Mr. D'Estaing have intelligence of General Grant's destination [see O 27, and N 3], we have much to apprehend for his safety.

"Admiral Byron was left by Captain Fielding making the best of his way to Rhode Island with nine great Ships, and one fifty."—Kemble's Jour., 166–67.

Lord Stirling writes from Elizabeth Town to Henry Laurens: 15
"The fleet which droped down to Sandy hook on the 12^th [see N 13] remained there yesterday Evening; the Winds have been either ahead or too high, for any thing to put to Sea. They have on Board this fleet, the whole of the 71^st Reg^t Highlanders, two Battalions of Hessian Granadiers, two Bat^s of Delancey's two of Skinners New Levies, three Companies of the 64^th and two of the 23^d they are Convoyed by the Vigilant and three Gallies; It is said they are Watered for a fortnight only and talk of Coming back soon; But from a Variety of Circumstance's (I think) their destination is East & West florida. Colonel Campbell now a Brigadier Commands them.

"Sir Henry Clinton is returned to New York he had been to Long Island in order to Veiw and Mark out some Grounds. It is 1778 Nov. 15 now said, the Refugees are to form a line on that Island from Lloyds Neck (on the North Side) to blue point on South Side; both about 40 Miles from New York, and to be Supported by three British Regiments which are lye in their Rear."—From original letter in Emmet Coll. (No. 8137) of N. Y. P. L. The fleet sailed on Nov. 27 (q.v.).

" "Gov. Tryon proposed this morning to take a Party to Tarry Town for the seizure of stores there. Sir H Clinton refused—saying that he was ag^{t} carrying a Torch thro' the Country, for he apprehended M^{r} T's Designs were to burn the Village—He said the proper Mode of conducting the War was to sieze the Highland Forts and make a Lodgment there of 6000 men—to put 8000 more on the Coast of Connecticut and to act by Detachments from NY & Rhode Isl^{d} in a variety of occasional Descents favoring the main Bodies."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

16 Supt.-Gen. Andrew Elliott and Mayor David Mathews publish a notice that "The Fine of Five Pounds heretofore established, will be punctually exacted from every Inhabitant whose Chimney shall take Fire through neglect. Each Chimney to be swept once in every four Weeks." The addresses are given of those who have charge of the chimney sweeps, who will be sent out on order to the place required.—N. Y. Merc., N 16, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 662. See A., D 19, 1780.

Andrew Elliott, a brother of Lord Minto, called his country-seat, at the present north-west corner of Broadway and 9th St., by the name of "Minto." He owned a large stable and a number of vehicles.—Houghton, Coaches of Colonial N. Y. (1890), 28; L. M. R. K., III: 951.

" "John Woods, keeps a Register for the regular Entry, (on a small Premium) of all Estates in Land, Houses, Ground to build on in Town or Country, either to sell or lett, where all persons may have the necessary intelligence gratis.

"Negroes of all kinds, with their age, size and qualification, are entered for sale, where with gentlemen, farmers, and others, may at most times be suited, without further trouble than coming to this office."—N. Y. Merc., N 16, 1778.

" In an advertisement to recover a horse that has strayed "beyond Greenwich," one Capt. Fenwick, who offers a reward, gives his address as "in the Broad-way, close to Head Quarters."—N. Y. Merc., N 16, 1778.

18 Kemble observes: "Provisions, &c., very short, the Navy put to two-thirds Allowance, the Army Stores not over plenty. The Admiral a Money getting Pompous fool, and the Schemes he makes use of to fill his Pocket very much unlike an Officer of his Station."—Kemble's Jour., 167.

20 Writing from New York to Joseph Galloway, London, on Nov. 23, Abel Evans states that, from a vessel which reached New York on Nov. 20 from Boston, it is learned that "the Count [D'Estaing] sailed from there two days before him, (the 4th inst.,) generally thought for the West Indies. Admiral was not able to prevent it, being blown off the harbor in a gale of wind, and is since got into Newport." He continues: "The Refugee scheme so much talked of when you were here, seems to be dropt—nothing being said of it—and a proposal is made them by General Robertson to go near Huntington to cut wood off Rebel Estates, for the supply of this garrison. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 295. See also ibid., 296.

21 Writing again to Sir Joseph Banks, Sir Charles Blagden says: "I hope . . .[Mr. Eden] will bring you this safe, after escaping, with his companions the dangers of a winter's passage, & of a powerful enemy who insults us even in the Channel: How unsuccessful their mission has proved is a piece of bad news which will arrive long before them. Their departure will be much regretted by all ranks of people in this place [New York], to whom their conduct has greatly endeared them. There are some appearance as if we should follow them before next summer; & I fear it will prove highly unfortunate for our country if we remain here long. All the detachments are gone away, excepting a body of 2,000 men, under the command of L^{t} Col. Campbell, well known for the long imprisonment he suffered at Boston. This body of troops were just on the point of going to sea, when a gale of wind arose, which did some damage to the shipping that they are now detained to repair. They are supposed to be destined first for Georgia, & then for Florida [see N 7]. Part, if not the whole, of D'Estaing's Squadron is got out of Boston [see N 20], & we are somewhat apprehensive on the account of Gen. Grant's detachment of 5,000 men, which sailed from hence [see N 3], for the West Indies it is said, about the same time that the French left Boston. . . . Gerard's dispatches to the Court of France, written in Cipher, are taken by the Daphne. The Somerset, a sixty-four, is shipwrecked on the coast of New-England in a gale of wind."—From original letter in N. Y. P. L., printed in the Library's Bull. (1903), 438–39. Regarding the "Somerset," see also Kemble's Jour., 167, 174. Nov. 21

Isaac Ogden, a loyalist, writes from New York to Joseph Galloway, London, an account of the military situation to this date, adding this statement: ". . . The Remainder of the Troops are gone into Winter Quarters, there are near 5000 on Long Island, these consist chiefly of the light Troops & Dragoons. I dread the consequence to New York from the Destruction they make on Long Island, I think it will be felt severely the next Spring. 22

"Thus has ended a Campaign (if it deserves the appellation without any thing Capital being done, or even attempted. How will the Historian gain Credit, who shall relate that at least 24,000 of the best Troops, in the World, were shut up within their Lines, by fifteen thousand at most, of Poor Wretches, who were illy paid, badly fed, and worse cloathed, and scarce at best deserved the name of soldiers—but I forbear." Continuing his account of events and British prospects, he says, in part: "The Rebellion hangs by a Slender Thread. The Majority of the Inhabitants dissatisfied with their present Tyrannical Government—Their Money depreciating—Provisions scarce & that scarcity increasing— . . . In this situation, what is necessary to Crush the Rebellion? It is easily answered—Only one Vigorous Campaign properly conducted. I mean by this, that the Person commanding, should be a Man of Judgment Spirit & Enterprise, and one who would make himself acquainted, with the Geography of the Country (which has hitherto been a fatal Neglect) & a few more Troops to Supply the place of those gone to the West Indies. . . .

"There has lately been made a Calculation of the Refugees, within the Lines of New York, & including those that have joined the Provincial Corps, they amount to upwards of ten thousand. The most of these Persons have from their Attachment to their Sovereign, abandoned their Fortunes, and from Affluence are reduced to Indigence, which they bear with Patience, in full Confidence that the Faith of Government, & the Promises of Protection, repeatedly given them, would be sacredly Observed. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 336–38.

A printed handbill states that "At a late Meeting of the Merchants of this city, it was represented that the Inhabitants were particularly desirous of expressing the high sense they entertained of the merit of his Majesty's Commissioners [see Ap 5], and to explain their sentiments on the very important situation of affairs. For this purpose a numerous and respectable body of people were convened at Hick's Tavern, on Friday the 20th instant, who chose a Committee . . . from the different provinces to form and prepare an Address." In substance it was an expression of gratitude for the commissioners' services in America (see Je 3), but more particularly an appeal for the re-establishment of civil rather than military government. The answer of the commissioners, which follows the address in the handbill, says, in effect, "that the great objects of the war, are the re-establishment of the civil constitution, and the preservation of his Majesty's faithful subjects in these colonies."—From B. F. Stevens's Facsimiles of Manuscripts in European Archives Relating to America, 1773–1783 (London, 1892), Vol. XII, No. 1226. Regarding the condition of affairs in New York which occasioned this appeal, see Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 249. See also N. Y. Merc., S 21 and O 26, 1778; Royal Gaz., S 23, 1778. Under date of Nov. 26, Wm. Smith records in his diary: "The Commissioners embarked yesterd: in the Roebuck Their Departure is grateful only to the Violent in opposite Extremes, both under the Power of vindictive Rage. Alass for my Country! En quo Discordia Civis perduxit Miseros! This will be probably a Day memorable for the Miseries which the Disappointm^{t} of the Embassy will produce."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. 25

An expedition of the British from New York sails for Georgia.—Avery's Hist. of the U. S., VI: 208. Recording this departure Smith writes in his diary the next day: "With the Com^{rs} several Vessels put out with 4000 Troops under Col^{o} Campbel tis said for an Attack on the Southern Colonies—supposed South Carolina.—They have been long waiting for Reasons unknown."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. On the same day Lord Stirling wrote to Henry Laurens: "The fleet with the Second Embarkation of Troops from New York is at length put to Sea, they fell down to the hook 27

1778 Nov. 27 yesterday morning and went to Sea in the Afternoon the[y] Consist of 45 Sail of different Size's. the Troops they have on Board are according to the best Accounts I have been Able to Obtain about 3500. Men . . . the troops in this fleet are Commanded by Brigadier Cambell; it is possible they are going to Charles Town, but I am rather inclined to belive they are going to Secure their own posts in the florida's."—From the original letter preserved in the L. I. H. S.

In another letter of the same date, Stirling writes that the fleet consists of "33 Ships (including one of 40 and one of 60. Guns and two Frigates) one Snow, nine Brigs and ten Schooners and Sloops." He adds "At eleven this Morning two Ships past the light House and went to Sea these I take to be the Roebuck and a frigate as I have Intelligence from New York that the Commissioners and many Officers embarked on Board two such Ships and droped down Part of the Way Yesterday. This last Fleet I do not believe are designed for any offensive Opperation on our Settlements their Convoy is not equal to it."—From the original letter in the L. I. H. S.

The commissioners were sailing on the "Roebuck" for England, and Cornwallis was on the same ship.—Robertson's Private Jour. of the Campaign of 1778 (MS.).

28 Maj.-Gen. Daniel Jones issues a proclamation for regulating the prices of fire-wood. After Saturday, Dec. 5, "no more than Five Pounds Currency shall be demanded or paid for a Cord of Walnut Wood, and Four Pounds Currency a Cord, for any other Sort of Wood."—N. Y. Merc., N 30, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 663. See also Proc. Bd. of Aldermen, LXXXVI: 218; and Ja 11, 1779.

29 Since writing his previous letters (see N 27), Stirling has received information "that more Transport Ships are preparing and fitting for Sea. that a good deal of Hessian Baggage was embarked. A Frigate of 36 Guns came in Yesterday every Mast gone by the Board. They are forming a Line across New-York Island from Bloomendale to Turtle Bay to be guarded by five Hessians and three british Regiments."—From Stirling's letter to Henry Laurens, preserved in the L. I. H. S.

Dec. 1 Chas. Stewart writes from New York to Joseph Galloway, London: "There are at present about 2000 going under Sir William Erskine—said to the east end of Long Island. Yesterday, intelligence was received from St. Augustine, that there is an expedition going from thence to Georgia. . . . "—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 296.

" The following notice is issued by Supt.-Gen. Elliot and Mayor Mathews: "By Order of the Commandant of New York. Licences will be granted by the Police, to such Persons to keep Taverns and Public-Houses (not exceeding a certain Number) as may be recommended by the principal Officers of the Army and Navy, the Merchants and other respectable Inhabitants of this City.

"Any Person detected sell[ing] Liquors without Licence, from and after Saturday the Twelfth Day in December, Instant, shall suffer One Month's Imprisonment, or forfeit Five Pounds.

"The Money arising from the above Licences and Fines, is to be paid into the City Funds for the Support of the Poor."—N. Y. Merc., D 21, 1778; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 664.

" In a letter to Henry Laurens, Lord Stirling declares that if the report of a French naval victory over the English should prove to be true, "poor old England must Soon Sing piano." He thinks that "Such favourable Events as lately appear, will Command a General belief with Tories as well as W[h]igs that the Contention with Great Britain will soon terminate in our favour to our Utmost wishes. this makes me rise in hope that the Spirit of Avarice will be Gluted, and with all my Soul I wish it may be Smothered."—From the original manuscript in the L. I. H. S.

2 "In the Evening the Guards & Robinson's Provincials embarked on board Transports in the East River in order to go to Kings Ferry to cut off some of the Rear Guard of the Rebel Army there passing to the Jerseys. . . . The Transports got no further than Greenwich."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

3 Kemble records: "The Brigade of Guards, Grenadiers, and Light Infantry were ordered to Embark at 7 next Morning, 63d., 44th., and 7th. British, Regiment of Mirbach, and Volunteers of Ireland, to march at same time to Cortland's House."—Kemble's Jour., 167.

Robertson states: "Sr Wm Erskine march'd to Courtlands house. . . . I went with the Genl in the Evenge to Ft Knyphausen The Transports did not get through the Chevaux de frises Embarked on board the Shuldham Sloop about 11 at night off Spiken Devil creek."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Dec. „3

"A Report that a Store Ship is on Shore at Barnegat—carelessness or Perfidy—The Weather fair—There is a perpetual Negligence in not imploying American Pilots and Seamen. . . .

"Not known till this Morning that 5 or 6000 Men are detached & going up the North River—No orders issued last Night—Some Ships & Troops gone up last Night with the flat bottomed Boats

"No Person can tell the Design—Suspected to spread on the West side of Hudson's River to favor the Flight of Burgoyne's Men from the Guard conducting them to Virginia—They crossed at Fishkill on Monday or Tuesday last. Several who fled are come in & tis supposed urged to this Sally."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

"Sir Henry proceeded up North River with the Troops Em- 4 barked, and Sir William Erskine Marched from Cortland's with the Troops above mentioned [see Dec. 3] to Tarry Town."—Kemble's Jour., 167. Sir Henry landed at Stony Point, the object being "to cut off some of the Rebels conducting the Convention Army to the Southward" (see Nov. 9; they returned, unsuccessful, to New York on the 6th. "Sir William likewise returned."—Ibid., 167–68.

The British land at Stony Point, opposite Verplank's Point, 5 but find that the Americans have already passed. They therefore returned to New York.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.), under D 5, 6, and 7.

"The Movement up the River is made with great Secrecy. 6
To this Minute it is an Uncertainty whether the Design is not against the Highland Forts. Spades Pick Axes & Bills went off yesterday. The Cannon in the Common disappear & are supposed to be gone up the River."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

"The Town was astonished by the Return of the General & his 7
Troops last Night—It is said they ascended to King's Ferry & found themselves 2 Days too late for the Rescue of Burgoyne's Troops.—But if they did not mean to attack the Forts nor to land at Haverstraw & penetrate to Sussex how could they hope to relieve them—Then they would have found some one or more of the Divisions & by the Way have received such as had fled from them to the Mountains with Design to escape to NYork.

"I now suspect that solicited by Messages to come out the General complied to avoid Censure—& that having gone 40 Miles up the River he thinks he has done enough to satisfy an Administration ignorant of the Geography of the Country."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

A New Yorker writes that "The Rebellion in general is more " languid now than it has been at any time since the unfortunate affair at Trenton, in 1776 [q.v., D 26], owing to a failure in the resources of war among the Rebels, and the discontents, on various accounts, amongst the people at large."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, F 3–5, 1779.

The three "Officers of Police" (the board consisting of Supt.- " Gen. Elliot, Mayor Mathews, and Asst.-Magistrate Dubois) issue, by order of the commandant, a proclamation establishing a new set of rates for the city cartmen (cf. Dec. 29, 1777). These include an order that any person who, after Dec. 20, "shall be discovered acting as City Cartman, without having obtained such a license, and the number of his license marked with red paint upon each side of his Cart, will be taken into Custody."—N. Y. Merc., D 14, 1778.

Wm. Smith publishes the following signed notice: "When the " subscriber retired to Haverstraw, in March 1776, he left in his house in the Broadway, at the corner of Verlentenbergh, various articles of Furniture, with two Trunks of Parchments, and many Bundles of Papers in about 40 small deal bound Boxes, numbered in the fronts. He is informed that they were moved out of town in August 1776, but can't discover who has at present the custody of them. There were also taken away, Dr. Mitchel's large Map of North-America, Mr. Ratse's Map of the city, and a manuscript Map of the colony of New-York; among the papers, there are some of great consequence to the estates of many persons in town, and country. Satisfactory information, especially concerning the parchments and papers, will be gratefully received and rewarded."—N. Y. Merc., D 7, 1778.

To encourage farmers to bring their hay, &c. to New York, 9
George Brinley, the commissary of forage, increases the price which he offers for these essentials, as follows: "For good Upland Hay, 8 s. per cwt.;" "Salt Hay, 4 s. per ditto;" "Straw, 3 s. per ditto;

1778 Dec. 9 Indian Corn, 10 s. per bushel;" "Oats, 7 s. per ditto." He fixes the rate for cartage or water carriage at 2 s. 6 p. per ton. The farmers are to make their deliveries "to the most contiguous Magazines, where they will receive certificates for the quantity delivered, which will be paid at the Forage-Office." If "found delinquent after this notice," the farmers "will have their forage taken, and no receipts given."—N. Y. Merc., D 14, 1778. In 1782, according to a forage office order of June 29 of that year, the payment then offered was somewhat less.—Royal Gaz., Jl 3, 1782.

12 Rev. Charles Inglis writes from New York to Joseph Galloway, London, a lengthy survey of the military and political condition of affairs in America, from a loyalist point of view. In summing up, he says, in part: "You will probably meet with several People in England who feel great Sympathy and Tenderness for the Distresses of the Rebels, but are callous to the Sufferings and Miseries of the Loyalists. . . . Tell them that every Jail in the 13 States is filled with such as from a Principle of Conscience, adhere to their King, and Constitution of their Country—tell them that many Thousands of such are banished from their Homes, their Property destroyed or confiscated, and their Families left to perish —banished into every Part of the King's Dominions, nay, into the Wilderness among Savages, more compassionate than their Republican Persecutors; to say nothing of the Hundreds that have been deliberately put to Death, or of the Thousands that remain at Home, deprived of all the Rights of Freemen for the same Cause." —Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 301.

14 A notice is published that the king's commissioners, Admiral Howe and Gen. Howe, and "the gentlemen of the Army and Navy," having subscribed "in a most liberal Manner for the Relief of the Refugees in this City, who have little Means of Support left," it is hoped "the Citizens will chearfully contribute when called upon by the Gentlemen who have humanely undertaken to wait on them for that Purpose." Such refugees, with credentials, are required to call at the superintendent-general's office in Smith St.—N. Y. Merc., D 14, 1778. See also Ja 6, 1779.

15 Isaac Ogden, writing to Jos. Galloway, observes: ". . . You will see by the Papers that a Dissention prevails among the Rebell Generals. Lee's Tryal and Sentence makes a great noise—his Party rather increases. If Mifflin, Arnold, Sinclair & Thompson join him he will be formidable—this is Expected & some good may result to the Publick from it. Washington's being a Churchman must in the End if nothing else does the Business discharge him from the Command. The Party against him gains strength. . . .

"We have established a Refugee Club [see also Ja 11, 1779] composed of the first Characters from the different Provinces. Gov'r Franklin thinks it will be attended with good Consequences, I fancy it will be respectable. . . ." He adds: "I remain still without Support except what My Credit with my Friends afford Me, if You can do any thing for me with Administration, for God Sake let Me request it of You."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 356.

16 "Tryon is alarmed—Like to be a Scarcity of Beef & Bread in about 3 Weeks—Pretty well off for Pork. If the Cork Fleet hourly expected should be driven off the Coast there will be great Distress."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

17 Describing American affairs at the close of the year, Daniel Coxe, writing to Jos. Galloway, London, says, in part: ". . . . Washington's Army is at present much dispersed in their Winter Cantonments the whole not exceeding 7000 Men from the best Information I can collect. This State, York, retains its own Troops at Albany & different Posts on the Rivers. New England the same in order to protect their country; Washington fixes its [his] Head Quarters in Jersey at Baskingridge, Lord Sterling's place, with about 3000 Troops occupying Hakensack, Aquaquenonck, Newark, Elizabeth Town extending to Amboy & Brunswick, and including two Virginia Brigades (about 1400 men) posted on the Raritan at middle Bound Brook & Mountain Gap, as support to the others. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 357.

" John Potts, writing from New York to Jos. Galloway, London, says, in part: ". . . Our situation is really desperate in my Opinion, I entertain the highest sense of the honour of Government, but when I consider the number & every circumstance occurs to me I cannot help thinking that the situation of the Refugees is truly deplorable and almost hopeless. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 360.

19 A sloop "laden with Arms and Gunpowder, bound from the Mississippi to Philadelphia, was brought into this Port by the Columbus" (a British privateer).—N. Y. Merc., D 21, 1778.

Dec. 21 "It is reported this Day that Laurens has resigned his Place as President of the Congress & that John Jay succeeds him. This is another Proof of the Weakness of the Faction. The Congress is approaching the Ruin as their Powers fall into the Hands of the most violent. Men of Property & Moderation shrink away from their Trusts, of which all were lately desirous."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "John and Isabella Roberts Return Thanks to the Customers that used to frequent the House kept by Moses Marden, known by the Sign of Tryon's Arms, at the Corner of Crown-street, Broadway; and they acquaint the Gentlemen of the Navy and Army, &c. that they keep Tavern and Ordinary in said House, where the best of Liquors are sold, Dinners on the very shortest Notice, Relishes always ready, and the best Attendance. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., D 21, 1778.

24 The benefits of pardon for treason are offered, by a proclamation of Gov. Tryon, to persons who will withdraw from the "rebellion," and "come in from the rebels" after Dec. 20th.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 4, 1779.

" A New Yorker writes: "The arrival of the packet has raised our spirits exceedingly. The Admiral has now consented to permit privateers to go out under particular regulations. Prizes are daily sent in. . . . The winter has set in with uncommon severity: I write along-side a good fire, and yet the ink freezes in my pen. . .

"The Rebels industriously propagate a report of their having obtained a loan of four millions sterling from Holland, on French security; a report which I utterly disbelieve. Their national debt amounts now to about 60 millions sterling."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, F 3–5, 1779.

26 Smith writes: "A violent snow storm with the Wind in vast in Power from the N E. This Evening the Bedford & Amazon fell down with a Fleet for England & Ireland."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. On Dec. 28, he added: "No abatement of the Frost. The Fleet sailed yesterday, 7 Vessels lost in our Harbour in the Storm. Three Centinels found frozen in their Boxes."—Ibid.

28 A London news item stated in January, 1779, that "Ten thousand Regulars, and between 6000 and 7000 Provincial, were left at New York when the last ships sailed from thence on the 28th of December."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Ja 27–29, 1779.

1779

— The British barracks of this period were of wood, enclosed by a high fence, and extended from Broadway to Chatham St., along the present Chambers St. They had a gate at each end; the one by Chatham St. was called "Tryon's Gate," from which was afterwards derived the name of "Tryon's Row."—Reminiscences of Mrs. Myers, daughter of David Grim, in Watson's Annals, 183. Cf. "Upper Barracks" in L. M. R. K., III: 924; also the barracks lying along the north side of "Barrack Street," in Pl. 40-b, Vol. IV; and Holland Map in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 532.

Jan. 1 Claude Joseph Sauthier's "Chorographical Map of the Province of New-York in North America, Divided into Counties, Manors, Patents and Townships; Exhibiting likewise all the private Grants of Land made and located in that Province; Compiled from Actual Surveys deposited in the Patent Office at New York," which was drawn by order of Maj.-Gen. Tryon, and engraved and published by William Faden at London, bears this date. Upon this map, Ellis Island appears as "Bucking I." For the origin of the name Ellis Island, see F 21, 1785. The "Patent Office" here referred to is the provincial secretary's office, or a department of it, where land patents were filed. For the act establishing the U. S. Patent Office, see Ap 10, 1790.

2 Rivington publishes an "exhortation" in verse, signed "M' L——n," apropos of an order issued by Washington requiring the inhabitants of certain districts to fatten their cattle, in order to feed his army during the ensuing campaign; it reads in part:

"Thy Proclamation, timely to command
The cattle to be fatten'd round the land,
Bespeaks thy generosity, and shows
A charity that reaches to thy foes!
And was this order issued for our sakes,
To treat us with roast beef and savory steaks?"

—Royal Gaz., Ja 2, 1779.

6 In imitation of the queen, the Marchioness of Granby, and the six ladies of Westminster who own the "Amazon," all of whom have recently equipped private ships of war at their own expense,

1779 Jan. 6 "to assist in humbling the pride and perfidy of France, and in chastising the rebels of America," a number of ladies residing in New York propose to subscribe liberally to fit out a fast privateer, to be called "The Fair American."—Royal Gaz., Ja 6, 1779. Apparently the name of the privateer was subsequently changed to the "Royal Charlotte" (see F 5).

" Maj. John André, a social favorite in loyalist circles during the British occupation of New York, delivers an extempore address on "Love and Fashion" at a gathering this evening at the mansion of Mr. (Richard?) Deane. On the same occasion he read a "Political Dream," a violent and coarse attack upon prominent American leaders of the time. This was shortly afterward printed in Rivington's Royal Gaz. In this paper he adopted, as a basis for his criticisms, the theory of metempsychosis, that when men "degraded themselves from the character of rational beings, it became proper that they should assume the figure of those beasts to whose properties they were already assimulated," and that the soul should be "rewarded or punished according to its deserts in a new state of existence." From these premises he transported himself in imagination into a court where "the infernal judges administered justice to the souls which had animated the bodies of men in the superior regions." First among those whom he pictured as thus arraigned was Chief-Justice [Thomas] McKean of Pennsylvania; and "his more than savage cruelty, his horrid disregard to the many oaths of allegiance he had taken, and the vile sacrifice he had made of justice in the interests of rebellion were openly rehearsed," while "he was condemned to assume the shape of a bloodhound" and be scourged through the infernal regions by his victims. Silas Deane, characterized as "a trickling, hypocritical New England attorney," was permitted by the judges to "skip off with very little change in the character of 'the monkey who had seen the world.'" Gen. Charles Lee was held up to condemnation as one "whose ingratitude to his parent country was regarded with the utmost detestation," and by direction of the court he assumed "the figure of an adder; a reptile that is big with venom and ready to wound the hand that protects or the bosom that cherishes it, but whose poison frequently turns to its own destruction."

André next saw that "the black soul of [Philip] Livingston, polluted with every species of murder and iniquity, was condemned to howl in the body of a wolf." John Jay, president of the provincial congress, was the next subject of the writer's vituperation. Jay was described as "remarkable for a mixture of the lowest cunning and most unfeeling barbarity; . . . he had, by a semblance of virtue, acquired the confidence of his fellow-citizens, which he afterwards abused to all the horrid purposes of the most wanton rebellion, and . . . in the pursuits of ambition and avarice, by all the ways of intrigue, perfidy and dissimulation, he had acquired the station of a chief-justice, and in imitation of the infamous Dudley had framed and enforced statutes that destroyed every species of private security and repose." The court order was that "this criminal should transmigrate into the most insidious and hateful of animals, a snake; but . . . a large set of rattles was affixed to his tail, that it might warn mankind to shun so poisonous a being."

After a review of the continental army, "forced to put on the shape of the timid hare, whose disposition they already possessed . . . and ready to fly even at the approach of" danger, André concluded his splenetic tirade by an attack upon "a great and magnanimous commander of antiquity [Sir William Howe?] transformed into a game-cock who at once began to crow and strut about as if he was meditating a combat, but upon the appearance of a few cropple-crowned hens he dismissed his purpose, . . . brushing his wing and rustling his feathers at every Dame Partlet in the company."—Life and Career of Major John André, by Winthrop Sargent (Boston, 1861), 212–16; Rivington's Royal Gaz., Ja. 23, 1779.

" A notice is published directing "the distressed Refugees" to call at "the Police Office in Smith-Street" on Thursdays, when the money collected by subscription for their relief will be distributed. —Royal Gaz., Ja 6, 1779. For the original announcement of the fund for such relief, see D 14, 1778.

" "J. Corre, Pasty-Cook, Has opened his shop, at No. 529, facing Mr. Gaine's, Hanover Square, where the Ladies and Gentlemen will be supplied with all sorts of Pastry Cakes, Sweet-Meats and Jellies, &c."—Royal Gaz., Ja 6, 1779. On Jan. 10, 1780, Corré advertised that "he also sells Raisins, Currants, and Almonds, &c. With superfine Flour by the Barrel."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 10, 1780. From this time until long after the Revolution, Corré was one of the principal caterers of New York. See My 22, 1782; My 30, 1785; Je 10, 1788. Jan. 6

France being at war with England, Lafayette sails from Boston to his native land. This was in accordance with the leave of absence granted by congress on Oct. 21, 1778, at which time congress also voted that "an elegant sword" be made and presented to him in the name of the United States.—Tower, Marquis de Lafayette in the Am. Revolution, II: 49–50; Jour. of Cong., III: 98. See Ap 28, 1780. 7

Kemble records: "Arrived one of the Cork fleet, very acceptable, as the Troops had been fed for three Weeks before on Oaten Meal, and some Deserters from the Hessians the cause of it; these Deserters carried some of their Oaten bread to show the Rebels what they were fed upon."—Kemble's Jour., 170. The rest of the Cork fleet arrived from the 10th to the 13th.—Ibid., 172. See also letter of Isaac Ogden to Joseph Galloway, in Hist. Mag., 1st ser., VI: 179. 9

The season at the Theatre Royal opens with a performance of the tragedy "Chrononhotonthologos."—Royal Gaz., Ja 6 and 13, 1779. At this reopening of the theatre, the prologue was spoken by Capt. (soon after Major) André.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y. City, II: 537–38. There is preserved in the N. Y. H. S. a small volume (MS.) entitled Receipts of the Treasurer of the "Theatre Royal," John St. New York, A. D. 1779. The book was kept by Thos. Barrow, the treasurer, and is replete with data for the student of such matters. The receipts for the opening performance (£260: 16) and subsequent performances appear. Names of prima donnas, including Maria Turner, Anna and Jane Tomlinson, and Margaret Shaw, are subscribed to receipts for various "Nights performance." It is apparently a Hessian band of 14 pieces receiving "one dollar each man" per night, for which "Philipp Pfeil gives receipt. Large sums go to James Rivington for advertising and printing, as also to Alex. Leslie for "sundry wiggs." Occasionally John Marshall provides "Suppers including liquor" for the "performances." There are receipts for "Scene shifters," "attendance at the Door," "washing done for the Theatre," "Ironmongry for the Theatre," "tallow candles," "Sundry dresses," "Hats and Trimmings," "Buckskin breeches," "the Guard of light Inf^{y} attending the Rehearsal and play of Rich: the 3^{d}" (probably as supernumeraries), "Coach-hiere," etc., etc. "

The news was published in Philadelphia, on Jan. 21, that "About 10 days ago [Jan. 10 or 11], a small party of Americans, under the command of a M^{r} Buchannan, went down the North River and landed near the City of New York, went to the quarters of Gen. Clinton, at a place called the Bowerie, one mile from the City of New York, where they surprised his guards, and brought them off; but Gen. Clinton having supped from home escaped."—Penn. Packet, Ja 21; Conn. Gaz. (New London), F 12, 1779. 10

"D. S." (probably David Sproat, later the British commissary-general of naval prisoners—see O 13), writing from New York to Joseph Galloway, London, says, in part: "[The price of] Fire-wood is limited at Five pounds a Cord [see N 28, 1778], but it's not to be got. [See further D 20, 1779; Ja 20, F 19, 1780.] Irish Pork at £10 a bbl., Beef at £8, and fresh flour will bring £12 p. bbl. Our markets have been pretty fully supplyed with fresh prog [victuals] from Long-Island & Shrewsberry, for they run all risques for a little of the hard money—but what would become of us should a Cork fleet miscarrie—which sooner or later may be the case—the army wou'd eat up the market and the inhabitants wou'd starve. We have had this prospect staring us in the face for sometime past, but thank God yesterday and to-day a fleet of Victuallers arrived, otherwise we should not [have] had a mouth full in a short time. . . . 11

". . . We have now fix'd a Refugee Club [see also D 15, 1778; D 22, 1779], meet once a fortnight at Hic's Tavern, the Members are respectable people from each Colony—Governour Franklin in the Chair. We talk freely of Politics, tell all the News, and are for the time happy.

". . . You know or must have heard that I was the person who oposed Independency (and that in the Month of May and to the declaration) on the Commons of Philadelphia in the face of five Battalions of Associators, and was hiss'd of[f] the Parade—that I maintained my integrity and at all times refused to Acquiesce in any of their proceedings, until I was obliged to flee to this place for refuge. . . ."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., V: 363.

By order of the commandant, it is announced that vendue- 12

1779 Jan. 12 masters, after Jan. 20, shall be licensed by the "Officers of the Police," before whom they shall take oath not to be concerned in any collusive sales in order to raise the price of any article of trade or provisions. Security also, in the sum of £5,000 currency, is required for the faithful execution of their duty as well as the security of their employers. Among the other regulations in the order are these: "Shipping and other materials, naval stores, prize-goods, provisions and liquors of all sorts, cabinet-ware, and the effects of strangers deceased, may be sold on the wharfs, or near the Coffee-House Bridge [cf. Pl. 69, Vol. I], by the licensed Vendue-Masters.

"Dry goods, and all other goods that do not come under the above denominations, when intended for Public Vendue, are only to be sold in Auction-Rooms provided by the licensed Vendue-Masters, for that purpose.

"Permissions will be granted to any of the licensed Vendue-Masters when required, for the disposing of household furniture at private houses."—Royal Gaz., Ja 16, 1779.

" Brig.-Gen. Leslie regulates the ferry charges between Staten Island and New York. These are to be two shillings for each passenger, and six shillings for each horse. A boat must carry six or more passengers.—Royal Gaz., Ja 13, 1779.

13 A letter written from New York on Jan. 16 stated that "A Dutch ship of 400 tons, laden with double-headed grape and small shot, and several hundred bales of woollen cloth, was brought in here the 13th instant by the Delight cutter. It appeared very evident, on examining her bill of lading, she was bound to Charlestown."—London Chron., Mr 2–4, 1779.

" By order of the commandant, a notice of the rates of ferriage between New York and Brooklyn is issued at the "Office of the Police," signed by Supt.-Gen. Elliot, Mayor Mathews, and Police Magistrate Dubois. For example, for every person, 6 d.; for every "Gammon of Bacon, Turkey, or Goose," 2 d.; for every "Piece of Cotton, Pennistone, Flannel or Frize, . . . Broad Cloth, Kersey, Strouds, Halfthicks and Druggets," 6 d.; for every "Piece of Duroys, Callimancoes, Shallons or other Stuff, . . . Garlix, Holland or other Linen," 2 d.; for every "Hundred of Fish (called Sheep's head)," 4 s.; for every "Hundred of Bass or Shad," 2 s.; and for every "Dozen of Perch," 2 d. If "any Ferryman" shall demand or receive more than the rates prescribed, report is to be made to the "Officers of the Police," that the "Offenders may be brought to punishment."—Royal Gaz., Ja 16, 1779.

16 John Hales, "Late of Philadelphia," opens a tavern "at the corner of Nassau in King-street, near the Main-Guard, known by the sign of the Tally-Ho!"—Royal Gaz., Ja 16, 1779. Before Nov. 9 of this year, Hale or Hales was ordered to give up possession to "make Room for the Troops." His protest to Gen. Pattison sets forth that "the House was allotted to him by an Order from Head Quarters, immediately after the arrival of the King's Troops from Philadelphia in consideration of the Losses he suffered for his Loyalty, being obliged to fly & leave his Property behind—that the House when he took possession of it was in so ruinous a Condition as obliged him to expend upwards of £300 before it became habitable. . . ." Pattison, in response, wrote to Col. Clarke recommending that if it should be found necessary for Hale to give up the house, reasonable indemnification should be made by the "Barrack Office" for his expenses—From "Letters of Gen. Pattison," N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), VIII: 294. Hale was still keeping tavern in the city on Sept. 6, 1780 (q. v.).

17 A private letter from Morristown states: "The British troops and inhabitants at New-York have been in the greatest distress for want of bread [see Ja 9] . . . It is also reported and believed that rations are issued to 10,000 men, women and children, besides what the troops draw at New-York, Long Island, &c."—Penn. Packet, F 4, 1779.

19 "There is a Scarcity of Provisions and Provender—N England in Distress for Bread—They come from beyond Boston and the Sea Coast of Connecticut to this Colony for Flour, & they suffer but little to go out to the Eastward.—The Paper money 8 and 10 for one—It will scarcely purchase any Thing. Col° Livingston 'tis said refuses it—Multitudes are distressed—M^r Scott sells his Place for Provisions."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

22 Maj.-Gen. Jones, commandant, reaffirms an order of Dec. 20, 1777 (q. v.), which required the farmers of Long Island and Staten Island to bring their wheat, rye, and Indian corn to market at stated intervals; and, as an encouragement to produce an ample supply, he orders that certain specified higher prices will be paid. For example, the farmers may charge 26 shillings per bushel for wheat, and 80 shillings per cwt. for wheat flour. After Feb. 1, no greater price shall be demanded or paid, on penalty of forfeiture of the grain or flour, or its value, and imprisonment of the offender until the forfeiture is paid, when one-half is to go to the informer and the other half to the poor of this city or the township where the offence is committed. Jan. 22

The order also requires that the police of New York, and the colonels of militia on Long Island and Staten Island, shall take an account of the quantities of wheat, rye, Indian corn, grain, flour, or meal, in their respective districts, noting in whose possession it is found, and shall report as soon as possible to the commandant of New York.—Royal Gaz., Ja 27, 1779. See, further, Mr 27, and Ap 12.

" An assize of bread is regulated by public notice of this date, signed by Supt.-Gen. Elliot, Mayor Mathews, and Police Magistrate Dubois. After Feb. 1st, "all the Bakers in this city are to make their Loaves of Two Pounds weight," and no baker shall charge more than 22 coppers for each such loaf. Each loaf shall be marked with the baker's initials. The weight of two pounds per loaf is for the convenience of the poor, and to avoid fractions in weight which render detections of fraud in the assize more difficult.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 25, 1779; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 669. See Jl 7.

24 Lieut. Von Krafft records in his journal: "In the evening I took a walk in New York and, on account of the flagrant excesses occurring there, took with me 2 soldiers which I had follow me at a little distance."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 79.

Feb. 1 & 2 Kemble is informed that "the Rebels have a forty Gun Ship, two others of 32 Guns, and two smaller, cruising off the Delaware, supposed to Intercept the Romulus coming out with £200,000." He hears that the admiral has "sent to Rhode Island for Vessels to attack them;" and he asks: "why not send the Ardent out?"—Kemble's Jour., 173.

3 "The Army & Town are in high Joy on the arrival of Letters yesterday with Accounts from Georgia represented as recovered."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Kemble's Jour., 173, 177.

4 The city vestry gives public notice to persons hiring "the Houses, the rents of which are appropriated for the maintenance of the poor of this city," that they are not to transfer their interest without the consent of the vestry; and that no premiums are to be given or taken by such tenants for such transfers. Some of these tenants, availing themselves of "the rights of preference, they were entitled to by virtue of their pre-occupancy," have engaged houses for another year with no intention of residing in them, but "with a view of extorting extravagant sums over . . . the stipulated rents from the necessitous and distressed."—N. Y. Merc., F 8, 1779.

5 Tryon, writing from "Out Post King's Bridge" to Lord George Germain, says that the "adventurers in the letters of Marque derive great comfort and encouragement in the expressions of His Maj^ty^'s satisfaction . . .;" and that 142 vessels have "been taken by letters of Marque, and brought into this Port, . . . since the beginning of last September, when the first ships were Commissioned," their value being over £200,000. See also Mr 1.

He commissions the "Royal Charlotte," fitted out as a privateer by the ladies of New York (see Ja 6).—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 757.

9 The master of a transport which left New York on this day reported in Cork that "four sail victuallers had been taken by the American privateers, and carried into Boston. Great numbers of refugees were coming to New York for support, being driven there by the policy of the Americans, in order to distress the place, by adding to the numbers already there, and knowing their want of provisions. Several prizes had been brought in by the cruisers, but none of them of any value, except a ship from France with bale goods, woollens, silks, &c. bound to Philadelphia."—London Chron., Mr 11–13, 1779.

13 During the Revolution, a tavern known as the "Defeat at Brandywine," was conducted on Golden Hill.—Royal Gaz., F 13, 1779. This may have been one of the taverns on Golden Hill which existed under another name before the English occupation of the city. Of such taverns, one was conducted by George Hopkins at the "Sign of the Orange Tree." Another tavern, adjoining the Orange Tree, was run by a Mr. McGinnis. Edw. Bardin, for a brief period in 1770, was proprietor of the Golden Ton, at Beekman and William Sts., and undoubtedly other taverns existed in the vicinity, of which we have no record. See Index under "Taverns."

18 Kemble records the arrival of "Victuallers with Irish Papers

1779 late as 15th. December . . .; Reported also that a large Body of Feb. Troops are coming out to America; beware, Rebels!"—Kemble's
18 Jour., 173.

23 A committee submits to the continental congress a draft of provisions to be insisted upon in the event of a peace treaty between the United States and Great Britain.—Jour. Cont. Cong., XIII: 240–44; Winsor, VII: 89. The conditions of a peace were not decided upon by congress until Aug. 4 (q. v.).

24 Kemble describes in his journal an expedition of the British from New York to Newark where they burned the barracks and court-house. The British admiral and general were present, as well as Gov. Franklin of New Jersey.—Kemble's Jour., 174. See also description given by Isaac Ogden in a letter to Jos. Galloway (dated F 26), in Hist. Mag., 1st ser., VI: 180–81.

25 Robertson records that "General Tryon . . . march'd from King's Bridge w^{t} 3 or 4 Reg^{ts} to Horse Neck [Greenwich, Conn.] & on his return had about 50 men taken."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 174.

26 There appears in the London Chronicle "A View of the Republic or State of New York." In a tone of ridicule, this long article opens thus: "The contracted boundaries of this pitiful commonwealth, must expose such an impotent ally to the derision of France.—What does this ape of a nation consist of. Nothing more than the Counties of Albany, Ulster and Dutchess, with the undesolated fragments of Westchester, Orange and Tryon; For New-York, and the four counties on Long and Staten-Island, have renounced the usurpers; and Cumberland, Gloucester and Charlotte, revolting from the revolt, have shrewdly withdrawn from their power and their burdens, and set up for themselves under the style of The state of Vermont, and demanded a fourteenth stripe in the standard of the confederation.

"Can Louis le Petite help smiling at his Ambassador's map of such a republic! Or has Mons. Gerard, to Prolong his embassy and gains, concealed it from the eye of his master? Rarely are the remote limits of great empires so exposed, as the very center of this insignificant sovereignty." Minute details are given of the population, civil establishment, and financial status of the "republic," comparison being made of the small tax burden under royal government and the large one now. "The mortgage of their estates for the public debts, though heavy and certain, is less felt than the daily depredations upon the products of their lands.

"To-day the deputy, or assistant deputy, of a commissary or forage-master, rifles the farmer's barn, of what a single justice of peace conceives to be more than his family can consume in the course of the year; and he is paid in a certificate that makes him only a creditor to the Congress, of a sum that may never be discharged: to-morrow he contributes in waggons and horses, which are retained or destroyed, without any compensation for the loss. . . .

"Nor is the waste of property the smallest branch of the common calamity. The tyrants who exempt themselves from military services, exact them without remorse from everybody else—from boys beyond the age of 15, and from all adults under 55. Was this only on emergencies, and to march at small distances, under officers to whom they are known, in company with their neighbours, and for only a few days, the vassalage might be borne; but the Poughkeepsie Militia act compels them to turn out as often as Mr. Governor thinks fit, to go as far as he pleases, to take the place of common soldiers in the continental army; and to complete the disgrace and slavery of the common people, the forced husbandman or mechanic, as well as the voluntary hireling, is subject to the judgment of a court martial.—He marches, messes and sleeps with the Negroes, who are received as substitutes for their masters on the promise of manumission at the end of the war; there being several hundred of this species of sweet-scented liberty boys in the continental army."—Royal Gaz., Ag 18 and 21, 1779, reprinted from London Chronicle, F 26, 1779.

In researches connected with the publication of this Chronology, it is revealed for the first time that Wm. Smith, New York's first historian, was the author of this "View." In his diary, under Aug. 21, he writes: "I perceive that Plenderleath [Smith's son-in-law] has printed the View I sent him of the Republic of New York—Rivington reprints it from a London Paper last Wednesday & to Day, while I was looking over it in Gaine's Shop on Wed: I heard it ascribed to Peter Van Sc[h]aick of Kinderhook who went to England last Fall. There are small additions & several Blunders. I suppose owing to the Obscurity of my Handwriting."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

Mar. Tryon now writes to Germain (cf. F 5): "Our Privateers have 1 taken above one hundred and fifty prizes since the 18th September last; yesterday a small sloop, loaded with ammunition was brought in here by the Revenge, from Philadelphia, bound to South Carolina. Seldom a day passes without a prize by the Privateers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 759.

" Lieut. Von Krafft records in his journal an account of an unpleasant encounter he had with a drunken soldier, and adds: "I could narrate many and very frightful occurrences, of theft, fraud, robbery and murder by the English soldiers, which their love of drink excited; and as they received but little money, they used these disgusting means."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 81–82. See also another incident of the kind recorded in ibid., 90, under date of Aug. 5.

3 Gov. Tryon is given leave to return to England, on the arrival of his successor as governour, Gen. Robertson.—N. Y. Col. Docs. VIII: 759–60; 761. For Robertson's instructions, see ibid., VIII: 767–68. In Nov., Tryon was notified that the frigate carrying Gen. Robertson was to sail from England for America by way of Georgia. —Ibid., VIII: 778 The new governour reached New York March 21, 1780 (q. v.).

" "The Sloop Royal Charlotte, the property of the Ladies of New-York, will sail on a Cruize on Saturday next."—Royal Gaz., Mr 3, 1779. See also F 5.

" The inhabitants of New York are ordered not to discharge firearms in the city by day or night, the penalty for violation of the order being forfeiture of the arms and possible imprisonment.—Royal Gaz., Mr 3, 1779.

8 Gov. Tryon issues a proclamation in which he informs "all those who are inclined to escape from the barbarous Dominations of the Usurpers, and are desirous to contribute their Aid to its speedy Subversion, and the Re-establishment of the Harmony, Tranquility and Prosperity of the Empire, that ample Provision is made . . . for the Employment of all Seamen, Ship-Carpenters and other Landsmen, resorting to this Port, in short and successful Cruizes against his Majesty's Enemies—that generous Bounties are given to all the Adventurers, and especially to such as are able to serve the Crew in the Capacity of Surgeons—that I have already issued one hundred and twenty-one Commissions, to as many private Vessels of War—that in the short Space of Time elapsed since the eighteenth of September last, the Prize Vessels arrived here, amount to one hundred and sixty-five, and their total Value, according to authentic Information, is above six hundred thousand Pounds, and that by these Captures, and the signal Success of the Ships of his Majesty's Navy, and other private Letters of Marque, the City of New-York is become an immense Magazine of all Kinds of Supplies, for a very extensive Commerce. . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 880.

14 An insurrection is disclosed in New York by a negro. The band is said to consist of several hundred rebel conspirators who intend to set fire to the city. Some of them have been arrested. In consequence, there is much anxiety among the soldiers in New York.—Von Krafft's Jour., 83. See also Mr 20.

17 "Ad^{l} Gambier & a Fleet of Empty Transports gone Round to R. Island on an intended Expedition against Providence."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Kemble records: "Sir Henry Clinton went to Long Island, Grenadiers, Flank Companies of the Guards, 33d., and 42d. Regiments under Orders, and fourteen Transports proceeded to White Stone."—Kemble's Jour., 175.

" The anniversary of St. Patrick, "the Tutelar Saint of Ireland," is celebrated "by the Natives of that Kingdom with their accustomed Hilarity." The "Volunteers of Ireland," preceded by their band of music, "marched into the City, and formed before the House of their Colonel, Lord Rawdon, who put himself at their Head, and, after paying his Compliments to his Excellency General Knyphausen, and to General Jones, accompanied them to the Bowery, where a Dinner was provided, consisting of five hundred Covers; after the Men were seated, and had proceeded to the Enjoyment of a noble Banquet, the Officers returned to Town, and dined with his Lordship. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 22, 1779.

" All "aspiring Heroes" are offered an opportunity to distinguish themselves by joining the "Queen's Ranger Husars." Each man will be "immediately mounted on an elegant Horse," besides receiving clothing, etc. to the value of £40. Applications are to be made to the Quarters, No. 1033 Water St., "Hewit's Tavern, behind 1779 Mr 17 " the Coffee-House, or the Defeat at Brandywine, on Golden-Hill." —Royal Gaz., Mr 17, 1779.

"Patrick Doyle and Elizabeth Power, have now opened that elegant house in Smith-street known by the name of the Cornwallis's Arms, where they propose Keeping Tavern in the most extensive and elegant manner, for which purpose they have supplied themselves with an assortment of the best Wines and Liquors; . . ."—Rivington's Royal Gaz., Mr 17, 1779. Less than a month later, the partnership was dissolved and Mrs. Powers continued alone in the "Tavern-Keeping business, at the House late Judge Horsemanden's."—Ibid., Ap 10, 1779. In 1783, the house at 38 Smith (William) St., "formerly Judge Horsmanden's," was converted into a post-office, under William Bedlow, deputy postmaster.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 1, 1784.

20 "This is a Moment of Expectation.

"The Packets of Jan^{y} & Feb^{y} & a Fleet with Money & Provisions expected No news from England since 24 Dec^{r}. . . .

"Sir Henry & the Adm^{l} both absent. The Ships collected at White Stone (about 17) sailed down the Sound this Morning. . . .

"Soldiers of Washington's frequently coming in with their Arms and go into the Privateers.

"Several Men apprehended last Night came in & letters found incouraging a Suspicion of a Design to burn down this Town."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See Mr 14.

21 Kemble records: "A vessel from Rhode Island, saying Admiral Gambier was expected immediately from thence, and the Expedition laid aside. The Rebels had collected all their force at New London, in expectation we intended to make a descent there. The Sloop from Rhode Island, intending to come thro' the Sound, was prevented by Rebel Vessels from New London, and obliged to come round Long Island. No Vessel of War in the Harbour to attend any Expedition."—Kemble's Jour., 175.

24 "All gentlemen Volunteers who are willing to serve his Majesty in the Loyal American Regiment commanded by Col. Beverly Robinson for two years or during the Rebellion, shall upon their being mustered and approved of by the Inspector General receive $25 bounty. Whatever persons are willing to embrace the present opportunity offered of approving their loyalty, let them repair to the Quarters of the Regiment at Haerlem Heights, or to the Bulls Head Tavern at New York, where an officer will attend to receive and entertain them."—Rivington's Royal Gaz., Mr 24, 1779.

27 Maj.-Gen. Jones reinforces the proclamation of Dec. 20, 1777 (q.v.), issued by Maj.-Gen. Robertson, when commandant, regarding regulations to be observed by masters of vessels on their entering the port of New York. These published directions are addressed "To Christopher Blundell, Gent. Master of the Port of New-York, and Mr. Anthony Kendall, his Deputy," to which is added: "The Master of the Port's Office is kept at No. 271, near Beekman's Slip."—Royal Gaz., Mr 31, 1779.

29 The wind-mill "near the two-mile stone" is offered for rent, with a dwelling-house and garden.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 29, 1779.

31 The farm at Bloomingdale, six miles from town, "belonging to Miss Charlotte De Lancey, commonly called De Lancey's Farm, bounded northly by M^{r} Apthorp's farm, easterly by the Commons, southerly by Judge Bayard's, and westerly by Hudson's River, containing 183½ acres" is offered for sale by Brig.-Gen. De Lancey. —Royal Gaz., Mr 31, 1779.

Apr. — At about this time, Gen. Benedict Arnold opened treasonable correspondence with Gen. Clinton.—See "The Treason of Benedict Arnold, as presented in Letters of Sir Henry Clinton to Lord George Germain," in Penn. Mag. of Hist. & Biog., XXII: 410; Winsor, VI: 448.

1 "Several Cruisers arrived from the South Ward."—Kemble's Jour., 176.

4 Kemble records: "The Admiral Sailed having been accompanied the day before in great Parade on board his Ship by the Captains of the Navy."—Kemble's Jour., 176. See also Ap 5.

5 Kemble records that "The Admiral Sailed [probably fromSandy Hook], with the Richmond, Raleigh, and Unicorn, Frigates, for England."—Kemble's Jour., 176.

9 Because "innumerable Riots and Disturbances have happened in the Streets of the City, . . . by Seamen belonging to his Majesty's Ship's Transports, Victuallers, etc.," a notice is issued by Commodore George Collier on board the "Rainbow," directing government officers to prohibit shore-leave for seamen after dark. —N. Y. Merc., Ap 12, 1779; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 673.

Apr. 10 Sir Charles Blagden writes from New York to Sir Joseph Banks: "The Troops still remain in winter-quarters; . . . Various reports of peace come in to us from the rebels; whether they really expect such an event, or mean only, by spreading those rumors, to keep the people more satisfied for a time, we cannot yet learn. No preparations are making on their side for a vigorous campaign; no quotas of men are appointed for the different States to raise, as in all the former years of the war. This conduct is inexplicable [sic] on no other principles than those of complete security, or absolute inability. Commissioners from us are to meet others on the part of the rebels next week, to settle the exchange of prisoners, which, after so many prevarications, is now thought likely to be effected on a liberal footing."—From original letter in N. Y. P. L. printed in Library Bull. (1903), 442.

" "To be Sold The well known and pleasant farm, called the Glass-House, Containing thirty acres of land. Enquire of William M'Adam, Hanover Sq."—Rivington's Royal Gaz., Ap 10, 1779. This place had been established as a glass manufactory and later was turned into a tavern.—See O 7, 1754.

11 This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (see, further, July 12, 1776), entitled "View of New York taken from one of the Redouts in the Lines thrown up by the Rebels behind Mount Pitt." This drawing is now in the collection of Mr. Harris D. Colt. See Frontispiece II, Vol. V.

12 Spain, by treaty, makes common caus- with France against England; but the treaty is kept secret.—Winsor, VII: 54, 55, 85, 170. War was declared by Spain on June 16 (q.v.).

13 It is stated in a proclamation, issued on board H. M. S. "Rainbow," off New York, by Sir George Collier, "Commodore and Commander in Chief of all his Majesty's Ships and Vessels employed in America, from the North Cape on the Island Cape Breton to the Bahama Islands, and Florida inclusive," that "many Seamen have been lately inveigled from his Majesty's Service into Privateers, Letters of Marque, and Merchantmen, owing often to Drunkenness, and want of Consideration of the heavy Penalty attending such a Crime, which is Death by the Sentence of a Court Martial." Pardon is offered for such desertion to those who will return to the king's service within one month. Any vessel which "shall be found to harbour a Deserter, or in which a Deserter shall be found, will have every Man (except the Commander) without exception impressed for his Majesty's Service." The "Excuse of not knowing him to be a Deserter, will not avail or be received, unless the troop is perfectly clear that neither the owners, master or mate, knew of his being such."—Royal Gaz., Ap 17, 1779.

14 Kemble records that it is "Reported strongly that Admiral Byron had defeated Monsr. D'Estaing, destroyed five and taken six line of Battle Ships."

He states also that "Commissioners Colonel Hyde and Captain André [have] gone to Treat with Rebel Deputies on an Exchange of Prisoners" (see Ap 17).—Kemble's Jour., 176.

16 & 17 Kemble notes: "the arrival of a flag of Truce from Boston;" and that "The Commissioners, Colonel Hyde and Captain André [see Ap 14], are still at Amboy, and it is hoped will bring about an Exchange of Prisoners of all denominations. They went on this business the 13th. ultimo" (see Ap 23). He also records that "One of the Transports, with part of the flank Corps from Halifax, is lost on the Jersey Shore, and upwards of 100 Men and one Officer Drowned; they belonged to the 82d. Regiment."—Kemble's Jour., 176.

18 Lieut. Von Krafft records in his journal: "I was in the little town of Harlem not far from where our camp had formerly stood. There were no inhabitants in it. All had left . . ."—Von Krafft's Jour., 84.

19 Officers and seamen belonging to the "Light Bob schooner privateer, Annanias M'Dougall, Commander," are ordered to repair on board the schooner which lies at "Tolomie's wharff, opposite to Lennox's Tavern, in Water-street," on or before April 20.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 19, 1779. Lennox's Tavern, according to later advertisements, stood three doors east of the Coffee House (Wall and Water Sts.), and carried a sign representing Capt. Joseph Brant (Thayendanega), of the Six Nations. The tavern was also called the "Indian King." Lennox, who styled himself as "late of Philadelphia" (see Je 7, 1780), and in another advertisement as "From Perth, in North-Britain," announced, in September, 1781, his removal from this house to the "sign of the Indian King, No. 69, in Cherry Street."—N. Y. Merc., S 17, 1781. He was there as late as

1779 March 26, 1783 (q. v.), but probably gave up tavern-keeping upon
Apr. the withdrawal of the British army. In the spring of 1784, the sign
19 of the Indian King had been removed to a tavern at 110 Water St.
(see Jl 1, 1780).

21 "Golf Players" are notified that, as the "Season for this pleasant and healthy Exercise [is] now advancing," "Clubs and the veritable Caledonian Balls" may be had by enquiring at the printer's. —Royal Gaz., Ap 21, 1779.

" "John M' Kenzie, Tavern Keeper, in Queen-Street, No. 35. Begs leave to acquaint the Officers of the Navy and Army, and the Respectable Public, that he has opened an Ordinary . . ."—Royal Gaz., Ap 21, 1779. This tavern was known as the "Mason's Arms." A little over a year later, McKenzie became proprietor of Ranelagh Gardens, or the White Conduit House, at Broadway and Leonard St.—See Jl 15, 1780.

23 "The Commissioners for Exchange of prisoners [see Ap 14 and 17] returned from Amboy, having been able to do nothing."—Kemble's Jour., 177.

" At this time, the house formerly occupied by Judge Horsmanden was a tavern, the Cornwallis Arms, kept by Elizabeth Powers.—See her notice in Rivington's Royal Gaz., Ap 21, 1779. Cf. Mr 17.

24 Capt. Scott of the artillery shows me his "Map of the Province," says Smith. "I shewed him the Advantages of erecting a Fort at Verdritige Hook. He percieves them & laments that there is no Body about the General who knows anything of the Country. His Aid de Camps are all without Reputation—young & raw. Capt André in best Repute & he has acted upon the Stage all Winter."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

26 Lieut. Von Krafft records in his journal that, as he knows something of drawing, he has been detached to assist at the redoubts which are being completed on "Lourall [Laurel] Hill," opposite "Fort Knipphaussen."—Von Krafft's Jour., 84. For an account of a drawing of Harlem made by him, see descrip. of Pl. 46, I: 355–56. The view is reproduced in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), Pl. 6.

29 "Letters from New York, by the last ships, give a very favourable account of the situation of affairs there.—Mr. Washington could not keep his army together, the desertion was so great, numbers coming in daily to New York; and that General Clinton disposed of them in the following manner; some he incorporated with the royal army, and new raised corps; some he sent to the navy and privateers, and others had portions of land allotted them to cultivate near Kingsbridge; that the army were healthful, and the people in high spirits, not doubting but the rebellion would soon be at an end; and that a great number of prizes had been brought in by the privateers and cruisers."—London Chron., Ap 27–29, 1779.

May Kemble records: "42d. Regiment, Regiment Prince Charles,
1 Lord Rawdon's Corps, four flank Companies Guards, and one Comto pany 82d. Embarked under the Command of Major General
5 Matthew. Sailed the 4th. out the Hook, Convoyed by the Raisonable, Rainbow, and Sloop Otter, destination supposed for some part of the Chesapeake or Delaware River, and intended as a diversion to favor the progress of General Prevost's movements into Carolina; but as a positive account is come of the taking of the Jason [rumoured in New York on Ap 27], and most of her Convoy, by three Rebel Frigates, with Provisions, &c., for the Troops, the Movement intended by General Prevost must be laid aside; these Accounts received between the 1st. and 5th."—Kemble's Jour., 177.

3 "The dissentions among the rebels are still violent, though perhaps less so than two months ago; their paper currency is reduced to a 20th part of its original value, and the Indians are threatening their frontiers in the most formidable manner; but still I do not find that they relent, or that the French Party loses ground among them."—From letter written by Sir Charles Blagden to Sir Joseph Banks, preserved in N. Y. P. L. and printed Library's Bull. (1903), 443.

4 Wm. Smith is appointed chief-justice of New York.—American Loyalists, Audit Office Transcripts, XLIV: 617, in N. Y. P. L. Commenting on this appointment, Gov. Robertson said: "When I was made Govr of New York Lord George Germain then Secretary of State after observing that Princes had brought back revolted provinces to their duty by gaing the Confidence of Men for whom the people had the greatest regard. told me that his Majesty meant to bestow the vacant Office of Chief Justice upon Mr Smith.

"That it was hoped Governt might derive some Advantage from a Lawyer of the best talents and Connectns in the province. And that the people would drop their pretended or real fears for the Constitution, when they saw the Administration of Justice put into the hands of a Man who had always been considered as the greatest advocate for the Liberty of the Subject. May 4

"On these motives Mr Smith got the Office without any Sollicitation—I carryd him the Commission wch he received with a becoming sense of his Majestys goodness. He was swore into Office and was always ready to execute the function, that he did not was no fault of his—both in his Capacity of a Member of the Council of the Province—and as a member of the Council for the General Peace Commission—He took every occasion to urge the Necessity practibility and utility of an immediate revival of Civil Courts and Authority."—Ibid., XLIV: 628–29. See Smith's Diary, under Ag 1 and 5.

In a letter to a correspondent in London, a New Yorker says in part: "We are tolerably loyal here, I think. The young Fellows seem to enter the King's Service with great Chearfulness and Zeal. The Queens Ranger Volunteers, a fine Regiment, will soon be compleat: . . . 5

"It must be however confessed there is great Disloyalty prevails in some Part of the Army; for Desertions are very common. The Germans, as well as others, go over to the Rebel Legions."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), Je 16–18, 1779.

Kemble records: "A Convoy for Georgia Sailed, hope will be more lucky than the former" (see May 1 to 5).—Kemble's Jour., 177. 6

"Loosley and Elms, Having quitted the King's Head Tavern, on Brownejohn's wharf, have opened the house lately occupied by Captain Benson, at Brooklyn Ferry; . . ."—Royal Gaz., My 8, 1779. They had been proprietors of the tavern on Brownjohn's Wharf, formerly Capt. Doran's, since the spring of 1777.—See Ja 15, 1770. The "Brooklyn Ferry House" was renamed the King's Head Tavern, and became, under its new proprietors, a rendezvous for sportsmen. Besides racing, already a popular American sport, cricket, "bull-baiting" and fox-hunting were among the typical British sports practiced.—Ibid., Ag 28, 1779; Ap 26, Je 19, N 14, 1781. In the spring of 1780, the partnership was dissolved, and Looseley continued to keep tavern alone at the Brooklyn ferry-house, which he renamed "Brooklyn Hall."—See Ap 11, 1780. He failed in 1782, and, on Nov. 26 of that year (q. v.), all his household effects were sold at auction for the benefit of creditors. Looseley was still at Brooklyn Hall in the spring of 1783, when he advertised a lottery.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 17, 1783. He announced his intention, in May, of speedily proceeding "to the promised Land of Nova-Scotia," with "Brother Loyalists, where Freedom and Liberty reign triumphant."—Royal Gaz., My 24, 1783. 7

James Strachan announces that he has "opened a Tavern in the house No. 45, on Brownjohn's wharf, formerly occupied by Messrs. Loosley and Elm's." He serves an "ordinary" (table d'hôte) at 2:30 p.m. daily. "A Hair-Dresser attends as usual."—Royal Gaz., My 12, 1779. By May 29, Strachan had changed the name of his house to the Queen's Head Tavern. In December of this year, and in January, 1780, the house was advertised as the King's Head Tavern and London Chop House of "James Hearn."—N. Y. Merc. This may have been an error in the spelling of Strachan's name, or it may be that for a brief time, Hearn was the proprietor. Strachan was again in possession, however, by Jan. 26, 1780, and continued to occupy the house until May 1, 1781, when he removed to the old Merchants' Coffee House.—See Ap 28, 1781. 12

Richard Wetton, who had been proprietor for about a year of the "London Chop-House, at the sign of the Earl of Percy's arms," on Water St. near the Fly Market (see Ja 12, 1778), now removes to the corner of Beekman Slip and opens an inn which he calls the "Red Horse Tavern."—Royal Gaz., My 12, 1779. "

Kemble records the arrival of "Sir William Erskine and the Troops" from "East end Long Island."—Kemble's Jour., 177. 13

"I have read Mr Pulteney's Pamphlet—It is to urge the Protraction of the War for a Reunion of the Colonies & to point to Modes of Supply—1½ Pct on a new Valuation of Estates."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Wm. Pulteney's Considerations on the Present State of Public Affairs and the Means of Raising the Necessary Supplies was published in London in 1779. In this Pulteney declares that, as America has rejected the British offers of peace and has entered into an alliance with France, "no option seems now to be left us, but either to proceed with the utmost vigour, in prosecuting the war, or to submit, not only to the claim of American Independence, but to such further conditions of peace, as France and the Congress may think proper to impose." Such submission is, 16

1779 May 16 of course, out of the question. "The object now . . . is, to preserve such a connection with the Colonies in North America, as to unite the force of the whole empire, in time of war, for the common safety. . . .

"This object will be attained, if the Colonies acknowledge the same King, which involves the power of peace and war, and the rights of mutual naturalization and succession." The author thinks that American independence would be injurious both to America and to Great Britain. He continues:

"Till the late offers of conciliation were made to America, a great part of this Kingdom, were averse to the war. . . . On the other hand, America was in general united, and few were our friends there. . . . The contest is now entirely changed. The offers of Great Britain have been such, as became a brave generous nation, and have left nothing, in point of freedom, to be wished for, by our fellow-subjects. The rejection of these offers by the Congress, has dispelled every doubt, in the minds of impartial men, with respect to the justice of the war."

Pulteney reminds the people that a large amount of money will be needed to continue the war, for Great Britain "must be prepared to hold out for many years." He computes the total wealth of Great Britain to be £1,000,000,000, and shows that if each man were assessed 1½% of his capital, to be paid by instalments in the course of 2 years, the sum of £15,000,000 would be raised, which "without supposing much œconomy, ought, with the ordinary supplies to support a vigorous war of two years at least."

18 Smith writes in his diary: "The Town is alive with a Detachm[t] gone out the Night before last t[o]wards Hackinsack—various Conjectures—Some expect the Troops back this Day—others say they are gone to take a Post up the River on the West Shore."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Lieut. Von Krafft assists "the other Engineer, Lieut. Marchall" to erect "a battery of 6 guns on the top of the hill of Fort Knipphaussen."—Von Krafft's Jour., 85.

19 Kemble records the arrival of "a Vessel Express from General Matthew and Sir George Collier," with an account of important successes of the British at Portsmouth, Norfolk Co., Va.; and the taking of stores at Gosport, Va., intended "for the Continental Vagabond use."—Kemble's Jour., 178.

20 Kemble records: "Nothing Extraordinary, but a Report that Mr. Washington had set off in great haste for Philadelphia."—Kemble's Jour., 178.

21 The commandant appoints Jeronymus Alstyne and John Amory directors of the city watch, and decrees certain regulations and fines.—N. Y. Merc., My 31, 1779. See also Dawson's report on the city finances during the Revolution, printed in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 217.

22 "James Smither, Engraver and Seal Cutter, Late of Philadelphia, at the Golden-Head No. 923, in Water-Street, near the Coffee-House, and next door but one to Mr. Nutter's," advertises that he engraves "in the most elegant manner Coats of Arms, Seals, Maps, Copper Plates, and all other kind of engraving."—Royal Gaz., My 22, 1779. Smither returned to Philadelphia in 1786. For a further account of him, see Stauffer's Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 254–55. Check-lists of his plates may be found in ibid., II: 490–93, and in Fielding's Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, 253–55.

" Charles Roubalet, later the proprietor of the City Tavern at 115 Broadway, opens an "ordinary" at 939 Water St., in the house generally known as Smith's Tavern.—Royal Gaz., My 22, 1779. See Ja 12, 1778.

24 Smith writes: "A Report by 5 Deserters from Peak's Kill that Fort Stanwix is taken—They came in at the Bridge last Night. It is credited by some.

"Great Preparations making for going out—Tis generally reported that they are destined up the North River. I wonder at it—Tis as if it were determined it should be known, but none however speak of the Spot for taking Post—in General that they are going ag[t] the Highland Forts."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" A New York letter contains the following information: "Provisions are very plenty, and every thing else but groceries and naval stores. So many privateers are fitted, and such a call for ropes, &c. that cordage will bring an advance of 40 per cent. sterling on the invoice. . . . The people at New York have feathered their nests, by the success of their privateers, but, having swept the seas, prizes drop in but slowly at present."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Je 25–28, 1779.

May 26 Congress adopts an address "To the Inhabitants of the United States of America." The opening paragraph reads as follows: "Friends and Countrymen,

"The present situation of public affairs demands your most serious attention, and particularly the great and increasing depreciation of your currency requires the immediate, strenuous, and united efforts of all true friends to their country, for preventing an extension of the mischiefs that have already flowed from that source."

The emission of paper money is defended as an expedient "generally and successfully practised on this continent." Attention is called to the endeavour to prevent too frequent emissions by the establishment of loan offices "so early as in Oct. 1776." The sums received therefrom, however, have proved "inadequate to the public exigencies." The situation is made worse, they say, by the "artifices of men who have hastened to enrich themselves by monopolizing the necessaries of life" and by the "misconduct of inferior officers employed in the public service."

For the prosecution of the war to Jan. 1, 1780, it is estimated that $45,000,000 is necessary in addition to the $15,000,000 "required by a resolution of Congress of the 2d of January last." They further recommend to the states to pay "as much as can be collected as soon as possible into the continental treasury."

An expression of encouragement follows:

"Think not we despair of the commonwealth, or endeavour to shrink from opposing difficulties. No, Your cause is too good, your objects too sacred, to be relinquished. We tell you truths, because you are freemen who can bear to hear them and may profit by them; and when they reach your enemies, we fear not the consequences, because we are not ignorant of their resources or our own." Hope is expressed that the French alliance may be followed by other alliances "on principles honourable and beneficial to these states." The enemy appears to despair "of the success of their united forces against our main army," and are restoring to "predatory, desultory operations." Such being the case, "if you are assiduous in improving opportunities, Saratoga may not be the only spot on this continent to give a new denomination to the baffled troops of a nation impiously priding herself in notions of her omnipotence." The address concludes with the following exhortation: "Encouraged by favours already received from infinite goodness, gratefully acknowledging them, earnestly imploring their continuance, constantly endeavouring to draw them down on your heads by an amendment of your lives and a conformity to the divine will, humbly confiding in the protection so often and wonderfully experienced, vigorously employ the means placed by Providence in your hands, for compleating your labours.

"Fill up your battalions—be prepared in every part to repel the incursions of your enemies—place your several quotas in the continental treasury—lend money for public uses—sink the emissions of your respective states—provide effectually for expediting the conveyance of supplies for your armies and fleets, and for your allies—prevent the produce of the country from being monopolized—effectually superintend the behaviour of public officers—deligently promote piety, virtue, brotherly love, learning, frugality and moderation—and may you be approved before Almighty God worthy of those blessings we devoutly wish you to enjoy."—Royal Gaz., Je 9, 1779; Penn. Packet, My 29, 1779. Commenting on this address, under date of June 5, Smith says: "They must know the money can not be raised in the Year—The Tax on N Y now raising is Half a Million of Pounds—Her Proportion of the 45 millions more of Dollars will be another Million & a Half in all 2 Millions for this Year."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

28 Kemble records "the Movement of [British] Troops on the 28th. in order to form an Encampment from Philips's House on the North River, Extending nearly to the East River, keeping the Brunks [Bronx] in great part on their front."—Kemble's Jour., 178–79. The particulars given by Capt. Robertson are as follows: "The following Troops were assembled near King's Bridge—(Viz[t]) L[t] Infantry—B[h] & Hess[n] Gren[rs], 7[th] 17[th] 23d 33[d] 63[d] & 64[th] Reg[t] Fergusson's Corps, 17[th] Dragoons Legion, Queen's Rangers Reg[t] of Bosse & Robenson's provincials—went w[t] S[r] W[m] to Cortlandts house—& Jager's mounted & Dissmounted."—Robertson's Private Jour. Campaigns 1779 & 1780 (MS.), in N. Y. P. L. On May 29, he added: "The Above Corps were Encamped from Pell's B[ds] E[t] Chester to the N. R[r]."—Ibid.

29 "Gen[l] Matthew's Corps [see My 5] return'd to New York from

1779 My 29 Virginia & proceeded up the N. R^r to Phillip's House."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.)

" A notice is published for the "Refugee Club" to meet at Hick's Tavern for dinner on June 1, with "Governor Franklin in the Chair."—Royal Gaz., My 29, 1779.

31 The British take possession of Stony Point "w^t out any opposition."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Je 1.

" Smith writes that he has been informed "that Sir Henry Clinton imbarked all his Troops at 10 last Night except 2000 which he has left under Sir W^m Erskine at Philipseburgh—at 6 this morning they were out of Sight—He adds that Sir H C[linton] took Bombs with him which indicate a Design upon the Forts—The Gov^r is vastly mortified by being left at Home."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" About 40 refugees start on an expedition to Shoal Harbour where, on June 1, they attacked the houses of "some notoriously violent Rebels." The party returned to New York on June 2, bringing with them "27 milch cows, 7 horses, 2 waggons loaded with goods &c."—Royal Gaz., Je 5, 1779.

This plunder appears to have been disposed of at auction, for we find the following notice in the same paper: "To Be Sold, This Day at Public Auction, At the Bull's Head Tavern, in the Bowry Lane, between XI and XII o'Clock, Several good Milch Cows, one very fine Ox, several Horses, Waggons, &c."—Ibid., Je 5, 1779. Similar advertisements appeared in ibid., Jl 10 and 16, 1779.

June 1 The British invest Verplank's Point and take about 70 prisoners. After mentioning this, Robertson adds: "The Rebels conceive S^r H^y intends to Attack West Point, w^h appears an important object to them."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Wm. Smith says: "The army seized Stony point [see My 31] and Verplank's Point at 10 o'Clock yesterday morning and that some Troops had landed below on the West Side & that there were 13 Provision Transports ordered up immediately.—Sir W Erskine with 2000 scouring the Country about White plains for Cattle."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Kemble's Jour., 179.

3 Clinton reconnoitres Peekskill and makes "a Show w^t Transports & Boats as if his intention was to go up to West P^t."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Robertson sketched them.

4 Capt. Robertson writes: "Rebels said to have about 2,000 men in West Point & 2000 w^t M^c Dougal between Fish Kill & Peak's Kill."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" This being the king's birthday, an "elegant Entertainment" is given "by his Excellency General Tryon, at which were present the Governors of New-Jersey and North-Carolina, the Members of his Majesty's Council for the Province of New-York, the Judges and other Officers of Government. . . . every Tavern in the City and its Vicinity was crouded with Gentlemen, where all possible Demonstrations of Joy, Affection and Conviviality were expressed on the Return of this Festival, a Day dear to every Friend of our most amiable and illustrious SOVEREIGN, and the admirable constitution of Old England."—Royal Gaz., Je 5, 1779. Notice had been previously published: "The Loyalty of the Inhabitants of New-York is sufficiently known. The General requests there may be no Illuminations nor Fire Works, the evening of his Majesty's Birth-Day."—Ibid., Je 2, 1779.

5 Washington passes through Pompton "from his Camp at Morris Town w^t 5,000 men, to succour W. Point."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

6 Kemble records: "Sir Henry went down to Philips's; the Works at Verplanck and Stony Point begun."—Kemble's Jour., 179. Kemble is employed on these works, which, he says, were "near complete" on the 26th.—Ibid.

8 Abigail Adams writes to her husband, John Adams (who is in Paris), about prices in America: "Corn is sold at four dollars, hard money, per bushel, which is equal to eighty at the rate of exchange. Labor is at eight dollars per day, and in three weeks it will be at twelve, it is probable, or it will be more stable than anything else. Goods of all kinds are at such a price that I hardly dare mention it. Linens are sold at twenty dollars per yard; the most ordinary sort of calicoes at thirty and forty; broadcloths at forty pounds per yard; West India goods full as high; molasses at twenty dollars per gallon; sugar four dollars per pound; bohea tea at forty dollars; and our own produce in proportion; butcher's meat at six and eight shillings per pound; board at fifty and sixty dollars per week."—Familiar letters of John & Abigail Adams (1876), 365.

11 "Washington got thro' the Clove & [is] at Ringwood Forrest of Dean N. Windsor & Neighbourhood of W. Point."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). June 11

Smith writes: "Seven Ships ordered up the River & all the flat Boats. If one may Credit the Papers Washington is gone thro' from Ringwood to New Windsor . . . His avoiding the Clove Road shews his apprehension that the West Forts are the Object & that he is fearful they may be taken before he could pass the Clove. But then I should imagine he would halt at Goshen and either Case Sir Henry [Clinton] should seize the Mouth of the Clove & carry his Main Body into Jersey."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 13

A newspaper contributor, signing himself "Americanus," gives an extract of a letter from a Virginian to a friend in Philadelphia, in which the Virginian says: "we should have had peace this spring, had it not been for the—execrable faction." Commenting on this, "Americanus" declares: "when this bleeding country is told, that an execrable faction prevents peace, it is but natural to enquire where this faction is, who compose it, and what are their views. Congress alone are invested with the powers of war and peace; this faction must therefore be in that Body, or be so powerful at least without doors, as to influence a majority of the votes within. From what this gentleman has positively asserted, and from general report, it cannot be doubted that overtures or proposals of peace have been made from some quarter or other; . . . Every one will agree that peace is an object most devoutly to be wished for, if to be had on safe and honorable, as well as just and equal terms . . . it is reported that the debates and delays in Congress, on the terms of the treaty proposed to be opened, have arisen from the desire and wishes of some men to include in it certain objects and rights, which were not in our possession, either at the time of the declaration of independence, or of the concluding the treaties of Paris: In a word, that a right of fishing on the Banks of Newfoundland shall be acknowledged and guaranteed to these States, and that such an article shall be made a sine qua non of the treaty. . . . The delaying the resolutions, as to the terms on which we are willing to treat, has already produced the most mischievous, if not fatal effects; . . . If the insisting on conditions and terms, which neither the declaration of independency, nor the treaties of Paris, authorized us to challenge as our rights, has caused the late, otherways unaccountable delays, and prevented a peace, or at least a negociation being opened for one, those who have challenged and insisted on those claims are justly responsible for all the consequences."—Penn. Gaz., Je 23, 1779. This article was republished in the Royal Gazette for July 7, and invoked a comment from William Smith in his diary of the same date (q.v.). "

Spain declares war on Great Britain (see Ap 12).—Penn. Eve. Post, Sept. 3, 1779; Winsor, VII: 55. Information reached New York on Sept. 1 (q.v.). For proclamation of it here, see S 2. 16

Smith writes: "A Report that there is a Fleet of armed Vessels from Philad: att the Hook & that one of our Frigates is taken by them. Loud execrations ag^t Gambier for taking away 3 Frigates last April & ag^t the Ministry for not dispatching the Reinforcements & British Fleet sooner & ag^t S^r George Collier for not sending out the Reasonable & Camilla."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

Blagden writes again to Banks: "I have now the satisfaction of informing you that our Army has taken the field, and met with some little success in the capture of two posts which the rebels had fortified to command an important pass over the North River, called the King's Ferry, about 44 miles above this town [New York]. We have now been raising works at the same place, & made it a very strong post. . . . About 12 or 14 miles further up the river, the rebels have a very strong Fort, at a place called West-Point, with a numerous garrison, & every provision for a stout defence: M^r Washington's Army is also moved to cover it, but we do not know here that Sir Henry Clinton has any intention of attacking it. An Expedition was sent last month into Virginia, which met with great success in destroying large quantities of stores belong[ing] to the rebels, & in bringing away a fine booty, which is to be divided between the navy & army employed upon that service; the first instance, I believe, of a regular division of plunder in America this war. . . . We are very impatient to hear from your side of the water, & hope you will send us peace, the negotiations for which, as the rebels give out, are very far advanced, but on such terms that we cannot credit them. The best symptoms of distress I can perceive among them is the excessive depreciation of their paper-money, which is now so great that [their] bills will 1779 June 16 scarcely answer as a [means] of commerce; in some places, especially within reach of the gold & silver circulating from this army, one silver dollar will purchase thirty of paper!"—From original letter in N. Y. P. L., printed in Library's Bull. (1903), 443–44.

" Robertson records in his journal that, "to stimulate the Militia to turn out," a "Lye" is propagated that there is a "Report of Our Army in Carolina being beat by the Rebels 14th May—wt great Loss."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

17 A letter from New York states: "Our force here, and on Long and Staten Islands, if the regiments were complete, would exceed 20,000 men. As it is, our army is very respectable. I compute it at 15,000 men. . . .

"It has been talked of here to offer the rebel Officers the same rank they hold under their Congress, on coming over to us. It is thought this would give us the whole rebel army.

"The people have been so harassed and plundered by the Congress that the whole country is almost unanimous for a submission. One fifth of the able-bodied men among them have already lost their lives. Their tradesmen enter on board their merchant ships and privateers to prevent their being sent a soldiering as they call it.

"There is a general want of provisions and cloathing in the Northern Colonies. Ladies of the best families, for more than two years past, have only worn socks made of woollen, and even linen rags sewed together, instead of shoes. Indeed on the sea-coast shoes and stockings are got, but at an immense price:—a pair of shoes 45s. sterling; a hat double the price."—London Chron., Jl 22–24, 1779. Cf. Je 8.

21 Twenty-three members of the Chamber of Commerce meet "in the Upper long room at the Coffy House" and draw up the following letter to Lieut.-Gen. Daniel Jones:

"We beg leave to inform your Excellency that the Subscribers are Members of a Society known by the Style and Title of a Chamber of Commerce which, before the present unnatural rebellion, met under certain regulations (of which we have the honor of inclosing a copy), and determined the principal matters relative to trade in this City.

"The good effects of this Institution having been felt and acknowledged by all persons concerned in Trade, and the increase of Commerce encouraged by the Proclamations of his Majesty's Commissioners, together with the success of Private Ships of War, has induced the Merchants in general (who are ready to join us agreeable to our regulations) to solicit a renewal of our Meetings in order that the many mercantile differences which so frequently happen may be adjusted.

"As Commandant of the City, we esteemed it our duty to lay before you the intent of our proposed meetings and at the same time we beg leave to assure you that our assistance, when called upon, will at all times be ready to facilitate the Public good." This was the first meeting of the institution since May 2, 1775.—Col. Rec. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 203–4. Lieut.-Gen. Jones answered the letter on June 25 (q. v.). The "Coffy House" was the Merchants' Coffee House, at the s. e. cor. of Wall and Water Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 979.

23 Smith writes: "The Ministry seem to deserve the common Censure of neglecting to forward Intelligence as well as of Inactivity in the Prosecution of the War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

25 In response to the letter of June 21 (q. v.) from the Chamber of Commerce, Lieut.-Gen. Jones writes:

"I have laid the Letter you favored me with before the Commander in Chief, and I have the Pleasure to acquaint you that his Excellency approves of the Gentlemen of the Chamber of Commerce renewing their Meetings as formerly. I was happy to hear of this Institution and regret only that I have not had the benefit of your assistance sooner to procure to New York every advantage our present situation would admit of, which I have always had much at Heart. You may therefore Gentlemen be assured every Proposal coming from you, for the good of the City, shall meet with my hearty concurrence and assistance, and when I quit my present Command I shall recommend to my Successor the usefull assistance that I think may be drawn from your Institution."—Col. Rec. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 205. See Jl 10 and Ag 3.

26 Extracts from letters of this date from London are published by Rivington. They declare that it is the "determination of Government, never to relinquish the object of reclaiming the Colonies;" also that parliament has failed to pass measures "for renewing the Conciliatory Bills, and appointing Commissioners, to treat with America upon this express principle, that no negociation could be admitted but upon previous application and concessions from the colonies."—Royal Gaz., S 4, 1779. Smith wrote in his diary, on Sept. 5: "Rivington's Paper . . . contains a Letter of 26 June hinting a Design to continue the War till America is reduced & I think I have heard that a Motion to continue the Offers of the Commissioners to America was rejected. It was made by Hartley of the Opposition. I believe I saw it in the Lond[on] Chronicle of 18 June."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. June 26

" A New Jersey justice of the peace speaks thus, according to Smith, of conditions in that state: "The Militia every where tired of the War—A Tax of 1 Million this year on Jersey—Last year 100,000. He thinks the Million will be raised for he paid £20 last year & that will call this year for £200,—It will be but a cow worth £150 & a Calf worth £50—Such the monstrous Depreciation—Many however will be ground to Powder by such a Load for a Law is made to ingage 10000 of the Militia for a Defence of Jersey—In every Regiment Volunteers will turn out for a Bounty given by the Rest to prevent Drafts—He thinks it will be not less than a £1000 per Man—This on the Back of the Tax will occasion great Distress & from the Disgust of the Volunteers not serve the End of the Usurpers—They may assist in putting their Employers to Flight."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

29 Tryon writes Vice-Admiral Arbuthnot that the crews of privateers that have been fitted out at New York number over 6,000.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 772.

" Commodore Collier (see Ap 13) issues a proclamation forbidding privateers to anchor outside the Hook, on their return from cruising, and landing their prisoners on Long Island. The owners are required, instead, "to direct their Vessels when they return from their Cruizes, to bring to near the Guard ship, in Order to their being properly examined, and not to shew so much Disrespect to the King's Colours, as to make Sail away, when they see the Guard Boat approaching them." He threatens with dismissal and loss of pay any government pilots who go on board merchant vessels "when Men of War are not supplied with them, who may want to come in over the Bar."—Royal Gaz., Je 30, 1779.

30 Clinton issues a proclamation which reads: "Whereas the Enemy have adopted a practice of enrolling negroes among their Troops; I do hereby give Notice, That all Negroes taken in Arms, or upon any Military Duty, shall be purchased for a stated Price; the Money to be paid to the Captors.

"But I do most strictly forbid any Person to sell or Claim Right over any Negroe, the Property of a Rebel, who may take Refuge with any Part of this Army: And do promise to every Negroe Who shall desert the Rebel Standard, full Security to follow within these Lines, any Occupation which he shall think proper."—Royal Gaz., Jl 3, 1779.

" Smith says he has sent to Gov. Tryon a new draft "for a Project to draw into Service such Refugees as will not become Soldiers."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

July 3 Smith records that Gov. Tryon has left the city "to attack some part of Connecticut."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See Jl 4.

" "By the Threat of pouring many Detachmts into Connecticut I infer that Sir Henry aims to draw Washington into that Country. So far right—I was always of Opinion that this Colony would be the first to renounce the confederacy."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "Rivington has published this Day the Paper I gave him," says Smith.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. It is in the form of a letter, without signature, addressed to "Mr. Rivington," and reads in part as follows:

"It was a coarse but true observation of the late Jemmy Otis, that the filth of the political Pot had got uppermost; and we know that now, the most reputable part of the community, rarely attend the elections. It is an undoubted fact, that in Connecticut the public officers have been of late voted in, by less than 100 voices in towns of eight hundred and a thousand electors.—What wonder then to find, Waggoners, Blacksmiths, Butchers and Tavern-keepers on the list of Generals; and in their councils, Pettifoggers, Parish Schoolmasters, fraudulent Debtors and Bankrupts. . . .

"I only add, Sir, that if you can persuade your correspondents, to give you an abstract of the constitutions of the respective republics, with an account of their civil and military officers, and to state their former and present burthens, you will have the clearest 1779 July 3 demonstration, that the rebellion is in the hands of mean agents, and abhorred in every colony by a vast majority of the inhabitants; and by detecting the false representations made to France, prevent even that kingdom from being a refuge, to those who are hourly sucking the heart's blood of America, and sending off their spoils, resolved upon a turn of affairs, to spend them in the dominions of a Prince, whose subjects have the highest reason to execrate the men, that have seduced him to violate a treaty, with the whole British Empire, for a destructive and scandalous compact with only a weak and divided branch of it."—Royal Gaz., Jl 3, 1779.

4 Sir Wm. Erskine and the Cork fleet sail for England, and an expedition under Gen. Tryon goes "up the Sound."—Robertson's Jour. 1779 & 1780 (MS.). Wm. Smith says that Tryon went immediately to Stamford and Norwalk, and that on the 5th he was at New Haven. His force was "supposed to be 28 Hundred strong—a British a Hessian & Fanning's Reg[t] with 500 of the associated Refugees from Rhode Island—2 Reg[ts] more from here with 2 Companies of the Guards & 2 of Light Infantry."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under Jl 7 and 8. See also Kemble's Jour., 180, in which, however, it is erroneously stated that the landing at New Haven was on July 7. See Jl 10.

" An "Address to the Inhabitants of Connecticut" is issued by Commodore Collier and General Tryon. It reads in part: "The ungenerous and wanton Insurrection against the sovereignty of Great Britain, into which this colony has been deluded by the artifices of desperate and designing men, for private purposes, might well justify in you every fear, which conscious guilt could form, respecting the intentions of the present armament.

"Your towns, your property, yourselves, lie still within the grasp of that power, whose forbearance you have ungenerously construed into fear; but whose lenity has persisted in its mild and noble efforts, even though branded with the most unworthy imputation. . . .

"Reflect upon what gratitude requires of you; if that is insufficient to move you, attend to your own interest: We offer you a refuge against the distress, which, you universally acknowledge broods with increasing and intolerable weight over all your country.

"Leaving you to consult with each other upon this invitation; We now do declare,—That whosoever shall be found, and remain in peace, at his usual place of residence, shall be shielded from any insult, either to his person, or his property; except such as bear Offices either Civil or Military, under your present usurped government: Of whom it will be further required, that they shall give proofs of their penitence and voluntary submission; and they shall then partake of the like immunity.

"Those whose folly and obstinacy may slight this favourable warning, must take notice; that they are not to expect a continuance of that lenity, which their inveteracy would now render blameable."—Royal Gaz., Jl 7, 1779.

Wm. Smith says: "I suspect this Address to be the Composition of Cap[t] André one of the General's Aids de Camps who has probably been sometime at Work to frame a Substitute for that I drew for him before he went up the River & which he told M[r] Tryon he did not like nor another that M[r] Elliot had sent him."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under Jl 3.

5 James Pattison, "Major-General of the British forces in America," is appointed "Commandant of the City and Garrison of New York," to succeed Lieut.-Gen. Jones who has returned to England. Gen. Pattison remained in this command until Aug. 13, 1780, when he relinquished it to Lieut.-Gen. Robertson.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), IX; N. Y. Merc., Jl 12, 1779.

6 Congress passes a resolution "That Margaret Corbin, who was wounded and disabled in the attack on Fort Washington [see N 16, 1776], whilst she heroically filled the post of her husband who was killed by her side serving a piece of artillery, do receive during her natural life, or the continuance of the said disability, the one half of the monthly pay drawn by a soldier in the service of these states; and that she now receive out of the public stores', one complete suit of clothes, or the value thereof in money."—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), XIV: 805.

In 1902, the Mary Washington Colonial Chapter, Daughters of the Am. Revolution, erected a tablet to the honour of Margaret Corbin in Holyrood Protestant Episcopal Church at Fort Washington Ave. and 179th St.—Kelley, Hist. Guide to the City of N. Y. (1913), 161.

" Robertson's Gazette, says Smith, "shows the acrimony of the Loyalists ag[t] the popular Chiefs" in a poem entitled "The Times." The opening lines are: July 6

"When faction brandishing her horrid sting
Infects the people, and insults the King;
When foul sedition skulks no more conceal'd,
But grasps the sword and rushes to the field;
When justice, truth, and law are in disgrace,
And treason, fraud, and murder fill their place:
Smarting beneath accumulated pain
Shall we be silent? Shall we not complain?
We will, we must; tho' mighty Laurens frown,
Or Hancock with his rabble hunt us down.
Should Atley summon to his savage bar,
To tremble at his nod be from us far.
Champions of virtue we'll alike disdain
The guards of Washington, the lies of Payne,
And greatly brave without one anxious throb,
The wrath of Congress, or its Lords, the Mob."

—Royal Am. Gaz., Jl 6, 1779; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under Jl 3.

7 "There is a Composition [see Je 13] in a Philad: Paper of 30 June [error for Je 23] which R[ivington] has copied in his [issue] of this Day that supposes G[reat] B[ritain] to have yielded to the Independency & that France has advised to Peace but that a Party in Congress opposes it insisting on the exclusive Fishery.

"Can this be," says Smith, "an indirect Way of giving Credit to a Lie to animate the People?—It is artful—There are Papers since calling the Author a Tory & defending those who will not agree to give up the Fishery. This strengthens the Delusion.

"Yet there is a Perhaps that the British Ministry have given Hints of their Readiness to yield the Independency to prevent France from sending Land Succours resolved at the same Time to improve this Summer in subduing the Colonies. They may have withheld the Reinforcements upon the same Principle to lull the Colonies asleep till it is too late to call upon France for Aid this Year."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" An order regulating the price and assize of bread, issued by order of the commandant from the office of police, requires that a loaf of bread shall weigh two pounds, shall be marked with the baker's initials, and shall be sold for 14 coppers; also that ship bread of the best quality shall be sold at £3:10 per hundred weight. Bread that is defective in quality or deficient in weight shall be forfeited to the almshouse.—Royal Gaz., Jl 10, 1779. Cf. Ja 22. New assizes were fixed on F 18, and Mr 15, 1780 (q. v.).

8 The British army marches from its Camp at Philipsburgh. One division goes to Mamaroneck, the other towards White Plains. —Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

9 Sir Henry Clinton, with a division of the British army (see Jl 8), reconnoitres "the Old Camp the Rebels had in 1776 on the White Plains," and then goes on to Byram River. Robertson says: "saw Gen[l] Tryons Fleet in the Sound, The Intention of our move I believe was to move Washington Accross the North River—& to set him in Motion."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

10 A writer signing himself "A Loyal American," addresses a very lengthy printed paper "To the Dis-United Inhabitants of the Dis-United States (so called) of America." It is a pro-British appeal, closing with: "'Fear God, Honor the King,'—and may you be approved before Heaven worthy of those blessings that Great-Britain is devoutly wishing you, 'as Freemen,' to Enjoy." One of these broadsides (4-page folio), taken from a bound volume of the Royal Gaz. for 1779, where it follows the number for July 10, is in the N. Y. P. L.

" Smith writes: "The present menaces at Connecticut take off from the Suspicion that the Publication by Tryon & Sir George Collier [see Jl 4] were too vaunting to compel to Submission. I thought such a trifling Force as I had at first heard of (1200) would raise Contempt & barely irritate."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "The rebels cherish one another," says a Boston writer, "with assurances, of eating their next Christmas dinner in New-York. (peradventure in the Provost:) Indeed Mr. Washington has declared he will very soon visit that capital with his army, as it is confessed, many Sons of liberty in New-York . . . hold a constant intercourse and correspondence with the Commander in Chief of the Rebel army, from who[m] he is supplied with accurate communications of all arrivals and departures, and of everything daily carrying on there, both in the military and civil branches. . . . It pro-

1779 July 10 vokes the well-affected to government, at a distance from New-York, to perceive such comfort and accomodations afforded, to the most ungrateful and insidious people upon earth."—Royal Gaz., Jl 10, 1779.

" Maj.-Gen. Pattison asks the chamber of commerce to consider ways and means "for the better Cleansing the City, and for raising a Fund for defraying the Expense thereof." This is to prevent the inhabitants "from throwing Filth & Rubbish from their Houses into the Streets, & to oblige them to convey it to certain places that may be assigned in each Ward for depositing it, & from thence to be taken away at stated times by scavengers to be employ'd for that purpose." The regulation is to apply to public buildings also. —N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 221. See Jl 27.

13 Smith writes: "14 Deserters came to Town from Washington's Army this morning—The greater part with their Arms. Last week 17 came in."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Col. Edmund Fanning, having returned from Connecticut (see Jl 4), reports that the "Stores at New Haven were burnt 5 Ins^{t} & the next Day the Whole Town of Fairfield & . . . Half of Norwalk." Commenting on this, Smith says: "Sir Henry Clinton dislikes these operations of Tryon's & told Gov^{r} Franklin he had ordered him back—The other barely said he was sorry for it—What did Sir Henry expect if not what has happened!—Is it not Folly to recall the Troops at this Ins^{t} when the Connecticut Farmers are in their Harvest? This is a proper Time to menace the Coast & by that means draw down numbers from their necessary Labour."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See Jl 16.

14 According to a "recent enumeration of the inhabitants of America," New York province contains 230,000 people.—London Chron., Jl 13–15, 1779.

16 Major Benson arrives at New York with "an Account of the Rebels having taken Stoney Point at 12 °Clock last night—they were commanded by Gen^{l} Wayne—Co^{l} Johnson & most of the Garrison taken Prisoners."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; and Kemble's Jour., 181. On July 24, Kemble recorded information regarding methods used by Gen. Wayne in capturing this post.—Ibid. Cf. Conn. Gaz. (New London), Ag 11, 1779; Johnston, Storming of Stony Point; Dawson, Gleanings from Am. Hist., Pt. XI.

" "Gov^{r} Tryon comes to Town from Huntington & goes to Head Quarters."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Later in the day, Tryon gave Smith this report of his interview: "Sir Henry Clinton disapproves of his Burning Fairfield & Norwalk [see Jl 13] & discovered clearly his Fears of the Minority who he said would make a great Clamour about it. Intimated that it was contrary to his opinion & orders. Tryon admitted the first but denied the last—Said the other also knew his opinion to be for burning & on one Ocasion when he ask'd for orders to burn Sir Henry had replied I know you will if I don't forbid it . . .

"The Gen^{l} insists upon a Report from Tryon & to support the burning as well as he can.—He will transmit it."—Ibid. For Tryon's report of his expedition, see Jl 31. For Robertson's comment, see Jl 23.

" Maj.-Gen. Pattison orders that the apartment in the city hall formerly known as the library be given up to the marshal of the court of vice admiralty.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 226–27.

18 The British troops march from Valentine's Hill to Dobbs Ferry where they embark. Robertson says: "The App^{ce} of the Shipping getting so near aided by a Demonstration made by all the Cavalry —& Infantry . . . determin'd the Rebels to Abandon any Attack on Verplank's Point & to set fire to whatever would burn on Stoney Pt."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

21 "This night S^{r} H^{y} received An Express from N. Y^{k} acquainting him of the Return of L^{d} Cornwallis, Co^{l} Pattison & Stuart in the Greyhound."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

22 Maj.-Gen. Pattison issues a proclamation to regulate boats and small craft passing to and from the city. When bringing in provisions, fuel, forage, fish, and other market supplies, they must have passes from the office of police. When without a pass, or when the boat is not that specified in the pass, it will be seized, and the persons found therein will be detained and reported to the police, and the case laid before the commandant. Passes are to be obtained from officers at outposts, from the commanding officer on Long Island, or from the colonel of militia in the county in which the person intending to bring in supplies resides. Small boats, "attempting to pass from the city after dark, and before gun fire in the morning (except such as are on his Majesty's service), will be seized by the guard boats and forfeited, and the persons found therein imprisoned;" likewise, boats coming to the city during those hours, excepting those in the king's service, and those which have passes to bring in supplies. Forfeitures incurred shall be divided, one half to go to the person or persons making the seizure, and the other half to John Smyth, treasurer of city funds, for the use of the poor. —Royal Gaz., Jl 24, 1779; De Voe, Market Book, 120–21. See also Dawson's report on the city's finances during the Revolution, in Proc., B'd of Ald., LXXXVI: 217. July 22

"Gen^{l} Tryon's Expedition [see Jl 4] seems to have been of very little good about 150 men K^{d} W^{d} & Missing, burnt Fairfield and Norwalk."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Jl 31. 23

Congress issues an address to Washington, in which the latter's "vigilance, wisdom and magnanimity" are praised, evidenced particularly in "the late glorious enterprize and successful attack on the enemy's fortress on the banks of Hudson's river" (see July 16). Gen. Wayne also comes in for his share of praise.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 6, 1779. Commenting on this address Smith writes, under date of Aug. 3: "Even this is a proof of Debility—It is to ma[g]nify that Event for elevating the Dispondent & depressing their Disaffected & a fresh Instance of the Address to decieve the Populace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 26

Tryon recommends to Clinton the establishment of an "Office of Enquiry" headed by two "Intendants." This office would be authorized "to examine all persons coming into the British lines, of every rank and class," and "to make enquiries at large." He recommends as "Intendants" William Smith, "Councellor of this Province," and Lewis De Rosette, "Councellor of North Carolina," whom he characterizes as "Gentlemen of the first abilities & every way qualified for so laborious a task."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 771. Tryon's recommendation does not appear to have been adopted. "

An order is issued from the "Office of Police," directing that "the brewhouse and ground adjacent, formerly occupied by Hendrick Rutgers," in the Out Ward, be used for the storing of all pitch, tar, turpentine, rosin, and shingles, except the quantity allowed to ship chandlers.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 27, 1779; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 681. A small part of it was being used "as a Kitchen for the Hessian Hospital."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 233. 27

A notice is issued from the "Office of Police," offering a contract for cleaning the streets of the city (see Jl 10) to anyone who will accept "an exclusive right to take all the manure and rubbish for their own use."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 2, 1779. "

Kemble records Sir George Collier's sailing "with a 64 and six frigates, supposed to Penobscot, where Brigadier Mc Lean had taken Post, and to which place it is reported the Rebels are sending a force to Attack."—Kemble's Jour., 181. See Ag 1. 28

Sir Henry Clinton and Lord Cornwallis go to Stony Point; "the Works there to Consist of only one large Redoubt, and in forwardness."—Kemble's Jour., 181. 29

An ordinance is passed by congress, establishing a board of treasury, and the proper officers for managing the finances of the United States.—See printed broadside, in N. Y. P. L. 30

The British army returns to Kingsbridge.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Ag 1. 31

Rivington prints an account of the "Proceedings of a Detachment of the Royal Army under the command of Major General Tryon" (see Jl 4). This detachment was divided into two divisions, one under Gen. Garth, the other under Tryon. They repulsed the Americans at New Haven, Fairfield, and Norwalk.—Royal Gaz., Jl 31, 1779. "

Commenting on this, Smith says: "Mr. Tryon can think of no other Objection Sir Henry can have to his Report, but his Dread of its discovering a zeal for the Interest of the Nation & the Conclusion of the War & that its crossing his private Politics, by shewing tho' he hasn't Troops for what he would wish to do he has enough upon Tryon's System to end the War. In Rivington's Paper of yesterd: is the greatest Part of his Report to the Gen^{l} but his Reasons for Desolating left out—It came from the Gen^{l} but Rivington had Orders not to shew the Extract to any Person."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI, under Ag 1.

Speaking of Tryon's expedition, Jones says: "It was not a method of conciliating the deluded. It occasioned rancor and inveteracy, and instead of conciliating, it widened the breach. Whether the General exceeded his orders, or not, or some other 1779 July 31 motives occasioned it, he was upon his return to New York received at head quarters with the utmost coolness." And he adds in a footnote: "William Smith's influence with Clinton, it was said, occasioned this coolness." He further characterizes Smith "as a spy for the rebels" (see Ja 13, 1776).—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during Rev. War, I: 315.

Aug. 1 "Sir George [Collier] with the Ships under his Command sailed from the Hook." This was the expedition to relieve Penobscot.—Journals of Hugh Gaine, II: 59, with footnote by Ford.

" Kemble records: "All quiet; the Troops mostly withdrawn within Kings Bridge."—Kemble's Jour., 182.

" The following report is sent by private letter from Orange Co., N. J., dated Aug. 2: "Lord Cornwallis, who is arrived at New-York, we hear supersedes Sir Henry Clinton.—'Twas Cornwallis, we are told, who first proposed and strongly recommended, depredation, burning, and the utmost horrors of war, as the plan of proceeding against America."—N. Y. Jour., Ag 9, 1779. A letter from Philadelphia, dated Aug. 11, stated: "By accounts from New York, it is said Lord Cornwallis took the command in chief on the first inst. and Clinton, Tryon, Vaughan and Gray, are to return home."—Ibid., Ag 30, 1779.

" "Mr Tryon visits us this morning," says Smith, "& asks us to dine with him and a number of officers, from which I excused myself. He thinks Andrè went down yesterday to put his Report on Board of the Packet, tho' the Gen[l] had told him last Friday that he should not send it home on account of the Justification in it of the burning Fairfield & Norwalk."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Peter Dubois, magistrate of the police, is "with us at Tea," writes Smith in his diary, and, when the conversation turns to "the ill regulated State of the Town as dangerous to Health," he (Dubois) "slants at Mr. Mathews the Mayor." Later, when it is hinted that St. John, who is still a prisoner, is "the Sport of the Vindictive Rage of the Refugees, he desired me to walk towards the Gate with him & then told me what follows.

"That a Paper was put into his Hands that came from the Country perporting—that S[t] John had acted the Part of a Loyal Subject and was at Length confined—that a General Stevens got him released & after that he was less frank—That when D'Estainge arrived he talk'd favorably of the Issue of the Rebellion & reconciled some loy[ts] who had been as averse from it as himself—That he was 6 Weeks in the Rebel camp with La Fayette—That he & other French officers were at his House. That he corresponded with Gerard—That he was promised a Place of Consequence at the End of the Troubles—That he was now here with the Consent of the Whiggs as a Resident.

"Dubois says he knows the Hand writing & it comes from a Person of Character & one who has access to the Rebel Chiefs but is a Loyalist—That it was given to him open 3 Months ago & he del[d] it to the General—That he observed to the General that S[t] John was naturalized & the Letter Consisted of Hearsay & not the Informers own Knowledge—That the General did not think fit to order S[t] John to be taken up for a Long Time. when he had got in to Trouble about his own Letter to his Wife.—That 2 Days before Nich. Ogden came to Town he was questioned concerning what he had done with this Letter thrice in one Day on a Letter from Nich: Ogden. That when Nich Ogden came to Town more was said of it and Gov[r] Franklin interposed and got S[t] John Committed—The first Hope was to find that the Information had been sunk (?) by Dubois, who told Nich Ogden that he had given it to the General & hinted the Propriety of not exposing himself to S[t] John's Resentment & the Danger of listening to loose Scandal.

"He followed this with Censures upon Nicholas & Isaac Ogden as revengeful & Mathews as a Man without Principle & devoted to avarice & one of the worst of Men—That he had lately sent in a List of suspected Persons naming all with whom he had differed to the present Comm[dr] General Pattison. That he spoke slightely even of M[r] Elliot as a Rebel & M[r] Elliot let him alone as supported by Gov[r] Tryon.

"This is a Lesson for the Erection of Civil Governm[t] and to me shews the Necessity of my accepting the Office of Ch: Justice for Protection & that I must at the same time incur the Wrath of the Refugees under Mathews's Influence to whom Civil Gov[t] must be the Loss of Power & Gain. [Inasmuch as no "Erection of Civil Government" came about during the British occupation, Smith, who was appointed on May 4 (q. v.), never actually functioned in this office.]

"This Information from Dubois confirms the Propriety of M[r] Colden's Conduct & mine in declining to be Bail for S[t] John till we could know what the Charge was—Dubois does not know that the Letter from the Country is founded upon Intelligence from M[r] Wickham but says a Person intimate with the Ogdens said so & he believes he got it from them. This may be Colden. I kept my Promise to Isaac Ogden & was silent only observing that Wickham & S[t] John were sworn Friends & Wickham Friends here were still Friends to S[t] John. I mentioned Judge Ludlow & That Tho[s] Duncan his Brother in Law had spoken of S[t] Johns Confinem[t] last Friday with Anxiety. Aug. 1

"I percieve also a Confirmation of my Suspicions that Elliot was desirous to bring in Colden & myself for Bail to gratify his Resentment ag[t] Mathews & the Ogdens who speak ill of him, but if M[r] Elliot knew the Evidence ag[t] S[t] John he ought not to have declined his advice when I asked it nor diswaded me from Objections before Gen[l] Pattison but to have approved rather my previous Enquiry into the Cause of the Commitment as well to avoid the Suspicions of Gov[r] Franklin & the Refugees as out of Deference to S[r] H Clinton.

"At such Times & thus surrounded the greatest Circumspection is necessary and one should keep but little Company & of the best Sort."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

The St. John referred to by Smith was Michel Guillaume St. Jean de Crèvecœur, author of Lettres d'un Cultivateur Americain. Though he was a naturalized New Yorker (see D 23, 1765), the appearance of a French fleet in the harbour caused him to be suspected as a spy, and he was imprisoned for three months.—Letters from an American Farmer (1904), Introduction. For his description of New York, see 1776.

"I found the Town very despondent last Night on Reports from the West Indies that La Mott Piquet had joined D Estaigne with 7 Ships & 15 Frigates & 90 Transports & taken St Vincents & the Grenades while Byron was convoying the Island Trade to Windward & that the two Fleets had ingaged off the Grenades & that we kept the Sea but lost 1000 Men. Yet there are Letters & public Papers by the Greyhound of Piquets sailing 1 May & return damaged by a Storm. I cant reconcile this with the Saturday news from S[t] Eustatia—the 18 & 22 Ships in distinct Divisions is too much for the French or English Fleets and if the 18 were English and endeavoring to escape why so far to the North & to the Leeward of our Windward Islands instead of directly before the Wind to Jamaica?—We have no West India Papers. Tis said Sir George Collier stop'd them there at the Hook on Sunday. Strange that he has loitered so. It was thought he was not out yesterday the Wind being at N. E—It is yet from that Quarter—He is spoken of in Terms of the utmost Freedom as a negligent Officer, devoted only to Gain."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 3

The commandant requests the chamber of commerce "to lay before him a Table of such Rates as you think ought to be allowed to Cartmen in this City," for "Those now established were fixt by the Gentlemen of the Old Insurance Office, at a time when Provision was higher, but Forage lower than at present."—Col. Rec. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 210. The suggestions of the chamber were embodied in the orders of Sept. 16 (q. v.). "

Having debated the question since Feb. 23 (q. v.), congress finally formulates the conditions of a possible peace with Great Britain. They include the acknowledgment by Great Britain of the independence of the United States, the acceptance by her of certain specified boundaries of the United States, and the evacuation of all American posts by British troops. Also, "the common right of fishing" is not to be relinquished by the states.—Jour. Cont. Cong., XIV: 920–22. See S 27. 4

"My appointm[t] to the Chief Justices Place [see My 14] is in every Mouth."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 5

Smith writes: "I fear a general War in Europe. If Spain interferes Russia & Prussia may also ingage—L[d] Cornwallis understood that these Powers had entered into Treaty with Great Britain & that a catagorical answer was demanded from Spain—a Report that Russia offered us 20 Ships & 20,000 Men for 3 Years for Minorca—Should this be true & Spain declare ag[t] us America will be partly neglected or may find Russians amongst them & at the End of the War be divided.—Our Calamities are then only commencing."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Spain had declared war on England, June 16 (q. v.), but the news did not reach New York until Sept. 1 (q. v.). 8

Smith writes: "The Measures of the Town Meetings in the 9

1779 Aug. 9 Regulation of Prices checks the Depreciation of money—but it ought to alarm the congress. Its natural tendency is to produce a general Scarcity. Julian the Emperor put it to Experiment and brought on a Famine at Antioch, & so would Philip the Handsome have done in France if he had not repealed his Ordnance. Nothing can satisfy the Want of Money but Silver and Gold. They have a real as well as arbitrary Value—Paper is an inadequate Substitute. But in avoidg one Risk Congress expose themselves to others.—They will not be chargeable with creating a Famine but will they not be blamed for not preventing it?—Besides they have every Thing to fear, divided as the Country is, from Discontents among their own Partizans—Every Murmurer becomes a Tory; and Misery lessening the Party, the Populace will regain their authority to the Subversion of the New Frames contrived for supporting the usurpation. Every thing in this Country predisposses to a Union but the foreign War retards the Operations for improving them."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "A Set of Gentlemen" propose playing a cricket match this day, and every Monday during the summer season, "on the Cricket ground near Brooklyn Ferry." The company "of any Gentleman to join the set in the exercise" is invited. "A large Booth is erected for the accommodation of spectators."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 9, 1779.

11 A private letter from New York states: "I have nothing to write but dismal news from this place.—Our port almost blocked up with privateers; Stony-Point fort on the North-River stormed by the Rebels, since retaken . . . If anything material is done this season, I believe it will be to the southward."—N. Y. Jour. (Poughkeepsie), S 20, 1779.

" News reaches Trenton that "the enemy [British] are very busy, throwing up works and fortifying on New-York Island, at or near Hoorn's Hook, within seven miles of the city, from river to river; that they have lately sent out of New-York, a number of whig families; impressed all the carmen and other persons to the number of about 700, and put them on board armed vessels; and that they have drawn a line of ships across the Narrows; in consequence, it is said, of their fearful apprehensions of the arrival of a French fleet in that harbour, which has thrown the city into much confusion and consternation."—Penn. Packet, Ag 21, 1779; N. J. Gaz., Ag 11, 1779.

" Speaking of Gen. Pattison, Smith says: "There is now set up by this very Commandant Music every Evening at the Church Walls [see Ag 19]—What a Medly assemble there!—A horrible Contrast!—Ladies in the Walk—The Mobb in the Street & Funerals crossing the Company to the Church Yard. The Parson there officiating at the Grave.

"It would appear as if he were turning the War merely into a Defence—All the Troops except the Garisons at the Highlands are called in to this Island . . . Isaac Low hints that there is a Talk of cutting a Passage across this Island from River to River & that Gates is at Byram with 4000 men. Tryon knows nothing of it. Much Apprehension of 12 Boats brought from Philadelphia to Raritan—Some look for an attempt to burn this Town. Others for an Attack at Staten Island—Some for a French Fleet. Lord Stirlings Division is Come down to Pompton out of the Clove."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

14 "How scandalous," says Smith, "is the Conduct of Administration & the Naval Officers under them—The Privateering Business languishes & the Owners are selling out at the Rate of 6 Vessels in a Week—Their Prizes are taken off of the Hook & sometimes the Privateers. The Rebels make this their Cruizing Ground & send several armed Vessels in Concert.—There is a Want of Naval Strength here.—When the Frigates are in these Seas they are too often & too long in the Port—We have taken no French Vessels for several Months past—It would seem as if the French Merchants were tired of this Commerce."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

17 "This morning the powder-magazine at Fort Knipphaussen was torn down and the wood-work used on Forsed Hill [Forest Hill, on which Fort Tryon stood—see L. M. R. K., III: 965]. Likewise the woodwork of Fort Independence and King's Bridge, which was transported in wagons."—Von Krafft's Jour., 90. See S 12.

19 In the early morning of this day, Major Lee and about 400 of the troops under orders from Gen. Stirling execute a surprise attack upon the garrison at Powles Hook, and capture about 160 prisoners; they send these to Philadelphia.—N. Y. Jour., Ag 23; N. J. Gaz., S 1, 1779. See also Winsor, VI: 559. Robertson gives the date as August 18.—Robertson's Jour. Campaigns 1779 & 1780 (MS.). See also Kemble's Jour., 182–83. Aug. 19

Smith says of the incident: ". . . We have lost 48 Men carried off 2 are killed 2 Wounded Colo Gordon is gone over with 200 Men. Tryon & Scott speak slightly of the Comr in Chief. Mr Tryon is not sure that he is not playing into the Hand of Opposition. He grows apprehensive of a mutinous Spirit in an inactive army—cannot find what Plan the Gen[l] acts upon. The Town disgusted & dispirited. Lord Cathcart is appointed Quarter Master General—It does not Please—He is Young & so Short Sighted as not to distinguish a Man from an Ox at 20 Yards.—Sir Henry is going down Hill in Point of Reputation.

"Dr Baily says the Firing began an Hour before Day.—No Troops went over till a Hour after Sunrise . . .

"2 Ships arrive from Quebec—all well there 16 July—Many Troops gone to the Western Forts.

"How shamefully the Ministers act in not dispatching the Fleet earlier! What Mischiefs from the Want of Naval Strength on the Coast—We hear constantly too that Nothing can be done on the Land Side till the Reinforcements arrive.—This is the Plea for every Blunder & for an infamous Inactivity. The Contraction of our Lines is laughed at even in the Army. It is pertinently ask'd why a Party could not have crossed from King's Bridge to execute what Buskirk is sent upon 20 Miles by Land, at the Risk of the Post of Poulus Hook? The Boys in the Army hint their Contempt of the General, & the common Soldiers murmur. They begin to despair of the Fulfilment of the Promises of Land, made in 1775 at Boston."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" The diary of the Moravian congregation states: ". . . Recently the walk by the ruins of Trinity Church and its graveyard has been railed in and painted green; benches placed there and many lamps fixed in the trees, for gentlemen and ladies to walk and sit there in the evening. A band plays [see Ag 11] while the commander is present, and a sentry is placed there, that none of the common people may intrude. . . ."—Penn. Mag., X: 427.

25 Admiral Arbuthnot and his fleet arrive from England this morning. Smith says: "They are said to be 76 Vessels—Only 2 Line of Battle Ships—No Frigates—They came out 206—some gone with the Defiance to Quebec—some to Newfoundland with another Ship of the Line—They are to rendezvous here."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; see also Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Kemble states that "the Troops in general [are] Unhealthy; between 4 and 5 thousand."—Kemble's Jour., 183.

" "Up to date we have had a surprisingly large number of sick, which increases daily."—Von Krafft's Jour., 92. A similar entry appears under Sept. 2.—Ibid.. See S 8.

" "At a Meeting of the Loyal Refugees of the Province of New-York, at the House of Mr. Amory in the Fields, . . . for the Purpose of electing a Committee, to unite with the Committees elected by the Loyal Refugees of the other Provinces, for the Purpose of Corresponding with their Friends in England, and transact such other Business, as they should conceive conducive to the interest of the whole," it is agreed that no one shall be elected or appointed a member of a committee of correspondence who at any time or in any way has taken active part with the "rebellious Americans."—Royal Gaz., Ag 19, 1780. See N 21, 1780.

27 An expedition is on foot, for which transports for 8,000 men have been ordered.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 62.

29 By will of this date, Jacob Blackwell leaves to his sons, James and Jacob, "my Island known by name of Blackwell's Island."—N. Y. H. S. Bull., Jl, 1921, citing Hatfield's Hist. of Elizabeth, N. J., 69; Riker's Newtown, L. I., 354; Abstracts of Wills, X: 5.

Sept. 1 "In Evening the Packet arrived with Accounts of a Spanish War, and the great exertions made in England in consequence of it."—Kemble's Jour., 183; Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See Je 16.

2 Gov. Tryon issues a proclamation of Spain's declaration of war against Great Britain (see Je 16). The proclamation reads in part: "Authorities are arrived for granting Letters of Marque, and until the same are obtained, I have it in Command to signify the Royal Assurance to the Owners of all Ships bearing Letters of Marque against the French King, and his Subjects, that his Majesty will consider them as having a just Claim to the King's Share of all Ships and Property which they may make Prize of."—N. Y. Merc., S 6, 1779. Under date of Sept. 8, Smith wrote: "Mr Tryon published last Monday in Gaine's Paper the Proclamation I drew for him last Friday."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI.

1779 Sept. 3 William Lewis begins publication of the New York Mercury, or, The General Advertiser, a weekly newspaper. This paper should be distinguished from The New-York Mercury which Hugh Gaine started on Aug. 3, 1752 (q.v.).—Early Newspapers, II: 425; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 459. See, further, F 15, 1782.

7 Washington informs the president of congress that "They [the British] have been for some time past fortifying across New York Island, and it is said are going to erect a strong work at Brookline on Long Island."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VIII: 40. On Sept. 13, he wrote the same to Count D'Estaing; also that they "have lately fortified Governor's Island, near the city," etc.—Ibid., 51.

" A list of the owners and tenants of houses on South Street, White Hall, and Exchange Slip is prepared.—See original list in box lettered "N. Y. MSS. 1761–1800," in N. Y. H. S.

8 That there is lack of harmony among the British officers, is revealed by Smith in his diary: "Sir Henry [Clinton] is thought little of in the Army There are Dissentions in his [official] Family. He has quarrelled with Lord Rawdon his Adjutant General & Major Drummond whom he sent Home to get a Reg^{t} of Horse & the Paym^{t} of £3000 sterling of an old Debt to his Father—Yet he reproaches Drummond with doing nothing for him. Neither of them go near him. Coll^{o} Stewart 'tis said is to succeed Lord Rawdon—He has made 2 new Aids de Camp [,] one his Cousin Lord Thomas Pelham Clinton the Duke of New Castle's 2^{d} Son the other a M^{r} S^{t} George an Ensign of £10,000 per annum. He has not a sensible experienced Officer about him. I have all this from Cap^{t} David Scott of the Artillery who speaks freely to me in censuring Sir Henry Clinton & I believe the Sentiments of Gen^{l} Pattison with whom he is intimate & from whom I stand aloof. Scott faults the Commander in Chief for Calling in the Troops all Summer to this Island—Thinks they might have saved dry Forage by laying on the other Side of the Hudson—that Tryon should have gone out stronger in July—& not have been recalled so soon—Scott is intimate with M^{r} Tryon."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Von Krafft records in his journal under this date: "On account of the large number of fever cases . . . we could not spare more than 20 men per regiment for work. There was a veritable epidemic here and the inhabitants and Rebels also were frequently visited by contagion."—Von Krafft's Jour., 93. See S 23.

10 "This day were brought in here two French ships, of 350 tons each, taken by three privateers belonging to this city. They are laden with wine, brandy, and provisions."—From N. Y. letter in London Chron., O 16–19, 1779.

" Supt.-Gen. Elliot publishes a notice that duties are to be paid to him on all prize goods that have been condemned at the port of New York since October, 1776. He requires all agents of ships of war, privateers, letters of marque, etc. to call at his office in Water St., and pay these duties, "agreeable to the Directions of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury." In the future, "before Condemnation of any dutiable Prize Goods," the agents shall "make a Return to the Superintendent's Office of all such dutiable Prize Goods, that the same may be regularly weighed and gauged." The agents' accounts, required by the judge of the admiralty to be delivered to the superintendent, must be sworn to before Mayor Mathews.—Royal Gaz., S 11, 1779. See also Mr 9, 1780.

11 Sir Geo. Collier returns to New York (see Jl 28) from Penobscot, and from him Kemble obtains and records the following account of the events in that section: He reached Penobscot on Aug. 14, "with one 64 and 4 Frigates, and the Rebels that very day burnt all their Armed Vessels, consisting of 17 Sail, except one 20 and one 18 Gun Ship; their Frigate Warren burnt with about 28 Sail of Transports; the Crews from the whole Landed, and made their way thro' the Woods in a sad plight to Boston. They landed on the 28th. July, about 1,400 Troops besides Marines, from which time to the 14th. August they had Besieged Brig. Gen. Mc Lean, who was entrenched on an Advantageous ground with about 800 Men; Several Skirmishes happened during the Siege, and the General, with his Troops, must have fallen in the end, if not relieved."—Kemble's Jour., 184–85.

12 Smith writes in his diary: "'Tis said Washington has but 4000 Effectives & the Army so scant as to have but a Weeks Provisions a Head—They have so exhausted this Province that the very Forage comes from Connecticut and all Bread is brought from Pensilvania —A Sorty of the British Army would much Embarass the Continental Troops—It would be worth the Experiment to push with a Fortnight's Provisions to New Windsor thro the Clove."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Sept. 12

" "Peter Dubois speaks of David Mathews the Mayor as a Profligate & Villain, making Money by various unjustifiable Means.

"That he has set up what he calls a Recording Office held by one Child, to take the Proof of lost Papers—That a Guinea is paid for the Mayoralty Seal to a Certificate which the People are taught to believe a legal Substitute & Child is paid besides.

"That he sends out Parties into the Country to plunder & he has a Share of it.

"That he recieves a Guinea for every Certificate of the Landing of Tea at this Port & insists upon this Branch of Business ag^{t} Sam^{l} Kemble the Naval Officer.

"That he has received stolen goods & said he sent them to the Poor House—Dubois has seen Spoons, Watches Cloths &c to a great amount in his Hands which he said he has so disposed of & yet when Gen^{l} Jones the late Commandant ordered the Vestry to account for this as well as other Funds they denied that any such Effects were ever sent to the Poor House.

"If these Charges are true this Man must dread the Restoration of the Peace of his Country & the Re Establishment of order."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Lieut. Von Krafft records that "[Fort] Independence was begun to be torn down."—Von Krafft's Jour., 94. See Ag 17.

13 A letter of this date from Gen. Knox to Col. John Lamb states: "We are all in high spirits on a Report that a French fleet supposed to be part of Count D'Estaing's is at the Hook. The report comes from deserters who came out last night. They say that the French ships chas'd the Reasonable into N. Y. last Friday."—From the Lamb Papers in N. Y. H. S.

16 The rates that cartmen may charge are fixed by order of the commandant. After Sept. 20, offenders shall "forfeit Forty Shillings for every such Offence, one Half to the Informer, the other half to the City Alms House."—N. Y. Merc., S 20, 1779. See also Dawson's report in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 217–18.

21 Sir Andrew Hammond arrives at Sandy Hook with "a Fleet of Victuallers & Transports w^{h} some recruits."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Gaine says: "There are it is supposed about 1500 Troops on board this Fleet."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 64. See also Kemble's Jour., 185. See S 22.

22 Gaine states: "The Fleet still coming up and the Expedition under the Command of Lord Cornwallis getting ready, and will sail in a few days."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 65.

23 Under date of Sept. 24 Smith records: "Lord Cornwallis fell down to the Hook last Night—conjectured that he has 3600 Men in 6 large Reg^{ts} & that they are destined to South Carolina. Dubitatur—."—Wm. Smith's Diary., VI. Robertson also says that the transports which are going on an expedition with Cornwallis fall down to the Hook."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" Paul Jones, on the "Bon Homme Richard," captures the "Serapis." The engagement is described in a letter from the captain of the "Serapis" to the British admiralty office.—Ann. Reg. (1779), 309–12. For an account from the American view point, see Penn. Packet (Phila.), D 16, 1779. For additional literature on this famous naval battle, see Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 313–14.

" "Sir Andrew Hammond and most of his fleet came in."—Kemble's Jour., 185.

" "I never knew," writes Smith, "any Disease so generally endemial as the intermittent Fever now prevailing [see S 8] both in Town & Country. We have had Eleven down at a Time in this Family—Ten at M^{r} Elliots—Not a House escapes—We have scarce well Hands to attend the Sick—But happily it is not a mortal Season."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See O 5.

24 "Gave M^{r} Tryon a Draft of a Letter from him to M^{r} Styles Presid^{t} of Yale College in Ans^{r} to his Request to restore Mr Clap's MSS supposed to be carried off from New Haven on the 6: of July last."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

25 Cornwallis's fleet (see S 22) is "stop'd from going to sea."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). On Sept. 27, the troops returned to Staten Island, except one regiment which was ordered "to stay at Sandy hook where the Batterys are to be repaired—as last Year 4.18 Pr^{s} & 2 How^{rs}"—Ibid. See also Kemble's Jour., 186.

26 Kemble records a report "that Monsr. D'Estaing, with 24 Sail of the Line, 14 Frigates, and some Transports, were seen off the Coast of St. Augustine and Georgia; some say to the Westward of Bermuda."—Kemble's Jour., 186.

1779 Sept. 26 This (Sept. 26) "being the Anniversary of their Majesty's Coronation," the day is observed here "with every possible Demonstration of Loyality and Joy." At noon, "a Royal Salute was fired from the Battery, and at One o'Clock from the Shipping in the Harbour. In the Evening there was a grand Exhibition of Fire-Works, after which a splendid Ball was opened by the Gentlemen of the Army in this Garrison."—N. Y. Merc., S 27, 1779.

27 John Jay is appointed by congress "to negotiate a treaty of alliance and of amity and commerce between the United States of America and his catholick majesty," and John Adams is chosen "for negotiating a treaty of peace and a treaty of commerce with Great Britain" (see Ag 4).—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), XV: 1113; Winsor, VII: 57.

" "Transports going into the East River, supposed, with some reason, to proceed to Rhode Island to take off that Garrison."—Kemble's Jour., 186.

" "A Cricket Match for 50 Guineas Between Brooklyn Club and Greenwich Club, [is] to be played this Day at the House of Loosely and Elms's. To begin at 10 o'Clock in the Morning."—N. Y. Merc., S 27, 1779.

28 The country-seat of Hon. John Watts, three miles from town, is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Merc., O 4, 1779.

29 "A Meeting this Evening at Hicks where a Requisition was made by the Commandant for 300 men to work at the Governor's Island tomorrow morning by 6 o'clock, which was immediately agreed to."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 66.

He adds, on the following day: "The Men required last Night were sent off this Morning at the time appointed and more than the number required. All the ships of War are gone to the Hook."—Ibid.

Oct. 1 A resolution is passed by the assembly requesting the governour to issue a proclamation, "Strictly forbidding all Persons whomsoever to plunder the inhabitants of Long-Island, or any other Place in the Power or Possession of the Enemy, within this State . . ."—Assemb. Jour. (London ed.), 47.

" Kemble records that "A number of Transports went to the Hook, to be sunk in the Passage to that Harbour, if the French Fleet made their appearance and attempted to come in."—Kemble's Jour., 186. See O 10.

" Orders are issued by the commandant of the city for all the male inhabitants of a proper age to assist in throwing up works on Governors Island. The number of inhabitants it was imagined amounted to 4000, half of whom were to go on fatigue one day, and the other half on the ensuing day, Sundays not excepted.—N. J. Gazette, O 20, 1779. See O 5.

4 Washington writes to Count D'Estaing regarding a plan to take New York.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VIII: 76–83, 85–87.

" "In a Jersey Paper of 22^{d} Sep^{t} I saw an Address from the Congress to the People at large of 13 Sep^{t} stating their Paper Issues &c and animating them to a Prosecution of the War. It is a Proof of great Obstinacy & yet discovers Fear and a Dread of their Discords."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

5 "This Country may be said to indure a Pestilence—It can't be called a very Mortal Season but I never knew so prevalent a Sickness [see S 23]—Agues and Intermittents are the common Affliction—In some Instances the Fever is malignant carrying the Patient off in a few Days.—The aged drop off under the Ague—Some lay long under nervous or remitting Fevers & die when they are putrid.—While I am writing three of my Children are down and my Brother's Son Abraham.—Ivy the Coachman has had the Ague but is recovered—We are a Hospital at this House—Mr. Stuyvesants Family is generally indisposed—We have had eleven or 12 sick at a Time—Scarce Hands enough well to attend the Disseased.—This is not the Case only within the British Lines but all along the Sea Coast of New England and in Jersey & Pensilvania. Would to God that the common Affliction Might incline both Parties to Peace & quicken the Period of our Deliverence from the Calamities of a destructive War!

"The Season of Winter advances & the Town is destitute of Fuel Several causes—(1) The disseased State of the People in the Country—(2) The Risk of Capture in the Sound—Several Wood Boats lately taken the armed Vessels drawn to the Hook. (3) The General totally negligent of this Matter—Had he posted 2000 Men on Bergen Neck after his retiring in July from West Chester the Citizens & army might have been supplied in 10 or 14 Days for the Year—But what is worse Managem^{t} the Horse have been ever since upon dry Forage and how they are to be supplied thro' the Winter seems to be no Part of his concern, but it fills the Loyalists with concern—They in general grow despondent.—Of the Military Govrnment all are impatient & regret the Delay of General Robertson Nothing can be more injurious to the King's Interest than the negligent and untender conduct of the Army—In the Despair arising from unfavorable Prospects as to the Issue of the Struggle every Disgust works Disaffection—General James Pattison of the Artillery has been for some Time Command^{t}—He is warm vain & weak—Last Saturday Evening a drunken Soldier of the Guards forced himself into a Cart driven by a Negroe in the Bowery Lane. D^{r} Baily who saw him thrown off & thinks the wheel ran over his Breast, stop'd his Chais & led him to a House & sent certain passing Soldiers to notify his Condition at the Hospital—The Prevost Marshal called the next Day & took Baily to the Jail, where he remained till 10 at Night—He was not carried to the Commandant—This Man is inraged & told me to Day he would demand Satisfaction or Leave to go Home or Leave to quit the British Lines, averse to continuing any longer under Military Governm^{t}—In short a Day scarcely happens that Multitudes are not offended. I foresaw this and spoke and wrote freely on the Subject to Lord Carlisle & M^{r} Eden. Tryon will do nothing. Sir H Clinton has frowned too much upon his Office as Gov^{r}—None dare interpose. Can any Thing shew more strongly the Necessity of the Council I recommended—and as Lord Geo: Germaine according to M^{r} Patterson's Letters was in the Opinion of erecting the Civil Authority last Winter he must deserve much Censure for not sending out the New Governor earlier. Can it be that he dreads to offend Sir H Clinton & lose his Services—That very Timidity shews him incompetent for his Station. To the same dastardly Spirit I impute his leaving this General to act at Discretion & his flattering applause of the March thro' Jersey last Year."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Oct. 5

Maj.-Gen. Pattison orders that some of the convalescents from the general hospital "be lodged for a time in the Barracks near the Provost Goal."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 277. 8

New York State passes a law suspending all licenses granted to "Counsellors, Solicitors or Attornies at Law" before April 21, 1777, and providing for the issuance of new licenses to any qualified person who "has conducted himself as a good and zealous Friend to the American Cause, since the Commencement of Hostilities by the King of Great-Britain." This law was passed because many heretofore licensed lawyers had "gone over to, and put themselves under the Protection of the Armies of the said King, and others have conducted themselves in such a neutral or equivocal Manner, as has justly rendered them suspected of disaffection to the Freedom and Independency of this State."—Laws of N. Y., 3d sess., chap. 12. 9

"Head Quarters removed to New York [meaning, Clinton's return]. Lord Cornwallis's Corps ordered to be in readiness to Embark, suppose for Stony point."—Kemble's Jour., 186. "

Gen. Pattison writes to Lord Townshend of a threatened attack upon New York by D'Estaing's fleet (see O 4). He says: "We have been indefatigable in making every Point of Defence as Strong as Time will permit, in raising a Battery at the Light House, lining the Heights of Staten Island & Long Island at the Narrows with Cannon, repairing all the Batteries at New York & planting the heavy Guns lately arriv'd, upon them, as likewise repairing the ruined Fortifications & Batterys, erected by the Rebels on Governor's Island. But the Difficulty was to find Hands to perform this last Work, owing to the very Sickly State of the Army and the great number of Troops already employed in carrying on extensive works of Defence, in the different parts of this Island—and on the opposite side at Brooklyn. I therefore called a Meeting of the principal Inhabitants of the City, and stated to them the Expediency of the Citizens taking up the Spade & Pick-axe, to defend & secure their own Property, against a Foreign Enemy. They most readily & obligingly met my Wishes, and the next Morning five hundred Citizens were at Work throwing up Earth, &^{c} &^{c} on Governor's Island—they still continue their Labour with great good Will and Cheerfulness, and are now formed there into a regular Encampment—A great many of the most Capital Merchants & Shopkeepers pique themselves upon working with the rest, & will receive no Pay or Reward.—The lower Class are paid at the Expence of the City at the Rate of Ten Shillings Currency per Day, and their Rations of Provisions from Government."—N. Y. H. S. Collections "

1779 (1875), 127. See also letter from West Point in Penn. Packet, O
O 9 16, 1779 and N. J. Gaz., Ap 12, 1780.

10 Kemble records "the sinking of about nine or ten Transports at the Hook."—Kemble's Jour., 187. See O 1.

11 Kemble records: "Sir Henry Clinton went up the North river, leaving the 7th., 23d., 33d., and Volunteers of Ireland Embarked, to proceed to Stony Point, under Lord Cornwallis, should they be wanted."—Kemble's Jour., 187.

13 The assembly passes "An Act to prevent Horse-Racing and Theatrical Entertainments."—Assemb. Jour. (London ed.), 62. On Oct. 19, the senate also passed the bill.—Ibid., 73–74.

" "A Privateer Sloop brought in a Spanish Pacquet [from Havana], giving intelligence of the intended motions of Count D'Estaign's Fleet &ca & ca."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Kemble's Jour., 187.

" David Sproat, a Loyalist of Philadelphia, having joined the British troops at New York, is appointed commissary-general of naval prisoners. He continued in this capacity until the end of the war. See Ja 11. "Upon his appointment he at once set to work to release the naval prisoners then at New York and by the following year had exchanged 3000 and had a balance of 800 due."—David Sproat and Naval Prisoners in the War of the Rev., by James Lenox Banks (1909), 4–5, 42. For a statement of Sproat's further activities, contained in a memorial of his, dated March 23, 1784, after he was attainted of high treason by the Americans and his estate confiscated, see ibid., 116–18, 120–27.

15 The legislature of the "State of New York" passes "An Act more effectually to prevent Robberies within this State." This requires people who have been robbed to make an oath before a justice of the peace concerning the circumstances of the robbery. The justice must then "cause Hue and Cry," and all able-bodied men in the district must answer and help in the pursuit of the robbers. If the property is not recovered by these means, the justice is to call a meeting of the other justices in the district, the supervisor, assessors, and collector, and assess the amount of the robbery on the "Persons in the said Town, Manor, Precinct or District, who have not manifested themselves attached to the Liberty and Independence of America."—Laws of N. Y., 3rd sess., chap. 19 (printed by Holt, 1782).

16 The trend of British affairs is significantly told by Kemble in the following record: "Received Accounts by a Privateer of an English two decker being taken on the 25th. September off Tybee, by twelve Sail of the Line, French; the English Ship had been dismasted; supposed to be Sir James Wallace, from every Circumstance.

"Sir James carried upwards of £30,000 for the use of the Troops in Georgia. A Rebel Paper, also received this day, says that the French fleet had taken two Line of Battle Ships, several Frigates, &c., to the Southward, and twenty-five hundred Men, supposed to be the Troops at Beaufort, under the Command of Lieut. Col. Maitland.

"How must our Commander in Chief feel with all these blows, added to his own Conduct, despised and detested by the Army, his unheard of Promotion to the first Departments of Boys not three Years in the Service, his neglect of old Officers, and his wavering, strange, mad Behavior.

"If Government does not remove him soon; our Affairs in this Country will be totally undone."—Kemble's Jour., 188.

18 "All the Rebel Papers," says Smith, "shew that the French Fleet is expected If not fine Stratagems are concerted to lead us to believe it—Gaine's Paper intimates the Collecting of 30,000 Barrels of Flour for it.—The Philad: Paper has a Preamble to an act purporting that much Bread will be wanted—Reported that Washington has called Sullivans Troops & Ld Stirlings to him & a Part of Artillery from Connecticut for some great Enterprize."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Buildings in New York are appropriated for the use of the British forces, for which purpose a printed circular demanding possession is used.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 280, 283, 287–88.

" The diary of the Moravian congregation states: "Of late we are under some apprehension that our chapel might be taken for a hospital. The old Dutch Church, the only one in use for the Dutch, has been desired, and at the end of this week will be taken for that purpose."—Penn. Mag., X: 428. See O 29.

19 "The troops are all in high spirits at New York, wishing for nothing so much as a second visit from d'Estaign this winter, which they were very well prepared to receive."—London Chron., O 16–19, 1779. Oct. 19

20 "Great Offence is given by Gen[l] Pattison to the Physicians and Surgeons for not providing Barracks for the Sick who are numerous & in Tents near Greenwich—Yesterday he determined to put them into the new Dutch Church, that has neither Floor nor a Close Window.—To Day he devoted the old Dutch Church to this use to the Disgust of the low Dutch People who have hitherto worshipp'd in it. The Hospital desire the New Brick Meeting formerly taken from them by Gen[l] Daniel Jones but Pattison will not find other Stores for the Artillery Articles there deposited by Commissary Grant.—The Commandant becomes odious—Tis said his Emoluments amount to £30 sterling a Day, and that he shews intolerable Partialities to oblige & gratify the Officers of the Train at whose Head he is. . . . They [the populace] sigh for General Robertson's Arrival."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

21 The British evacuate Stony Point. "The Rebels came upon it instantly after it was left & fired at the Ships from the Western Shore down to Tappan Bay."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under date of O 25. See O 26.

22 New York State passes "An Act for the Forfeiture and Sale of the Estates of Persons who have adhered to the Enemies of this State, and for declaring the Sovereignty of the People of this State, in Respect to all Property within the same." This act of attainder declares that the estates, both real and personal, of 59 specifically named loyalists, including many well-known residents of New York City, are forfeited to the state, and that they themselves are forever banished from the state. It also makes provision for the indictment and trial of all persons found within the state after the passage of the act, who are suspected of loyalist tendencies, their death (as in all cases of felony), and the confiscation of their property, on conviction. It vests all crown lands in the people of the state, and authorizes the appointment of commissioners, for the sale of all confiscated estates, their powers and proceedings being defined.—Laws of N. Y., 3rd sess., chap. 25 (printed by Holt, 1782); 1 Greenleaf, 31; Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 195, 240; Gerard, Treatise (1872), 3. See Mr 10, 1780. For the judgment-roll in these cases, see 1783. For the full text of the Act of Attainder, or Confiscation Act, see Jones's Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, II: 510–23; and its history, in ibid., II: 524–40. For a detailed account of the Bowery estate of James De Lancey, its forfeiture, and the official abstract of its sale by lots, in 1784–7, with purchasers' names, prices, etc., see ibid., II: 540–59. See also List of loyalists against whom judgments were given under the confiscation act, 1783, in Emmet Coll., N. Y. P. L., bound at back of "N. Y., Colony & State. Naturalization statistics;" also Transcripts of the Manuscript Books and Papers of the Commission of Enquiry into the Losses and Services of the American Loyalists . . ., preserved amongst the Audit Office Records in the Public Record Office of England, 1783–90, in N. Y. P. L.

" Kemble records: "Heard the Garrison of Stony Point were Embarked."—Kemble's Jour., 188. On Oct. 23, he continued: "That they were come down to Spiking Devil Creek, and that the Troops were Embarking heavy Artillery at Rhode Island."—Ibid.

23 The legislature passes an act "to provide for the temporary Government of the Southern Parts of this State, whenever the Enemy shall abandon or be dispossessed of the same, and until the Legislature can be convened." It applies to the counties of New York, Suffolk, Queen's, King's, and Richmond. It provides that the person administering the government of the state, the president of the senate, chancellor, judges of the supreme court, senators, assemblymen, secretary of state, attorney-general, and county judges, or any seven of them, of whom the person administering the government shall always be one, "shall be a Council," with power to make ordinances for certain purposes. These purposes are: preserving peace and good order; preventing a monopoly of any of the necessaries of life, or of any goods, wares or merchandise within the Southern District, and prohibiting their exportation out of the district; billeting troops; seizing and impressing fuel, forage, vessels, horses, teams, carriages, and drivers; supplying the markets within this district with provisions, and regulating their prices; holding and regulating elections for senate and assembly, and city and town offices (particularly "to prevent Persons charged with, or suspected of Disaffection to the Freedom and Independence of this State, from electing, or being elected at such Elections"); and to confine anyone charged with treason or other offence. The 1779 Oct. 23 powers of this council shall cease "on the sixtieth Day after the first Day on which they shall meet, or on the first Day after a Quorum of both Houses of the Legislature shall be convened, after the Enemy shall abandon, or be dispossessed of the Southern District of this State, whichsoever shall first happen."—Laws of N. Y. (1779), chap. 28.

The act was printed in No. 1 of Holt's Ind. N. Y. Gaz., on Nov. 22, 1783, with a supplementary act of March 27, 1783 (q.v.); and in subsequent issues Holt published the later supplementary acts of Nov. 28, 1783 (q.v.), Dec. 13, 1783 (date of publication, q.v.), Dec. 15 and 16, 1783 (q.v.).

" "The Mail of last Saturday" (O 23), recorded Smith on Oct. 25, "threw the Town into Consternation by alarming Letters of a menaced Invasion & certain Intelligence of the Superiority of the Combined Fleet in the Channel. It increases the Rage ag[t] the General for the Inactivity here.

"A Vessel from Rhode Island with an Account that the Troops will be here to Morrow, & that the Countermand was not got there before the Evacuation. Arbuthnot with the Troops for Hallifax still at the Hook—No Confirmation yet of the Landing French Troops in Georgia or of the Loss of the experiment with Sir James Wallace—Conjectured that the French Fleet has met with a Storm and that he pass'd disabled Vessels. A Vessel from S[t] Kitts in 21 Days says it was known or reported there that D Estainge was on the Georgia Coast & that Parker's Fleet had left Barbadoes In Pursuit of the French."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Kemble records: "This day my Resignation [of O 15] was accepted by the Commander in Chief, and Captain André, 54th., declared in orders as my Successor."—Kemble's Jour., 188. See also Order Book, British Army (MS.) in N. Y. H. S.

25 "The following is pretty accurate list of the land and naval force, at New-York, viz. 9000 troops on Long Island; 4000 on York Island; 1500 on Staten Island, and about 1000 in the different forts at Powles-Hook, Verplancks and Stony Points, etc."—N. Y. Jour., O 25, 1779.

26 Orders to evacuate Rhode Island (see O 23) are countermanded by Clinton. Smith writes that these orders came "after all were aboard, the Works dismantled the Gardens cut up & (miserabile dictu) much Forage burnt for want of Vessels to bring it of[f] tho our Harbour is Crowded with unimployed Ships.—We shall now by crowding these Islands increase the Miseries & Disgusts of the Farmers.—Another ill Effect of the Neglect of the Scheme of Policy I have so repeatedly urged in my Letters to L[d] Carlisle & M[r] Eden."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Robert Biddulph, in a letter from New York concerning the progress of the war, says: "We have evacuated Stony Point & Rhode Island. I imagine the Object is to keep Halifax & this Place, which by the Dilligence and Perseverance of the Scottish Merchants is become very valuable. New York in itself seems as little worth consideration as any Place of an equal Number of Houses can possibly be. Entirely unfit for Ships of Force, on Acct of the Bar, which can only be pass[d] at certain Times of Tide—the Ice in the Winter either Cuts them to Pieces or makes them entirely useless. . . ."—Mag. of Hist. (1915), XX: 122–23.

27 "The Garrison of Rhode Island came to N. York that Island being evacuated."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Kemble records its arrival under Oct. 29.—Kemble's Jour., 188.

" As shooting with fowling-pieces near the high roads has caused fatal accidents, the commandant publishes a notice that he "judges it necessary for the public safety, to prohibit all such Fowling near the environs of the city, or within half a mile of any high road or public frequented foot path . . ."—Royal Gaz., O 27, 1779. It was necessary to repeat the order in the following year (Royal Gaz., O 28, 1780), and again on Oct. 25, 1782 (ibid., O 26, 1782).

29 "This Morning, about 2 o'Clock, Lieut. Col. Simcoe, with about 100 Cavalry, landed at Amboy, and proceeded to Boundbrook, where they destroyed 18 flat Boats and some Stores; they then continued their route to Somerset Court House, released the Loyalists confined, set fire to it, and destroyed a large quantity of Forage and Stores collected for Mr. Washington's Army. On their return South Side of Raritan, within two Miles of Brunswick, they were fired upon by a large body of Rebels in Ambush, whom they Charged and dispersed, but Colonel Simcoe, having his Horse Shot or falling under him, he was taken Prisoner; one Man was Killed and four taken."—Kemble's Jour., 189.

" Gen. Pattison orders the magistrates of police to suppress for a time the distilleries in New York.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 287, 307. Oct. 29

" The Vestry of Trinity Church resolves to present the following communication to the congregation of the Dutch Church: "It being represented to this Corporation by one of its members, that the Old Dutch Church in this City is at Present used as an Hospital for His Majesty's Troops. The Board Impressed with a Gratefull Remembrance of the former kindness of the members of that Antient Church in permitting the use of their Church to the Members of the Church of England when they had no proper Edifice of their own for that purpose Offer to the Members of the Antient Dutch Church the use of S[t] George's Chapple for Celebrating their Worship on Sundays and such other Times as they shall Chuse to perform Divine Service.—They hope from nine to Eleven o'Clock in the Morning and from one to three o'Clock in the Afternoon will be Convenient to the Members of the Dutch Church. If these hours should be very Inconvenient to them The Vestry will Endeavour to meet their Wishes as farr as They can consistent, with the Duty they owe to their own Congregation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Rev. Mr. Inglis wrote to the secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, on Nov. 26, 1779, explaining the relations between the Dutch and Episcopal churches. "The loyal Dutch," he says, "con tinued in the City after it was reduced by the King's Troops; & a loyal Minister officiated for them."—Extract from the Society's documents, London, made by Rev. F. C. Hawks, filed with Hawks MSS. in Church Mission House, N. Y. City. St. George's Chapel was relinquished by the Dutch congregation in April, 1780 (q.v.).

Nov. (or Dec.) Baroness Riedesel, wife of Gen. Riedesel, while staying at the house of Gov. Tryon (the site later of the Bank of New York) writes: "I gave our cook ten guineas to purchase all kinds of provisions. But when he very soon came back and asked for more money, I learned to my surprise that the money I had given him would scarcely last for two days—so dear was every thing, even the commonest thing. For example, one pound of meat, reckoning according to our money, cost twelve groschen [a groschen being a fraction over three cents]; one pound of butter, eighteen groschen; one turkey, four rix-thalers; a fowl, twenty groschen; an egg, four groschen; a quart of milk, six groschen; a bushel of potatoes, two rix-thalers; a half bushel of turnips, two florins; ten oysters, eight groschen, and six onions, one rix-thaler. . . .

"The country residence of General Clinton [the Beekman mansion] where we went, was an hour's ride from the city. The grounds were beautiful, as was also the house; but the latter was arranged more for a summer residence, and, as we had come there in the month of December, we suffered much from the cold. . . . During the night, however, we had such a terrible storm that we believed the whole house would be overturned. As it was, an entire balustrade actually fell down with a dreadful crash; and, on getting up the next morning, we saw that on account of snow having fallen during the night four or five feet on the level, and eight feet in drifts, it would be utterly impossible to venture forth without sledges."

Baroness Riedesel continues with an interesting account of her new dwelling in town being fitted up throughout with mahogany furniture, the cost of which is to be defrayed by Gov. Tryon; and of her acting as queen of the ball on the celebration of the birthday of the Queen of England. See Ja 18, 1780.

She describes the suffering caused by the cold and the scarcity of firewood, which cost £10 a cord. "I have myself paid one piaster (which is a crown with us) for a single stick. The poor were obliged to burn fat, in order to warm themselves and cook their meals." One Major Brown, to relieve the needs of Madam Riedesel, gave an order "to cut down some of the trees in the great avenue in front of the city; and when this proceeding was objected to on the ground that it would make considerable damage, he replied, that it was much better to spare a few trees than to have a family, who had served the king with so much zeal, suffer from want." They also "broke to pieces an old and worthless ship" in order to furnish fuel.—Baroness Riedesel's Letters and Journals (trans. by Stone, 1867), 169–76.

Nov. 1 "The Ad[t] sounded the Harbour w[t] Commodore Drake."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

3 A notice is published that Abraham C. Cuyler is authorized by the commander-in-chief "to embody a battalion of 600 Loyal Refugee Volunteers." Those "inclined to take arms" are requested "to meet at La Montaigne's now Amory's House" on Nov. 5, and "at 1779 Beat's Tavern, Jamaica," on Nov. 6.—Royal Gaz., N 3, 1779.

Nov. Montagne's tavern was on the west side of Broadway between 3 Warren and Murray Sts.—See Ap 5, 1754.

It was doubtless this battalion which on Nov. 3, was ordered "to be Cantooned at a place called Bowery Lane in the Vicinity of this City," while the "Barracks intended for them are fitting up." The barrack office was in Maiden Lane.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 291.

" Gen. Pattison orders that the "Provincial Stores" be "removed from Lispenards Brewery," and that workmen fit it up "as Barracks for the Troops."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 290.

6 Judge Thomas Jones is captured by a party of Whigs (under command of Capt. Daniel Hawley, of Newfield, now Bridgeport, Conn.), at his country-seat on Long Island, and taken to Connecticut. He was exchanged in May, 1780, for Gen. Silliman and his son.—Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., I: 590.

8 Gen. Pattison informs Rev. Mr. Housial that "there is no intention at present of dispossessing" him "of the Seceders Meeting House" (the Scotch Presbyterian Church—see L. M. R. K., III: 932), and that "nothing but the most urgent necessity can ever prevail on him to appropriate any Place of Public Worship."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 293.

" The public is warned against "Gamblers," in an announcement which reads: "The Market People and others, are cautioned against being enticed into Public Houses, or other Places by Strangers pretending Business with them, as there is a most infamous set of Gamblers in this City, who have lately defrauded sundry Persons from the Country, of large Sums of Money, after inviting them into Taverns, under pretence of wanting to buy Country Produce."—N. Y. Merc., N 8, 1779.

11 "I find every Day a prevailing Opinion in the Army of the Strength and Obstinacy of the Rebellion & the Impractibility of reducing it. They judge from the Opposition they meet with & are totally inattentive to the Debility of the Independents, the Number of the Loyalists, & the Discords of the Continent. General Pattison heard me with surprise & what is worse with Pain. General Stirling wondered at my contempt of the Rebel Army as but 8000 & would consider the whole Militia as Soldiers. I asserted[,] but it was not grateful to them[,] that the Rebels were a minority who governed by the army & that this reduced the Loyalists would overturn the usurpation. . . . Can it be wondered that the Army in general hate Tryon who is of my Sentiments while they with a Defect of public Spirit are sighing with Impatience for a Return to Europe & the Reinjoyment of the Pleasures of London &c?"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

15 The following advertisement appears under the heading "Theatre Royal:" "Such Ladies as are duly qualified, and inclined to perform on the stage during the course of the ensuing winter, will please to send in their proposals, sealed and directed to the Managers, to be left at Mr. Rivington's."—N. Y. Merc., 15, 1779.

16 To keep the wharves as clear of vessels as possible during the winter, for the safety of the city and the preservation of the shipping, Maj.-Gen. Pattison issues a proclamation ordering that, after Dec. 15, no vessel shall be allowed to lie at or near any wharf without permit from the superintendent of the port. Private ships of war and trading vessels may have permits for not over 10 days for repairing, fitting out, loading, and unloading. Captured vessels are to have permits, good for not over 15 days from the date of their condemnation, to dispose of their cargoes. Merchants, owners, and masters of such vessels as are not employed, and are not in the service of the government, but intend to winter at New York, are ordered to remove their vessels to Newtown Creek by Dec. 15.—Royal Gaz., N 27, 1779. A similar order was issued in Nov. or Dec., in 1780, 1781, and 1782.

17 "Rivington's Paper of this Day contains an Address from the Citizens to Gen[l] Pattison of which I had not any previous Information—It offers Military Service to enable Sir Henry Clinton to extend his operations. This is a Prompter which I fancy the Com[r] in Chief cannot be pleased with, but the Complaisance to the Commandant I like less. I know not what intitles him to the least Applause. There must be great Servility in the Town if it is true as reported that on Parson Inglis's Objection to S[t] George's Chappel for a Hospital & urging his appropriating the Play House for that use, he declared his Refusal to part with it & ordered the Scotch Seceding Church for a Hessian Hospital.—Tis certain the Pews were taken out of it yesterday to the Disgust of the Lutherans & Presbyterians who worship in it as the Low Dutch & English Episcopalians have done in S[t] George's Chappel ever since the old Dutch Church has been a Hospital by the Commandants Direction a few Weeks ago.—Neither of their measures yield to Prejudices friendly to the Royal Interest."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Nov. 17

"The Rosebud privateer arrived [at New York] from S[t] Augustin w[t] an Acct. of the French & Rebels being beat at Savannah in Georgia w[h] they attempted to take by Storm the 9[th] Oct[r]."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). This news is to the effect "that D'Estainge at the Head of 10 or 12000 French & Americans had been repulsed in an assault upon Savannah 9 Oct[r] with the Loss of 3000 men & not more on our Side than 40 odd. That D Estainge recieved a Shot in the arm & Polaski in the Groin. That the French & Americans were at Strife for an indiscriminate Plunder by the former in the Retreat. That they had retreated the French to their Ships & the Americans to Charles Town that 8 Ships were gone to Europe 12 to the West Indies & 2 of the Line with some Frigates were gone to the Chesapeak for Supplies—That the whole Fleet had been crippled in the great Storm of the 11[th] Sep[r] but we had lost the Experiment the Ariel & Fowey. 18

"How shameful that we should be uninformed before this late Day respecting the Situation in the South Country! and that we have been so inactive here, while the Enemy were busy there. Had Lord Cornwallis sailed as was said to be intended to Jamaica had not the news of the French Fleet prevented (vid 27 Sep[r]) we should have commited a horrible Blunder—What advantages might now be expected from Reinforcem[ts] to Georgia?"—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. See also Kemble's Jour., 189. This British victory was celebrated on the 19th (q. v.).

"This evening, after sundown, there was loud firing to express the joy felt at some great advantages which the English were reported to have gained over French and Rebels in South Carolina."—Von Krafft's Jour., 98. Capt. Robertson says: "A Feu de joie was fired by all our Army at N. York for the Success over the French" (see N 18).—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 19

British garrison orders of this date at New York state that the commandant had received "many and frequent complaints of the inhabitants being ill treated by officers and servants quarter'd upon their houses;" that "good discipline and the duty he owes to the citizens under his protection cannot permit him to suffer any act of oppression or irregularity to be practis'd in this garrison, . . . and that all officers will pay due observance to the barrack regulations lately established for the more just allotment of quarters" (see O 18). 23

"Some Officers having likewise taken upon themselves to commit citizens to the Main-Guard, contrary to an order given by Lieut. Gen. Jones, late Commandant; Major General Pattison now finds it necessary to confirm the said order and to direct, that no citizen shall be put into confinement, except by authority from a General Officer, or an Order sign'd by a Magistrate of Police, unless in case of some violent breach of the peace." Redress is promised to officers who receive ill-treatment from citizens.—Royal Gaz., N 27, 1779.

" J. Mervin Nooth writes from New York to Viscountess Grimston: "Since our arrival nothing has happened sufficiently important to deserve your attention; and, (entre nous,) we expect nothing under our present commander [Clinton]. Nothing, surely, can be more shameful than our perfect inactivity during the whole summer and autumn . . . For God's sake let us have a man of resolution or abilities."—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, Part III, 397 (footnote), citing the original letter preserved among the manuscripts of the Earl of Verulam at Gorhambury.

Rivington's paper, says Smith, contains "an Address from a Committee of Refugees from each Colony except N York to Sir Henry Clinton. New York M[r] Shoemaker tells me had refused to join in it & protested ag[t] associating with any who had ever been of popular Committees—I suppose it is the Fruit of my Refusal to be of a Committee for Reasons explained to M[r] Shoemaker sometime ago as well as to Samuel Mabbet John Keane John Kelly & others.—I look forward to a Body that will give Council with Authority when General Robertson arrives. The address proposes no Project of Tendering advice pro renata. If it did it would probably have been slighted. Shoemaker had also refused to Meet this Body."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 24

Sir Henry Clinton issues a proclamation which states that "the approaching season [which proved to be one of the coldest winters on record—vide infra] requires every exertion to obtain immediately "

1779 Nov. 24 a quantity of Fuel for the use of this city, as also to secure a daily supply of that article to those, whose circumstances will not admit of laying in sufficient quantities for the winter." He orders that persons who have cut wood by permission on Long Island and Staten Island shall immediately bring it to New York. "Such as have not the means of carting it themselves to the landings, are ordered immediately to apply to the Colonels of the Militia of the District, who have instructions to employ the neighbouring farmers in that service, and to settle the rates of carting for the same.

"The ample price allowed for Firewood at this market [see N 28, 1778], cuts off every pretext from the well disposed proprietors of Woodlands for delaying cutting of their woods."—Royal Gaz., N 24, 1779. The allowance of fuel to the soldiers was reduced and the indigent were in much distress on account of the scarcity.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 302, 304, 306. See D 22.

" Martin Doyle notifies the public that he has opened a "Purl House, at the sign of the Faithful Irishman and Jolly Sailors, in King-street, next door to the Queen's Head Tavern, where may be had at any minute in the morning, if you please, a glass of excellent Purl piping hot."—Royal Gaz., N 24, 1779. This "Queen's Head Tavern" was also called the Queen's Head Tavern and Indian Chop House. It stood on Brown-John's Wharf. "Purl," a popular drink of this period, was a kind of medicated malt liquor, in which wormwood and "aromaticks" were used.—Sheridan's Dictionary, 1796.

" Marshall and Stanford advertise "accommodation for Gentlemen" at the "Shakespear Tavern, Opposite the Theatre Royal, John-Street," where they can "depend on being furnished with the best provision, liquors, &c. this city can afford."—N. Y. Merc., N 24, 1779. So far as known, this is the first mention of a tavern in New York by this name. Before 1806, the sign of the Shakespear Tavern was changed to "next door to Park Theatre," that is, on Park Row, between Broadway and Nassau St.—N. Y. Com. Adv., O 22, 1806. By 1809, it had been removed to the corner of Fair (Fulton) St. and Nassau.—See Ap 5, 1809.

On Dec. 30, Lodge No. 210 of the "Ancient York Masons" celebrated the anniversary of "their Patron St. John the Evangelist" at this tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 3, 1780. On July 10, 1780, it was the appointed meeting-place of the Marine Soc.—Ibid., Jl 10, 1780.

29 "We are told that General Washington is to cantoon his Army this Winter in the County of Morris, in New-Jersey, between the Town of Morris and that of Mendem."—N. Y. Merc., N 29, 1779.

30 Smith justifies his statement that Clinton and Arbuthnot are "Triflers" by the following narration: "Sir Henry gives the Feast of S^{t} Andrew this Day at his own House himself in a Dress of Plaid presented to him by Major Small—He tried it on two or three Days ago & being called down to Lord Cornwallis replied no not for the Lord God Almighty—A Heroic Speech of the Nature of Arbuthnots who when requested to restore a Man impressed said not if Jesus Christ was to ask for him. These Tales are so current that I cannot help believing them to be true."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Robert Biddulph, in a letter from New York, says: ". . . The origin of every Report is at a place called Rivington's Corner—which is at the Bottom of this [Wall] Street. Before the door of that most facetious Printer you always see a Crowd of Red Coats, who as naturally repair there after Breakfast, as the Ox to his Crib before breakfast, to hear and assist in the Circulation of any thing that may be stirring. Within is the Venerable Rivington himself, cloathed in a long gown, & may very properly be called The Priest of the Temple of Falsehood.

"In all New York papers you must read a great Deal of the Coffee House Bridge, which is within 5 yards of M^{r} R^{s}. This is appropriated to the Merchants, who meet upon this miserable Scaffold, for many good purposes, & among the rest to endeavour to lower the Exchange. They may be called the Scotch Invasion. This must be very entertaining to you, but I assure you it is an exact picture of the place.

"We have as yet no public places, but are to have plays in a short time, by the Officers of the Army & Navy. They very much want Actresses, or otherwise w^{d} not be inferior to Drury Lane. I am acquainted with several Families and many agreeable people of the Army; nobody is more Subject to change their opinion than myself, at present, I like this place very much, & would not leave it without much regret. . . ."—Mag. of Hist. (1915), XX: 124.

" Kemble embarks on board the ship "Echo" at Staten Island for Jamaica.—Kemble's Jour., 190.

Dec. 1 "The Tory writers had now given up, for the most part, any attempt to convince the Whigs of their error. The die had been cast, and there was left nothing but recrimination, invective, direful prophecy and terrible threats. It was pointed out in the Tory press that Whigism never had been anything more than the privation of every fixed principle in politics. The Whigs of Charles I's time were 'regicides and republicans,' and in Cromwell's they were 'levellers,' and in the time of Charles II., Puritans. Now, if the Whigs establish their republic, they 'will reduce all men into a state of nature,' and perhaps the next step would be to cut off the legs of the tallest, that no man might look over the head of his neighbors."—Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 253–54, citing Royal Gaz., D 1, 1779; Ja 12, 1782.

2 Gen. Pattison writes to the board of ordnance that "the Demand for 12 P^{r} Iron Guns, for the New fortified Lines near Fort Knyphausen, from the North to the East River, laid me under the Necessity of purchasing ten Swedish Guns of that Calibre."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 143.

" Gen. Pattison orders "that the necessary Repair, wanting in those parts of the City Hall, at present made use of and occupied by the Military, be immediately began and carried on by the Barrack Office." In these repairs are included "all the Rooms in the West Wing, and the Stair Case leading to them, likewise the Room allotted for General Courts Martial, with the small ones adjoining to it, up two pair of Stairs in the East Wing, as also the Stair-Case leading to those Rooms." The fire-place "in the Room allotted for the Non Commissioned Officers and Privates of the Main Guard" is to be given first attention.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 305–6.

4 "It seems to gain Daily Credit," notes Smith in his diary, "that the Congress are at their Wits End and have sent Overtures for Peace. About the Time Jay with John Adams with Gerard left the Capes of Delaware 3 Weeks since Samuel Adams sailed from Boston.—There is no stopping the Depreciation of the Paper Money. Reed laments the State of public Credit in plain Terms tho' he falsely insinuates that he thinks a safe and sure Foundation is laid to check the alarming Evil. What can this be? I percieve nothing in their late Papers but a Convention proposed by Commissioners for N Y & the 4 Eastern Provinces at Hartford for a Meeting with others as far as Virginia inclusive at Philad: on the first Wednesday of Jany next to regulate Prices—A rediculous attempt already tried & found impracticable & doubtless thrown out to decieve the Rebel Soldiery! The Executive Council approved the Invitation 20 Nov^{r}—The Philad: Paper of that Day also notified the Drawing of the 3^{d} Class of their State Lottery on the 1 of March & probably to catch some Confidence from the People."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" One of the taverns of the period is the "Chequer Tavern and London Porter House," in Cherry St.—Royal Gaz., D 4, 1779.

5 Charles Carroll writes to Benjamin Franklin: "We have a good, though not a numerous army, about 20,000 fine hardy fellows, as tough as the knots of an old seasoned oak, well disciplined, well-armed, and pretty well clothed, commanded by a man whom they reverence and love. This army is strong enough to repress the enemy's inroads, but not to force them in their stronghold, New York; it might be easily reinforced in the spring, if we had good money, but wanting that sinew of war, we may be compared to a vigorous young man, bound hands and feet, struggling in vain to get loose."—Rowland, Life and Correspondence of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, II: 29–30.

7 Col. John Laurens, aide-de-camp to Washington, writes to his father, Henry Laurens, president of the congress: "Confidential accounts from New York inform us—that a considerable detachment of [British] troops are ready for sea—one division is said to be destined for the W. Indies—and a more considerable one for Georgia or South Carolina—but these as well as a fleet of Victuallers bound to Corke—it is imagined are detained by the position of the french Squadron in Chesapeak." The British naval force at New York, he says, "by the best intelligence," consists of the "Russel" (74 guns), "Robust" (74 guns), "Europa," "Defiance," and "Raisonnable" (each of 64 guns), "Renown" (50 guns), "Roebuck" (44 guns), "Romulus," and "two other frigates names unknown." Their army "may be about 18500."—From MS. letter preserved in L. I. Hist. Soc.

8 A "Congress Bill of 70 Dollars" is auctioned off at the Coffee House. The first bidder offers "Three Shillings New York cur-1779 D 8 rency" for it. It is sold for "Eight Shillings and Three Pence Half-Penny."—Royal Gaz., D 22, 1779.

10 King's College is still being used as a hospital.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 309, 395. The building was thus used by the Americans before the British occupation.—See Ap 6, 1776.

20 Gen. Pattison writes that there is danger of "the Garrison being left destitute of Fuel."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1875), 317–18. Two days later, Smith wrote in his diary that the garrison was distressed for fuel. "They consume 600 Cords of Wood per Week. Yesterday they seized the private Supplies of Sugar & Still Houses & Breweries & got but 70 Cord—Carts are pressed to go out to morrow & cut in this Island & orders issued to General Smith at Bruecklin to imploy 300 Axes in the Woods nearest to the Landings. These attacks upon private Property great[ly] offend—Some execrate the General others the Police and the Barrack Master. The Commandant talks of taking from the private Stocks of the Citizens in general."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

21 Von Krafft enters in his journal the disposition of various regiments in New York. His own regiment, which had just returned from Long Island, "went into barracks on the large square not far from the fresh water (near the new Scheel)."—Von Krafft's Jour., 101. The "Scheel" is evidently the phonetic spelling of jail, and refers to the bridewell.

22 The "Loyal Refugees"—American subjects of Great Britain who have taken refuge in New York—adopt and sign an address of devotion to the king, pledging their help. They state that, "rather than violate their duty," they "have abandoned their estates, and cheerfully submitted to all the miseries of penury and exile;" and that others, "after long confinement in dungeons and in chains, have suffered death by the hands of the executioner." This address, and the king's answer were printed in Royal Gaz., Jl 29, 1780.

23 A British fleet of about 130 sail leaves Sandy Hook "for England, Scotland and Ireland, &c."—N. Y. Merc., D 27, 1779; Robertson's Private Jour. Campaigns 1779 and 1780 (MS.); Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 73. Cf. Penn. Packet, D 30, 1779. Another fleet left for the south on Dec. 26 (q. v.).

" In his diary, Smith observes that "the Obstinacy of the Rebellion was not a Distrust of the Crown's Clemency nor the Nation's Liberality but the Wrath of their own Countrymen, who they feared would ruin them by private Actions for Compensations and that Nothing would save them but an Act of Oblivion—That I knew by the Comm^rs this was not to be expected from Parliment & could only be had from the Colony Legislature. I confessed it difficult to frame a Law that should on the one Hand give Compensations & on the other oblige the Loyalists to make Sacrifices in Part for the Crown's Interest and the General Tranquility."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" In a letter to Clinton, who has appointed him to the council, Smith expresses "grateful Sentiments for that Mark of your Attention communicated yesterday by M^r Elliot.

"If we are so happy as to see Your Excellency in the Spring for a final Blow to the Rebellion in this Quarter of the Continent, I hope the Station you have assigned me will enable me to Manifest a Zeal for the King's Service in some Degree answerable to your Expectations—The best Return I can Make for the very great Obligations I am laid under by your Politeness & Bounty."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

24 "Great Preparations still for the Embarkation and sailing of the Troops [for the south], which I hope will be Completed tomorrow."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 73; Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See D 25.

25 Sir Henry Clinton, Lord Cornwallis, and Gen. Patterson embark "on board a sloop to go to the Hook, in order to sail with the Fleet on the present Expedition."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 74; Wm. Smith's Diary, VI; Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Von Krafft, after recording Clinton's departure, says: "In the meantime Lieutenant General von Knipphausen was Commander in Chief, and the English Major General Baterson [Pattison] of the Artillery, Commandant."—Von Krafft's Jour., 102. The fleet sailed from Sandy Hook on Dec. 26 (q. v.).

26 The British fleet, with Sir Henry Clinton aboard, is off for Charleston. Smith says: "This Harbour in which we have but a single Frigate the Thames is now perfectly without Defence on the Water, except by the sea which runs plentifully—The Bay and River are both full of floating Cakes—Near the Narrows they reach from Side to Side. In short Sir Henry tarried till the last Day of passing down to the Hook with Safety—He took a Falmouth Packet Boat with him and it is generally beleived means to go from Charles Town to England and that Lord Cornwallis is to succeed in the command of the Army. If any Thing abates the Joy of S^r Henry's Departure it is a Doubt some entertain of Lord Cornwallis's capacity & others of his Zeal in this War.—M^r Tryon & Gov^r Martin both think him a Man of Honor and sincere in his Friendships & that he has got over his Opposition Scruples. . . . He has an unfavorable Phyziognomy—Heavy in his Make and Gait with a Cast in his Eye. Some People call him a Blockhead & say he so overrates the Power of this Country as to suppose it impossible to crush the Rebellion. . . . Dec. 26

"This Garison now consists of 4000 Regular Troops.—Tho' it is supposed the two Fleets [the one to Charleston and the one to England—see D 23] have carried off 20,000 Souls & upwards they are but scarcely missed in the Streets."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 74.

"The New-York Pocket Almanack, for the Year 1778, is just published; the Daily Journal for the same year, will be ready to be delivered next Saturday; and Gaine's Universal Register, for the same year likewise, will be ready in due Time."—N. Y. Merc., D 27, 1779. 27

The "Guard Room at Turtle Bay" has not been repaired as ordered, in consequence of which "a Man with a large Family" has been "turned out of his House to make Room for the Guard."—in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 330. 31

1780

"Some lotteries which were held in New York during the Revolutionary War must be classed as private lotteries, since they were not authorized by legislative enactment, but organized by authority of the commandant of the city. One was held in 1780 to raise money to buy fire-buckets for the city; another was held in 1781 to raise money for the relief of 'poor refugees.' The refugees were the loyalists who sought protection in New York. The overseers of the poor were made trustees of the fund of $2700 to be raised by the lottery."—Ross, "The History of Lotteries in New York," in Mag. of Hist., V: 150; Royal Gaz., F 23, 1782. See also My 15, 1782. —

In this year, the British fortifications on Laurel Hill (see 1776, Autumn, and Ap 26, 1779) were much extended and called Fort Clinton.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 433. Later, the works were completed and strengthened and received the name of Fort George.—Ibid., 431. See 1781; L. M. R. K., III: 944; Pl. 180, Vol. III. —

"A List of Farms on New York Island 1780" is the title of a small note-book kept by Evert Bancker, surveyor, which forms part of the Bancker Collection in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The list shows owners' names, acreage, and in some cases the nearest milestone. The farms are grouped by localities, as follows: "West side of Bowery lane and Blooming Dale Road;" "West side Bowry lane —Northward;" "East side Bloomingdale Ro^d Southward in returning;" "Great Kills & Greenwich along the North River southward;" "East side Bowry lane & along the East river Northward;" "East side Bow^r lane &c & Harlem bounds;" "Harlem Bounds Contin^d;" "Near Kings Bridge;" and "East from the road back to Harlem."—N. Y. H. S. Bull., Ap, 1917, 8–9. For list of the more interesting of Bancker's surveys, in the Bancker Coll., in the N. Y. P. L., see Vol. I, p. 358. —

A water colour drawing, showing the ruins of Trinity Church, and its immediate surroundings, perhaps by Lord Rawdon, and drawn at about this time, is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 49. A similar view, probably made a year or two later, is reproduced and described in Vol. III, A. Pl. 8, from a lithograph, made probably about 1840, reproducing a contemporary sketch belonging to Trinity Corporation. —

Smith writes in his diary: "This is the trying Day in the Rebel Army. Several Deserters of Yesterday (3 or 4) say there will be a general Tumult—The 3 years men will not reinlist—Those for 3 years or during the War insist also on leaving the Army—A new Coat is to be offered to every Soldier & Furloughs to 1 April to those whose Times expired to Day. They have agreed to refuse the Present as insidious and to oppose Force to Force."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Jan. 1

On account of the "many Evils" which "daily arise from the unlimited Number of Taverns and Publick Houses within this City "

1780 Jan. 1 and its Precincts," Maj.-Gen. Pattison issues a proclamation restricting the number of licenses to 200, and directing that these "be granted to such House Keepers only, whose Characters are sufficiently vouched and approved by the Magistrates of Police." Persons retailing spirituous liquors in quantities less than five gallons "may apply to the Police for a Special License for that Purpose, provided the same be not drank within their own Houses, or sold in a less Quantity than a Quart." Any person violating this proclamation after Jan. 10 "will have his or her Liquors forfeited for the Benefit of the Alms House, suffer imprisonment, and be brought to Trial before a Garrison Court Martial for a Breach of Orders." Licences will be immediately withdrawn "from such as shall be known to harbour or tolerate any riotous or disorderly Companies." Two officers are assigned to the duty of seeing that the proclamation is enforced, under orders from the magistrates of police.—Royal Gaz., Ja 1, 1780. For the orders of the commissioners of police on this subject, see N. Y. Merc., Ja 3, 1780.

3 It appears from Rivington's paper of yesterday, says Smith, "that Russia is exerting herself to draw several Powers into the Support of Great Britain if France & Spain do not listen to Overtures of Peace. The House of Borbon seems to be elated & D Estainge's ineffectual Campaigne may save Great Britain from desperate Condescensions. The Check at Savannah may have saved the Empire."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "Deserters come in Daily from the Enemy, and many . . . are very well cloathed, not withstanding the Reports to the Contrary. Very Cold indeed."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 75.

5 Smith writes: "We hear of Persons frozen to Death on both Rivers contending with the Ice and of multitudes who suffer in various Parts of the Town. No Wood can come from the other Side of the Water and tis said this Island will be totally disforested in a Week. While all pray for a releasing Thaw, Thousands exercrate the Barrack Master (Lt Colo Clarke) and many speak with great Freedom of Sir Henry Clinton."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

6 "I cannot be satisfied that it is even yet prudent to publish the Paper I have long had by me under the Title of the Candid Retrospect as it exposes the Writer to the violence of both Parties. I have only let off those Principles to such as can bear it & almost always with Success, for both are ignorant of what has past of a conciliatory Nature. As it may hurt my usefulness I suspend the Publication till the Civil Governmt takes Place & perhaps it will come best from the New Governor."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. For the content of The Candid Retrospect, see Ja 30, 1781.

" Refugees from Connecticut are requested to meet on this day "at the Queen's Head Tavern [Smith's] in Cherry Street."—Royal Gaz., Ja 5, 1780. There were two Queen's Head Taverns in New York at this time, the other being that of James Strachan, on Brownjohn's Wharf.—See My 12, 1779.

7 Smith writes: "The Ink freezes in my Pen—The River fast to Poulus Hook. I sit before a large Coal Fire & within two feet of the Grait & yet am not comfortably warm My Ink Stand is on the Corner of the Grait. God have mercy on the Poor—Many reputable People lay abed in these Days for Want of Fuel.

"Desertions still continue from the Continental Army. If an alarm comes from the South & the Southern Interest procures a Resolution to send Washington down to that Country what Miseries must the Soldiers indure in the March at this Season—The Extremity of the Weather may be favorable to the British Interest."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

8 Tryon is distressed, says Smith, "by the Scarcity of Fuel—has but a Load himself—orders old Hulks to be cut up There are 3000 Cords at the opposite Landings but we can't have it till there is a Thaw to open the access to the Shores."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

12 A visitor from Tappan tells Wm. Smith that "on the Road he met many of Washington's Soldiers going Home because their Times are out. Thinks at least 2000.—They would not reinlist to go Southward. Heard nevertheless that some new Recruits are got for high Bounties & the Promise of Stores at which they may buy necessaries at the Prices of 1776.

"It is reported from Staten Island that 24 Deserters came there yesterday across the Ice which join the Island to the Jersey Shore and that 13 Ships were seen [in] the Offing—supposed to be the Cork Fleet."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Gen. Pattison orders "that no Fruit or Ornamental Trees round Gentlemen's Houses" shall be cut down.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 341–42, 363. Jan. 12

"In the evening there was great alarm to the effect that the Rebels were approaching."—Von Krafft's Jour., 104. For the British preparations for such an attack, see Ja 19 and 23. 14

Smith writes that the weather has been "intemperate to an Extreme and on the Increase ever since Wednesday Evening. The Ice is this Morng fixed from Side to Side tho' the Sky is clear. Every Day People have been interlocked by the floating Cakes & many perished. Carts cross from Morrisania & at Whitestone.—A Vessel laden for a Sea Voyage was taken up yesterday by Governmt for Fuel, for the Slays & Carriages of the Town tho' all impressed don't bring in a sufficient Supply. We often hear of the Deaths of the Poor frozen in their Houses. Deserters come in nevertheless at Staten Island King's Bridge and Poulus Hook—Unfortunately and improvidently the Garrison at Staten Island was scant of Provisions & Yesterday supplied with Difficulty by Boats. Major Lumm who Commands at Poulus Hook expects Washingtons Whole Army & is in a forlorn Hope. If the Garrison is lost we may have Shot from thence into this Town. The severity of the Weather is perhaps our Protection for the Moment."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

"The Town alarmed," says Smith. "A note from General Stirling to Mr Tryon that 4000 Rebels were on Staten Island. A Detachmt consisting of the 42 & several Corps of the German Troops prepare to go to the Island at the Ebb in the Afternoon, when it is hoped that the loose Ice will fall down. Now it is fast from the Battery to Paulus Hook. Yesterday the East River was crossed on the Ice by Many & the Paper of this Day says by a Horse and Slay. I saw Men at 3 this Afternoon nearly over to Poulus Hook & then returning. It appears smoother on that Shore than this & I suppose it was distrusted, tho' I believe it is firm—There arose a great Smoke on the North East Shore of Staten Island. There has been a Flag up there all the Morning, whether as a Signal of Vessels in the offing or of the Descent I know not."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. The Americans took post "upon the Heights near the Redoubts, constructed at the North End of the Islands."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 24, 1780. Gen. Knyphausen included this Staten Island episode in a report to Germain on Mar. 27 (q.v.). 15

I find Tryon "run upon by Persons about Carts Boats &c to get Reinforcements over to Staten Island but the anxiety abates, the Flag being down which was the Signal to denote the Retiring of the Rebels—I left the Govr at 12 & returned at 3 & tarried till near 8 at Night—no Message from the Island. . . . 16

"If the Ice grows stronger & a Snow Storm rises Washington may find us open to Surprise on every Side."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

"I had not seen the Pamphlet censuring the Opposition & imputed to Gibbons one of the Lords of Trade till last Friday. It is well written but by involving so many in the Charge of plotting agt their Country may excite to a Civil War in England. If the main Body adopt his Sentiments the Party will be ruined & the Nation safe. It seems to me to be Time for the Leaders to consult their Safety by an open Conversion or by Flight. Heaven prevent their coming here, with Land Forces from France in the Spring. The condition of Great Britain is perillous under every Point of View. The Suppresion of the Opposition may endanger the Liberties of the People unless the Prince is Vertue itself."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

"The Rebels went off Staten Island yesterday morning 2 o'Clock with 300 Slays loaded with plunder—Salted Provisions Clothing Blankets & Household Furniture. The Male Inhabitants fled to the Fortresses. The Party 3000 led by Green Stirling & Maxwel. 6 Deserters & 17 Prisoners brought in—We lost only 2 or 3 Dragoons interceptd coming in to the Forts."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 17

The queen's birthday is celebrated "with uncommon Splendor and Magnificance." It is thus described: At noon, "a Royal Salute was fired from Fort George, and repeated by his Majesty's Ships of War at one o'Clock. The Public Rooms were on this Occasion entirely new painted and decorated in a Stile which reflects Honour on the Taste of the Managers. A Doric Pediment was erected over the principal Entrance, enclosing a transparent Painting of their Majesties at full Length, in their Royal Robes; over which was an emblematical Piece, encircled with the Motto of, BRITONS STRIKE HOME. The Whole illuminated with a beautiful Variety 18

1780 Jan. 18 of different coloured Lamps. In the Evening, a most splendid Ball was given by the General, Field, and Staff Officers of the Army, to the Garrison and principal Ladies and Gentlemen of the City. The Ball was opened at eight o'Clock, by The Baroness De Riedesel, and Major-General Pattison, Commandant of the City and Garrison. Country Dances commenced at half past Nine, and at Twelve, the Company adjourned to Supper, prepared in the two Long Rooms. The Tables exhibited a most delightful Appearance, being ornamented with Parterres and Arbours, displaying an elegant Assemblage of natural and artificial Flowers, China Images, &c. The Company retired about three in the Morning. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 24, 1780.

Part of the celebration consisted of a "public dinner" given by General Tryon "to his Excellency General Knyphausen, Major-General Philips, Baron Reidezel, commander of the troops of his Serene Highness the Duke of Brunswick, Major-General Pattison, Commandant of the City, and the other general Officers of the garrison; many public toasts were drank, and the day (celebrated as the nativity of her Majesty the Queen, the most amiable exemplary and beloved Princess upon earth) was passed with the most perfect hilarity." The evening events were described as "the most truly elegant ball and entertainment ever known on this side the Atlantic. . . ."

A "supper at Mr. Hicks's," is also mentioned in this account, and is evidently the same as the dinner referred to above. It "consisted of three hundred and eighty dishes, besides the ornamental appendages."—Ibid.

Baroness Riedesel thus describes the ball: "As the birth-day of the queen of England was approaching (which indeed really comes in summer, but as the king's birthday also comes in that season, is celebrated in winter, to give more custom to the trades people, as every one upon those days appears at court in gala-dress) they wished to celebrate the day with a great fete; and as it was the general wish—partly to please General Phillips, and partly to make me forget my own sufferings—to confer on me a distinguished honor, they desired me to be queen of the ball. . . . When at length the great day arrived, all the ladies assembled at Governor Tryon's, where they received me with all ceremony. . .

"At six o'clock in the afternoon I was obliged to seat myself in a carriage with Generals Tryon and Patterson to be driven to the ball, where we were received with kettle-drums and trumpets.

". . . I was obliged to open the ball with one of the generals by a formal minuet. . . . I danced several English dances.

"At supper, I was obliged, as I represented the queen, to sit under a canopy, and drink the first toast. I was certainly much touched at all the marks of friendship I received, although extremely tired; still, in order to show my gratitude, I cheerfully stayed as long as possible, and remained until two o'clock in the morning. . . ."—Baroness Riedesel's Letters and Journals (ed. by Stone), 172–73.

Regarding this "splendid & numerous Ball" at Hicks's Tavern, to which "near 400 Guineas" was "subscribed by the Army," Smith wrote next day: "[the money] would have been better laid out in Fuel for the Poor or in general Charity to the Plundred Inhabitants of Staten Island."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

19 Judge David Ogden of New Jersey, a resident of New York, writes to Gen. Tryon an outline of the present critical situation in which the city stands, particularly by reason of the frozen rivers. He advises that troops be ordered from Long Island, and the citizens put under the command of proper officers for the City's defence. He offers a plan whereby the "shameful want of firewood" may be remedied.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 782.

" The passage of the North River over the ice to Paulus Hook is "practicable for the heaviest Cannon, an Event unknown in the Memory of Man." It is "strongly reported that General Washington was meditating a great Stroke upon New York, with his whole Force, by different Attacks." Careful plans for defence are executed, by raising volunteer companies, and posting sailors on shore, their ships being fast in the ice.—From Gen. Pattison's letter to Lord Germain, Feb. 22, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 152–57.

" Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen having ordered that certain signals be used between King's Bridge and Mc Gowan's Pass, Gen. Pattison establishes the following ones to be used between Mc Gowan's Pass and the City: "Upon the Firing of one, two, or three Guns at Mc Gowan's Pass, the same Number are to be repeated in succession from the Cantonment of the 37th Regt, near the 5 Mile Stone, formerly Known by the name of the Dove Tavern, Murray's House on the Heights of Inklenberg, Bunker's Hill and Fort George. Jan. 19

"And in case the Enemy should appear in force & attempt to cross in the Rear of the Line of Mc Gowan's Pass, either by the North or East River, the following Signals to be made, Viz:

"If by the North River four Rounds to be fired from the Cannon posted at Major Bayard's House at Bloomingdale, or from the Alarm Gun, nearest to where the Enemy may attempt to pass, and repeated in succession to Greenwich the Star Redoubt near the Foundery and Fort George.

"If by the East River, five Rounds to be fired from the Cannon posted at the Dove Tavern, or the nearest Alarm Gun, and repeated in succession from Murray's House and Bunker's Hill to Fort George.

"Upon the Firing of either four or five Alarm Guns at Fort George, all Troops of the Garrison are Instantly to put themselves under arms—The Royal Artillery at the lower Battery—The Brigade of Losberg immediately will march and form near the Provost Goal.—The 42nd Regiment in Front of Saint Paul's Church.—The 43rd and the two Battalions of Anspach Brandenboroug on their Regimental Parades, when each Corps respectively will wait for further orders.

"The City Companies will upon the same Alarm assemble in Queen Street, with their Right at Mr Walton's House and their Left extending towards the Fly Market. The Loyal Commissariat Companies will also on the same Occasion parade under Arms near the Provision Stores in Water Street.

"If Kings Bridge is attacked in Front, one Gun to be fired from Fort Knyphausen, & (if at Night) one Rocket from Morris House to be added to the Signal.

"If Kingsbridge is attacked by the North River, two Guns to be Fired from Fort Knyphausen & (if at Night) two Rockets from Morris Home.

"If Kingsbridge is attacked by Harlem Creek, three Guns to be Fired from Fort Knpyhausen, & (if at Night) three Rockets from Morris House to be added to the Signal."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 46–47.

"The oldest man in this Country," writes Smith, "does not remember such a long continuance of very severe cold.—Since yesterday Afternoon it has been intensely so. We cross the Hudson in all Places and in Numerous Bodies but not without wet Feet at high Water. The Ice sinking at Ebb & letting in the Flood on the bent Places for 6 or 7 Inches.—Its Firmness under the Duration of the Frost leaves us so open on the West that the 42 was ordered in yesterday & another Regiment is on the Way from Long Island. We have 4000 here on the hither Side of Fort Knyphausen—The Inhabitants are ordered to range themselves under Officers of their own Election & Arms are to be delivered out to them to Morrow."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Von Krafft's Jour., 103. The citizens form volunteer companies for defence.—Pattison Letters, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 147. For a fuller account of conditions due to the cold weather, see Ann. Reg. (1780), 224–25. 20

Maj.-Gen. Pattison issues a proclamation calling for the enrollment of every male inhabitant from the age of 17 to 60 years. "Any Person within the Age above mentioned, who shall at any time fail to obey the Orders he may receive from his Captain, will be subject to imprisonment or banishment from the City." Firemen and Quakers are "expected to exert themselves in any Cases of Emergency."—Royal Gaz., Ja 22, 1780; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 689–90. See Ja 22 and F 9. On Sept. 9, the order had not met with the desired response, and Gov. Robertson issued a notice that every man of the age specified who neglected or refused to enroll should be subject to imprisonment or banishment; and he instituted a set of rules to govern the militia companies raised by this means.—Royal Gaz., S 9, 1780. See also his order of Je 22, 1782.—Ibid., Je 26, 1782. Regarding the effect of such military despotism upon the Loyalists in New York, see Van Tyne's The Loyalists (1902), 250–51. "

"Provisions for 6 weeks sent to the Garrison at Powlis Hook on the Ice by Sleds, with a Reinforcement from the 42nd Regiment. The 22nd came to town from Jamaica and the 80th is expected."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 77; see also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 21

In consequence of the proclamation lately issued (see Ja 20) by the commandant, more than 4,000 men have enrolled themselves 22

1780 Ja 22 in the several companies formed in this city, exclusive of the "Volunteer" and "Independent" companies.—Royal Gaz., Ja 22, 1780.

23 Gen. Pattison has ordered 12-pounders for "the Circular Redoubt near Jones's House, on the East River,—but there being no Platforms in that Work, and the Embrazures are so high, that the Guns on any Carriages can be of no Service, unless the Embrazures are cut down, or Platforms made," the General prefers the latter. This redoubt has been "given in charge to the Royal Navy."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 350–51.

24 Plans of signalling are arranged with the commanders at "Hoebuck" and "Staten Island."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 349, 351–52.

" The "Brid[e]well Store House," appears to have been at this time used as a place for storing munitions of war.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 352.

25 Lieut.-Col. Buskirk, with about 120 men from Staten Island, surprises the American post at Elizabethtown, and takes two majors, three captains, and 47 privates as prisoners. On the same night, Maj. Lumm, with detachments from Powles-Hook, attacked Newark. The Continentals attempted a defence and 7 or 8 were killed and 34 taken prisoners.—Royal Gaz., Ja 29, 1780. Cf. Mr 27.

" As there is no gun at "Mac Gowan's Pass" to repeat the established signals, Gen. Lee orders a four-pounder for that purpose.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 352–53. See Ja 19.

" "Whereas it is conceived it will Tend much to the Interest of the Corporation not only to Widen the Streets upon the Church Lands but also to reverse some of the Lotts and by that means increase their Value . . . a Committee [is selected] to make such Alterations in the . . . said Lands (by Contracting Some and throwing out others of the Lotts into the Streets and Turning the Fronts of others) in such manner as . . . proper . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

26 Two rebel deserters examined by Smith give this information: "Washington last Friday at Morris Town—They know not the Force one says 10 & the other 14000—No Horse—No Fortifications. A Park of 43 Peices of ordnance—Nothing heavier than 6 Pounders. Their heavy artillery sent to Easton. 3/4th of the Army Old Country People and discontentd—This chiefly occasioned by their insisting that every man inlisted for the War who can't shew a Certificate or give his recruiting officers affidavit—The Cols of each Corps went thro' this Farce at Smiths Clove last Summer & gave 100 Dollars to such as would reinlist for the War as a Present from the Congress but those who refused were sent to the Guard House & Whippd. They did not dare to practice this upon the N England 3 Years Men who have Relations to befriend them."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

27 "I find by the Congress Journals of 7 Octr," says Smith, "that there is to be a monthly Assessmt to raise 15 Millions of Dollars on the 1 of Feby & so every month to Octr

"The Proportions are these

New Hampshire	400,000
Massach:	2300,000
Rhode I	200,000
Conn:	1700,000
N Y	750,000
N Jersey	900,000
Pensil	2300,000
Delaware	170,000
Mariland	1580,000
Virginia	2500,000
North C	1000,000
S Carolina	1200,000
	15000 000"

—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" A muster of the militia of the city in Great George St. is reviewed by Maj.-Gen. Pattison.—Royal Gaz., Ja 29, 1780.

29 "Gaine's Paper of yesterday shews the Difficulty of getting an Assembly in the N Y State—They were to have met at Albany Tuesday 3 Jany & the members are menaced in the Pogkeepsing Paper of the 10th for neglecting to go there and form another general regulating Act agreable to the advice of the Congress. George Clinton was to set out for Albany the 11th."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

30 Three men walk over the ice from Saybrook, Conn., to Oyster Pond Point, L. I., a distance of 20 miles.—Royal Gaz., F 9, 1780.

31 The managers of the "associated Refugee Lottery" notify the public that the drawing will be held in a "very few Days," at "Mr. David Grim's, in William-Street, being the usual Place for drawing Lotteries in this City."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 31, 1780. Grim's tavern was generally referred to as the "Hessian Coffee House."—L. M. R. K., III: 978. Jan. 31

Three sleighs and ten horses, taken on Jan. 30 from the "Rebels" near Elizabethtown by a party of mounted refugees from Staten Island, are driven over the ice from Staten Island to New York, "an enterprise never yet attempted since the first settlement of this country."—Royal Gaz., F 2, 1780. The place of capture was "Raway." The captured "Rebels" were a pleasure-party, consisting of a lieutenant, eight privates, and some ladies.—N. Y. Merc., F 7, 1780. See also the "Diary of the Moravian Congregation," in Penn. Mag., X: 429. Feb. 1

On Feb. 7, the sleighs returned from Staten Island "the same way they came accompanied by Simcoe Light Horse."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 79.

On this night, a detachment of British troops under Col. Norton went, "from the heights near Fort Knyphausen," to "Young's house, near the White Plains, information having been received that a body of about two hundred rebels had taken post there." The next morning the British attacked and burned the house and defeated the Americans, 40 or 50 of whom were killed and 97 taken prisoners. The loss to the British consisted of 5 killed and 18 wounded.—Royal Gaz., F 5, 1780. For Gen. Knyphausen's report of the engagement, see Mr 27. 2

A meeting is called of "The New-York, Marine Artillery Company" at "their rendezvous, in The Exchange."—Royal Gaz., F 2, 1780. "

"I went upon the Hudson," writes Smith, "this afternoon back of Capt Kennedy's about 300 Yards from the Shore & would have gone further if the Guards had permitted. I walk[ed] up Stream and came off Dey's Street back of St Pauls. The Ice is prodigiously firm—12 Slays came from Staten Island to Town this morning and a Troop gallop'd from the same Place on the River to Poulus Hook. It is owing to these Bridges of Ice that we have so many Deserters from the Rebel army."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 3

Alarm stations on shore are assigned to the "Royal Navy." These are at "Dependance Galley at the Hay Wharf;" "Royal Navy Redoubt" (see Ja 23); "Stevenson's House, and Rebel Redoubt Contiguous to it & near the Ship Yard."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 361–62. 5

"Lost, Late on Wednesday Evening last, at the House of Mrs. Doran, No. 49, Wall-Street, (supposed to be taken out of the passage by mistake) a Blue Surtout with a scarlet cape . . ." A reward of a guinea and "no questions asked" is promised for its return.—Royal Gaz., F 5, 1780. For earlier mentions of the keeper of this coffee-house, see Ja 15, 1770; O 13, 1777. "

The commissary-general sends "upwards of eighty sleighs loaded with provisions for the use of the troops on Staten-Island," where they arrive in the afternoon. They "returned to this city next day."—Royal Gaz., F 9, 1780. The exact number of sleighs was 86.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 79; De Voe, Market Book, 169. 6

A letter from Ireland says: "The English Ministry seem determined to conquer North America, if they beggar the nation. They talk of sending out 10,000 fresh troops in the Spring, but they chiefly depend on divisions to happen among the Americans. Many Ministerial pamphlets are publishing, to shew the immense value and importance of North America to Britain, and how absolutely necessary the reduction thereof is to her very existence. This present year will cost 32 millions, and increase the national debt to 200 millions."—Penn. Gaz., My 3, 1780. 7

Smith writes he gave Tryon this day "a Sketch of the Roads from Newark & Elizabeth Town to Washington's Head Quarters & the Camp drawn this Morning by Mr Justice Ogden to shew the Propriety of Forsters Project of taking off Washington whose Head Quarters is several Miles to the N. E. of his Camp. He shewed me the Weekly Return of Deserters just brought in—They amounted last Week to 27. The Weather Moderates finely with a small Wind at South—Yet 100 Slays crossd the Hudson this morning & returned laden with Wood."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

A Stamford loyalist and merchant, Daniel Gray, relates that Putnam "took from him 1200 Dollars for his Brother's Life He had been sentenced by a Court Marshal. He paid it himself into Putnam's own Hand—What he did with it he can't say or will not for he is about to return to Stamford where he has a large Family 8

New-York, Nov. 24, 1783.

The Committee appointed to conduct the Order of receiving their Excellencies Governor CLINTON and General WASHINGTON,

BEG Leave to inform their Fellow-Citizens, that the Troops, under the Command of Major-General KNOX, will take Poſſeſſion of the City at the Hour agreed on, Tueſday next; as ſoon as this may be performed, he will requeſt the Citizens who may be aſſembled on Horſeback, at the Bowling-Green, the lower End of the Broad-Way, to accompany him to meet their Excellencies Governor CLINTON and General WASHINGTON, at the Bull's Head, in the Bowery---the Citizens on Foot to aſſemble at or near the Tea-water-Pump at Freſh-water.

ORDER OF PROCESSION.

A Party of Horſe will precede their Excellencies and be on their flanks---after the General and Governor, will follow the Lieutenant-Governor and Members of the Council for the temporary Government of the Southern Parts of the State---The Gentlemen on Horſe-back, eight in Front---thoſe on Foot, in the Rear of the Horſe, in like Manner. Their Excellencies, after paſſing down Queen-Street, and the Line of Troops up the Broadway, will alight at CAPE's Tavern.

The Committee hope to ſee their Fellow-Citizens, conduct themſelves with Decency and Decorum on this joyful Occaſion.

CITIZENS TAKE CARE!!!

THE Inhabitants are hereby informed, that Permiſſion has been obtained from the Commandant, to form themſelves in patroles this night, and that every order requiſite will be given to the guards, as well to aid and aſſiſt, as to give protection to the patroles: And that the counterſign will be given to THOMAS TUCKER, No. 51, Water-Street; from whom it can be obtained, if neceſſary.

It is requeſted that ſuch of the Inhabitants who are not on the patroles, and ſickneſs does not prevent, will keep themſelves awake.

It is alſo deſired, for the ſake of order, that the Gentlemen who have been heretofore appointed to ſuperintend the nightly watches, to call their diſtricts together at an early hour.

NEW-YORK: PRINTED BY SAMUEL LOUDON,

No. 5, Water-Street, between the Coffee-Houſe and Old-Slip.

A. BROADSIDE ANNOUNCING ORDER OF EVENTS FOR TRIUMPHAL ENTRY OF WASHINGTON AND HIS ARMY INTO NEW YORK. SEE P. 1173.

THE

NEW-YORK DIRECTORY,

CONTAINING,

A Valuable and well Calculated ALMANACK;---Tables of the different COINS, ſuitable for any State, and digeſted in ſuch order, as to render an Exchange between any of the United States plain and eaſy.

LIKEWISE,

1. The names of all the Citizens, their occupations and places of abode.
2. The members in Congreſs, from what ſtate, and where reſiding.
3. Grand departments of the United States for adjuſting public accounts, and by whom conducted.
4. Members in Senate and Aſſembly, from what county, and where reſiding.
5. Judges, Aldermen, and other civil officers, with their places of abode.
6. Public ſtate-offices, and by whom kept.
7. Counſellors at law, and where reſiding.
8. Miniſters of the goſpel, where reſiding, and of what Church.
9. Phyſicians, Surgeons, and their places of abode.
10. Preſident, Directors, days, and hours of buſineſs at the Bank.
11. Profeſſors, &c. of the univerſity of Columbia college.
12. Rates of porterage, as by law eſtabliſhed.
13. Arrivals and departures of the mails at the Poſt-Office.

BY DAVID FRANKS.

NEW-YORK:

Printed by SHEPARD KOLLOCK, corner of Wall and Water Streets, M,DCC,LXXX,VI.

B. TITLE-PAGE OF THE FIRST NEW YORK CITY DIRECTORY, 1786. SEE P. 1208.

1780 F 8 who cannot leave their Estate without Ruin."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

9 Gen. Pattison publishes his thanks to the citizens of New York for the large enrollment in the militia during the last week, since issuing a proclamation asking for recruits (see Ja 20). They were reviewed under arms on Feb. 5. He compliments the "Independent and Volunteer City Companies" on their military appearance.—N. Y. Merc., F 9, 1780.

" Gen. Pattison observes "that the Parapet in the Foundery Redoubt is so high that Men cannot with ease Fire over it," and he "desires that a Banquette may be immediately made round the Work." Officers of the navy, "who do duty in the Circular Redoubt on the East River," request "that Shovels and Spades may be sent thither to clear the Ditch."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 366.

13 "A Wild Cat shot last Sunday night [F 13], robbing the Hen Roosts at Col° Clark's (formerly Mortier's) about a Mile from the Town. It must have cross'd the Ice from the Western Shore—The first Instance of such Game on this Island I ever heard of and perhaps in 100 years."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

15 The chamber of commerce passes a vote of thanks to Lieut. Walter for his care of the powder-ship in the Walloon Bay during the winter. A committee is appointed to consider the advisability "of fixing a Conductor to secure her against lightning."—Col. Records of N. Y. Chamb. of Commerce, 224.

18 Maj.-Gen. Pattison writes to Maj.-Gen. Tryon: "the Batteries in Fort George and the lower Works, are now all put into repair and compleated with Guns."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 370.

" The price of a two-pound loaf of bread is raised from 14 to 15 coppers (cf. Jl 7, 1779).—Royal Gaz., F 19, 1780. See, further, Mr 15.

19 A schedule of the armed forces in New York, exclusive of the king's troops of the garrison, is prepared by Maj.-Gen. Pattison. They include New York "Rangers," "Highlanders," "Volunteers," "Marine Artillery;" and the new "Associated companies" of volunteers, for departmental service,—such as commissary, ordnance, engineer, quarter-master, barrack, and dock-yard duty. The total city militia numbers 2,662 men. There are 355 of the Royal Navy acting on shore. Seamen from the transports, and from navy "victuailers," small craft, New York pilots, and private ships, armed with pikes, number 1,129. There is also a troop of 60 light cavalry, "formed from the artillery horse department," armed with sabres and pistols, and cloathed at their own expense; and the New York Marine Artillery, formed from the Marine Society, which was established by royal charter.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 3, 1780. Cf. Royal Gaz., Je 28, 1780. See also ibid., F 9, 1780; and Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 691.

" Gen. Pattison requires the "Magistrates of Police" to give an order to the Barrack Office "to impress 50 Carts and Horses to bring Fire-Wood to this City."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 371.

21 The "Promises of Pardon" begin to show their effects already, says Smith. "Yesterday 14 Hessians & 4 British Deserters came in after seeing Knyphausen's Cold Proclamation."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "The Ice between the Governor's and Bidelow's Island being cut, several vessels came up that had been below for some time."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 81.

" Gen. Pattison, in a long detailed report to Sir Henry Clinton, recounts the measures adopted for strengthening the city's defences. The "Circular Redoubt, near Jones's House on the East River," was allotted to the charge of officers of the navy. "Platforms were immediately raised in it, the Guard House finished & supply'd with Stoves, a Magazine provided & eight 12^{Prs} Mounted, for the Embrazures & 9 P^{r} plac'd to defend the Gate." This he christened the "Royal Navy Redoubt." Two companies of seamen mounted guard here daily. Other points of defence prepared were "Stevenson's House, on the Height above the Ship Yard;" the wharves from the shipyard to the Lower Battery; positions between Col. Clark's house and the "Circular Redoubt;" the "Foundry Redoubt," the "New Star Fort" near it, etc.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 146–51.

" "The Estate of Charles Ward Apthorp, Esq; at Bloomingdale, consisting of about 300 acres of choice rich land, chiefly meadow, in good order, on which are two very fine orchards of the best fruit," is offered for sale. The house is described as "An exceeding good house, elegantly finished commanding beautiful prospects of the East and North-Rivers, on the latter of which the estate is bounded.

Feb. 21 "Also, a two story brick house, for an overseer and servants, a wash house, cyder house and mill, corn crib, a pidgeon house, well stocked, a very large barn, and hovels for cattle, large stables and coach houses, and every other convenience.

"About the dwelling-house is a very handsome pleasure garden, in the English taste, with good kitchen gardens, well furnished with excellent fruit trees, of most kinds: in short, nothing is wanting to make it a most agreeable and profitable estate for a gentleman, having a good landing and wharf on the river, where may be advantageously built a distillery or brewery, as a sufficient supply of water runs to it. The whole of the buildings are almost new, and in good repair."—N. Y. Merc., F 7, 21, 1780. See also L. M. R. K., III: 948.

22 The ice has been a "Bridge" to "Paulus Hook," writes Smith, "from the 16 Jan^{y} 36 Days."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" In a letter to Lord Germain, Gen. Pattison describes his preparations for the defence of the city during the ice blockade.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 152–7.

24 "Last Night the Hospital Ship at the Wallabout got on Fire by accident and burnt to the Waters' Edge. . . ."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 81. This ship was the "Good Hope." It was set on fire "by a Connecticut man named Woodberry, who confessed the fact. He, with others of the incendiaries," was "removed to the Provost."—Royal Gaz., Mr 8, 1780. No lives were reported lost. —N. J. Gaz., Ap. 5, 1780. See also Mr 5.

" The severity of the weather having abated, Gen. Pattison thanks Capt. Howe and the officers of the navy under his command for their services on shore, and orders "that the Guard of Seamen in the Royal Navy Redoubt be relieved . . . by an Officers Guard from the Troops now in Garrison."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 372–73.

25 An extract of a letter from New Jersey reads: "Nothing can equal the Tyranny we are under. The Property of the People is at the Mercy of Commissaries and other Agents for Congress. They give us Certificates instead of Money for our Goods. Though we are now under the most oppressive Taxes, not a Farthing can be got on the Certificates. Congress will not enable their Agents to take them up. I have hitherto laboured in vain for a Law to oblige the Tax-gatherers to receive the Certificates in Payment, on the old and fair Maxim, that Discount is good Pay. If I don't succeed what follows, but that we are under the Government that will not, or cannot pay its Debts, and yet are daily exacting new Spoils from the wretched Slaves they have made us? We must proceed to further Sales of our Property to satisfy the Collectors of Taxes, or be subject to ruinous Distresses.—Oh! the Folly of trusting to the delusive Promises, and Assurances, that the Expences of the War should be defrayed by the Sales of the Crown Lands. We have saved at the Spicket, but our Tyrants draw from us the Bung. We have strong Debates on this and other Subjects; you shall know the Issue of them in a few Days. If Congress will not pay their Debts, a Commission of Bankruptcy must go out against them. The Hour is at Hand . . . you see their Certificates are no better than Blank Notes . . . worse than their Paper Dollars."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 6, 1780. See Mr 3.

" The ministers of the Dutch Church are thanked by Capt. Adye, Gen. Pattison's aide-de-camp, for "the cheerfulness and good will" with which they "acquiesced in giving Comfort to the Sick and Wounded Soldiery." These having now recovered or been removed, the church is returned to the ministers.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 373.

26 Sir Henry Clinton having gone south, has left Tryon in command of the British troops in this district. Tryon reports to Germain: Navigation "has been open only to the Hook, since the 21st Inst.—the North river above the town is still impassable for vessels, being full of fixed ice on the banks, and floating ice in the channel."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 781.

Mar. — Baroness Riedesel writes of this time and of the succeeding summer: ". . . the small-pox was raging violently in the city. . . .

". . . At the end of the winter General Tryon sailed for England, but just before his departure, he sent to my house, unbeknown to me, magnificent furniture, tapestry, carpets, and curtains, besides a set of silk hangings for an entire room. . . .

"About this time our friendly relations began with our excellent friend General Clinton, who was the general-in-chief of the English army in the southern provinces of America. . . . His country residence was magnificent, a most beautiful situation, orchard and 1780 Mar. — meadow, and the Hudson river running directly in front of the house. [Clinton occupied the Beekman House on the East River—see O 20, 1778.] Everything was placed at our disposal, including fruits of the most delicious flavor; indeed, of this latter article we had more than we could eat. Our servants feasted on peaches even to satiety, and our horses, which roamed through the orchards, eagerly ate the fruit from the trees, disdaining that upon the ground, which every evening we had gathered up and given to the pigs to fatten them. It seems almost incredible, but nevertheless it is true, that with nothing but this fruit we fattened six pigs, the flesh of which was capital, only the fat was somewhat soft. Peach, apricot, and other fruit-trees, are raised here, without espaliers, and have trunks as thick as those of ordinary trees.

"Not far from us were the Hell-gates, which are dangerous breakers for those ships that pass through them up the river. We often saw ships in danger, but only one was wrecked and went to pieces during our stay at this place.

"General Clinton came often to visit us, but in hunter's dress, accompanied by only one aid-de-camp. . . . The last time he came to see us, he had with him the unfortunate—as he afterwards became—Major André, who, the day afterward, set out upon the fatal expedition, in which he was captured by the Americans, and afterwards hung as a spy. It was very sad that this preeminently excellent young man should have fallen a victim to his zeal and his kind heart, which led him to undertake such a precarious errand instead of leaving it to older and known officers, to whom properly the duty belonged, but on whom on that very account (as they would be more exposed to danger), he wished to save.

"We passed much of our time at this most agreeable place; but our contentment was broken in upon by a malignant fever [probably a virulent form of malaria], that prevailed in New-York and of which, in our family alone, twenty fell ill; eight dangerously. Among these eight were my husband and my daughter Gustava. . . . every day persons would tell me of fifty or sixty fresh burials, which certainly did not tend to raise my spirits. The heat which the sick suffered was so intense that their pulse beat one hundred and thirty-five times in a minute. All our servants were sick, . . . At night I was often busied in making for my patients a lemonade of salts of wormwood mixed with lemon juice, sugar and water. By which means, as all the sick in the house had them, I used up in the space of two weeks, two full boxes of lemons, each box containing five hundred.

". . . The pastor, Mylius, and our trusty yager, Rockel, both of whom remained well, assisted me by turns watching at night. . . . At length all of our household who were sick were restored to health, and not one died, a result that abundantly paid me for all my trouble.

"We remained the entire summer of 1780, upon this lovely estate."—Baroness Riedesel, Letters and Journals (trans. by Stone, 1867), 177–87.

2 Lieut. Von Krafft records in his journal: ". . . we were mustered by an Englishman in the old Eingiessen Church [Dutch Church on Nassau St.], in which horses or other animals were sometimes kept, on the square of Crown [Liberty] Street."—Von Krafft's Jour., 106.

3 "Took the Examination of George Welding or rather George Plater the former being an assumed name for Disguize. He came from Philad: County last Saturday & arrived here on Tuesday

"His accounts agree with others respecting the want of Supplies for the American army & the Change of People's Minds since the Taxes.

"A Bill depending in the Assembly at Trenton to oblige Collectors of Taxes to accept Certificates of money [see F 25] due on Sales to Commissaries If not carried he says a Bomb will burst.

"Congress seems studious to make an Artificial Scarcity of Paper Money to raise its Value. but this is only damming up the Current that must flow with double Fury, when they pay their Debts as they will be obliged to do or declare their Bankruptcy."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

4 Inhabitants of the city having complained that they were being improperly billetted upon by employees of the barrack department, the commandant orders that a board of inquiry meet at the city hall on March 9. No billet shall be issued, except in prescribed form, signed by the barrack master or one of his assistants, and after examination of the house intended to be billetted upon.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 6, 1780.

According to David Sproat, the British commissary of prisoners, the American prisoners on board the "Good Hope," on this day (error for F 24, q.v.), "wilfully, maliciously and wickedly burnt the best prison ship in the world." In vindication of British humanity, he adds, "The perpetrators of this horrid crime were not hanged but ordered to the provost. Mar. 5

"The prison ship at this time lay in the Wallabough near to a number of transport ships; the people belonging to them were so alert in snatching the prisoners from the flames, that but two out of some hundreds were missing. That is what I suppose the Congress alludes to when they say that they 'were indiscriminately thrown into the holds of prison ships':—They were indeed without distinction put on board the nearest ship called the 'Woodlands' where they remained for a short time, until the ships 'Strombolo' and 'Scorpion' were got ready for their reception. But the officers were always admitted to parole on Long Island in that pleasant village Jamaica until the 10th of July last when many of them had broke their parole and otherways behaved so ill, that it was refused them.

"This alteration had not taken place above two months when the prisoners were all moved on board the ship 'Jersey' where there is a variety of apartments for officers and plenty of room between decks for the men."—From Sproat's letter to Skinner, dated Jan. 29, 1781, in Banks' David Sproat and Naval Prisoners in the War of the Rev. (1909), 43–44.

"Gaine's Paper of this Day has a Part of Platers Intelligence [see Mr 3] thrown into the Form of an Extract from a Letter from Jersey [see F 25]. 6

"The multitude rise in their Confidence and begin to despise the Rebels as at their last Shifts. There is a general Sighing for the New garrison."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

The commissioners and governours of the "Royal Hospital for Seamen at Greenwich" (England) having empowered Supt.-Gen. Andrew Elliot at New York to receive forfeited and unclaimed shares of prize bounties in this province, according to various acts of parliament, Elliot publishes a notice that such bounty money is payable to him through the agents for the prizes condemned by the court of vice admiralty.—Royal Gaz., Mr 11, 1780. See also S 10, 1779. 9

The state legislature passes an act authorizing the immediate sale of part of the forfeited estates (see O 22, 1779), in order that money may be raised "for providing the Troops of this State, in the Service of the United States, with Clothing and other Necessaries."—Laws of N. Y., 3rd sess., chap. 51 (printed by Holt, 1782). The act was amended on Oct. 7.—Ibid., 4th sess., chap. 13. 10

A number of "Women belonging to the 37th Regiment," having taken possession of "a House near the Bowery Lane . . . known by the name of the Casina," Maj.-Gen. Pattison directs that they "be immediately removed."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 376. "

Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen, "Commanding his Majesty's Forces, upon New-York Island, Long-Island, Staten-Island, and Posts depending, &c.," issues a proclamation giving protection and encouragement to the possessors of farms and gardens, "for the Purpose of raising plentiful Supplies of Grain, Forage, and Vegetables." Persons damaging stock or produce, farm houses, orchards, gardens, fences, etc., will "be punished with the Utmost Severity."—Royal Gaz., Mr 11, 1780. 11

By order of the commandant, the officers of police issue a new regulation regarding the quality, weight, and price of bread. It requires that "all bread made of sweet flour, of the first quality, must be baked into long loaves of two pounds each, stamped with the initials of the Baker's name, and sold for Fourteen Coppers each loaf;" also that "all bread made of merchantable flour, of an inferior quality, must be baked into round loaves, weighing two pounds and one half each," similarly stamped, and sold at the same price. "Any Baker or retailer of bread, who shall be convicted of demanding or receiving any more or greater sum than Fourteen Coppers for each loaf . . ., shall be fined Ten Pounds for every such offence." Jeronimus Alstyne is appointed inspector of bread; he is required "constantly to visit the several bake houses in this city, and to make seizure of all such bread as he may find deficient;" this he shall send to the almshouse. The offender's name will be published; while, for a second offence, he will be fined £50, and, on the third offence, a stop will be put to his baking.—Royal Gaz., Mr 18, 1780. 15

Maj.-Gen. Pattison has allotted the French Church in King St. "

1780 Mar. 15 for the reception of ordnance stores.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 379. This was the Eglise du St. Esprit (at the present 18–22 Pine St.). It was badly damaged, and remained out of use until 1796 (q. v.), when it was rebuilt.—Wittmeyer, Hist. Sketch of the Eglise Françoise; L. M. R. K., III: 932.

17 Stalls and standings in the several markets are to be sold on this day "at the house of Mr. John Roome, inn-keeper, the corner of Water-street and the Fly-Market."—N. Y. Merc., F 28, 1780.

21 Maj.-Gen. James Robertson, the new governour, arrives. Tryon intends to avail himself of the king's permission to return to England. The British and provincial troops within the British lines come under the command of Gen. Robertson, who is the "Senior British Officer here." Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen has ordered reports from the corps to be made to Robertson.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 787; Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. The new governour was commanding officer here at the time of the fire in 1776.—Ibid., 686.

22 Two detachments of British troops, one from Kingsbridge under Lieut.-Col. Howard, and the other from New York City under Lieut.-Col. Macpherson, cross over to Jersey to make a joint attack upon the "Rebel Cantoonments" near Happer's Town. On the morning of the 23d, Howard and his men surprised between 200 and 300 Americans who, after making "a shew of defence," retreated "with precipitation." Macpherson did not arrive in time to give Howard much assistance, and all but 64 of the Continentals escaped.—Royal Gaz., Mr 29, 1780. Cf. Gen. Knyphausen's report of the incursion as rendered to Germain on Mar. 27 (q. v.).

23 Maj.-Gen. James Robertson produces his commission as governour, and Andrew Elliot as a lieutenant-governour. They take the usual oaths, and the council and deputy-secretary are sworn in. Gov Robertson publishes his commission at the city hall.—Cal. Coun. Min., 507; N. Y. Merc., Mr 27, 1780. Elliot had been supt.-gen. of police.—Ibid., Ap 3, 1780.

Wm. Smith's record of the event states: "We read the Commission [Robertson's] with Tryon's Consent in a Room opposite to his [Tryon's] Bedroom fearing it would be too much for him to hear it and then administered the Oaths in his Presence to the new Gov^{r}—On which he delivered the Great Seal & a N^{o} of Papers—We then returned & took the Oaths ourselves. And afterwards proceeded to the Balcony of the City Hall from whence after Procl^{n} to keep Silence it was read again.—The Day concluded in a Dinner at General Tryon's which he could not attend."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

27 Lieut.-Gen. Knyphausen writes from New York to Lord George Germain: "I have the honour to inform your Lordship, that since General Clinton's departure from hence on the 26th of Dec. last, we have had the longest and most severe winter that ever was remembered. All was continent: and horses with heavy carriages could go over the ice into the Jerseys from one island to another; and it is only since the 20th of February that the Rivers and Straights have been navigable.

"The rebels thought to avail themselves of this easy communication and threatened an attack upon Staten-Island, where there were about 1800 men under the command of Brigadier General Stirling, who were pretty well intrenched. For this purpose General Washington, whose army was hutted at Morris-Town, sent a detachment of 2700 men, with six pieces of cannon, two mortars, and some horse, commanded by Lord Stirling, who arrived on the island early in the morning of the 15th of January [q. v.], our advanced posts having retired upon their approach. They formed the line; and having made some movements in the course of that day, withdrew in the night, after having burnt one house, pillaged some others, and carried off with them about 200 head of cattle. The day of their arrival on the island I embarked 600 men to attempt a passage, and support General Stirling; but the floating ice prevented their success, and obliged them to return. I imagine that the appearance of these transports, with troops on board, which they could see towards the close of the day, induced them to make this sudden retreat, as they could not tell what success they might have. Some prisoners were made in their retreat.

"Some days after [see Ja 25] an advanced post, which they had at Newark, consisting of one company, was surprized and taken by a detachment from hence, and from Paulis-Hook, under the command of Major Lumm; and the same day General Stirling sent another detachment under Lieut. Col. Buskirk, who surprized the picquet guard at Elizabeth-Town, and made two Majors, two Captains, and 47 men prisoners of war. Both these enterprizes were effected without any loss on our s'de. Some time after [see F 2] General Mathew sent a detachment of guards and provincial horse, under the command of Lieut. Col. Norton, to attack a post at John's house upon the White Plains. This did not succeed entirely to his wishes; but the rebels who were posted in a house were however attacked and dislodged, with the loss of 40 men killed and 97 made prisoners, among whom were 1 Lieut. Colonel, 1 Major, and 5 inferior officers. We had 3 killed and 15 wounded. Mar. 27

"In the night of the 22d of this month [q. v.] we partly surprized and took a rebel post in the Jersies, consisting of 250 men, of whom we made only 65 prisoners, owing to two embarkations, one from hence under Lieutenant-Col. Macpherson and another from Kingsbridge under Lieut. Colonel Howard, not arriving at the appointed time. Our loss upon this occasion was very inconsiderable. Capt. Armstrong of the 42d regiment is wounded. By these little enterprizes during the winter, as far as we can ascertain, we have made 320 prisoners, and killed about 65 of the enemy.

"By the best intelligence I have been able to get, General Washington's army at Morris-Town consists of about 5000 men, besides militia. There has been a great desertion among them. Tired of the war, and dissatisfied with the depreciated value of their money, a general discontent pervades the whole army."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 3, 1780.

"Fuel was so very scarce, that garden fences, old sheds, &c. were taken down to supply the want of cord-wood. . . . Provisions were as scarce as fuel. Everybody, except the rich and the dissolute, was put upon short allowance. Potatoes were sold for a guinea per bushel! while biscuits, made of oatmeal, as coarse, and containing as little nourishment, as ground straw, were served out to the [British] troops. Spring

"Early in the spring the Cork Fleet arrived, and brought provisions in abundance. Fine rose-butter was sold immediately at 2s. 2d. per lb. and almost everybody was soon relieved and made comfortable."—From an account of the life of one Thomas Gardner, in pamphlet vol. No. 238, p. 58, N. Y. H. S.

De Voe states that probably the Old Slip Market was among the "old sheds" torn down for fire wood, as he finds no mention of it after this time.—Market Book, 109.

There is on record, of this month, a "Return of each Provinces proportion of the Specific Tax for the support of an Army of 80,000 men for 3 years; accord^{g} to a resolution of Congress pass'd in April 1780." New York furnished 1,120,000 lbs. of beef or pork, 13,969 bbls. of flour, 500 tons of hay or fodder, 68,558 gals. of rum, and 30,000 bbls. of corn."—From MS. among the loose Robertson Papers, in N. Y. P. L. Apr. —

"General Robertson writes to me for a Draft of the Instrument to declare a Part of this Province at the King's Peace with Draft of a Letter from him to S^{r} H Clinton urging that act without delay. I send him both in a Letter before Dinner."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 1

The draft of the proclamation reads: "Whereas His Majesty hath been graciously pleased by his Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Great Britain . . . to appoint and authorize me to be his Commissioner among other Purposes therin mentioned to execute certain Powers to such Commissioner intrusted by a statute or Act of Parliament passed in the 16th Year of his Majesty's Reign intituled an Act to prohibit all Trade & Intercourse &c

"And whereas it appears to me that it will tend to incourage many well affected Persons to exert themselves in suppressing the present Rebellion to proceed to execute the said Commission in divers Parts of the Province or Colony of New York I do therefore in his Majesty's Name by this Proclamation declare the Island of New York Staten Island and the Island called Nassau or Long Island with the several Small Islands comprehended within the City and County of Newyork & within Kings County & Queen's County on Long Island af^{d} and every Port District and Place within the aforementioned Limits to be at the Peace of his Majesty."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 194, in N. Y. P. L.

In some "Notes upon the Enquiry, whether it is expedient to declare any Part of the Province of New York at the King's Peace, and to revive the civil Government?," dated May 25, 1780, Smith wrote:

"All I can say upon the first Question is, that I do not at present perceive any Inconvenience, in leaving the Merchants of 1780 Apr. 1 the City of New York, under the old commercial Regulations; and certainly if the Restraints of the prohibitory Act were to operate as Punishments, the Extinction of them, must be grateful to such as are loyal Subjects, and win upon others; who if they adventure at Sea, will find no Enemies in their Course, but such as are so to the Reunion, Peace & Welfare of the whole Empire. . . .

"The second Question . . . is not so easily answered— . . . Perhaps the greatest Danger is in postponing it.

"The compleat Revival of the Civil Authority . . . will place every Character in a State of Responsibility to the Laws—A Condition ardently desired by some and dreaded by others. (1) it will be ungrateful to the Army.—(2) and certainly will be so to the few in profitable Situations under Military Favour—And (3) to those who exasperated by their Sufferings & Losses from the Hand of the Rebels, conceive perhaps erroneously, that the Restoration of the Government may be conducive to the Gratification of their Revenge. . . .

"A wise General will not suffer the Laws to check the Success of the Royal Arms . . . and it is also clear, that the Risk of setting it [civil authority] up, ought not to be ventured, until there is Ground to suppose, that a Legislature can be convened, as well to prevent by new Laws, the clashing of the two Powers to the public Injury; as to procure that Aid which the Country ought to yield, to accommodate the Army, and to facilitate the military Operations for the general Weal. . . .

". . . Until we get a proper Assembly, let the military Powe continue, & the Acts be suspended that are to give a free Course to the Judicial & Executive Authority; and this State may be further prolonged by the Dissolution of an Assembly, if an unfavorable Temper should appear to be obstinate, against the conciliatory & other Measures requisite to promote the Interests of the Crown and the common Felicity. . . ."—Ibid., folio 194. The proclamation was never published.

" Gov. Robertson issues a proclamation prohibiting persons from cutting wood without permission on land that does not belong to them. Great devastation has been caused by cutting down the woods.—Royal Gaz., My 3, 1780; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 694. See Ap 3.

" "Gen. Pattison observed to me," says Smith, "that none but my Daughter attended the public amusements. I mortified him by saying my Wife & I thought ourselves too old. He was astonished being himself near 70—I withdrew at 8 after Coffee & he sent his Aid de Camp after me to play a Rubber of whist. I told him I never touched Cards—I suppose I have made a valedictory Visit. Heaven preserve a Nation of Triflers."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

3 Gov. Robertson's proclamation "published by Rivington last Saturday [Ap 1, q.v.] ag^{t} cutting Wood displeases some but the Long Island Farmers would he said carry him on their Backs."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

6 Maj.-Gen. Pattison issues a proclamation prohibiting the inhabitants of New York from throwing dirt, garbage, etc. into the streets, docks, open lots, or ruins, "to the southward of Fresh Water;" and ordering that it be carried away once a week at their own expense, "and thrown into the open lots in the Swamp, (near the Jews burying-ground) which are under water." Regulations are also given for street cleaning, and against incumbrances. William Hill is appointed officer to enforce the order.—Royal Gaz., Ap 19, 1780; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 694–95, 713. See Ap 28, 1781.

8 Members of the "Antient Reformed Dutch Congregation" thank Trinity vestry for the use of St. George's Chapel during the time their church "was occupied by his Majesty's Troops." They are now no longer in need of the Episcopal Church because Maj.-Gen. Pattison has taken "the earliest opportunity (The Recovery of the Sick and wounded soldiery wou'd permit) of returning the Old Dutch Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

9 "Sailors in a Merchant Vessel from this Port lately rose upon their Captain to carry the Vessel to an Enemy's Port. Gen^{l} Robertson writes to me to bring the Pirates to Trial but there being no Commission here & the Record of it sent to England as Bayard says by M^{r} Tryon I advised the Gov^{r} to send them Home to be tried on 28 Hen^{ry} 8th—The Cap^{t} and Sailors were retaken by the Galetea Sloop of War & brought in here."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Tryon, who "took the Air to Day for the first Time since the 9 March," tells Smith that Gen. Robertson has not a "Scrape of a Penn" from Clinton and that he (Tryon) hands over to the general "as his only Rule a Copy of the Letter of Service left with himself. If he had not done this Robertson could not have drawn out a Shilling of money for Pay Subsistance or Contingences."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Apr. 9

Clinton and Arbuthnot summon Charleston, S. C. to surrender, promising "protection to the Inhabitants & their Property," but the Americans refuse.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See My 12. 10

It is resolved by Trinity vestry "that (as soon as it shall be thought advisable) application be made for Setting on foot a Lottery or Lotterys to raise the Sum of Two thousand pounds for rebuilding the Charity School House in this City."—Trin. Min. (MS.). 11

Gov. Robertson issues the following proclamation, which is written in a conciliatory vein: "The King having been graciously pleased to honor me with the Care of a Province, where, in a long Residence, I have contracted an Esteem for some, and an Affection for many of its Inhabitants, I proceed with great Pleasure to an-nounce his benevolent Intentions. 15

"It is his Majesty's Wish, by the Revival of the Civil Authority to prove to all the Colonies and Provinces, that it is not his Design to govern America by Military Law, but that they are to enjoy all the Benefits of a local Legislation and their former Constitution.

"To this End I have brought out the Royal Appointments for forming the Council, and supplying the Places of Lieutenant Governor and Chief Justice. And in Concurrence with the Commander in Chief of the British Forces who is also his Majesty's Commissioner for restoring Peace to the Colonies, I shall, as speedily as the public Exigencies will permit, give order for opening the Courts of Judicature, and convening the Assembly; and in general proceed to the Execution of the Powers reposed in me for the free Course and complete Re-Establishment, both of the Legislative and Executive Authority. . . . [The proclamation continues, at unusual length, to define the government's aims.]

"Until I meet you regularly in General Assembly, for the Restoration of mutual Confidence, and the remedying of private as well as public Evils, I pledge myself to Men of all Classes, in every Part of the Province, that it is the compassionate Desire of your Sovereign, and of the Parent Country, to unite in Affection as in Interest, with the Colonies planted by her hand, and which have long flourished under her Care,—that the Suggestions of her Intention to impair their Rights and Privileges, are the Arts of Malice and Faction,—and that every Insinuation made by the domestic Enemies of Great-Britain, of her being disposed to abandon the Provinces to internal Anarchy, and the Mischiefs of their jarring Interests and Claims . . . is equally false and malicious. . . .

"Less inclined to reproach than to conciliate, to aggravate than to forget, even the Guilt of those, who, privy to the repeated Calls of Great-Britain to Friendship, upon Terms adequate to the Desire and Expectation of their Constituents, yet nevertheless forbore to reveal them, . . . I exhort them to seek an early Refuge in the abundant Clemency of the Crown, from the Perils to which they have exposed themselves, by Measures fraudulently concerted and tyrannically inforced. . . .

"Towards redressing the Disorders, arising from the Loss or Want of Charters, I recommend it to all concerned, to apply without Delay in the ordinary Course for Charters, which shall be granted as soon as Civil Authority takes Place.

"As to the public Books of Records, so important to your Titles and Estates in all Parts of the Colony, and formerly lodged in the Secretary's Office, I understand that they were separated from the rest, by the provident Circumspection of my Predecessor, . . . and having been afterwards sent Home for safe Custody, you may rely upon their being carefully preserved, and duly returned as soon as the common tranquility is restored.

"I now call upon every Individual in the Colony, to shew his Allegiance, Fidelity and Patriotism, by affording his Assistance towards accomplishing the King's most gracious Design of restoring the Blessings of Peace and good Government: And they who shall most distinguish themselves by their laudable Efforts for these good Purposes, will most assuredly best recommend themselves to the Royal Approbation and Favour."—Royal Gaz., Ap 19, 1780.

In researches undertaken for the preparation of this Chronology,

1780 Apr. 15 it has been discovered that the governour secured Wm. Smith to draft this proclamation for him. Smith says in his diary that the proclamation was discussed, prior to its publication, at a meeting of the governour with his council; "it is almost verbatim what I sent him in the 3d Draft."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI, under Ap 15, 1780. See Ap 18 and 21.

On July 31 Smith wrote: "Not Having seen the Govr's Procln of 15 April I urge [his] delivering me several Hundred Copies to be issued—I have frequently suggested the Necessity of its being republished."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

This proclamation resulted from instructions sent by Germain to Robertson, dated July 9, to revive the "Civil Constitution," and to exercise authority as "Civil Govr," under a new commission for that purpose which accompanied Germain's letter.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 767.

Civil government was not restored, however, until after the British evacuation (see N 25, 1783). For another attempt to bring it about, see Mr 21, 1782.

18 "Crowds are perusing the Procln [see Ap 15] affixed to Rivington's Corner & Mr White tells me it goes down with the resentful like chopp'd Hay. Will Bayard & Ashfield rave at the Liberality of Sir H Clinton's Procln Those who are in Rebel Houses dread being dislodged by the Penitence of the Proprietors."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Smith writes: "Elliot to Day & Axtel and White Yesterday press me for the Draft of the proposed Address from the Council [to Gov. Robertson]. I accordingly carried it to White in Confidence this Afternoon that he might inform me how far it would accord with the vindictive Rage of High Church & Refugees. Elliot is to call for it to-Morrow resolved if I alone join him to address the Governor."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. On April 21, he added: "Mr Elliot calls here with another Form of Address which he read. He has objections to mine which I am only left to suspect from the Frivolity of such as he ventures to express—That it is too long. That we ought not to expose ourselves to a Paper War—That he can never join in what I have said of the Taxing Claims. He always thought G. B. had done so much for her Colonies that they ought to be taxed

"I objected to his that it was a meer Compliment of no Use to the Crown. It would do well enough if the Rebellion was broken down but contributed nothing to it—It would be laughed at—Satisfied no Man nor afforded Conviction for making a single Proselyte &c &c.

"He seemed much affrighted—paid Compliments but must act for himself & be convinced.

"I at length told him that I would agree to a Complimentary Address if nothing else was the Choice of the Majority & he catched at my Proposal that both Drafts should be circulated among the Members & that we should then meet to compose a third. . . .

"Elliot is either imbarrassed by old Declarations of his Principle for taxing America—or by his Belief that Ministers still mean it, or by his Cowardice

"I leave the Council to his Management & their own Course. In the Path of Uprightness there is Safety—And as to myself am determined on a uniform & Systematic Conduct, bending to Occurrences only to facilitate it.—The Draft he produced after having Mine 24 Hours was not a single Sheet & of a contemptible Diction."—Ibid., under Ap 21. A draft of Smith's proposed address is among the unbound Wm. Smith MSS., folio 197. See Ap 24.

21 "I find great Jealousies among the Refugees of me as the Author of the Governor's Procln [see Ap 15]—Their Wrath recommends both me & the Measure to the Disaffected in Town & that may render both more pleasing to the Rebels beyond our Lines."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

24 "Mr Wallace carried the two Drafts of the Address [see Ap 18] to De Lancey who would not join in either nor hear mine read. He said he would not address after having served in Council 22 years & the setting another over his Head.

"He went to Morris who chose no Address but said his present dependt Circumstances obliged him to join in a Complimentary one if the Rest insisted—He did not like neither the Complts paid to Govr Tryon, who had never shown any Regard for him nor would it please the People.

"I find Wallace not very fond of this Business. I spoke my Mind freely.—That I should not quarrel if there was none—& would join either in a meer Complt or another like my Draft—That the latter or something like it was our Duty & would answer many good Purposes & that I begged him to remember what I had said—Wallace is to report to Elliot . . . Apr. 24

"I have done my Duty—And perhaps shall find myself best served by the . . . Obstacles to the Address. Certainly so—if the Crown does not finally prevail."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. On the next day, Smith, Elliot, Wallace, and Axtel met at White's. "Wallace reported that De Lancey would not come & that Morris was gone on a Party of Pleasure to the Hook but had said he would join in an Address that was meerly Compliment

"Of Course to gain Morris my Draft was given up & they (White only excepted) refused to say a Word of the Spanish or Irish News—We then resolved to adhere to Complt in the Strain of Elliots Draft which I take Home to change the Diction.—It surprized Elliot that I refused to do it there & I promised to send it to his office as I should alter it to be copied by Mr Seton.—I dropp'd that nothing was lost by Delay for if the Rebels supposed we disliked the Govrs Proclamation they would approve it the more, for they considered us as Tories."—Ibid., under Ap 25. See Ap 27.

" The "sons of St. George" celebrate "the festivity of their tutelar Saint, at Mr Strachan's Queen's Head Tavern, where an elegant dinner was prepared for that purpose." Nineteen loyal toasts were drunk, and "the day spent with every social enjoyment."—My 1, 1780.

27 The governour thinks an attack from a French fleet is "not improbable" and "tells me," says Smith, "he is busy with the Commodore on the Project of sinking 20 Hulks in the Channel at the Hook which is but 800 yards wide—No works at the Point can be of much use—The Expense of the Hulks loaded with Stone about £1000—Not to be sunk till the moment of the Enemy's approach."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Smith's revision of Elliot's draft of an address of welcome to Gen. Robertson (see Ap 24), is being circulated for the signatures of the council members.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. On April 28, Smith recorded: "The Govr tells me Elliot was with him yesterday upon the Subject of an Address, but as he found it meerly complimentary & the Council not unanimous he rather declined the Receipt of it. Opposition would say the Minister had sent out a Man not agreable to the People. I replied that every Evidence of our Refusal to express Joy at his Arrival would the more reconcile the People without the Lines to his appointment."—Ibid., VI, under Ap 28. He added, on April 29: "Elliot calls here with a Face of Concern—intimates that the Govr disliked our Address as paying no Complt to him & much to Tryon & that this was the true Objection—I told him what the Govr had said yesterday. He then showed me one he [Robertson] wou'd recieve & asked my Hand to it—I altered a few Words & signed it tho' I really think the Composition contemptible."—Ibid., VI, under Ap 29. See My 3.

28 Lafayette returns from France to Boston bringing news of an expected expedition under Count de Rochambeau. On May 10, he rejoined Washington, after an absence of about 15 months.—Tower, Marquis de Lafayette in the Am. Rev., II: 106, 108; and see Ja 7, 1779.

" "There is an arrival of 47 [British] transports from South Carolina at New York."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VIII: 257.

May 2 The chamber of commerce, in an address bearing this date, signed by Isaac Low, president, congratulates Gov. Robertson on his arrival.—Royal Gaz., My 13, 1780.

3 Lord Germain writes from Whitehall to Gov. Robertson, expressing the king's approbation of the "spirited Behavior" of the inhabitants of New York "in so cheerfully and unanimously taking up Arms and embodying [organizing] for the Defence of the Town," when the rivers were frozen up. The governour published this letter on June 28.—Royal Gaz., Je 28, 1780.

" Rivington prints the following address to Gov. Robertson from Andrew Elliot, Chas. W. Apthorp, Wm. Smith, Hugh Wallace, Henry White, and Wm. Axtell, "appointed by the Royal Instructions to form the Council for the Province of New-York:"

"Deeply impressed by sentiments of loyalty, and gratitude to our most gracious Sovereign, for his paternal affection and attention to the happiness and interests of his subjects in America, announced to us by your Excellency's Proclamation [see Ap 15], it is with the highest satisfaction, we congratulate your Excellency, on your appointment, to the care of a province, of which, your long residence, has given you so competent a knowledge, and where, the 1780 May 3 inhabitants, are from experience, so sensible of the confidence they may repose in your abilities, inclination, and exertions to promote their happiness.

"The ambitious and self-interested promoters of rebellion, to support their unauthorised, and perilous combinations, with designing, popish, and arbitrary powers, have, by concealing, and misrepresenting, the many generous and humane offers made by Great Britain, for restoring public tranquility, brought on the inhabitants of this once happy country, every evil they at first taught them to dread.

"Their personal estates are now wrested from them by taxation, their real ones sunk to the par of their paper dollars, their commerce annihilated, their civil rights and priviledges trampled upon by Congress and Committee Men, and their persons liable to be dragged into the field at all seasons to perform the duties of a Soldier.

"In the sympathy we feel for our suffering country, nothing can be more grateful to us, than the benevolence of the Proclamations issued by his Majesty's Commissioner, and your Excellency, so amply affording to the inhabitants of America, the means for extricating themselves from their present distresses; and whereby they are assured that Great-Britain is still willing to restore to the colonies, the benefits of local legislation, with their former constitutions, a participation in her extensive commerce, and an exemption from all taxations not imposed by themselves.

"His Majesty's attention to the immediate happiness of this province, by empowering your Excellency to embrace the earliest opportunity, consistent with the public exigencies, to open the Courts of Judicature, convene an Assembly, and completely re-establish both the Legislative and Executive Authority, will, we are convinced, rouse, and bring forward, every aid requisite to enable your Excellency to fulfil his Majesty's most gracious intentions.

"We most cheerfully concur with your Excellency, in the applause so justly due to the merits of your predecessor, under whose administration this province, when connected with, and protected by Great-Britain experienced uninterrupted felicity.

"From the firmest principles of loyalty and personal confidence in your Excellency, you may be assured, of our co-operating in every measure conducive to the honour of the crown, and the common prosperity and interests of our fellow subjects."—Royal Gaz., My 3, 1780. An address very similar to this, endorsed "Mr Elliots Draft of an Address to Govr Robertson," is among the unbound Wm. Smith MSS., folio 197. See also Ap 27.

4 "Various Accounts that Charles Town surrendered 12 April & that Sir Henry fell in the attack—I believe one Half of this Tale—The first Part of it & no more

"No Taxes levying nor Drafts making in the Country. So low the Power of the Usurpers—They wait for the French Troops expected in June . . .

"This is precisely the Moment to invade Jersey or to attack the Highland Forts."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Lieut-Gen. Knyphausen plans to complete immediately "the interior Line of Works for the Defence of this City." Gen. Pattison calls together the captains of militia, and informs them that, "Among other Works it is proposed to erect some new Redoubts, and City Militia being now Regularly embodied for the express Purpose of Co-operating in every Defence of the city, it is very much my wish that they may have the Credit in Conjunction with His Majesty's Troops, of raising one of these intended Redoubts themselves, to bear, as a lasting monument of their Loyalty, the name of the Citizen's Redoubt."—N. Y. H. S. Col. (1895), 392–93.

This "Line of Defence" extended "from the North to the East River by Bunker's Hill" and demanded "a working Party daily . . . of 500 Men." The militia companies furnished "300 of that number," and Gen. Pattison, in another letter of May 29, said: "they have ever since labour'd very cheerfully, without taking Pay or Provisions & have now almost finished the work."—Ibid., 178–79. The militia completed its part of the work about June 3.—Royal Gaz., Je 3, 1780.

" Wm. Smith is sworn as chief-justice at the governour's house.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; Mag. Am. Hist., Je, 1881, p. 429. He had been appointed exactly one year earlier (see My 4, 1779). Because military government never yielded to civil government under the British régime (see Mr 21, 1782), Smith never functioned in this office.

In an order to the barrack master, Maj.-Gen. Pattison directs that "Mr Samuel Bayard, Secretary of the Province, is to occupy the lower part of the House in which Mrs Bridgham now lives in Smith Street, and she is to remove into the upper part with her family."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 393. May 4

News reaches New York of the arrival of Lafayette at Boston. —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 7

"Tho' the Russel (Capt Drake) of 74 Guns & a Guard Ship lay at the Hook a London Ship in Sight was attacked & carried off by three Rebel Privateers last Sunday afternoon. The Merchants are incensed—The Delight Sloop of War did not go down till yesterday. 10

"People grow very impatient at the Inactivity here and the want of Information from Carolina—All Incomers report that Charles Town is taken & Sir H [Clinton] killed.

"The Weather has been so cold that we have no Grass Feed yet. Most People imagine that 10 Days would overturn the Usurpation in Jersey. It begins to be surmized either that the British are tired or unwilling to terminate the War. But suppose we should convulse Jersey & on the arrival of the French leave it again? I think this a better Objection to the Excursion than the Want of Forage and the Danger to the Soldiers from the Dampness of the Ground." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

"Washington seems afraid to move an Inch," writes Smith, 11 "for fear of Desertions. For a Week past scarce a Day without People from the Country who all agree in accounts of the general Despair of supporting the Rebellion. The Crowding of the Hive will oblige us to swarm."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

At dinner yesterday, says Smith, "a Group of idle Generals " had been boasting of their weekly Toast at Roubalet's formerly De Lancey's House & now pleased themselves with the Prospect of Exhibitions at the Birth Day. My opinion says White is that the best Preparation for the Birth Day is to beat Washington before the French Reinforcemts arrive. They hung their heads & were as silent as Birds in a Thunder Gust. But the Smile of officers of lower Rank present prevented his qualifying or retracting the Severity of a well placed Reproof upon a Sett of Idlers."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

Smith writes: "[Day before yesterday] I read to him [John " Thurman] the MSS to which I have given the Title of the Candid Review [see Jl 20], as well as the rejected Address [see Ap 27], with a View to stir up something like it from other Bodies & an applica for a Charter to the City of N Y & Burrough of West Chester. He exclaims agt Elliot's Address & agt me for putting my Name to it, averring his opinion at the same Time that it is no Composition of mine & beneath my Character."—Wm. Smith's Diary, (MS.), VI.

British forces under Clinton capture Charleston (S. C.).— 12 Winsor, VI: 474; Robertson's Jour. (MS.): In his diary, under May 16, Smith writes: "We have heard nothing certain but its [Charleston's] Investiture about the 12 of April [May 12] since which it would seem the Congress have had Nothing from that Town. This delay is very injurious to the King's Interest in this Quarter especially as we have nearly lost the best opportunity for seizing the Highland Forts which the Rebel Army will probably soon think of moving to unless we throw a Body of Troops into Bergen County."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Official information of the surrender of Charleston did not reach New York until May 29 (q.v.).

The 37th and 43d Regiments are reviewed "in the vicinity of 15 this city." All the general and other officers in town, both British and Hessian, and thousands of spectators are present.—Royal Gaz., My 17, 1780.

Patients and convalescents in the general hospitals of the city " "do daily purchase Spirituous Liquors from the Licens'd Public Houses, to the great detriment of their Health, and the subversion of good Order and Regularity." Such sales are now prohibited, by order of the commandant; and, "in order that no one shall be deceived, or plead the not knowing Convalescents from other Soldiers, all those who may be allowed to walk abroad as such in future, will wear the distinguishing mark of an H, made of blue Cloth, and sewed upon a conspicuous part of each Arm." Persons who induce patients to sell their clothing or the bedding and utensils of the hospitals will be amenable to court martial.—Royal Gaz., My 17, 1780.

Supt.-Gen. Andrew Elliot's reports regarding city funds under " his inspection, in account with the city treasurer, John Smyth.—N. Y. Merc., Je 5, 1780.

1780 May 16 From this time through the rest of the year, Washington considers campaign plans for attacking the enemy at New York.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), VIII: 282, 300, 341, 362, 368, 400; IX: 36–37, 144, 217, 228, 259, 275, 282, 288, 291, 310, 311, 496, 499; Tower, The Marquis de Lafayette in the Am. Revolution, II: 112 et seq. See also Ag 9.

" Goods and merchandise have lately been brought clandestinely into the city in considerable quantities, in violation of the established regulations (see Jl 17, 1777). These regulations are therefore revived and reinforced by a proclamation prohibiting the practice. —Royal Gaz., My 20, 1780.

18 "The Guadaloupe a Frigate of 28 Guns arrived last Night in 4 Weeks from S^{t} Kitts with 4 Prizes. A Report that the French Fleet has left Martinique for Georgia. Much anxiety for S^{r} H Clinton from whom we hear nothing except by a Rebel Paper that the Place had not surrendered 17th April."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Gen. Robertson pays tribute to Washington's alertness when he says to Smith: "Washington can always have 48 Hours Notice of our moving & that is enough for him to get away." Commenting on the failure of the British to make any attempt to occupy the "Highland Forts" (see My 12), Smith says: "If Great Britain recalled all her Generals & raised her Colonels her affairs would probably mend. Her principal officers are the Plants of Corruption. Her Distresses must increase before Men rise by merit for the service of the Day. The apology for our present Idleness is the Possibility of the French Fleets appearance here before that expected under Greaves.—We are therefore fiddling in the Planting of Cannon on the Shores & at the same Time amusing ourselves with Toasts, Plays &c."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Gov. Robertson reports to Germain that "everything is preparing for a vigorous defence on both the land and sea sides. Batterys are made and guns placed on them where ever they can most effectually dammage the enemy's ships, but these can only annoy," etc. He explains his plan of sinking vessels loaded with stones to obstruct the channel, if necessary. A "facine work that can contain one hundred men" has been constructed around the light-house. "A large square fort is built at Brooklyn heights, the works at Paulus Hook are strengthened, and these at Fort Knyphausen put in order—The towns people are employ'd in joining the redoubts near the town with lines."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 791–92.

19 A number of exchanged British naval prisoners arrive from Elizabeth-Town. "In lieu of Fat Beef, the poor fellows have had thirteen dried Claws per day, for a considerable time."—Royal Gaz., My 20, 1780.

21 A New Yorker writes from Sandy Hook to a friend in Edinburgh: "The army has not yet taken the field. The rebels in this quarter seldom molest us; and when they do appear, their numbers are so inconsiderable, that they retreat at the approach of any detachment. The Guadaloupe [see My 18] arrived here yesterday from the West Indies. In her way she took a Spanish ship of 22 guns, an American privateer, and three other prizes, which she brought in safe. She also brought an account that Admiral Parker had engaged the French fleet, and had taken and destroyed five sail of the line."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Je 30–Jl 3, 1780.

" Another letter from New York states: "Every person from New-Jersey and Pennsylvania who has lately come to this City, gives us a horrid description of the distress and oppression of the Rebels. And I am well informed, that Washington's Continental Army, now near Morris-Town, when they were lately reviewed by their Chief and the French Ambassador, did not exceed 3000 effective men, exclusive of those dispatched to the southward, and those under General De Calb. . . . We also hear, that the Indians have commenced hostilities on the Frontiers of this Province and New Jersey; in consequence of which, Governors Livingston and Clinton detached a party of Militia to oppose them; but the party was obliged to return for want of provisions."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Je 30–Jl 3, 1780.

23 Smith reports the presence in the city of "30 Farmers from Bergen County who had been drafted & must go into the Cont^{l} army or bear 100 Lashes. They say that being forced to be soldiers the People in General will elect the King's Service & the main Body come in in a fortnight."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

24 Washington's army, writes Smith, is reported "distressed for Provisions—in a mutinous Temper." Eleven regiments, of 2,200 men, make up the "Pensilvania Line," and the old army numbers "but 3800." The "Line" is disaffected and "speak daringly & defy the Rest. Say openly they will join the British and deliver up the army. Papers daily scattered thro' the Camp in such Language. The People in general of the like Mind—Friends say if the British now enter the Province the Soldiery will not suffer Washington to run away—The Country will join—Fayette promises nothing but Help if the British are defeated in the West Indies. No Accounts from Charles Town later than 17 April—It was then compleatly invested."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. May 24

" Rivington publishes in his paper of this date a long anonymous letter addressed to himself. It has been discovered in the researches connected with this work that Chief-Justice Wm. Smith was the author.

He begins by declaring that France and Spain do not wish the colonies to gain their independence. They merely intend "to feed the flames of contention," to exhaust, if possible, "the strength both of Great Britain and her Colonies," and then "to pour in foreign forces, for the compleat subjugation of the Colonies to their merciless dominion." After this, he continues:

"That they [France and Spain] should at present study to conceal this iniquitous intention, except from those who, for their assistance, are made interested in the plot is naturally to be supposed; but whether Monsieur la Luzerne, who has lately visited the Rebel camp, and the Marquis De la Fayette, who is come out for a second peep into the weakness of the country, . . . may not find America prepared for the avowal and execution of the vast and ambitious views of the House of Bourbon, is certainly worth the attention of a people long abused by false confidences, and indeed of every friend to humanity and the protestant Religion.

"Should these Popish emissaries in addition to that state of the country already sent home by Gerard, represent the Congress to be what they are, without credit abroad, or influence at home;—that their boasted army in the mountains of Morris-Town, consists of less than 4000 men, without pay, ill-clad, and reduced to eat dog's flesh for subsistence, and so nearly a mutinous dissolution, that the Pennsylvania line is nightly disarmed and guarded, and that all the rest of their force (except the besieged in Charlestown) is short of 2000 men, scattered in the Highlands, at Fort Stanwix, and in Virginia;—that even these insignificant troops are wasting daily by desertions, and the expirations of their terms, and that the Congress want the means, to find volunteers to replenish a camp that has nearly as many hutts as men: Such representations, I say, might induce the courts of Versailles and Madrid, to throw away the mask of their affected love to mankind. . . .

"It may afford some confirmation of the suspicion we ought to entertain, of the crafty designs of the common enemy of the British name and nation, to peruse certain passages from the new work of a celebrated Frenchman, I mean 'the political and philosophical speculations' of Mons. Linguet late of the Parliament of Paris." Smith summarizes Linguet's remarks on America as follows:

"The fate of the American colonies being now submitted to the decision of arms, it would be to no purpose to investigate the justice of their claims to independency. But I could wish to inquire of politicians in either hemisphere, whether they have seriously reflected on all the effects which such an independency may be expected to produce.

"In the first place, will not the success of the Americans be an endless source of divisions amongst themselves? From what we know of the human mind, ambition and a love of power will soon begin to actuate the operations of the Congress and the provincial assemblies . . . The example of seven little provinces near the Zuiderzee, which have preserved unity after success, and freedom notwithstanding their wealth, is by no means applicable to the vast, and almost boundless extent of the American colonies. . . . Nor have the Americans the same motive to a revolt that formerly influenced the Dutch, who were groaning under the most oppressive tyranny. . . .

"In the next place, the first manœvre of the Americans as independent states, will be to open an assylum to Europeans. . . . The crowd of active and restless minds, whom the hopes of a better fortune, and the dawn of liberty in a rising state, may attract to the western hemisphere, will not fail to multiply the seeds of disorder there . . .

"Supposing however these speculations to be ill founded, . . . still it must be acknowledged, that America when well peopled, will no longer have any occasion for the productions or assistance of 1780 May 24 Europe. . . . Its inhabitants, surrounded by seas which abound with fish; masters of the richest mines; in the neighbourhood of the West Indies; receiving without trouble, and without danger . . . sugar, indigo, . . . delicious fruits . . . spices, precious stones, and fine linen; . . . will soon become the masters of our destiny.

"It will then be from the necessity of things, that we shall depend on them, more than ever they depended upon us . . .

"But their abounding with gold and diamonds will be far from constituting the whole of their superiority over us; they will add to these, all the powers which states, as well as individuals, derive from the vigour of youth and a consciousness of prosperity. . . .

"Then, they will soon aim at crushing the languid powers of Europe. . . .

"The time of such a revolution is uncertain; but it will be inevitable if America should become flourishing and independent. . . ."—Royal Gaz., My 24, 1780.

Smith's authorship is revealed by entries in his diary. On May 23, he wrote: "I sent Rivington yesterday a few Lines to introduce a Passage or two from a late French Publication by Linquet late of the Parliament of Paris. . . . I have aimed to prevent its being mischievous but chiefly to publish Washington's Weakness, without giving umbrage to the Army here." He added, on May 24: "I was happy to find the Representation respecting the Rebel Army which I inserted in Rivington's Paper this Day so well & so early confirmed."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

25 Run-away negroes are prevented from crossing the North River; heretofore they have "become a burden to the Town."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 397.

26 The four Hessian battalions forming Maj.-Gen. Losberg's brigade are reviewed "upon the Exercising Ground near the Ship Yards."—N. Y. Merc., Je 5, 1780.

27 "The Drought is really alarming," writes Smith. "No rain since 4 April—It is scarce possible by the Coldness & Dryness of the Spring for Cattle to subsist upon grazing—Complaints come also of an Insect that besets the Buds of the Fruit Trees like the louse that last Fall consumed the Blades of Wheat."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

28 A court martial is ordered for tomorrow "at M^{r} Nicholas Bayard's House near Bunker's Hill."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 397.

29 Gen. Robertson sent for me early this morning, writes Smith, "to recieve the accounts by the Iris Frigate that left Charles Town 17th Inst.—Fort Sullivan surrendered 8. & Charles Town the 12 Inst. The whole Garison (6000) Prisoners of War we have left but 70 & the Rebels 900. during the Seige. The Iris was bound to Hallifax & put in here with Prizes—or we should have had no Intelligence yet. Gov^{r} Patterson has the only Letter—This was directed to him at Hallifax—It is of the 14 May from Sir And: S Hammond Lord Cornwallis was to move with the army the 15 to Cambdon 96 miles N W from Charles Town & thence into N Carolina among the Regulators—a wise course to break down the Usurpation in both Provinces."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. A Royal Gazette Extraordinary of June 8 (q.v.) was devoted entirely to news regarding the capture. See also Von Krafft's Jour., 111.

June 2 The Gordon "No-Popery" riots begin in London. Extracts from London letters, of July 5, describing the riots, appeared in Royal Gaz., S 6 and 9, 1780.

3 Archibald Robertson writes: "we sailed [from Charleston] & came to an anchor off Fort Sulivan [later known as Fort Moultrie]—took a drawing of the Fort."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" "Many exasperated," writes Smith, "at the Erection of an Orchestra on the N. Side of Chancel of Trinity Church for the Music and this sharpened still more by the Commandants Orders to widen the walk inwards which occasioned the removing of some Tomb Stones flattening certain Graves & Covering a Vault's Mouth.

"General Tryon told me last Night the Rector had consented. I shook my Head at it & spoke of the Tenderness of Mankind respecting the Rites of Sepulchre hinting that this Matter trifling as it might be thought by the Army would perhaps be spoke of in the House of Commons next Winter as a Breach of Decorum & an Injury to the King's Interest—It may cool & wean some warm Church men—At least it affords a Triumph to the Whig Interest in Town—The only good Effect it can have tho' that is far from being intended is to reconcile to the Erection of the Civil Authority."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Je 5.

The Associated and Militia Companies finish their part of the construction work on the "Citizens' Redoubt" near East River, and are thanked by Maj.-Gen. Pattison.—N. Y. Merc., Je 1780; see also Ap 29, and My 4. Gen. Pattison reported to Germain on July 4 that he had given this name to the redoubt, it having been constructed by the volunteer companies, and that the commander-in-chief had confirmed it.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 178, 184. June 3

" "George Forbes (Late of Whitehall Street) Begs leave to acquaint the nobility and gentry of this city, that he is removed to No. 299, Little Dock-Street, two doors from the Royal Exchange. . . ."—Royal Gaz., Je 3, 1780. See Ja 12, 1778.

Mayor Mathews, "attended by a most respectable body of our principal Citizens," presents an address to Gov. Robertson. Hope is expressed for the "speedy Suppression of this present unnatural Rebellion, and of the Re-establishment of Peace." A desire for the restoration, in the meantime, of civil government is manifested; although a word of commendation is spoken for the "just and equitable Military Establishment, whereby the internal Order and Police of this City have been wisely regulated and conducted." 4

In the course of a brief answer to this address, the governour said: "Your Behaviour affords a better Proof than Words that a Spirit of Loyalty to the King and an Affection to the Parent State, exists, and may easily be called forth in America.

"May the Arms you have so readily taken awe those into Submission, whom the humane Calls of a Sovereign and your Example fail to induce to become Friends to the general Welfare."—N. Y. Merc., Je 5, 1780. This day being the anniversary of the king's birthday, "at Noon the Cannon at the Battery were fired, which was followed by those of the Men of War, Cruizers and Merchant Ships in the Harbour."—N. Y. Merc., Je 5, 1780.

In further celebration of the anniversary of the king's birthday (see Je 4), a "very elegant entertainment" is given by Gov. Robertson "to all the British and German Generals, with their suites, the Lieut. Governor, Chief Justice, and the rest of his Majesty's Council."—N. Y. Merc., Je 12, 1780. The "Chief Justice" writes of the occasion intimately: "A great Dinner to Day at Black Sam's—We were near 70—The Gov^{r} & Council with all the Generals."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 5

At night, fireworks were exhibited on Long Island, and "here they had festivities. But previous thereto, the walk at Trinity Church had been increased in width, so that the posts had to be sunk into the graves. The orchestra from the Play House, seated against the Church, and another place for the musicians erected just opposite the Church, gave great offense and uneasiness to all serious and still more to all godly men, and caused many reflections not only on the irreligious turn of the Commandant, but also on the Rector, who it is said had given his consent to it. Profaneness and Wickedness prevaileth.—Lord have mercy!"—From the "Diary of the Moravian Congregation," in Penn. Mag., X: 429–30. See Je 3.

"Troops moving towards Staten Island—Some by Water from King's Bridge—Others by Land & I suppose they are marching from Long Island to the Narrows. Major Crosby arrives and delivers Sir Henry's Letters to General Knyphausen who was already off Gov^{r}'s Island at 3 o'Clock."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 6

"General Stirling with the first Division entered Eliz^{a} last Night and was brought up wounded in the Thigh this morning. 7

"I heared a great Firing from 6 to 7 this morning. 'Tis said it began at 3—The Report comes from the S W."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 90.

" Ephraim Smith, from London, "Who formerly kept Smith's Tavern in this City and Philadelphia," announces that he has "reassumed his former situation, No. 939, in Water-Street." Believing that a "Steak & Chop-House In the London Stile" is much wanted in the city, he has laid out the lower part of his house on this plan, "and the upper part for detached companies." He will endeavour to keep the "best of wines, punch and draft porter, with steaks, chops and cutlets, every day, from one o'clock till four."—N. Y. Merc., Je 5, 1780. Richard Wetton had first opened this tavern on Ja 12, 1778 (q.v.).

There appears, of this date, an Extraordinary Gazette from Rivington's press recounting the capture of Charleston (see My 12). The copy for this issue was prepared by Wm. Smith, a fact revealed in print for the first time in this Chronology. On the receipt of the official reports of Charleston's capture in New York (see My 29), "Gen^{l} Robertson very wisely suggests to me," writes 8

1780 June 8 the chief-justice, "the Hint for letting off the good News with Sobriety in an extraordinary Gazette which I drew up & sent him & he communicated to Rivington."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. The paper gives the official correspondence between Sir Henry Clinton and Gen. Lincoln, the articles of capitulation as first proposed and as finally concluded, a "Return of Ordnance, and Ammunition" in Charleston when surrendered, a "Return of the killed, and wounded" on both sides, and a "Journal of the Operations before Charlestown."—Royal Gaz. Extraordinary, Je 8, 1780. The whole account was copied in the N. Y. Merc., Je 12, 1780, and the Penn. Gaz., Je 14, 1780.

12 It is reported from Jersey, says Smith, that Washington's troops are "back of Eliz[a] Town" and "draw Rations of Shad & Indian Meal . . . 2 Shad & 15 dried Clams served 3 men 2 Days."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

15 New York State passes "An Act approving of the Act of Congress, of the 18th Day of March, 1780, relative to the Finances of the United States, and making Provision for redeeming the Proportion of this State of the the Bills of Credit, to be emitted in Pursuance of the said Act of Congress."—Laws of N. Y., 3rd sess., chap. 62 (printed by Holt, 1782).

" Smith says he has expressed his belief, in a letter to Tryon, that the British forces now in Jersey "would do a good Service where they were if the Lines were so inlarged as to favor Desertions," appending this further statement: "If they had in the Field as many Cesars as we at the Coffee House Bridge the whole world might have Cause for Consternation."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

16 A letter of this date, written from Fairfield, Conn., reads: "A gentleman this moment has come off Long Island, and brings account that the enemy, in their late manoeuvre into the Jersies, have met with a repulse, and their loss sustained is 150 men killed, 3 or 400 wounded—General Stirling is dead since the action, belonging to the British army."—Boston Gaz., Je 26, 1780.

" Gov. Robertson issues an early proclamation giving detailed orders for the cutting, cording, and carting of wood on Long Island, in Kings, Queens, and Suffolk Counties, to supply "the Barrack Yard in New-York," for the use of the troops, and "to guard against the Severities of a long Winter."—Royal Gaz., Je 17, 1780. The order indicates the settled condition and policy of the British and their outlook at their headquarters in New York.

17 While Washington is awaiting the arrival of the French fleet, and is meditating an attack, which the united forces of the French and American armies would enable him to make (see My 16), Sir Henry Clinton returns to New York, after completing the reduction of Charleston (and feeling assured that he has brought the southern states into subjection to the king). He has left Cornwallis in command at the South, and brought to New York about 4,000 disciplined troops and the ships of war under Admiral Arbuthnot, which were detached for the operations before Charleston. This accession increased the regular force in New York to 12,000 men, rank and file. It therefore appeared to many of the best officers of the Continental army that the plan of recapturing New York must be abandoned, at least for the present; nevertheless, Washington did not "relinquish the idea of an enterprise against New York."—Royal Gaz., Je 21, 1780; Tower, The Marquis de La Fayette, II: 118–19. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" "At 8 A M above 500 foreign Troops with their Colours pass down the Broadway to White Hall. I believe Knyphausen means now to penetrate Jersey.'—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

"The Signals at Staten Island for a Fleet. The Ships moor in the Evening under it within the Narrows & Sir H Clinton lodges in Town—The Reasonable of 64 tis said is on the East Bank & we hear Distress Guns."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

18 Archibald Robertson writes that, having returned with the troops and the fleet from Carolina, he "Learnt that Gen[l] Knyphausen was at Elizabethtown in the Jerseys with all the force He could take from N. Y[k] &[ca] that He had had a Skirmish near Connecticut Farms & were rather obliged to retreat w[t] the Loss of some Consderable N[o] of men—Gen[l] Stirling badly W[d]." He adds: "what could take Gen[l] Knyph[n] to the Jerseys is past my devination in so Critical a time as the Present when we may look for a French force on the Coast every moment but I suppose He has been unable to w[t] stand the Solicitations of a N[o] of Interested selfish ill grounded Arguments & informations laid before him by a Set of Leading People as they are Call'd in this Country . . . Quondam Gov[rs] wanting to be replaced & Lawyers better skill'd in Quirks than sound dissinterested Views of matters as they now Stand Circumstanced over Europe for there the point must now be cleared up."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). June 18

"This morning there was hoar Frost on the Ground w[h] is very remarkable in this Season in this Climate."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 19

" A cricket match is advertised to be played on this day, and continued every Monday throughout the summer, "on the Ground where the late Reviews were, near the Jews Burying Ground."—N. Y. Merc., Je 19, 1780.

Gen. Sir Henry Clinton thanks Maj.-Gen. Pattison for his "great Attention to the good Discipline of the Garrison, and to the Safety and Welfare of the City," during Gen. Clinton's "Absence on Expedition." He also praises the zeal of the inhabitants "to oppose the Enemy."—Royal Gaz., Jl 1, 1780. 20

Clinton, having "information that Washington w[t] all but two Brigades of his Army had moved in Divisions . . . to pass the Clove . . . to West Point," orders "all the Troops on Staten Island that came from the southward to reembark on Board their Sev[l] Transports w[t] Intention to Land at or Near Nack [Nyack] & to Endeavour to cut part of the Rebels on their march."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). 22

Smith, in his diary, censures Clinton's inactivity: "He should have gone instantly to the Highland Forts . . . near a week is already wasted [see Je 17] . . . "

"I am most inclined to believe he will make the apprehension of a French Fleet an Excuse for total Inactivity, & recline on the Pillow of the Reputation acquired by the Charles Town Success. . . .

"These 5 Days lost since his Arrival might have terminated the War. I think it probable that the Rebels would have deserted the Forts above on his Approach—The wind almost constantly fair—We find the Garrison above horribly alarm[d] on the Return of the Fleet—300 drawn instantly from the White Plains—Some of the stores at W[est] P[oint] hurried away to Fish Kill—Agreed Garrisons are weak there. All the Northern Parts in Consternation about the Indians & the untowards of the Militia both here & in Connecticut."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

A New Yorker writes: "A very considerable alteration, with regard to freedom of speech, is discoverable in the people in most parts of America. Those who, either from policy or from principles, were privately well-wishers to Government, fear not now to declare their real sentiments. They foresee, or flatter themselves they foresee, the approaching downfall of Congress, and therefore think themselves secure in welcoming the chearful prospect."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Ag 2–4, 1780. "

Smith writes that 30 ships with 3,000 to 4,000 soldiers on board have passed up the river this afternoon. "General Lesly commands—said they are to land at Tappan—If they got a Head of Washington & Knyphausen who is following with 6000 comes up with him he must fight or leave all his Heavy Baggage & fly over the Western Mountains on this Side of Sussex Court House."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 23

"The Surprize intended by going into Jersey miscarried by the Slowness of the Germans in advancing."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 24

"Tryon was very active yesterday & in much Danger as I learn from others He is modest himself—did not lisp a Syllable of that Nature—Spoke of the Rebels as unable to stand the Kings Troops—They constantly retire—Nothing like their ever facing a Bayonet. —Fly to Eminences with their Field Pieces & sculk to get a Fire & then run.—undoubtedly the Pensilvania Line is disaffected. All the Deserters are uniform in their Reports of it. They are lately promised hard money. Washington may have 3000 Continentals. His leaving Jersey a Proof of his Weakness."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

At this time, "Mount Pleasant" (see L. M. R. K., III: 981), kept by one Corby, was the scene of the anniversary celebration of "St. John the Baptist" by Lodge No. 210 of the "Ancient York Masons."—N. Y. Merc., Je 26, 1780. Cf. N 24, 1779. "

The British troops (see Je 22) land at Philipsburg and are encamped "w[t] their R[t] to East Chester Creek & Left to the N. River."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Cf. MS. map in N. Y. H. S. 25

"The Knight appears in Town again early this morning—Several ships come down the River. The Army at Philipsburgh. 26

1780 June 26 Near 20 Sail Boats have passed by to Day upwards—All with Troops—What Folly not [to] be on the West Side of the Hudson! —Sir H Clinton went out on Horseback about noon

"He returns in a Phaeton this Evening—probably spent the Day at Beekmans Villa at Turtle Bay.—All his army at Philipsburgh—It is said jocularly the Army are gone to make Hay

"The conduct in Jersey is much confused—It is provoked by the Taunts at those who represented the Rebellion as expiring." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

27 Smith writes of a long interview with Gov. Robertson, who tells of the difficulties under which he labours because Clinton and Arbuthnot "draw different ways." He calls them both "Fools," the former being "excessively jealous—crude & unsteady."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Maj.-Gen. Pattison notifies John Marston that his house has been assigned to Maj.-Gen. Reidesel, hoping that "the Inconveniency of removing" will be lessened by General Tryon's leaving Marston's house in town.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 404.

" James Robertson having removed to Charleston, The Royal Am. Gaz. is again published (see Ja 15, 1778) by his brother, Alexander Robertson.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 489. See Ja 1, 1782.

July 1 Smith writes concerning Clinton: "What an Opportunity has he lost since the 17th of June. Tis possible the Militia may crumble away & the Forts grow weak to favor a Surprize but I believe the Summer is lost. The Army is reproached as gathering Strawberries by some as making Hay by others & this Day we see a Notice in Rivington of a Play to be acted by Officers on the 3d Inst as by particular Desire."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" It is reported that Ethan Allen is in New York "from the Rebel Lines."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 92.

" Gen. Pattison writes to Joshua Loring that "The Fence round the North Church Prison is in every respect insufficient for the Security of the Prisoners." He directs him "to procure a Quantity of Stockades, and fence it round."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 213.

" Thomas McMullin announces that he has opened a large and convenient house "close to the Fresh Water Pump for a Tavern, distinguished by a sign representing his present Majesty, King George the Third, where gentlemen may depend on being served with different Wines, London Porter, &c. all of the first quality, and he being so very contiguous to the cool spring as to have his water the moment when wanted, he flatters himself that his mixed liquors will give entire satisfaction . . ."—Royal Gaz., Jl 1, 1780. Later, McMullin advertised the opening of an "Oyster House" here.—N. Y. Merc., O 2, 1780. McMullin not only offered liquid entertainment to British soldiers, but also arranged bull-baits, games of "common," and other diversions (ibid., Ag 20, 1780; Ag 29, 1781; Mr 16, 1782). John Cochran had become proprietor of the tavern before Feb. 3, 1783 (q.v.), when the house, described as No. 110 Water St., was advertised to let on May 1. Simeon King took the house in the spring of 1784, removing the Royalist sign and substituting the more democratic one of the "Indian King." —N. Y. Gazetteer & Coun. Jour., Je 7, 1784. This sign had formerly hung from a tavern at 69 Cherry St. (see S 17, 1781).

3 A coming auction at the Coffee House is advertised, for the sale of the "Remains of the Prison Hospital Ship Kitty, as they now lay in the Wallabough, with the Launch, Anchors, Cables, etc."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 3, 1780.

4 Gen. Pattison writes to the board of ordnance that "a Building which has, since the King's Troops took Possession of New York, been appropriated for the sole Use of Keeping all fix'd Ammunition at a Safe and convenient Distance from the City is judged necessary to be pulled down, on Account of interrupting the Line of Defence, that is carried from the North to the East River. It is besides in a very bad State, and reported upon a Survey I ordered to be made to be too far decayed both Walls and Roof to admit of being repaired."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 188.

" The New York chamber of commerce passes a vote of thanks to Charles Newman, commander of the packet "Carteret," who, when attacked by four "rebel" privateers off Long Island, preserved the mails. It also votes him a piece of plate, with an appropriate inscription.—Royal Gaz., Jl 5, 1780.

" Smith writes in his diary: "The Tale of Simon Stevens [is] misterious. He went to the Comr in Chief, who sent B Robinson with him to see Allen. He was not there—Stevens confesses he forged the Letters in Allens Name but says he saw Levi & not Ethan Allen. Stevens is thrown into the Prevost this Morning. Robinson on search for Ethan Allen who is believed to be hard by."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. July 4

The "elegant plate, household and kitchen furniture" (which are inventoried) belonging to Maj.-Gen. Tryon, are advertised to be sold on July 7 at his house in Wall St.—Royal Gaz., Jl 5, 1780. 5

Smith writes that he suspects Clinton and Arbuthnot quarrelled at Charleston "about the Division of Plunder," and thinks they are "irreconcilable." He learned yesterday "that Capt St George who is an Aid de Camp of Clintons & now lodges in the James House had 5 large Cases brought into his Room, some very heavy which he brought from Charles Town. His Servants say many new Pieces of new Linnen came out of one of them & the Rest were probably Plate."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 6

Clinton said yesterday, writes Smith, that "it was his Opinion the Rebellion would terminate in a Crash—He spoke of it with Elation."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 8

Smith says: "Simon Stevens [see Jl 4] was out of the Prevost yesterday. The Mistery is unravelled—The Comr in Chief has seen Ethan Allen—He was exasperated that General Robertson & I knew of his arrival—To cast a Blind he (Stevens) was sent to the Prevost—He reveals this Joke to Griffith to Day who reports it to me—What astonishing Jealousy! Griffith says it must not be known or Stevens will suffer "

"I saw the Governor immediately after this Information tho' he had been here while Griffith was waiting an Opportunity to give it.

"He had a hearty Laugh on the Aspect of Allen's Interview as favorable to the Public & the Folly of Sir H C & above all the Servility of Colo Robinson. It was he that brought the Information that Stevens was imprisoned as a Cheat and hear that he had confessed he forged the Letter he shewed General Robertson— That he brought it to a Man to copy & then himself signed Ethan Allen's name and that he said it was Levi Allen he had seen

"Sir Henry himself told the Govr that Stevens was a bad Fellow whom he had once before thrown into Jail. He owned that he had it in Design to practise upon the Vermonters & that he had written to Haldimand to promise them a seperate Governmt but that Haldimand said they were Villains & would not suffer any of them to come into his Governmt

"Robertson had also told the Governor that he believed notwithstanding all that Ethan or Levi Allen was still with our Lines concealed."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. "

The cruiser "Sir George Rodney," of 14 guns, commanded by Capt. Daniel Moore, returns to this harbour, "after a fierce and long continued engagement with the Brig Holker." Many were killed on both sides; the Holker escaped pursuit.—Royal Gaz., Jl 12, 1780. 9

The "Sign of the Happy Man," near Dr. Brownjohn's wharf, mentioned in an advertisement of a house for rent, is one of the street-signs typical of this period.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 10, 1780. 10

A London news item reads: "The following is said to be the situation of affairs at New York when the Carteret came away [on this day]. General Clinton was there, but went occasionally to visit the army, which was encamped at Philipsburg, about 16 miles from that town, under the command of Col. Polson. Knyphausen was returned from his expedition to the Jerseys, after having had a few skirmishes with the advanced posts of Washington's army, which lay encamped at Morris-Town. Admiral Arbuthnot commanded the port, with the following ships, viz. the Europe, Robuste, and Raisonable, of 64 guns each; Renown of 50; Roebuck and Iris of 44; Pearl and Blonde of 32; and Triton and Guadaloupe of 28. Besides these there were the Vulcan sloop, and several smaller vessels."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), Ag 25–28, 1780. 11

Rochambeau arrives at Newport from France with transports carrying 5,000 men and a convoy of seven ships of the line.—Winsor, VI: 499, 560. 12

To relieve "the many loyal subjects who have been driven from their possessions by the Rebels," Gov. Robertson, with Clinton's approval, publishes a notice "that the houses and lands belonging to persons in rebellion, or being amongst the Rebels, will be divided (excepting such as are wanted for the King's service) and small lots assigned to distressed Refugee families, that these may be proportioned to the number and wants of the claimants." Such claimants "are desired to leave their petitions for this pur- "

1780 July 12 pose with Philip J. Livingston, at his house near Hell-Gate, on Long-Island, or at the Provincial Secretary's Office, in Broad-Street, New-York, . . ."—Royal Gaz., Jl 19, 1780. In a later order (O 5), Robertson provided that persons "driven from their property by the rebels, or fled on account of their loyalty, being unprovided for, and in distressed circumstances, who are desirous of locations in Suffolk County," were to apply likewise.—N. Y. Merc., O 9, 1780.

" Gov. Robertson appoints George Duncan Ludlow "Master of the Rolls for the province and Superintendent of the Police on Long-Island, with powers on principles of equity, to hear and determine controversies, maintain peace and good order, and regulate the Police through the same, until civil government in all its forms can take place; and all Officers of the Island are required to aid the said Magistrate and his Assistant, in their Office, and obey such orders as they shall from time to time receive for the effectual execution of their decrees."—Royal Gaz., Jl 19, 1780. A week later, Ludlow published an announcement of the opening, at Jamaica, of "The Office for regulating the Police, on Long Island."—Ibid., Jl 26, 1780.

13 Admiral Greaves arrives "off the Hook w^t 6 sail of the line."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Writing at 4 p. m., Smith says: "Adm^l Greaves below with 6 of his Fleet—the 7^th in Sight—This by an Officer of the Romulus to the General Office. An Express is going off to the Com^r in Chief who went the Day before yesterday to Philipsburg." Writing again at sunset, he says: "There are now but 6 Ships at the Hook. & Arbuthnot orders all over the Bar out to them Great & small about 20 Sail—9 of the L^ine 50—three 44. They will go out on the Search for the French Fleet.

"Walsingham must now have joined Rodney with 7. He wrote to Arbuthnot for 5 ships wanting no more

"Our Scene is now changed And if we providentially intercept the French Fleet a sudden Peace may ensue."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

It was reported in London in September that, as soon as Admiral Greaves arrived at New York, "the inhabitants, to a man, able to bear arms, as well on Long Island and Staten Island, as in the city, offered their services to supply the places of the Military, in guarding the towns and forts contiguous."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), S 13–15, 1780.

14 The provost-marshal is ordered by Gen. Pattison "to cause to be apprehended William Brathwaite, late Broker to the New Insurance Office, that he may be forthcoming before the Chamber of Commerce," to answer charges by "the Company of Underwriters belonging to the said Office."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 408–9, 417.

15 John M'Kenzie, a "veteran in his Most Gracious Majesty's service," announces his removal from the Mason's Arms Tavern at 35 Queen St. to "Ranelagh Gardens, Formerly called the White Conduit House." Besides offering meals at all hours, he has laid in a stock of the best wines obtainable in the city, and has engaged a band of music for Saturday night.

In the "superb garden there is the most elegant boxes prepared for the reception of the Ladies; and the more perfect enjoyment of the evening air."—Royal Gaz., Jl 15, 1780; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, IV: 559. McKenzie retained the establishment less than a year, being succeeded, before April 21, 1781 (q. v.), by Samuel Matlock.

18 Admiral Arbuthnot goes to sea "w^t all the Fleet consist^g of Sail of the Line 1,50 2,40^s & a N^o of frigates." It is reported "that the French Fleet got into Rhode Island 10^th 7 Sail of the line 3 frigates & 30 Transports," and "this intelligence" is sent to the admiral.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.); Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under Jl 20.

20 Smith writes to Mr. De Roset of Charleston enclosing "the MSS to which I have given the Title of the Candid Retrospect which it may be useful to publish there to work a Change in the Whiggs. It is best to have it believed here to be a Composition there. I have charged him with Secrecy."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. This pamphlet was first published in Charleston, Sept. 30, 1780 (q. v.). It was reprinted in New York by Rivington on Jan. 30, 1781 (q. v.).

21 The American generals Wayne and Irwin, with about 1,800 men, make an assault with cannon upon Col. Cuyler's refugee post, a block-house on the Jersey shore near Bull's Ferry, about three miles below Fort Lee. The post was held by about 84 refugees, who inflicted considerable loss upon the Americans, whose rear-guard they pursued. The British retook cattle that the Americans had driven off.—Royal Gaz., Jl 22, 26, 29, 1780. July 21

Smith's account of the incident states: "The Wood Cutters have made a gallant Defence for an Hour & a Half. Wayne and Irwin two Rebel Generals assaulted it with 3 Brigades of 1700 Men & 6 Pieces of Ordnance—When they left it these Refugees had but 1 of their small Cannon & 5 shot[;] the other was dismounted. We had 4 killed & 9 or 10 wounded. 30 of the Rebels were found dead —others with the wounded were carried off. We took Wayne's Servant Prisoner. What a Contrast between the Conduct of these Americans & the British last Summer at Stoney Point and Paulus Hook. The American Reputation rises. I doubt whether the Wood Cutters were 100."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Robertson's Jour. (MS.), and N. Y. Merc., Jl 24, 1780.

Major André, Gen. Clinton's adjutant-general, addressed to Col. Cuyler a note of approbation, expressing Clinton's admiration for "the gallantry of the Refugees."—Royal Gaz., Jl 26, 1780. Later, thanks were expressed by the king, through Secretary Germain.—Ibid., D 13, 1780.

The incident led Major André to write a satirical poem in three cantos, entitled "The Cow Chase."—Ibid., Ag 16, 30, S 23, 1780; The Hudson, by Lossing (1866), 439–48.

" "A Vessel just come in raises the public Joy by a Report that the Camilla & Richmond are at the Hook with 17 Prizes out of a Tobacco Fleet of 23 from the Chesapeak destined to the West Indies."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

22 The London Chronicle publishes an interesting sketch of the life and character of General Washington. It states, in part, that "General Washington is now in the forty-eighth year of his age; he is a tall, well-made man, rather large boned, and has a tolerably genteel address; his features are manly and bold, his eyes of a bluish cast, and very lively; his hair a deep brown, his face rather long, and marked with the small-pox; his complexion sun-burnt and without much colour, and his countenance sensible, composed, and thoughtful. There is a remarkable air of dignity about him, with a striking degree of gracefulness; he has an excellent understanding, without much quickness; is strictly just, vigilant, and generous; . . . In a word, all his friends and acquaintances universally allow, that no man ever united in his own person a more perfect alliance of the virtues of the Philosopher with the talents of a General. . . ."—N. J. Gaz., D 6, 1780, citing London Chron., Jl 22, 1780.

" Peter Sparling and William Kerr announce that they have opened "a Public School in Chatham Street, near the New Goal; for the tuition of both sexes."—Royal Gaz., Jl 22, 1780.

23 Smith writes: "If Arbuthnot is at Rhode Island [see Jl 18] he must rave for the Land Forces. Tis said the greater Number of the Transports are still on this side Hellgate.

"As we had the first News of the French arrival, 18 Ins^t surely, the Winds that brought the Adm^l to Rhode Island might have blown the Transports to White Stone—It blew S. W & S 18–19, 20–21—Yesterday & to Day N E & N. Some of the Transports did not come down the River till yesterday.

"Sir Henry is in Town & daily takes his Rides out & his Evening Walks. The Town growls—and I dare say the Adm^l will thunder."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

25 The "Blond" man-of-war is "on the Rocks" near Corlaer's Hook through carelessness, says Smith. Clinton "was to have sailed [to Rhode Island] in her." Gen. Robertson believes Arbuthnot must be "fretting to Rage," for the troops had not "imbarked at Whitestone last Night," and the "43^d Reg^t (L^t Col^o Marsh) did not move from Breucklin till 6 o'Clock yesterday."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

26 "No Tidings yet whether Washington is moving across the North River. If he does the recarting of the Salt Provisions and Bread at this Instant of high Harvest [it] must infinitely distress the Farmers. Many Farmers & their Sons daily fly to us from the Tyranny in the Upper Country—Horrid monthly Taxes & Fines wean the People from the Congressional Extravagances. Last Saturday 36 from Dutchess County."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "The Sugar House, with all the Utensils and out-houses, belonging to the estate of the late Henry Cuyler, deceased, situate in the North Ward of this city," is advertised to be sold at "public Vendue" on Aug. 14.—Royal Gaz., Jl 26, 1780. The date of sale was postponed to Aug. 17.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 14, 1780.

1780 July 29 — It is reported that Clinton and the ships that started for Rhode Island have "halted at Huntington," writes Smith; "the Gen[l] doubting whether Washington might not attack in his Absence & the Expediency of his going on." Writing on the next day, Smith adds: "What an infamous Conduct is he exhibiting! He holds the Adm[l] & will not contribute to his Credit or he is a Coward. Time will detect the Principle that actuates to his Delays. I consider this Halting as meer affectation to waste Time & a sad Train of Consequences may ensue."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

31 — In his journal, under this date, Capt. Archibald Robertson gives the "State of the English & French Fleets." The English have 12 men-of-war, 9 frigates, 2 sloops, and 1 fire-ship; the French have 7 men-of-war, 5 frigates, and 2 armed ships. Admiral Arbuthnot with the English vessels is at Block Island, and Admiral Ternay with the French is "in the Harbour of Rhode Island."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" — Smith writes: "Ralph Izard came over in Ternay's Fleet—Exclaims ag[t] Franklin & Dean—says they have agreed to give the Fishery to France & the Floridas to Spain—He is gone to tell Congress the Country is sold to Foreigners . . . Ternay's Squadron miss a Vessel with all their medicines—so Izard said who damned their managem[t]—The French land forces but 4800."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" — "To my Astonishm[t]," writes Smith, "I percieve Sir H C[linton] walking by the Window—He has had a N E wind just sufficient to bring him here [from Huntington]." Continuing on the next day, Smith says, "I walked down to the Exchange last evening—In Every Countenance there is Melancholly and many are silent—others speak cautiously asking Questions concerning the Cause of the Return of the Fleet . . . imply Censure on the General. Some who hope the best of him are terrified at a Suspicion of our Danger. Not one Man guesses the true Motive. All are discontented & the Fire will soon burst forth after they hear the Liberties that will be countenanced by the Adm[l]. Joseph Bull I find by Jauncey lets off part of what he told me—His coming is unfavorable to the General. Oliver De Lancey told Jauncey Washington could not raise a Volunteer in N England & that the Drafted Men came to Long Island. He had himself seen a Hundred of them—Jn[o] Thurman was on Board the Fleet often at Frogg's Neck. An Officer told him secretly it would never see Rhode Island because the General hated the Adml—I thank God that I have cautioned both ag[t] suffering their Differences to hurt the Service & become public."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

Aug. 1 — The British "Camp Equipage" is "brought from King's Bridge & ferried across [to Long Island] from Frog's Neck."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

2 — "Remarks on the Conduct of the Campaigne, 1780" is the caption of a 16-page folio, in William Smith's handwriting, which is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It starts thus: "That it was in the Power of the British Army to have broken down the Rebellion in this County before the Arrival of Ternays Fleet is doubted only by those who are unacquainted with the low and imbarrassed Condition of the Party adhering to the Congress & to the Means by which it might have been compleatly reduced. . . .

"The uses of a Com[d] of the Hudson are so obvious as to make the Neglect of it not only our Astonishm[t] but the Subject of inauspicious Speculation . . . There is a Season in every Year in which the Highland Forts may be attacked without the Hope of Succour from the Country—This continues from the Opening of Spring in March to the latter End of May— . . . Why did M[r] Knyphausen hold 11 Thousand Men in a State of perfect Inactivity to the 7 of that Month? . . .

"The whole Rebel Force was at this Time despicable . . . The Main Body in Jersey was between three & four Thousand & the Highland Garrison, under 800—They had no other Men in Arms except 200 at Fort Stanwix . . . & 600 more . . . in Virginia . . .

"All the Detachments of the Rebel Force were known to be disaffected, and many desirous to desert . . .

"The Congress were trembling at the daily change of the Temper of the People who under the Pressure of their Calamities lent a willing Ear to General Robertsons Proclamation of the 15 April [q.v.] and to the Addresses it excited . . .

"What an Opportunity & how strong the Inducements to some Activity on our Part if not to strike a decisive Blow yet for such Alarms and Descents as might prepare the Way for it by compelling the Enemy to Movements exposing their Army to Desertions, their Militia to a Consumption of their private Stores, & Usurpers every where to the Contempt & odium of a great Country . . . Aug. 2

"Can there be an Apology for this Negligence that is not, at best a Shift of Blame from one Shoulder to another. It is said that we waited for green Forage. What was it wanted in a Water Passage of 20 Miles up the Hudson or in short Descents or Menaces on the Coast for meer Menaces if frequent, would have worn down the Militia & such Measures were atchievabable by us without either Risk or Expence . . .

"The Sally of the 7 June to Connecticut Farms only 3 Miles behind Elizabeth Town being conducted with an unaccountable Slowness plundering & conflagration and followed with a secret Retreat in the Dead of Night & a Thunder Storm under all the Symptoms of Fear deserves Enquiry and perhaps Reprehension . . .

"His [Knyphausen's] Situation till Sir Henry Clinton arrived in Spite of all Disguizes was sufficiently rediculous He seemed fearful both of advancing and retiring—He had sent away his Horses but they were scarcely over the Ferry before they were ordered back again . . .

"Our only Hope was that the Comm[d] in Chief would on his arrival with Reinforcements of 5 or 6000 wipe off the Disgrace we had contracted, but Alass! the Sequel affords too much Ground to conjecture that he would have been better pleased to have found the Northern Army still in Winter Quarters . . .

". . . no Man chose to say what he thought—And this expressive Silence continues while I am writing."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 194.

" — A news item, published in London on this day, states: "When the last letters left New-York, they were building three ships of war for the King's service; one of 44, one of 32, and one of 24 guns; the largest of which was expected to be ready to launch this year."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Jl 31–Ag 2, 1780.

" — Some of the British troops are encamped at Flushing. On Aug. 3, the remainder "landed & encamp'd at Whitestone." After noting this, Robertson says: "All ordered to be ready to cross over to Frog's Neck at a moments Warning—as Gen[l] Washington w[t] the Rebel Army were at Verplank's Point at 1 Yesterday [Aug. 2] Afternoon prepared to march at 3 towards Kingsbridge, Plot thickens."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

4 — Information comes to Smith through a female servant at Clinton's headquarters that "an Aid de Camp of Washington's came there the Night before last & was invisible all Day yesterday confined to the General's Room—That they lodged together in it last Night—She knows not his Name—He is a young Man. The Gen[l] was with him all Day yesterday except while on Board of some Vessel, & that this morning all the Family is on the move."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. For the writer's interpretation of this incident, see S 26.

7 — "General R[obertson] recieves Intelligence," says Smith, "while I was standing with him at Rivington's Corner that Washington recrossed the Hudson on Saturday [Ag 5] & was this morning at Tappan. Has Boats & is 8 or 9000 strong."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

9 — At this time, Lafayette endeavoured to persuade Rochambeau to attempt a movement against New York, which he deemed "the pivot on which turn the operations of the enemy." Rochambeau, however, saw that its success would be impossible unless the French possessed a decided superiority on the sea. This they did not have; and the forces under him, even if united with the small army under Washington, he regarded unequal to the proposed capture of New York.—Perkins, France in the Am. Revolution, citing Doniol's La Participation de la France à l'Etablissement des Etats Unis d'Amérique, V: 356; and Lafayette, Mémoires, etc. (1837 ed.), II: 125. See also Tower, The Marquis de La Fayette in the Am. Revolution (1895), II: 143 passim.

10 — "Washington proceeded from Tappan to Paramus but our Troops continue at Whitestone and Flushing. Sir Henry came to Town the 8[th] in the Evening. The Transports come back daily to prepare as said for England. Pontoons went out Yesterday to Kings Bridge—The Generals Inactivity is a Mistery. He seems to be perfectly on the Defensive. Why no Man can say. His Conduct therefore not only affords but creates Suspicions of an expected foreign Force—This damps the Loyalists & animates the Rebels."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

12 — Gen. Pattison, having been given by the commander-in-chief

1780 Aug 12 permission to return to England, writes Andrew Elliot, superintendent general, and the magistrates of police, acknowledging the assistance he has had from them.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 426–27.

13 "The Galatea arrives from the Adm[l] [Arbuthnot]. His Lieut Rogers has been into Newport in a Flag & asserts that No Lands Works are raised. That all their Ordnance was in the ship Isle de France that got into Boston & is now drawing across the Land—That the French had been in vast Consternation but had dismissed 5000 Militia for want of Provisions—Rogers is sent here to tell the Story to the General and that the Fleet waits for him at Gardiner's Island

"Certainly the Rebels find Bread with Difficulty. They draw in Dutchess Sheaves from the Stack of the last Harvest to Mill for the use of the army.

"I believe the Adm[l]'s Importunity will avail Nothing. Reported that 400 Rebels were yesterday opposite to us & with in a Mile or two of Paulus Hook and drove off many Horses. If it is true the greater our Shame. Why is not our army rather at Tappen than Whitestone & Flushing, where the Soldiers injure themselves by paddling in the Mud & Water for Clams."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

15 "Sir Henry [Clinton] leaves the Town for the army on Long Island. I think he has lost his opportunity for the Descent on Rhode Island. . . . If 8000 go to Rhode Island our Force will be 7000 as conjectured—These will all be wanted for the Defence of the three Islands. If Washington approaches Poulus Hook this Town may be indangered tho' we may muster a Militia of 3 or 4000. Long Island must not be trusted solely to the Militia on Account of the Disaffection of Many in Suffolk & visits from Connecticut—The Jersey Militia & Washington may beard us at Poulus Hook & Staten Island and from Connecticut & in Queen's County & at King's Bridge—The Jersey Militia are Notified in the Chatham Papers of last Week to hold themselves in Readiness

"We should have attacked Rhode Island before Washington was reinforced & when the Fleet went there in Harvest. He is now stronger & will always be most numerous in Autumn when the Militia can be less spared from Home."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" An "Officer of distinction at New-York" writes that Sir Henry Clinton has fortified New York "so compleatly, that he declares he will defend it against all the force, which the French and Americans can jointly bring against it; but that he will now act wholly upon the defensive, and never more attempt any thing offensive, until he is reinforced with ten thousand men."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, O 6–9, 1780.

" Capt. Richard Grinnell makes his escape from the prison-ship "Scorpion" at New York. He reached Philadelphia on the 20th. The day he left New York, "there was the hotest press ever known there, they pressed about 700 men that day, and the press still continued, that they not only took seamen, but all the refugees, labourers and merchant's Clerks they came across." On the "Scorpion" and "Strumbillo" were about 300 prisoners.—Penn. Packet, Ag 22, 1780.

" A British officer, in a letter to Rivington, refers to "the Mall" as "the chief resort for company of an evening," and observes that "there is seldom a seat in that agreeable walk that is not taken up by the gentlemen," to the exclusion of "the fair sex."—Royal Gaz., Ag 16, 1780. For the location of the "Mall," see Jl 27, 1787.

16 An American army under Gates is defeated by the British under Cornwallis at Camden, S. C.—Moore, Diary of the Am. Revolution, II: 310–12. For the receipt of the news in New York, see Royal Gaz., S 9, 1780. There appeared in the Royal Gaz., of Sept. 16, what was said to be a copy of "an Advertisement stuck up at the public places in Philadelphia on the late arrival there of General Horatio Gates." It reads:

"Millions!—Millions!—Millions!—Reward,

"Strayed, Deserted, or Stolen, from the Subscriber, on the 16th of August last, near Camden, in the State of South Carolina, a whole Army, consisting of Horse, Foot, and Dragoons, to the amount of near Ten Thousand (as has been said) with all their baggage, artillery, waggons, and camp equipage. The Subscriber has very strong suspicions from information received from his Aid de Camp, that a certain Charles, Earl Cornwallis, was principally concerned in carrying off the said Army with their baggage, &c. Any person or persons civil or military, who will give information, either to the Subscriber, or to Charles Thompson, Esq; Secretary to the Continental Congress, where the said Army is, so that they may be recovered and rallied again, shall be entitled to demand from the Treasurer of the United States, the sum of Three Millions of Paper Dollars as soon as they can be spared from the Public Funds, and Another Million, for apprehending the Person principally concerned in taking the said Army off. Proper passag[e] will be granted by the President of the Congress to such persons as incline to go in search of the said Army.—And as a further encouragement, no deduction will be made from the above reward on account of any of the Militia, (who composed part of the said Army) not being to be found or heard of, as no dependence can be placed on their services, and nothing but the most speedy flight can ever save their Commander. Horatio Gates, M G. And late Commander in Chief of the Southern Army. Philadelphia, August 30, 1780."—Royal Gaz., S 16, 1780. Aug. 16

" "The common Discontents continue. People who see no Danger in Sir H.'s detaching the best Half of the Army called 14 or 16000 in the whole to Rhode Island are surprized to hear this Evening that he is gone by Land with the Dragoons to the East End of Long Island & that Fanning's Reg[t] are to follow from Lloyd's Neck this Morning."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "Major General Pattison's ill state of health obliging him to relinquish the command of the City and Garrison of New-York, his Excellency Lieut. General Robertson, who commands the district, takes upon him the duties hitherto exercised by Major General Pattison."—Royal Gaz., Ag 16, 1780. See Jl 25.

19 Challenges for cricket matches between "Americans" and "Englishmen" are issued through the newspapers.—Royal Gaz., Ag 19, 26, 1780. The cricket field is at "the Jews' Burying ground."—Ibid., S 6, 1780; L. M. R. K., III: 927.

21 "Washington was seen this Day at Fort Lee from the Heights of Harlem by our Generals."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

23 Gerard Bancker records in his note-book: "The Mayor at the Request of General Robinson [sic], Imployed me to go about the Island to get an account of the farms belonging to persons out of the lines. I accordingly waited on John DeLancey, George Stanton & Alderman Dykeman the latter gave me much information."—From volume of Bancker's MS. notes, in N. Y. H. S. These farms are referred to as absentees' farms. There is in the Bancker Coll., in N. Y. P. L. (box A-B, folder "Bowery"), what appears to be the original draft of Bancker's report on this subject. It is entitled "A List of the Farms on New York Island West Side of Bowry & Blooming Dale road," and "West Side of Bowry lane."

24 "Gen[l] Robertson tells me this morning," says Smith, "that he had an account last Night that Washington had come in Force to Fort Lee & that he sent it [the account] to Sir H C[linton] but his People refused to wake him at midnight . . . Tryon says Washington is erecting Works at Fort Lee & confesses vast uneasiness at it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "The Rope walk, above the Fresh Water Pump, where there was stored Brimstone and other combustibles, burnt down tonight. The fire was violent, but did no damage to the surrounding property."—From the Diary of the Moravian Congregation in Penna. Mag., X: 432–33. The rope-walk was "near Bunker Hill."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 28, 1780. It is shown on the Montresor Map, Pl. 40, Vol. I.

" The magazine in Fort George is being thoroughly repaired.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1875), 202.

25 The Hessian officers in the garrison at New York present an address of gratitude to Maj.-Gen. Pattison on his retirement from command and departure for England.—Royal Gaz., Ag 30, 1780.

26 The "rebels" visit the estate of Col. William Bayard at "Weehawk," where they destroy his houses and burn "his farms." They then set fire to his "elegant house" at "Hoobuck," and "one of the finest barns ever constructed." These and other improvements are burned to the ground. For two days the "raging flames" burned the grass and "one of the most valuable orchards existing."—Royal Gaz., Ag 30, 1780. Writing in his diary, under the same date, Smith says: "Depredations committing on the Jersey Shore—Bayards House & Barn in Flames light up this morning near noon. Deserters say 3 Divisions came there yesterday of 6 Brigades 4 Reg[ts] each under 3000 in all—This Half the Rebel army."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Rivington prints the following statement concerning the "real 1780 Aug. 26 state of the Rebel Army, the Congress, their Financies, &c. &c." for the information of the British people:

"Without money and without credit, the rebel interest is now supported by depredation and spoil.

"No man will now part with any thing for paper money, old or new.—The rebel Commissaries have not credit for a farthing, in any part of the Continent; in every place they take what they want from the farmers, . . . and leave a certificate to be paid at Doom's Day . . .

"The most horrible oppressions are at the same time, used to force the militia to join them in their career to destruction. All their bands are made up of men and boys drafted from an unwilling militia, except the continentals who had been early beguiled to inlist in the continental, and whose times are not yet out . . . who at the opening of the present campaign were about 3 or 4000 in Jersey, and another 1000 in the Highlands, and Fort Stanwix.—They rely for augmentations entirely upon a militia, every where a majority abhorring the French, &c. against the protraction of the rebellion . . .

"The loyalists increase hourly, scarce a day passes without fugitives to this place, from the barbarities perpetrated by the usurpers . . .

"Resolutions are forming in divers colonies, to resist the freedoms taken with private property to support what the rebels call their army . . ."—Royal Gaz., Ag 26, 1780.

27 Col. Angell, commander of the Second Rhode Island continental regiment, records that he went from Jersey "in Company with a number of the Gentlemen Officers across the woods to north River to a place called Spiten Devils Creek against king bridg. from thence Down the river to burdeets ferry at fort Lee. we had a grand prospect of all the Enemys Incampments on York Island."—Field, Diary of Col. Israel Angell, 1778–1781, 109.

28 The Marine Society, and the inhabitants of the city, present addresses of gratitude and esteem to Maj.-Gen. Pattison, on his departure for England, and he makes replies.—Royal Gaz., Ag 30, 1780.

Autumn The Presbyterian meeting-house is used as a British hospital.—Jones's Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev., II: 2.

Sept. 1 "The Large Fleet returnᵍ to Europe fell down to the Hook—A great many Passengers went home

"Genˡˢ Tryon Mathew & Pattison Lᵈ & Lʸ Cathcart—Majors Lumm, Campbel, Graham, Cochran, Dansey—Captˢ Lewis Gabbat & ᶜᵃ & ᶜᵃ."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). See also Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), O 18–20, 1780.

4 Gen. Tryon departs for England with the fleet ("150 odd Sail"). He "sends me," says Smith, "a Letter of Thanks for Services. . . . He confesses the Reluctance I knew he had to leave this Country."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

6 "Several Intimations from Jersey of a Defeat of Gates's Army in North Carolina by Lord Cornwallis & the Flight of the Former into Virginia—said 3000 killed wounded & taken."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Cf. Ag 16.

" Members of the "Board of Refugees" are requested to meet on this day "on particular Business, at Mr. Hales, as usual."—N. Y. Merc., S 4, 1780. This was the "Tally-Ho" tavern at the corner of Nassau and King St., run by John Hales.—See Ja 16, 1779.

9 Gov. Robertson issues a proclamation ordering all male inhabitants between the ages of 17 and 60 to enroll themselves in the militia. Those who refuse to comply with this order shall be subject to imprisonment or banishment. He also issues rules for the "better government of the militia."—N. Y. Merc., S 11, 1780.

13 Admiral Rodney arrives at Sandy Hook "with 10 Sail of the Line." Being ill, he delayed coming to the City, although "the Guard was turned out to receive him, and many of the Inhabitants were longing to see the brave Rodney."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 99; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. This was Sir George Bridges Rodney, Rear Admiral of Gt. Britain.—Royal Gaz., S 16, 1780. Robertson gives the date of his arrival "off the Hook" as Sept. 14.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

14 Lieut.-Col. Birch, of the 17th Light Dragoons, is appointed by the commander-in-chief to be "commandant of New-York," with the rank of brigadier-general.—Royal Gaz., S 20, 1780.

16 Rivington publishes a notice offering a reward of 10 guineas for the conviction of the "Forger and Incendiary" who posted his alleged handwriting "in the Church Walk" and sent threatening letters to his house. He adds: "The law of England punishes Forgery with Death."—Royal Gaz., S 16, 1780. Sept. 16

" "The Gentlemen who supped at the late Widow de la Montagnie's on the 17th of September [error for Oct. 28, q. v.], 1776, (after taking down the Liberty Pole) are informed in this public manner that their bid [bill] for the supper and liquor still remains unpaid; if the iron that was about the Pole remains unsold, the subscriber will recommend a purchaser, and if the bill is not paid very soon, the subscriber will be under the necessity of publishing the names of the gentlemen that supped on that occasion. John Amory."—Rivington's Royal Gaz., S 16, 1780.

18 "Sir G B Rodney comes to Town. A Vessel from Charles Town this Evening with Authentic Dispatches of the Success on the 16 [q.v.] & 18: Augᵗ—Gates had 6200 & Lᵈ Cornwallis 1500. The Americans lost all their Cannon Baggage &c—and were pursued 20 odd miles by the Horse."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI; Von Krafft's Jour., 119.

19 Col. Williams, of the 80th Regiment, which is billeted at the bouwerie of Jacobus Kip, gives a dinner to Commander-in-Chief Sir Henry Clinton and his staff, as a parting compliment to Major John André, who is about to go north to confer with the American general, Benedict Arnold, in a plot to secure the capitulation of West Point, which Arnold commands.—Life and Career of Major John André, by Winthrop Sargent (1861), 268. An account of the affair was told afterwards by the owner of the house, Jacobus Kip, who was present.—Hist. Notes of the Family of Kip, by Rt. Rev. William I. Kip.

Clinton and André had been, on this evening, prior to this event, at the Beekman house. "From its doors, gracefully bidding adieu to the beautiful Baroness [Riedesel], rode Clinton and André to attend the farewell dinner given that very evening by his brother officers to the latter before he started on his ill-starred expedition, at the old Kip House at Kip's Bay. . . . They knew he was to leave on a matter of military importance, but that was all, and little could they gather from the remarkable toast given by Sir Henry Clinton at that brilliant table, 'The health of Major André who leaves us to-morrow to return Sir John André.'"—Memoir of James William Beekman, by Edward F. De Lancey (pub. by the St. Nicholas Soc., N. Y., 1877), 11; Letters and Journals of Mrs. General Riedesel, trans. by Wm. L. Stone (Albany, 1867), 179.

It should be noted that Ford's British Officers in the Am. Rev. mentions no colonel by the name of Williams, but states that Sir William Erskine was colonel of the 80th Regiment. See also Gaine's Universal Register (1781) for the names of officers of the British army.

20 According to a statement made by Major André on Sept. 24, he left New York on the 20th "to get on board the Vulture," in order (as he thought) "to meet General Arnold there in the night." He remained on board until the night of the 21st.—Sargent, Life of André, 349.

21 Robertson says: "at Night Majʳ André landed from the Vulture to meet Gˡ A——d at Haverstraw.—went to his Qʳˢ opposite West Point."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

22 Benedict Arnold and Major André have their interview at the house of Joshua Hett Smith, a square two-storied stone house on the Haverstraw Road, two and a half miles below Stony Point, regarding the proposed attack upon West Point and capitulation.—Sargent, Life of André, 280, 291–92. A facsimile of the pass given by Arnold to André is in the Emmet Collection (No. 8375) of the N. Y. P. L.

Arnold's treason was "in some respects the most dramatic and tragic event of the Revolution." Early in February, 1779, while at Washington's camp on the Raritan, he heard that the executive council of Pennsylvania had sent to congress eight charges against him for mal-administration while commanding at Philadelphia.—Penn. Packet, F 13, 1779. Soon after this, there were re-published 13 articles of impeachment exhibited against him on Dec. 1, 1776.—Ibid., F 27, 1779. On Jan. 26, 1780, he was sentenced to be reprimanded, and, in retaliation, he opened the secret treasonable correspondence with Major André.—Avery, Hist. of the U. S., VI: 248.

" At a conference at Hartford, Washington, Rochambeau, and De Ternay agree that, of all the operations which can be undertaken, the most important is the reduction of New York, "the center and focus of all the British forces." They also agree that even with a superior naval force to blockade the harbour, it would 1780 Sept. 22 require a land force of about 30,000 men to affect a successful siege.—Doniol, Participation de la France à l'Etablissement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, IV: 404–7.

" The anniversary of the king's coronation is observed with the usual deference. "At Twelve o'clock the guns at Fort George fired a Royal Salute; at One the same was repeated by his Majesty's Ships in the harbour, and by the line of battle ships at Staten-Island." The "Royal Army in the vicinity of this city, with two battalions of Hessians, Col. Robertson's regiment, the Independent Companies with all the Militia, formed a line, extending from the East to the North River, where, in the evening a Feu de Joie was fired, in respect to the day, and in celebration of the brilliant victory obtained by Earl Cornwallis in the neighbourhood of Camden, in South-Carolina." It was commenced by seven rockets. Seven guns were then fired from the three batteries on Jones's, Bunker's, and Lispenard's Hills. Then followed the fire of the line and more rockets. "His Excellency the Commander in Chief, the noble Lords lately arrived with Admiral Sir George B. Rodney, the Governor, Commandant, all the General and other officers, British and German, with an infinite concourse of Ladies, Gentlemen, etc. etc. were present. . . ."—Royal Gaz., S 23, 1780; Von Krafft's Jour., 120.

23 On his way back to New York, Major André is captured near Tarrytown by John Paulding, Isaac Van Wart, and David Williams.—Sargent, Life of André, 310–16; Conn. Gaz. (New London), O 10, 1780; Jour. or Hist. Recollections of Am. Events during The Rev. War, by Elias Boudinot (Phila., 1894), 83–91; Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

25 Benedict Arnold, fearing detection, hastily leaves his wife, and a company of general officers, including Washington, assembled at his headquarters in the house of Col. Beverly Robinson, two miles from West Point, on the east side of the Hudson; and makes his way by boat to the "Vulture," which then carries him to New York.—Sargent, Life of André, 263, 328–30. For a more particular account of Arnold's treason, the capture of André, and his execution, see letters published in the Conn. Gaz. (New London), O 6, 10, 17, 31.

26 Smith writes in his diary: "The Vulture armed Ship has been 10 Days up the River with Major André and Colº Robertson—The general Suspicion to watch the crossing of the Rebel Army while Washington was gone to Hartford. The Secret is now out for yesterday General Arnold came to the Ship with a Whale Boat & this Day to Town. The people exult much but it is not known yet that André was catched with his Papers which forced Arnold to come off before the Design was accomplished of delivering up the Highland Forts to the British. Some great Error has been committed either by André or by Sir H Clinton who perhaps has been too slow in Collecting his Troops to ascend the River—The army is still on Long Island except the Light Infantry of whom some are drawn to King's Bridge within a Day or two. . . .

"I recollect that Sir H C in our Conversation of the 7 July [Smith records this under Jl 8—q.v.] said the Rebellion would end suddenly in a Crash. I told him my Opinion was that it would die of a Consumption—If he was in Treaty with Arnold at that Time he had authority for what he said. . . .I fancy Sir H Clinton has intrigued with Arnold for some Time & that his Reliance upon its Success is the true Cause of his neglecting Rhode Island [see Je 29]—See my note ante of the 4 Augt [q.v.] respecting a Rebel Aid de Camp at his House."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See also Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 100.

" The orderly-book kept during Maj.-Gen. Greene's campaign in the "Southern Department" contains the following entry of this date: "Treason of the blackist dye was yesterday discovered. Genl Arnold who commd at West Point lost to every centiment of honour of private and publick was about to give up that important Poast in to the hands of the Enimy. Such an event must have given the American caus a deadly wound if not a fatal Stab, happily the Treason has been timely Discovered to prevent fatal misfortune. . . .

"Grate honour is due the Continental Army that this is the first instance of the kind where many were to be expected from the nature of the dispute. . . . Arnold has made his escape to the Enimy. Mr Andrews (André) the Adjt Gen of the British Army who came ont [out] as a Spy to Negotiate business is our prisoner. His Excellency the Commander in Chief has arrivd to West Point from Hartford and has no doubt taken the propper Measures to onravil so Hellish a plot. . . ."—From printed catalogue of sale by Henkels, Phila., for July 1, 1920, describing the original orderly-book. Sept. 26

It is publicly reported in New York that "Major André who went out to confer with General Arnold" has been "taken by General Washington and 'tis supposed will be ill used."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 100. 27

"Sir H Clinton sends for me," says Smith, "—an Hour with him—He opened with his anxiety for André & concluded with thanking me for the consolation I had given him in the Opinion that he [André] was no Spy which he said agreed with all the others who had been consulted. 28

"He told me he had corresponded for a considerable Time with Arnold—That he gave him the Intelligence the French were coming to Rhode Island. That it was his wish to retake it before they arrived but Arbuthnot would not believe his Information good—That afterwards he proposed his landing 6000 Men at Seconnet & this the Admiral disapproved & so hid after that another Proposition of landing up the Narraganset. He believed Arbuthnot an honorable Man but he was old and had some bad advisors. Thus he said he had lost his Advantages of ruining the French—

"He lamented the last Disappointment—blamed Arnold for not sending Andre back by Water—Their Interview was at Stoney point & Andre seized on this side Croton by 3 Militia Men & carried to the Light Horse—That he had every Thing ready for seizing the Highlands & putting an End he owned to the War for he had Boats of all Draughts for proceeding to Albany. That the Interview with Arnold was absolutely necessary to ascertain whether he had really been corresponding with Arnold.—Arnold was desirous to favor the Capture but he had insisted upon his being an Agent in it & he was to have paid a great Price for the Acquisition. He regretted this Disappointment as the Loss [of] his Hope of an instantaneous Termination of the War—said he should have had both Washington & Rochambeau Prisoners for they were both there now.

"He should have seized the Forts with 5000 & had 5000 more ready, for he thought the Militia sufficient to take Care of this Place I guess there was Design in this Enumeration

"He said he had revealed his Secret only to Sir G. Rodney of whom he spoke favorably and of the Force he brought with him—intimated Doubts of the Arrival of the other Division of the Fleet, but said he would stay with the 20 Ships of the Line now here for some time—He boasted of his masking the Enterprize up the River by giving out a Design on the Chesapeak—That he should go there yet—Washington had not sent a Man to the Southward since Gates's affair—He could not. . . . He thought Virginia a weak Country from its being cut to Peices by steep Waters & the Number of the Slaves. He did not care whether Washington knew of his Design upon the Chesapeake or not

"I said little for he spoke much—Except what related to Andre I inlarged upon the Idea he now had of the Importance of the Hudson & the Acquisition of it as the End of the War—I lamented his late Disappointment at Rhode Island wondring who could be Arbuthnot's Advisors—But I incouraged him to hope that Virginia recovered all would be over—He spoke with Confidence of his reducing that Country immediately now he was so well supported by Sea—Rodney he said cared nothing for Money—Valued no Prizes.—

"I almost suspect that he still has Designs upon the Hudson There are other Generals like minded with Arnold—On my assenting to it as probable he questioned me as to the Person—I mentioned Bob Howe—He would not countenance nor gainsay my Suspicions but asserted that he knew of others."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

Certain "distinguished inhabitants" of New York, having been betrayed by Benedict Arnold, are arrested "for having been in correspondence with the Rebels." For the same reason other inhabitants are taken daily to the "Provo."—Von Krafft's Jour., 120. "

Nicholas W. Stuyvesant dies "at his seat in the Bowry." He was the oldest son of Col. Stuyvesant, and great-grandson of "that brave Dutch Governor [Peter Stuyvesant] who commanded here at the conquest in 1664." His body was "interred in the Family Vault, on the patrimonial estate of the old Governor."—Royal Gaz., S 30, 1780. "

Major André is tried before a board of general officers, of whom Gen. Greene is president, assembled in an old Dutch church at Tappan. (The church has since been pulled down.) At this hearing 29

1780 Sept. 29 André presented a written confession of his conduct in detail during his expedition from New York. The board reported to Gen. Washington that André "ought to be considered as a Spy from the enemy," and "ought to suffer death." The next day Washington approved the opinion, and ordered the execution to take place on Oct. 1st.—Sargent, Life of André, 346–56. See also the now scarce report of the hearing, entitled: Proceedings of a Board of General Officers, held by order of His Excellency General Washington, Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States of America. Respecting Major John Andre, Adjutant General of the British Army. September 29, 1780. (Philadelphia Printed—New York Reprinted By James Rivington [1780].)—From copy in N. Y. P. L. (Evans, No. 17044). These proceedings and a number of letters to and from Washington on André's case are printed in N. Y. Merc., N 6, 1780.

" Major André writes from Tappan, with Washington's permission, a farewell letter to Sir Henry Clinton, who is at New York, stating that his going within the enemy's post, and also his changing his dress, were contrary to his own intentions and contrary to Sir Henry's orders; also that the circuitous route which he took was imposed upon him without alternative.—Conn. Gaz. (New London), N 14, 1780).

30 Smith writes that he is requested "to attend at Head Quarters," where he finds "a Number of General Officers & others assembled." Clinton laid before them the "Question relating to Major André & caused the Letters upon this Subject to be read viz^{t} that from Arnold to himself. Another from himself to Washington inclosing Arnolds of 26 Ins^{t}—Washington's of 30th that Day with one from André taking Leave. At the reading of which last he was very much affected.

"A good many Questions were asked, & some by Franklin and Kempe which as supposing Doubts whether André ought not to be considered as a Spy distressed him more and he called out to me for my opinion—I declared it & opened the Reasons, and the whole Company concurred except Franklin & Kempe who seemed to change their Votes.

"After various Suggestions respecting a Letter to be sent in Ans^{r} to Washington's Sir Henry retired & after some Time came in with a Draft which his Sec^{ry} Cap^{t} Smyth read.—

"It was in general approved except as to a Compl^{t} on Washington's Humanity—General Robertson made a Proposition for a shorter & more peremptory Letter & with the General's Leave went out to frame it & it was approved. It intimated that Washington & his Board of General Officers were misinformed that L^{t} General Robertson was sent with two other Gentlemen to state the Facts as they truly were; and to declare the General's Sentiments and Resolutions.

"He had said that he wished them to consult the French and Hessian Generals

"That he expected André tho' no Spy in Return for his exchanging one Robinson Commandant of one of their Frigates who was certainly a Spy

"That he had many others in his Power and would avenge

"This Draft being approved Ch: Justice Smyth whispered to me that I ought to accompany General Robertson who was to go out in the Morning to Dobbs's Ferry & the Letter this Night by Washington's Flag from Poulus Hook by Land.

"Soon after General Robertson wished me to be one of the Person's who was to assist him & upon my approaching the General he asked it. I replied that I had no other objection that as the Question and Business was important it seemed fit to imploy Persons of the highest Rank in it—He replied that he could nominate none of more and exceptionable Character—I thanked him & declared my Readiness to obey his Commands.

"The Secr^{y} was now gone to copy the Letter & we had orders to direct a PS that the two Assistants were M^{r} Elliot & myself—The Company broke up & we agreed to breakfast with the Gov^{r} & go off in the Greyhound in the morning by 7 or 8 o Clock."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under date of O 3.

" Gen. Sir Henry Clinton writes from New York to Gen. Washington that he is sending the governour, Lieut.-Gen. Robertson, also Lieut.-Gov. Andrew Elliot, and Chief-Justice Wm. Smith, to Dobb's Ferry to present additional facts regarding Major André's busines with Arnold, in order to avert if possible André's execution.—Sargent, Life of André, 372. A stay of execution is ordered until Oct. 2, possibly in the hope that Clinton may yield up Benedict Arnold.—Ibid., 375. See also Hist. of the Am. War, by Charles Stedman (1794), I: 251. The copy of the last-named work in the N. Y. P. L. contains the following memorandum in the handwriting of Sir Henry Clinton: "Ignorance of whole transaction—too tender a subject to explain upon now. C." Sept. 30

The current rumour in town that an attack had been intended against West Point is now known with certainty; also it is believed to have been given up.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 100–1. "

The Candid Retrospect is first published in Charleston, S. C. Smith thinks it must have "a good Effect upon Sober but deluded Minds."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under N 17, 1780. Jottings in the diary under earlier dates (see Ja 6 and Jl 20) have revealed William Smith as the author of this pamphlet (see Ja 30, 1781, at which time it was republished in New York). The search for a copy of this original South Carolina edition has been vain. "

It is reported in New York "that Mayor André and Mr. [Joshua Hett] Smith are both to be executed. In Consequence of which general Robertson, Mr. Elliott, Hon. Wm. Smith etc. etc. are gone up the River to see what can be done with Washington."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 101. Oct. 1

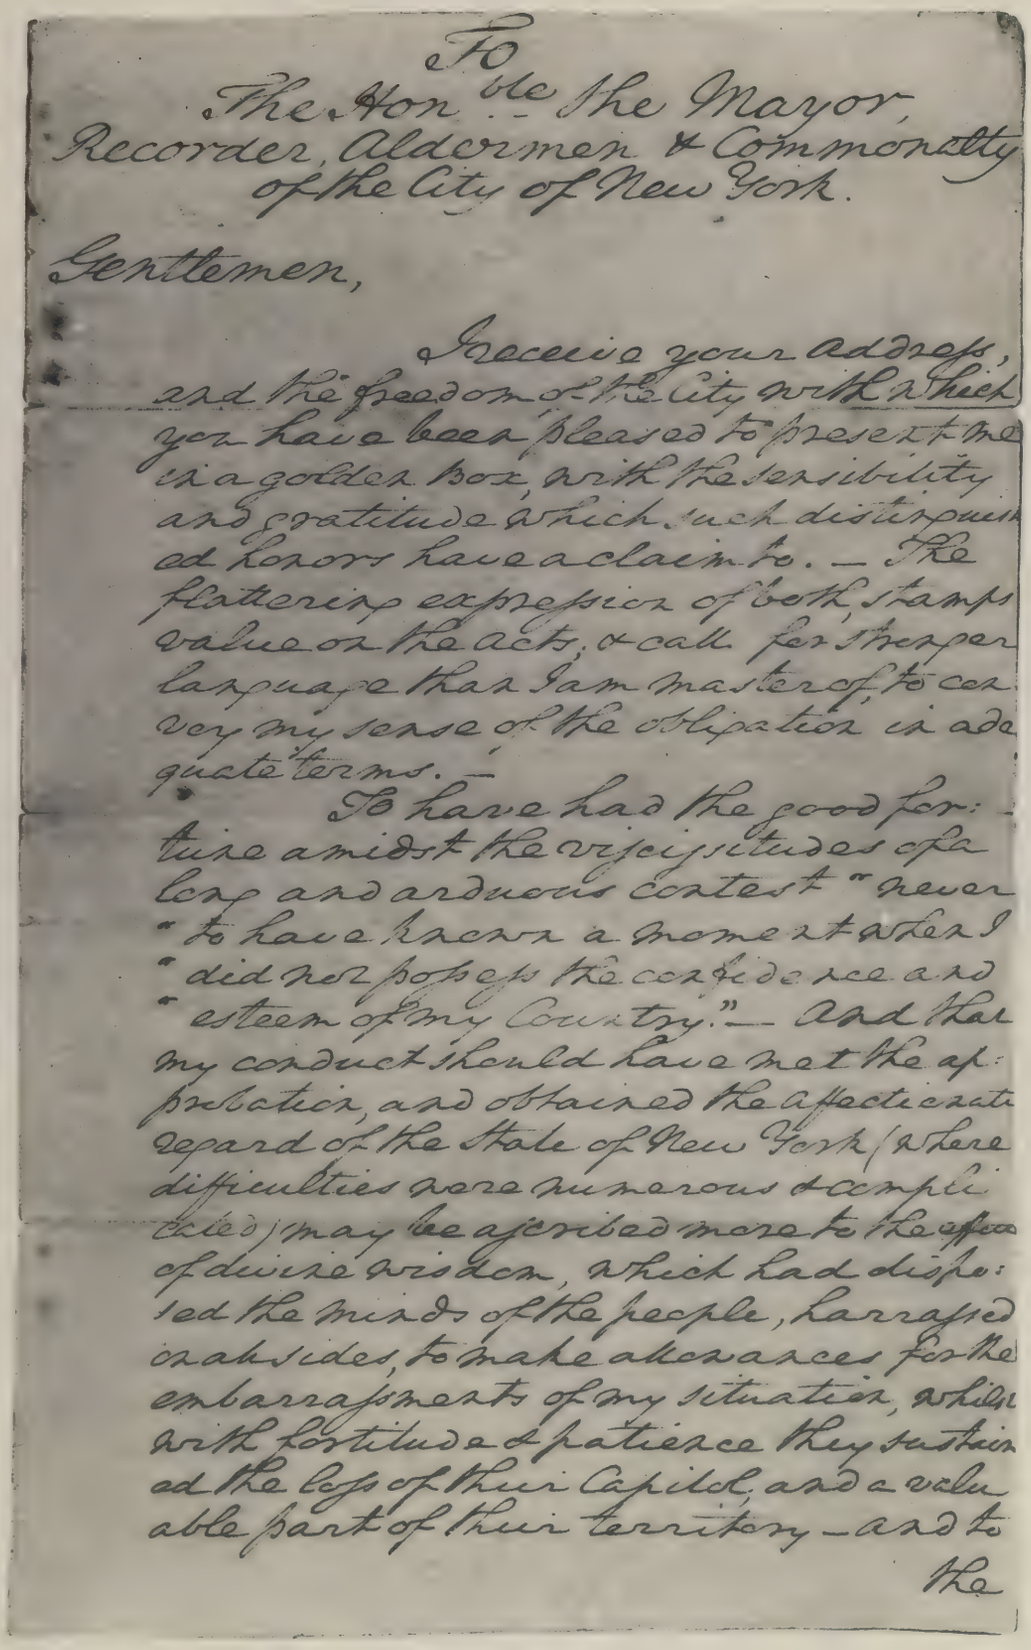
The headquarters orderly-book, for the campaign in the "Southern Department" under Maj.-Gen. Greene, contains the following entry of this date: "The board of Gen Officers to examine in to the Case of Major Andrew [André] have reported 1st That he came on shore from the Vulte Ship of War in the night 21st Sep^{r} last on the inter view with Gen^{l} Arnold in a private and secreet manner. 2^{d} that he changed his dress with in our Lines, and under a fane name and in a disguis^{d} habbit past our Works at Stoney and Verplanks Point the Evening of the 22^{d} Sep^{t} last and was taken up in the morning of the 23^{d} of Sep^{r} last at taritown in a disguis^{d} habbit being then on his way to N. York and when taken had in his possession several papers which contained Inteligence for the Enimy. The Board having mutually considered the facts do also report to his Excellency Genl. Washington that Major Andrews [André] Adj^{t} Genl. to the British Army ought to be considered as a Spy from the enimy and that agreable to the laws and Usages of Nations it is there oppinion that he ought to suffer Death, the Commander in Chief Directs the Execution of the above Centance in usual Way this afternoon at five o'clock precisely."—From printed catalogue of Henkels, Phila., for July 1, 1920, at which time the original orderly-book was sold at auction. A similar entry appears in the orderly-book sold by Henkels on July 17, 1918.—See his catalogue No. 1217, item No. 1. "

"Arnold had prepared a Letter to Washington," says Smith, "taking all Blame upon himself respecting André—and threat[en]-ing Retaliation if the Rights of the Flag were violated, which we were to withold or deliver as we saw fit. [See Sargent's Life of André, 383.] "

"At 3 P M we moored off Corbet's Point and the General sent Murray his Aid de Camp on Shore to know whether there was any Messenger from Washington whose Army was 4 Miles behind at Tappan.

"The officer informed him that Washington's Messenger had not returned above 2 Hours from Poulus Hook, but that General Green was coming & wished to recieve General Robertson alone so that only he and his Aid de Camp went on Shore.

"A long Conference ensued apart while Murray walked elsewhere with Hamilton Washingston [sic] Aid de Camp & two other Rebel officers.



"Greene said M^{r} Washington considered the Right of Enquiry & Decision as theirs & that he only met Gen^{l} Robertson as a Gentleman—General Robertson supposed they wished to know the Truth & that it was immaterial if carried to Washington in what Light he was considered.

"General Robertson let off every Thing in Design and tendered Col^{s} Robertson & the Officers of the Vulture to prove Andrés coming under the Cover of Arnolds Flagg—He shewed Greene also Arnold's Letter to Washington;

"Greene produced a Letter from André to Washington in which he faults his own Disguizes in the Transaction with Arnold & confesses he had no Flagg.

"General Robertson observed properly that André[s] wrong Idea of his Securities Jure Belli were of no avail—Greene said Arnold was a Rascal & André a Man of Honor whom he believed & They would consent to no Conferences on additional Evidence.

"Greene hinted that André might be safe if Arnold was given

To
The Hon.ble The Mayor,
Recorder, Aldermen & Commonalty of the City of New York.

Gentlemen,

I receive your address, and the freedom of the City with which you have been pleased to present me in a golden box, with the sensibility and gratitude which such distinguished honors have a claim to. — The flattering expression of both, stamps value on the acts, & calls for the proper language that I am master of, to convey my sense of the obligation in adequate terms. —

To have had the good fortune amidst the vicissitudes of a long and arduous contest "never
"to have known a moment after I
"did not possess the confidence and
"esteem of my Country." — and that my conduct should have met the approbation, and obtained the affectionate regard of the State of New York, where difficulties were numerous & compliccated, may be ascribed more to the influence of divine wisdom, which had disposed the minds of the people, harrassed on all sides, to make allowances for the embarrassments of my situation, which with fortitude & patience they sustained the loss of their Capitol, and a valuable part of their territory — and to the

FIRST PAGE OF WASHINGTON'S REPLY TO THE COMMON COUNCIL'S GIFT OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY. SEE MAY 2, 1785 (P. 1201).

liberal sentiments, and great acquisition of her virtuous Citizens, that to any merit of mine. —

The reflection of these things now, after the many hours of anxious solicitude which all of us have had, is as pleasing, as our embarrassment at the moment we encountered them were distressing — and must console us for past sufferings & perplexities.

I pray that Heaven may bestow its choicest blessings on your City — That the devastations of War, in which you found it, may soon be without a trace — That a wise republican & beneficial Commerce may enrich your Citizens — and that, your State (at present the seat of the Empire) may set such examples of wisdom & liberality, as shall have a tendency to strengthen it's cementing to the Union at home — and credit & respectability to it abroad. — The accomplishment whereof is a sincere wish, & the primary object of all my desires

G. Washington

SECOND PAGE OF WASHINGTON'S LETTER SHOWN ON PL. 50.

1780 Oct. 1 up & talked of satisfying the Army—Robertson answered with a Look—They parted with Greenes Promise to inform Washington of what had passed."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under date of O 3.

2 "A letter comes from Greene," writes Smith, "intimating that as far as his Memory had served he had given a Report of what was said—Gen[l] Robertson on that wrote to Washington the Substance of what he had said to Greene.

"That he had offered Col[o] Robinson & the Officers of the Vulture to prove Andre came with Arnolds Flagg & conducted as he had directed. That he was no Spy—That Rochambeau & General Knyphausen would not say he was[,] who[m] he wished to be consulted—That Sir H Clinton had exchanged one Robinson a true Spy to oblige Washington & he would give any Person for Andre. That he had Spies whom he had forborne to execute, from a Desire to Spare the Horrors of War. And this Letter inclosed Arnolds to Washington averring that what André had done was all by his order & approbation—That he would retaliate if he suffered—That Sir H had 50 Spies who would also die if Andre was executed and he called Heaven & Earth to Witness that the Injustice would lay at Washingtons Door—

"It was twelve oClock when Murray had delivered this Letter on Shore and as soon as he returned we weighed Anchor & came away. We arrived here in the Evening."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" Major André is executed by hanging, near Tappan, on the west side of the Hudson, although he had requested that he might not die "on a gibbet."—Sargent, Life of André, 390–96; Robertson's Jour. (MS.). The schooner "Greyhound" (which "brought General Robertson's last letter to General Washington, dated on board the schooner on the 2nd of October") returned to New York with the account of André's death.—An Authentic Narrative of the Causes which Led to the Death of Major André, by Joshua Hett Smith (1808), 185.

"His unhappy fate was much regretted; though his life was justly forfeited by the law of nations. He died like a brave soldier."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), O 10, 1780. An officer who was present at the execution said of André that "so much was he esteemed, that Gen. Washington shed tears when the rigorous sentence was put in execution."—Anburey, Travels through the Interior Parts of America, II: 477. See also "Proceedings of a Board of General Officers, Held by order of his Excellency Gen. Washington . . . respecting Major John Andre . . . September 29, 1780," in N. Y. Merc., N 6, 1780; and The Case of Major John André, Adjutant General to the British Army, who was put to death by the Rebels, October 2, 1780 (N. Y., Rivington, 1780). In a long letter to John Laurens, Alexander Hamilton gave an account of the treason of Arnold, and the capture and execution of André, containing his views of the attendant motives.—The Fate of André—A Letter from Alexander Hamilton to John Laurens (N. Y., 1916). For a list of books and pamphlets by André, or which relate to him, see Bibliotheca Americana (the Cat. of the John Carter Brown Library, Providence), Part III, Vol. II, pp. 158–59 (following item No. 2616).

" "It is very sickly on the Island and in New Yk."—From letter of Lieut. Caleb Brewster to Col. John Lamb, in Lamb Papers, at N. Y. H. S.

3 Gen. Robertson returns "from the Rebel Camp," but imparts "little Satisfaction concerning Major André otherwise than he was hanged."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 101.

" Whitehead Hicks, one of the judges of the supreme court, and formerly mayor of this city, dies at Flushing Bay, L. I.—N. Y. Merc., O 9, 1780.

4 Maj. Benjamin Tallmadge writes from Haverstraw: "I am thus far on my Return from H[d] Q[rs] where I have finished my last Duty to poor Andre . . . I have begged this scrap of paper of Gen[l] Wayne (whose Brigade is at this place) to inform you that Major Andre was hanged on the 2[nd] ins[t] 12 O'clock. His Conduct was unparellelled on the occasion. He met death with a smile, chearfully marching to the place of Execution & bidding his friends who had been with him farewell. . . . I cannot say enough of his fortitude—unfortunate youth! I wish Arnold had been in his place.

"J. Smith is now under Tryal & I trust will receive his reward."—Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., I: 98, citing original in the Brinley collection.

" Smith writes of his preparation, at the request of Gen. Arnold, of a draft of an "Address to the Public" (see O 9), and a letter to Lord George Germain (see O 5). On the following day he added: "He [Arnold] calls alters the first & shews new Draft of the last—Copies the former & throws Draft into the Fire with his Notes of it—Begins to copy my Alterations or Additions to the Intelligence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under O 4 and 5. Oct. 4

Gen. Arnold, working now for the British cause, sends to Lord George Germain "The present State of the American Rebel Army Navy & Finances." It reads: "M[r] Washington at a Council of General officers on the 6[th] of Sep[r] stated his operating Force under his own Command to consist of 10400 Men 5

"That there is a Batallion at Rhode Island of Cont[l] Troops 500

"Two Connecticut Reg[ts] of Militia at North Castle in the Colony of Newyork 500

"The Whole 11400

"About a Half of these Troops are Militia & their Times of Service will expire on the 1 of Jan[y] next—The Rest under 6 Thousand are ingaged for the War and the Europeans probably in the Proportion of [blank] have lost their Attachm[t] & desirous to desert. M[r] Gates has some other Troops in the South Country that may . . . amount to 8 Hundred or a Thousand and among these I include about 350 Horse

"All these Troops are ill clad, badly subsisted and worse paid. There are Arrears due to the Army in general of two & three Years standing. Many of the best officers have resigned And others thro' Disgust Necessity & under a Conviction that the Independency contended for cannot be atchieved are preparing to follow their Example.

"The Congress or Civil Authority & the Army are not upon the best Terms—Mutual Jealousies subsist between them—The army concieve themselves ill treated by their Exclusion from all civil appointments of Honor or Profit—The common Soldiery are extremely out of Temper—All Efforts to recruit the Army other than by temporary Drafts of the Militia have proved ineffectual.

"The Congress & their General made united Demands upon the Provinces last Spring for compleating an Army of 35 Thousand Men—No Arguments to Excite to such an Exertion were unoffered. The most flattering one that conjoined with the promised French Aid the War would be terminated by the Expulsion of the British from Newyork— . . . They could not however succeed. Thro' the unconquerable Backwardness of the People who are tired of the War no Volunteers offered & not a third Part of the drafted Militia have appeared in the Field With the increasing general Distresses of the People the Difficulties of recruiting keep pace & in another Year the Army will probably be totally extinct.

"As to the American Navy it is reduced to three Frigates and a few small armed Vessels that are generally in Port for Want of Mariners.

"In Point of Finances the Congress is to the last Degree imbarrassed—Their Debt in Paper Money Loan Offices Certificates & unsatisfied Claims for the Army Pay & to Commissaries & Quarter Masters amounts to upwards of four hundred Millions of Paper Dollars.

"They have therefore lost all Confidence & Credit with the People whom they have repeatedly duped & defrauded—No Regard is had by the Multitude to their Promises and they are every where execrated in an[d] out of the Army—The Separate States or Colonies are as little trusted or respected . . . And scarcely can it be said that any Colony now has a Currency.

"As the Result of these Distresses the Eyes of the People are in general opened. The[y] feel their Error & look back with Remorse to their once happy Condition and most ardently wish for a Reconciliation in Terms safe & honorable to both Countries . . .

"It would serve very good uses if the Com[rs] have Authority for it to signify that the Colonies upon returning to their obedience shall be instantly restored to their Antient Condition with Respect to their Charters Rights and Privileges Civil & Religious free from British Taxation And to invite to Negotiations for general Regulations it will increase the Number of the Advocates for the Reunion

"But the surest Way is to vest Commissioners with decisive Powers on such Settlement as Great Britain may be willing to establish—There will always be jealousies here while a Power is

1780 Oct. reserved to G B to approve or disapprove what the Commissioners have done

5 "With Power in a Sett of Commissioners to bind the Nation as firmly as she could bind herself by further Acts of Parliament I think a Pacification would immediately take Place . . .

"I have said Nothing as to Provisions but that the Army is ill fed.—This is not to be ascribed entirely to a Scarcity of Food but to the Weakness of the Usurpation in every Colony—Without Money or Credit Supplies must be collect[ed] by Force & Terror Where the Army is it takes without opposition but this Force acts ag^t itself by creating internal Enemies . . ."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 194. For the assistance given Arnold by Wm. Smith in the preparation of this "Intelligence," see O 4.

" "News by M^r White that Andre was executed last Monday—Reported that his Servant Pater is come in. He is vastly disconcerted & retires on the Chariot's coming for him from General Robertsons."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

6 Henry Laurens, former president of congress, having been taken prisoner and carried to England, is examined before Lord Germain, the Earl of Hillsborough, and Lord Viscount Stormont, and committed to the Tower on a charge of high treason.—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), O 6–9, 1780.

" The report of the execution of André is confirmed; it took place "in Presence of the Rebel Army."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 101.

7 An act is passed by the state legislature "to procure a Sum in Specie, for the Purpose of redeeming one sixth Part of the Bills emitted on the Credit of this State, pursuant to the Act of Congress of the 18th Day of March, 1780, for discharging the Interest of such Bills, and for other Purposes therein mentioned." The money is to be raised by the sale or mortgage of forfeited lands.—Laws of N. Y., 4th sess., chap. 11 (printed by Holt, 1782). This was amended on March 31, 1781.—Ibid., 4th session, chap. 51.

" There are "Great Lamentations for the Loss of Major André."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 101. It "caused much excitement among the English."—Von Kraffi's Jour., 120.

" Benedict Arnold issues a printed statement, addressed "To the Inhabitants of America," regarding the motives, which induced him to join the king's arms.—Royal Gaz., O 11, 1780. It is also printed as a broadside by Rivington.—See one of these in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., 5486). For biographical notes regarding Arnold, see Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., I: 180–83. See further, O 9.

8 Clinton makes formal announcement to the British army of the death of André, his adjutant. He refers to him as a gentleman "of the highest integrity and honor, and incapable of any base action or unworthy conduct."—Sargent, Life of André, 404.

9 Wm. Smith notes in his diary: "Arnold's Justificatory Address [see O 7] comes out—It does not please the Refugees, who think their own Merits slighted. He is announced to Day a British Brigadier, & recieves Congratulations at the Parade."—Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Arnold had sought assistance from William Smith in the preparation of this address (see O 4). It was entitled: "To the Inhabitants of America." Arnold discusses the motives which have induced him to join the king's forces. He says: "When I quitted domestic happiness for the perils of the field, I conceived the rights of my country in danger, and that duty and honour called me to her defence. A redress of grievances was my only object and aim; however I acquiesced in a step which I thought precipitate, the declaration of independence: To justify this measure many plausible reasons were urged, which could no longer exist when Great-Britain, with the open arms of a parent, offered to embrace us as children and grant the wished for redress. . . .

"I anticipate your question, Was not the war a defensive one until the French joined in the combination? I answer, that I thought so. You will add. Was it not afterwards necessary till the separation of the British empire was complete? By no means; in contending for the welfare of my country I am free to declare my opinion, that this end attained, all strife should have ceased.

"I lamented therefore the impolicy, tyranny and injustice, which, with a sovereign contempt of the people of America, studiously neglected to take their collective sentiments of the British proposals of peace and to negociate, under a suspension of arms, for an adjustment of differences. . . . I had my suspicions of some imperfection in our councils, on proposals prior to the Parliamentary Commission of 1778. . . . But the whole world saw, and all America confessed, that the overtures of the second Commission exceeded our wishes and expectations, and if there was any suspicion of the national liberality, it arose from its excess. Oct. 9

"Do any believe we were at that time really entangled by an alliance with France? unfortunate deception! . . . no authority had been given by the people to conclude it, nor to this very hour have they authorized its ratification. The articles of confederation remain still unsigned.

"In the firm persuasion therefore, that the private judgement of any individual citizen of this country is as free from all conventional restraints, since as before the insidious offers of France, I preferred those from Great-Britain; thinking it infinitely wiser and safer to cast my confidence upon her justice and generosity, than to trust a monarchy too feeble to establish your independency. . . .

"I affect no disguise, and therefore frankly declare that in these principles, I had determined to retain my arms and command for an opportunity to surrender them to Great-Britain; and in concerting the measures for a purpose, in my opinion, as grateful as it would have been beneficial to my country, I was only solicitous to accomplish an event of decisive importance, and to prevent as much as possible, in the execution of it, the effusion of blood.

"With the highest satisfaction I bear testimony to my old fellow soldiers and citizens, that I find solid ground to rely upon the clemency of our sovereign, and abundant conviction that it is the generous intention of Great Britain, not only to leave the rights and privileges of the colonies unimpaired, together with their perpetual exemption from taxation, but to superadd such further benefits as may consist with the common prosperity of the empire. In short, I fought for much less than the parent country is as willing to grant to her colonies as they can be to receive or enjoy. . . ." Arnold's address was printed by the Penn. Packet in its issue of Oct. 17. One week later some one who subscribes himself "A Soldier" calls attention to the deliberate falsehoods Arnold is proved to have uttered in his defence delivered before his court martial at Morristown, on Jan. 21, and then adds: "If gentlemen and soldiers in the British army consent, after reading the above extracts, to serve under or with Mr. Arnold, or even to keep his company, they will, forever, in the opinion of gentlemen and soldiers, disgrace the profession of arms. If their partiality to the cause they are embarked in should lead them to wink at his intended treachery at West-Point, they surely cannot absolve him of having convicted himself of being a Lyar and a Rascal."—Penn. Packet, O 24, 1780.

" At the request of George Stanton and John Somerendyke, a survey is made of Somerendyke's property at Little Bloomingdale, containing 310 acres. The original survey or map is in the Bancker Collection, N. Y. P. L. (box A-B, folder "Bloomingdale"). See also 1747; Ag 16, 1750.

14 "The Fleet said to be for the Chesapeak has been imbarked 10 Days & more. No one can tell what they are detained for. The 3 months men leave Washington this Day. His army is gone from Tappan—some to King's Ferry some back to Paramus."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. The fleet with Gen. Leslie and his troops finally sailed on Oct. 16.—Ibid.

" It is reported "on the other Side of the Lines," says Smith, that General Knox has privately withdrawn himself from the Rebel Army & that Stirling Howe and Parsons are suspected and confined."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "M^r White told me on Thursday last [O 12] that a good deal of Money is gone beyond the Lines within a few Days. Perhaps the General is dealing with the Leaders in Purchases of Peace. I learn't last Night from M^r Shoemaker that two men have been out and in to and from Philadelphia within a few Days. They brought the News of Deane's Elopem^t from France to Holland & England."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

16 "Most opportunely," writes Smith, "the English Fleet arrives at the Hook . . . the Commissary had Provisions but for 7 Days more without reducing the army to an allowance, tho' he has bought 9000 Barrels of meat from the merchants. . . . It is said there are several Thousand Troops in the Fleet just arrived. The Public censure the General much for not visiting Jersey at least for Forage, which he much wants. A little activity too at this Juncture would increase the Confusions & Desertions of the Rebel army—They are at or near Passaic Falls and having lost their 3 months men the 14 Ins^t would be probably disgraced by Flight. . . . Certainly Sir Henry is an Idler. He does nothing to favor the in-1780 O 16 ternal Dissentions of the Rebels by the Defections of Arnold & Deane."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

17 Maj.-Gen Leslie sails on an expedition to the Chesapeake.—Robertson's Jour. (MS.).

" The Friendly Brothers of St. Patrick dine together at Roubalet's Tavern (the City Tavern, 115 Broadway).—Royal Gaz., O 14, 1780. During Roubalet's occupancy of the house, from the spring of 1780 to the autumn of 1783, the newspapers announced various important meetings, concerts, balls, and entertainments at this tavern, which without doubt was the leading public house of the period.

18 The continental congress passes a resolution appointing Dec. 7 to be observed as a day of public thanksgiving for "rescuing the person of our Commander in Chief and the army from imminent dangers, at the moment when treason was ripened for Execution."—Jour. Cont. Cong., XVIII: 950–51. See also contemporaneous MS. excerpt from the original minutes of the old congress, attested by Charles Thomson, perpetual secretary of the congress, printed in Henkel's sales catalogue (Phila.) of July 1, 1920. A manuscript proclamation, containing the language quoted above, and signed by Samuel Huntington, president of the congress, as well as by Charles Thomson, secretary, is described in a catalogue of the Anderson Galleries (N. Y.) for a sale of March 14–15, 1921.

" Washington writes to Nathaniel Greene, from headquarters near Passaic, an important letter describing the critical condition of the army, and urging abandonment of short-term enlistments. The letter is reproduced in Avery's Hist. of the U. S., VI: 254, from the original in the office of the Rhode Island secretary of state, Providence.

" People's lives have lately been in danger by cartmen "riding on their carts, and driving at full speed." F. Metzner, major of brigade, who was appointed on Sept. 29 to issue orders with the authority of the commandant (see N. Y. Merc., O 2), orders that cartmen and draymen shall not ride on their carts and shall walk their horses.—Royal Gaz., O 21, 1780.

" An order is issued from the office of police that vendue masters and auctioneers shall no longer place goods on the Coffee-House bridge, without permit from that office, and then only goods "sold for the benefit of the insurers." The bridge has been "in a great measure broke down and destroyed" by merchandize being placed and sold upon it.—N. Y. Merc., O 23, 1780.

20 Benedict Arnold, now a brigadier-general in the British service (see Royal Gaz., O 21), publishes a proclamation "To the officers and soldiers of the continental army who have the real interest of their country at heart, and who are determined to be no longer the tools and dupes of Congress or of France." It is an invitation to join "a corps of cavalry and infantry, who are to be clothed, subsisted, and paid as the other troops are in the British service." To every non-commissioned officer and private a "Bounty of Three Guineas" is offered. The privilege having been granted him "to nominate the officers" of the corps, Arnold says: "I shall with infinite satisfaction embrace the opportunity of advancing men whose valour I have witnessed, and whose principles are favourable to an union with Britain, and true American Liberty." The rank they obtain in the king's service, he adds, "will bear a proportion to their former rank, and the number of men they bring with them. . . . I wish to lead a chosen band of Americans to the attainment of peace, liberty, and safety, (the first objects in taking the field) and with them to share in the glory of rescuing our native country from the grasping hand of France, as well as from the ambitious and interested views of a desperate party among ourselves, who, in listening to French overtures, and rejecting those from Great-Britain have brought the colonies to the very brink of destruction. . . . Happy for you that you may still become the fellow subjects of Great Britain, if you nobly disdain to be the vassals of France . . .

"As to you who have been soldiers in the continental army, can you at this day want evidence that the funds of your country are exhausted, or that the managers have applied them to their own private uses. In either case you surely can no longer continue in their service with honour or advantage; yet you have hitherto been their supporters in that cruelty, which with an equal indifference to your's, as well as to the labour and blood of others, is devouring a country, that, from the moment you quit their colours, will be redeemed from their tyranny."

The address concludes with a promise of the "most affectionate welcome and attention to all who are disposed to join with me in the measures necessary to close the scene of our afflictions," and with a reminder that the parent country offers "the immediate restoration of our ancient privileges, civil and sacred, and a perpetual exemption from all taxes, but such as we shall think fit to impose on ourselves."—Royal Gaz., O 25, 1780. The address is reproduced in Avery's Hist. of the U. S., VI: 254. The diary (MS.) of Chief-Justice Smith reveals the fact, hitherto unpublished, that the chief-justice wrote this letter for Arnold. Under Oct. 14, we find: Oct 20

"I sent General Arnold yesterday Dᵗ of his Address to the Officers & Soldiers of the Contˡ Army, inviting them to ingage in a New Corps of Cavalry and Infantry."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. Gen. Heath declared the proclamation was without effect.—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 261. See also Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 188.

Smith writes that he hears that "the Bill moved for 24 May last by Govʳ Pownall to enable the King to conclude a Peace or Truce with the Congress or any Assembly was drawn up in Chesnut Street in Philadelphia & sent over to Pownall by John Adams who if it pass'd was authorized to go to England. 21

"See the Morning Chronicle or London Advertiser of 25 & 26 May 1780 for the Bill & Speeches.

"Dempster succeeded Pownall & lamented that no Person could enter the Island to propose Peace without being liable to be seized as a Criminal

"Pownall himself asserted the People of America were inclined to Peace and would meet any serious & practicable Proposition & that he believed it would first Spring from Massachusetts."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.) VI.

Gov. Robertson issues a proclamation "forbidding" all persons whatever from carrying out by land, or on board any ship, vessel, or small craft, or being concerned in shipping or receiving on board any ship, vessel, or small craft, any stores, provisions, goods, wares, or merchandize whatever, without having first obtained a permission for that purpose from the superintendent of exports and imports. Violation of the order will result in the forfeiture of "all such stores, provisions, goods, wares and merchandize so shipped or conveyed."—Royal Gaz., O 28, 1780. This regulation is intended to reinforce the one reissued by Clinton on this day, which first appeared on July 17, 1777 (q.v.). See also Jl 22, 1779. 24

A news item, published in London on this day, states: "Fugitives repair so fast to the royal standard at New-York, that it was thought the new corps, raising by Major Odell, would soon be complete. One Gentleman marched into the city at the head of fifty, with fifes and drums, and was immediately appointed to the command of them. Others were daily coming in when the accounts came away. The unredressed complaints of the Farmers operate powerfully on the minds of others, who, in some respect or other, feel the merciless rod of oppression."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, O 23–25, 1780. 25

The anniversary of "his Majesty's Accession to the Throne" is observed. A royal salute is fired "from Admiral Rodney's fleet and the shipping in the North and East rivers."—N. Y. Merc., O 30, 1780. "

Smith writes: "In a Philad: Paper. of 21 Insᵗ there is a Proclamation of the Congress of 18 Insᵗ for a general Thanksgiving 7 Decʳ for Deliverance from Arnold's Plot &c and for continuing the Enjoymᵗ of the Gospel of Peace. How opportune Arnold's Proclᵃ of 20 Insᵗ asserting that the Congress assisted a Mass in praying for the Soul of Don Juan from Purgatory 28

"The Rebel Papers applaud Andre & revile Arnold & Sʳ Henry Clinton The People however on both Sides of the Lines blame Washington for executing Andre This I hear has brought out a Pamphlet called his Trial to correct the ill Temper occasioned by his Death."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

Nicholas Jones advertises his farm for sale. It is "at Bloomingdale, about 200 acres more or less, seven miles from the city." On it is "a large strong stone built house, pleasantly situated near the North River."—Royal Gaz., O 28, 1780. The Jones house, also mentioned in the "Orderly Book of the British Foot Guards, 1776" (in the archives of the N. Y. H. S.), stood on the line of the present 107th St., west of Eleventh Ave.—Mag. of Am. Hist., VIII: 48. "

Maj. Metzner orders (for the commandant) that all "male Negroes in the garrison, not employed in any of the public departments, or who are not the property of the inhabitants," are to assemble "on the Common near the Bridewell," that they may be 30

1780 O 30 counted and provided for. Those disobeying are to be "turned out of the lines."—N. Y. Merc., O 30, 1780.

" Valentine Nutter (see F 6, 1775), at "No. 924, opposite the Coffee-House" (the Merchants' Coffee House—see L. M. R. K., III: 979), advertises maps for sale, specifying large maps of Virginia, Maryland, New England, etc.—N. Y. Merc., O 30, 1780. On Sept. 30, 1782, he advertised that he had for sale "at his book and stationary store, No. 22, opposite the Coffee House," two volumes of charts, of which he gives the contents, one being a chart of New York.—Ibid., S 30, 1782.

" There is offered, to be let "on a Building Lease," a lot on the north side of Stone Street, "upon which, before the Fire 1776, there was a large Brewry with all its appurtenances."—N. Y. Merc., O 30, 1780.

Nov. 2 This day was appointed "to be observed in the State of New York, as a Day of public Thanksgiving to Almighty God, for his remarkable Deliverance, in the Discovery of the horrid Conspiracy for the delivering up the Fortress at West-Point."—Conn. Gaz. (New London), O 17, 1780.

" Rivington prints a "Gazette Extraordinary," which contains "Copies of Original Letters . . . intercepted in the Rebel Mail, taken some Days ago by a party of his Majesty's Loyal Subjects." One of these letters, dated Philadelphia, Oct. 6, is from Pres. Huntington to the governour of Rhode Island. Huntington encloses the resolutions passed in congress on Sept. 21, regarding the army, and declares that it is very important that the states comply with them and fill their quotas as soon as possible. These resolutions fix the number of regiments in the army, the number of companies in each regiment, and the number of officers in each company. They determine the quota of each state and call upon the states to have their troops in the field by Jan. 1. The regiments are to be filled by enlistments "for and during the war," but if the quota of any state cannot be completed with such recruits by Dec. 1, the deficiency is to be supplied by "men engaged to serve for not less than one year." A bounty of $50 is to be granted to each recruit, and recruiting officers are to receive $2 for each enlistment."—Royal Gaz., N 2, 1780.

Commenting on this, Smith writes:

"This arrangemt greatly reduces the Number of Batalions & so offends the last of Officers [i. e., those recently appointed]. It is new Source of Discord, unless all the Officers are desirous to leave the Army & will make Interest for it. It will be impossible to procure the Volunteers who are to form an Army of 33 Thousand upwards—Vid: the Letters published."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI.

" A man who left New York on this day reported on his arrival in London that "Gen. Arnold is a very unpopular character in the British army, nor can all the patronage he meets with from the Commander in Chief, procure him respectability. General Clinton, from obvious and just motives of policy, gives this signal convert great encouragement, though not, perhaps, an admirer of his principles more than others; but the Subaltern Officers have conceived such an aversion to him, that they unanimously refused to serve under his command, and the detachment he is to lead was, on this account, officered from the Loyal American corps."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), D 11–13, 1780. Cf. N 15.

3 Congress votes a silver medal and an annuity of $200 to each of the three captors of Major André.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (ed. by Gaillard Hunt), XVIII: 1009.

4 Maj. Metzner issues regulations for the barrack office, respecting the issuing and receiving of billets for quarters, regimental store-houses, and stables.—Royal Gaz., N 8, 1780; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 706–7. A source of continual friction was the issuing of orders billeting British officers upon the citizens. "The haughty boarders expected the same subservience in their hosts that they would have found in England, but 'our colonists' had ideas of their own as to their obligations, and the two standards of hospitality clashed. The officer would clap his host into the mainguard, and then the prisoner and his friends would enter an indignant protest with the commander-in-chief. Although the officers were reprimanded, yet the citizen had no legal redress, and, as a result, began to long for civil rather than military government."—Van Tyne, The Loyalists, 249, citing Rivington's Gaz., N 11, 1780; N 23, 1779.

" Brig.-Gen. Birch, the commandant of the city, issues a proclamation offering a reward of 50 guineas for information leading to the arrest of the person or persons who placed combustibles in front of the magazines in New York, or who shall hereafter attempt to do so. Citizens are asked to secure all suspicious persons. Persons who cannot produce the requisite certificate for their being in the garrison are not to be harboured.—N. Y. Merc., N 6, 1780; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 705. Nov. 4

"The captive Rebels in New York had now been all exchanged for Hessian prisoners of Knipphaussen and Lossberg's and other regiments, also English soldiers who were hourly expected in New York."—Von Krafft's Jour., 124. The last arrived on Dec. 11.—Ibid., 126. 8

Smith writes: "[It is] A happy Day if as asserted the Cork Fleet is below—They have been to Charles Town—came from there with other Ships to the Number of 68 10 Days ago—It is true. 10

"Sir George Rodney falls down with the Sandwich & other Ships of the Line this Afternoon about Sunset."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

A New Yorker writes: "Preparations are making here for a large embarkation, (to reinforce Lord Cornwallis, who cannot proceed till he is reinforced,) to consist of all the Grenadiers and Light Infantry of the Army, the Highlanders, Guards, and Hessians, to the amount of 5000 or 6000 men. They have been detained only for want of provisions; but upon the 10th [q. v.] a large fleet of victuallers arrived, and nothing remains but to put a proper quantity on board the transports."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Ja 12–15, 1781. 15

A London news item reads: "Major-General Benedict Arnold, who has quitted the American cause, and joined Sir Henry Clinton, is a brave, gallant, and experienced Officer. . . . The loss of such an experienced Officer must be severely felt by the Americans, and his known probity will make that cause appear very bad, which he could no longer support with honour."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), N 13–15, 1780. "

Washington approves the report of a court of inquiry which was held on Nov. 2 at West Point to examine into Lieut.-Col. Richard Varick's conduct in his connection with Benedict Arnold during the latter's command at West Point, and which unanimously gave the opinion that Varick's conduct "does him great honor as an officer, and particularly distinguishes him as a sincere friend to his country."—The Varick court of inquiry to investigate the implication of Colonel Varick (Arnold's private secretary) in the Arnold treason (ed. by A. B. Hart, and issued to members of the Bibliophile Soc., Boston, 1907), 165. 16

"Yesterday I wrote to Rivington & inclosed him one of the Pamphlets De Roset has published at Charles Town [see S 30]. I recommended to Rivington the Republication of 10 Thousand Copies at the Charge of the Public or by Subscription to be given away and advised that the Appendix be taken in as Notes—to prevent Disconnection in the Perusal. To take off his Suspicion I hinted that the overtures by Lord Drummond was not fully displayed but that the Publication would draw further Information—he promised me an answer upon the Subject."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. 17

"There is a second embarkation taking place at N. York, for Charlestown, which will leave not more than 4000 troops in N. Y. There has none of the Cork Fleet arrived yet."—From letter of Lieut. Caleb Brewster to Col. John Lamb, in the Lamb Papers (MS.), at N. Y. H. S. 18

"A very numerous and respectable body of the merchants, traders and other inhabitants" of Philadelphia seek by a set of resolutions "to avoid the difficulties and distresses . . . daily increasing from the fluctuating state and rapid depreciation of the continental money." They fix the value of this money, "compared with specie, . . . at seventy-five for one." All contracts in future are to be made "in specie value, but payable nevertheless in continental money at the option of the debtor, at the exchange now established." Any one refusing "to receive the said paper money at the exchange settled," or demanding "a higher exchange," is to be "exposed to the public as an enemy to the independence of America, and to the peace and good order of the city." Likewise any one who shall "give or offer more than seventy-five continental dollars for one in specie" shall be considered a "disaffected and dangerous person." A committee of 13 is chosen "to draw up this Association in form, and get the same printed" to be presented for subscription "to every householder, trader and tradesman."—Penn. Gaz., N 22, 1780. Commenting on these resolutions, Smith says they "Oblige all men to recieve Continental Money at 75 for 1 by leaving the Debtor at Liberty tho' he contracts in Gold to pay in Paper at that Rate. Thus the established Laws are set aside. What 20 1780 Nov. 20 Evidence of a Malady incurable! Nothing can supply the Want of Money in a State of War but that which all the World agrees to be Money. The Common Court of Exchange at Philadelphia is 130 & 135 for one at the Moment of these absurd Regulations."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI.

" "Rivington writes wishing me to speak to the Com^{r} in Chief about the Expense of republishing the Candid Retrospect [see S 30] as he is often with the violent Refugees & particularly Gov^{r} Franklin who murmurs about the Delays of the Gen^{l} respecting the Board of Directors I am suspicious whether he is not prompted to find me if possible a Confidant of Sir Henry's a character in which I don't desire to be considered."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See N 22.

" The price of bread is raised from 14 to 16 coppers per loaf, and must be made and sold as required by specified regulations (like those of Mr 15, q.v.); and a new inspector, Balthasar Creamer, is named.—Royal Gaz., N 23, 1780. See also De Voe, Market Book, 167.

21 "The loyalists were found so numerous in New York in 1780 that they were encouraged by the British government to form an association of their own [cf. Ag 25, 1779], independent of the orders of the British commander. It was entitled 'The Honorable Board of Associated Loyalists.' At its head was the son of Dr. Franklin,—William, late the Tory governor of New Jersey. . . ."—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 198.

Among the unbound Smith papers in the N. Y. P. L., there is a draft of a letter prepared by Smith for Sir Henry Clinton to sign appointing a board of directors for the "Associated Loyalists" (see O 31). This reads in part:

"To William Franklin Esq^{r} Governor of New Jersey Josiah Martin Esq^{r} Governor of North Carolina Timothy Ruggles Daniel Coxe George Duncan Ludlow Edward Lutwycke George Rome & George Leonard Esquires.

"Whereas I am informed, by a Letter from the Right Honorable Lord George Germain, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, bearing Date the twenty first Day of April last . . . that certain Proposals contained in a Memorial of M^{r} George Leonard . . . had been laid before the King, and appeared to his Majesty a proper Ground upon which a Place may be formed for imploying the Zeal of his Majesty's faithful Subjects in North America, in annoying the Sea Coasts of the revolted Provinces, and distressing their Trade, either in Cooperation with his Majesty's Land & Sea Forces, or by making Diversions in their Favor, when they are carrying on Operations in other Parts; and it being also by the said Letter signified that his Majesty approves of you as a Board of Directors for the Conduct and Management of this Business I do therefore constitute you to be a Board of Directors for the Purposes aforesaid, with the Powers and under the Regulations, Limitations & Restrictions here in after mentioned or to be expressed in such other new Instructions altering inlarging or changing the same as you shall from time to time here after recieve. . . .

"You are to frame Articles for embodying and imploying such of his Majesty's faithful Subjects as are able & willing to bear Arms for the Suppression of the present Rebellion and will ingage to serve under your Direction & agreable to this Establishment for such Terms as you & they can agree. Which Associators are to be duly inrolled, under the Command of Officers, to be recommended by the Majority of your Board but to recieve their Commissions from me, or the Commander in Chief for the Time being, and of such Articles of Association previous to the Execution thereof & of every future Change & Alteration of the same, you are to make Report at Head Quarters with all convenient Dispatch for consideration and approbation.

"2 You are firmly to depend upon that Aid from me, which the letter aforementioned authorizes me to afford; and for the Encouragement of those who may associate with you, you have hereby Authority to make known to them the Benefits Promises and Rewards in the said Letter expressed. . . .

"3 As soon as you have collected a Force you are to report at Head Quarters its strength, and from Time to Time to give the Intimations & make the Requests that may be expedient to its being imployed & operating with Success.

"4 You are to keep a Journal of your Meetings, Conventions, Resolutions and Transactions, & to transmit to Head Quarters every Month a fair Copy . . . of the Entries . . .

"5 You are not to undertake any Enterprize without the previous Consent of the Commander in Chief . . . And with your Intimation of a Desire to attempt any Enterprize, you are to state . . . the probable Uses of the Intention . . . Nov. 21

"6 You are to order the Commanding Officers of all Parties & Detachments of Associators to be particularly careful, that no loyal or quiet & inoffensive Inhabitants . . . residing among the Rebels be hurt or molested . . .

"7 You are to direct the Association in all their Excursions to obey such Commands as may be given from Head Quarters as to their Conduct & Duration & to obtain every useful Intelligence respecting the Enemy, and particularly to bring off all Letters and Papers, which they may find in the Houses of distinguished Rebels . . .

". . . It is very possible that Experience in the execution of this Confederacy may point to the utility of inlarging the Powers of your Board and to that End you are invited to make the necessary Representations that may seem expedient . . ."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 183.

On Nov. 21, 1780, Smith and Elliot had a conference with Clinton about this. Smith writes of the meeting:

"M^{r} Elliot & I had an Interview with the Com^{r} in Chief. I read we both explained & he approved, but a word altered Association for Confederacy at the End. He said it came up to his own Idea & he thank'd us much for the Trouble—He chose to appoint both Stewart & Alexander till the King's Pleasure can be known & I drew the Clause at Sec^{ry} Smith's—The General & he both charged with Secrecy as the Restraints upon the Board must administer both to Disgust & Jealousy."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VI. A copy of the letter was delivered to Gov. Franklin on Nov. 22.—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 183.

"The acquisition of General Arnold is regarded at New-York as a very fortunate event, not only on account of the merit of that Gentleman in a military capacity, and the secrets of which he is in possession, but as it is an indication of those discontents and murmurings, that have been said to have distracted, for some time, the American counsels. It is a common saying at New-York, that the ship must be near sinking when the rats are leaving it."—Lloyd's Eve. Post, N 20–22, 1780. 22

" "Wrote to Gen^{l} Robertson, advising to the Edition of 10 Thousand Copies of the Candid Retrospect—Rivington says if he prints 5000 he will be obliged to charge 1/ for each & if less more, so that the more he prints the less he can sell them for."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See D 1.

In Philadelphia, a number of persons are apprehended who have been "long suspected of carrying on an illicit and dangerous correspondence with the enemy (by way of Shrewsbury) and depreciating our money." When examined "before the President and Vice-President, invoices of goods brought from New-York, to a great amount, accounts of the sales of gold and silver, rates of depreciation, the routes and stages to the sea shore, &c. &c. were found upon them. It appeared also, that by these means, persons were conveyed privately to New-York."—Penn. Gaz., N 29, 1780. 23

" The "Hussar," a British frigate of 28 guns, goes down in Hellgate in "12 Fathom Water." "There must have been Monstrous bad Conduct But so there ever is in all the Departments of Service. I imagine she was to be imployed with other Ships in culling out a Ship of 500 Ton with Salt that has shamefully been suffered to go into New London."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under Nov. 24. Another authority states that the "Huzzar" struck Pot Rock at Hell Gate, and sank "in a bay called 'The Brothers' in seven fathoms of water."—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1884), XII: 90, citing the Edinburgh Observer and other reports. All on board but 80 persons were lost.—Conn. Gaz., D 5, 1780. The frigate carried about $1,800,000 in specie, part of which was recovered by divers in 1856.—N. Y. Times, S 8, 1856; Emmet Coll., item No. 12061.

Brig.-Gen. Birch issues a proclamation declaring: "That after the 20th day of December next, no vessel be allowed to lay at, or near any wharff of this city, without having previously obtained permits from the Superintendent of the port . . . 29

"All owners, merchants, and masters of such vessels (not employed in the service of the government) as intend wintering at New-York, are hereby ordered to remove their vessels to Newtown Creek . . .

"Any person offending against this Proclamation, will be subject to one month's imprisonment in the Provost, and to the payment of such fine as shall be ajudged by the Police, for the use of the 1780 Nov. 29 City Funds."—N. Y. Merc., D 11, 1780. The proclamation was reissued on Dec. 20, 1781.—Ibid., D 24, 1781. See Dawson's report on the city finances during the Revolution, in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 218.

Dec. 1 "General Robertson had not sent for the Candid Retrospect from Rivington last Monday—But I begg'd Rivington to send it to him & yesterday he told me it was done. The General censured the Printers Extortion for his Proclamations &c and I expect no Attention from Military Men to such Kind of Measures."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See D 6.

6 News reaches England from New York that "desertions from the rebel army have been very frequent since Gen. Arnold came in, and sometimes amount to 15 or 20 in a day."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), D 4–6, 1780.

" Chief-Justice Smith recommends "the Republication of the Candid Retrospect" (see S 30) to Clinton, who authorizes him "to speak to Rivington & intimate that it should be at the public Expence." Later in the day, Smith "ingaged Rivington to send an Account of the Charge of 5000 Copies of the Retrospect to the General which he is to transact by his own Proposal with Major De Lancey. After which I sent the Pamphlet with my Compl^{ts} in a Card to the Commander in Chief."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. See D 7.

7 The executive council of Pennsylvania by proclamation sets aside this day for "public Thanksgiving and Prayer." Among the blessings which "call for their devout and thankful acknowledgments" is mentioned the rescue of "the person of our commander in chief and the army from imminent dangers, at the moment when treason was ripened for execution" (see S 22).—Penn. Gaz., N 22, 1780.

" Rivington sends to me for "a Copy of the Candid Retrospect saying he has just rec^{d} Orders from Head Quarters for the Edition of it. This is a Proof of his attention to what I recommended yesterday. I refer him to the Copy in General Robertson's Hands as my Copy and inform him that the Com^{r} in Chief has another." On the next day, Smith repeated "the Hint to Rivington to take the appendix in as Notes at the References. He ans^{rs} that he has adopted it as before Suggested."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI, under D 7 and 8.

8 "An Expedition [is] on Foot[,] Supposed for Virginia[,] under the Command of Arnold."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 106. See D 21.

16 A New Yorker writes: "Ethan Allen, formerly a rebel Colonel, who resided at Bennington, in the upper part of this province, not well used as he thought by the Congress, has marched off with six hundred of the Green-mountain Boys, as they stile themselves, and joined Major Carleton at Ticonderoga; and it is thought other townships will follow their example. Admiral Graves is blocking up Monsieur Ternay; Arbuthnot is at New-York, and Admiral Rodney is gone to the West-Indies. The Captains of the cruizing ships are making large fortunes by the captures they make. Congress money is now at 110 dollars for one Spanish."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), F 19–21, 1781.

Sparks says that the disputes between Vermont and her neighbouring states made the British think that the Vermonters were no longer in sympathy with the American cause. The loyalist, Beverly Robinson, therefore wrote to Ethan Allen on March 30, 1780, asking if he would join the British and promising Vermont a separate government. Allen did not answer the letter, but he and his friends pretended to be well disposed toward the British and even made a truce with Canada and kept up a secret correspondence, in order that Vermont might be safe from attack. Robinson wrote again on Feb. 2, 1781, enclosing a copy of his first letter and renewing his proposals. Allen forwarded both letters to congress.—Sparks, Am. Biog., I: 338–48.

19 "I attended the General with Elliot who called for me & he shewed a short Letter from the Adm^{l} just rec^{d} desiring that something might [be] done on the Commission & the Council called if proper. He said it was an Echo of one from him several Days ago to the Adm^{l} He called Smith to shew it, who brought a Bundle but the Gen^{l} after search said it was not there—Smith was gone—Upon the whole agreed that it would be proper to meet him, & with General Robertson to concert an Address to the People before a Meeting of the Council & I thought best if possible without them. Cap^{t} Smith now begs my Draft of an Address, what I gave the Gen^{l} in Ju^{l}y being missing. I promised a Copy in the Morning meaning to make some alterations."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. On Dec. 20, Smith wrote at 10 o'clock: "The Adm^{l} & General Call at Head Quarters agreable to Notice given as Cap^{t} Smith had told me an Hour ago when I gave him an altered Draft of a Declaration to the Public—and I suppose they are now upon it. The General said yesterday he would not serve with the Adm^{l} by Sea or Land one of us must quit the Service." At noon, he added: "Gen^{l} R reports what passed this Morning. The Gen^{l} desired him to be present & so he fetched the Adm^{l}—They were shy of each other . . . The Gen^{l} asked Adm^{l} whether he had seen what I proposed[,] Holding what I had sent this Morn^{g} in his Hand—The Ad^{l} said he liked it in the main—Agreed Gen^{l} R should prepare some thing—He calls here. I shewed the Draft which he had not before read. He objected to Nothing but the absolute Promise to support America at all Events & wanted some Proof of Penitence—I told him what I had urged to Gov^{r} Johnson—He wished a Copy with these amendments—I incorporated them & sent the Copy this Afternoon. How trifling this conduct!—I press'd G Rob: to interfere & avail himself of the Confidence of the two Chiefs. He promises it."—Ibid. Dec. 19

Smith's draft is entitled "A Declaration to the Inha^{bts} of the British Colonies on the Contin^{t} of N America of every Rank Order and Denomination." It reads:

"Great B. having manifested the Sincerity of her Affectionate and conciliatory Intentions, in removing forever your pretended Grounds of Discontent by repealing among other Statutes those relating to the Duty on Tea and the Alterations in the Gov^{t} of the Massa: Bay and by exempting not only the Cont^{l} but the Insular Colonies from parliam^{ty} Taxation it is with much Pleasure we make known to you that we have rec^{d} a Commission having for its Objects the Restoration of your local Legislatures with the Benefits of extensive Commerce the Confirm^{a} of your Rights Liberties and Privileges the Removal of Distrusts by the Remission of Offences And the Introduction of such other Arrangem^{ts} & Regulations . . . as may tend to the Advantage and Stability of the Colonies & Provinces And the lasting Union of each of them with the Parent Country upon the Principles of the Constitution . . .

"The Door is thus again thrown open . . . for commencing Negotiations that may instantly terminate the Miseries of your Country . . .

"For the Consolation of the Friends of Peace and the Reunion whose Sufferings we compassionate in their present temporary Subjection to lawless Misrule we declare it to be the Intention of Great Britain by the Blessing of God to contend for the Interests of the Colonists as inseperably Connected with her own . . .

"And while the Loyal are exhorted to persevere in their Fidelity for the Preservation of their Country its Religion and Liberties we avow to all other Classes of every order our anxious Desire for their immediate Acceptance of the Invitation to Reconciliation Peace and that we are ready to grant the Safe Conducts requisite to such Negotiations & free Conferences as may prepare the Way for regular Assemblies to place the public Felicity upon solid Foundations . . .

"As yet we preclude No Man in Whatever Light his Character and Conduct may be legally considered from Access to us for the amicable Negotiations . . . except such as are stained with the Blood of their own Countrymen and Fellow Citizens by slighting the Admonition contained in the Manifesto of the Royal Com^{rs} dated on the 3 Day of Oct^{r} 1778 . . . and excepting also . . . every Person immediately concerned in and consenting to the late violent and injustifiable Measures ag^{t} the Life of the Kings Adjutant General . . .

"To all others sincerely wishing the Restoration of the common Tranquility and Harmony and giving substantial Proof of that favorable and loyal Disposition by renouncing and quitting the Rebel Cause Councils and Service within [blank] Days from the Date hereof . . . we declare ourselves cheerfully willing to grant the full Benefits of his Majesty's Clemency . . ."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 194. This declaration was published in the Mercury for Ja 8, 1781.

21 Brig.-Gen. Benedict Arnold, now a member of the British forces, sails for the Chesapeake.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 106; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII; Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Under date of Jan. 28, 1781, Abigail Adams wrote to her husband (John Adams), then in Paris: "It is reported that Arnold, with a body of troops, is gone to Virginia, where it is hoped he and his Myrmidons will meet their fate. Had Clinton been a generous enemy, or known 1780 Dec. 21 human nature, he would, like Aurelian, upon a like occasion, have given up the traitor to the hands of justice, knowing that it was in vain to expect fidelity in a man who had betrayed his own country, which from his defection, may learn to place a higher value upon integrity and virtue than upon a savage ferocity, so often mistaken for courage. He who, as an individual, is cruel, unjust, and immoral, will not be likely to possess the virtues necessary in a general or statesman."—Familiar letters of John & Abigail Adams (1876), 391. For an account of Arnold's expedition, see D 30.

" Smith in his diary characterizes Sir Henry Clinton as follows: "He is very unfit for his Station—Sensible of his weakness he is shy out of Pride—very changeable, because his measures are not concerted with Judgm^t—Jealousy is his chief Vice. Tho' active it is only for bodily Exercise. In business he is idle—a Procrastinator —Inattentive to Œconomy—In short a Trifler—The People about him dread him and worship him out of the Fear of his Humours." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

25 An advertisement for the return of a lost horse mentions "the pasture of Pell at the Bull's Head in the Bowery."—N. Y. Merc., D 25, 1780. A few years later, Barney and Pell were joint proprietors of the "Plow and Harrow."—See Ja 3, 1765; L. M. R. K., III: 980.

" An advertisement for the return of a negro mentions John Hutchinson's "Inn near the four Mile Stone, leading to Fort Knyphausen."—N. Y. Merc., D 25, 1780. Hutchinson was both tavern-keeper and horse-breeder.—Ibid., Ap 2, 1781.

30 On or about this date, Benedict Arnold, under orders from Gen. Clinton, arrived in Virginia (see D 21) on a marauding expedition and proceeded to Williamsburg. Later he seized public records in Richmond and went on to Petersburg. He sent back to New York an immense amount of plunder of every sort, taken from vessels, public stores, farms, and elsewhere.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under date of Ja 17 and 20, 1781. Cf. Royal Gaz., Ja 17, 27, F 7, 1781; Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, II: 177.

1781

— A news item which appeared sometime during this year, probably in a London paper, reads: "An American Correspondent says, that the officers of the army, in New York, concerned in the management of the Theatre there, form a body, like any other company of Comedians, and share the profits arising from their exhibitions. To people on this side of the water, it may seem mean for British officers to perform for hire; but in New York necessaries are so extremely dear, that an inferior officer, who has no other resources than his pay, undergoes more difficulties than a common soldier."—Upcott Coll., VI: 231. The British officers started their performances at the John Street Theatre on Jan. 25, 1777 (q.v.), and continued them until shortly before their evacuation of the city (see Je 19, 1783).

— In 1781 and 1782, the British engineers, on the basis of the works on Laurel Hill, which they had developed and called Fort Clinton, erected a powerful star fort, which they then named Fort George.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc., 431 et seq. This work, on the modern map, would be between Audubon and Fort George Aves., and 192d and 193d Sts.; it has given its name to the elevation and even the neighbourhood, which is now known as Fort George. See 1776, 1780; L. M. R. K., III: 944; Pl. 180, Vol. III.

— In 1781, 1782, 1785, and 1786, surveys were made of James de Lancey's lands, adjoining Mount Pitt on the west, and bounded by Bowery Lane, Division St., etc. The original plans are in the Bancker Coll, in the N. Y. Pub. Library. These were probably made in connection with the Confiscation Act of Oct. 22, 1779 (q.v.).

Jan. 1 "This Evening will be exhibited At the sign of the stove-grate, nearly opposite the Coffee-House, and next to the Hessian guard-house, The Chinese Umbra, On an entire new construction; With a variety of devices, in lively colours, such as ships sailing on the water, a representation of the sun and moon, with a view of Noah's ark . . .," etc.—N. Y. Merc., Ja 1, 1781.

2 About 100 Americans attempt to cross the North River from Jersey to New York, "to surprise and carry away General Clinton." Wind and tide being unfavourable, the boats cannot land.—Von Krafft's Jour., 128–29; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 107.

5 A committee of congress, after having considered a letter from Abraham Skinner, American commissary of prisoners, and other papers relating to the treatment of prisoners by the British, reports: Jan. 5

"That notwithstanding every effort of Congress to obtain for our people, prisoners in the hands of the enemy, that treatment which humanity alone should have dictated, the British commanders, unmindful of the tenderness exercised towards their men, prisoners in our hands, and regardless of the practice of civilized nations, have persisted in treating our people, prisoners to them, with every species of insult, outrage and cruelty. Officers and men are indiscriminately thrown into the hold of prison-ships and into loathesome dungeons, and there deprived of fuel and the common necessaries of life, by which means many of the citizens of these states have been compelled to enter into their service, to avoid those distresses which a conduct so contrary to the law of nations had brought upon them. Our seamen taken upon the American coast, have been sent to Great Britain, and other parts beyond seas, to prevent their being exchanged, or to force them to take arms against their country: that in the opinion of the committee, an exercise of the law of retaliation has become necessary, as a justice due to those citizens of America whom the fortune of war has thrown into the power of the enemy."

Upon hearing this report, congress resolves that the papers be sent to Gen. Washington so that he may inquire into the truth of the statements and give orders for the British prisoners to be treated in the same manner as the Americans are. Congress also recommends that the state executives carry into effect the act of Jan. 13, 1780, respecting prisoners, and directs the board of admiralty to "issue orders not to exchange any British sea officer or seaman, until the enemy shall have returned to some of their garrisons in America, such seamen as they have taken upon the American coast, and sent to Great Britain, or other parts beyond sea; [This clause was repealed on Jan. 29.] and that the Board of War and Board of Admiralty give orders for continuing the treatment of prisoners as herein directed, until they receive orders to the contrary from Congress or the Commander in Chief."—Jour. of Cong. (ed. by Hunt), XIX: 27–28, 96. Regarding the reception of this resolution by the British, see Mr 5, 1780; Ja 25, 1781; F 12, 1781. See another congressional committee report and resolution under Ag 3.

Von Krafft records: "In the morning we were again mustered by the former English Inspector in front of the quarters of Gen. v. Lossberg at the so-called Morris House."—Von Krafft's Jour., 129. 16

"The enemy at New-York removed the greater part of their shipping from the East River round into the North River."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 271. 17

New York is visited by a hurricane of rain, hail, and snow. Most of the houses in the city are "severely shaken;" vessels are driven ashore.—Penn. Packet, Ja 30, 1781; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 109; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 23

Washington, while at "New-Windsor," writes to "Admiral Arbuthnot, or the Officer commanding the British Fleet at New-York:" 25

"Through a variety of channels, representations of too serious a nature to be disregarded, have come to us, that the American naval prisoners in the harbour of New York, are suffering all the extremities of distress—from a too crowded, and in all respects disagreeable and unwholesome situation on board the prison ships; and from the want of food and other necessaries. The picture given us of their sufferings is truly calamitous and deplorable; if just, it is the obvious interest of both parties, (to omit the plea of humanity) that the causes should, without delay, be enquired into, and removed; if false, it is equally desirable that effectual measures should be taken to obviate misapprehension. This can only be done by permitting an officer of confidence, on both sides, to visit the prisoners in their respective confinements, and examine into their true conditions: This will either at once satisfy you, that by some abuse of trust, in the persons immediately charged with the care of the prisoners, their treatment is really such as has been described to us and requires a change; or it will convince us, that the clamours are ill grounded.

"A disposition to aggravate the miseries of captivity, is too illiberal to be imputed to any but those subordinate characters, who, in every service, are too often remiss or unprincipled. [See also David Sproat, by James Lenox Banks, in which the author aims to prove that the frequent statements made by historians to the effect that the British commissaries having charge of the naval prisoners were dishonest are without foundation. Such a statement, regarding 1781 Jan. 25 "Dishonest commissaries," was made in Vol. I, p. 328, of the present work.] This reflection assures me that you will acquiesce in the mode proposed for ascertaining the truth; for detecting delinquency on one side, or falsehood on the other.

"The discussions and asperities which have had too much place on the subject of prisoners are so irksome in themselves, and have had so many ill consequences, that it is infinitely to be wished there may be no room given to revive them.—The mode I have suggested, appears to me calculated to bring the present matter to a fair, direct, and satisfactory issue. I am sensible of no inconveniencies it can be attended with, and I therefore hope for your concurrence. I shall be glad, as soon as possible, to hear from you on the subject.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient,

"And humble Servant,

(signed) "Geo. Washington."

Washington's letter was answered, on Feb. 4, by G. Dawson, "Commanding Officer of his Majesty's ships at New-York" and "Captain of his Majesty's ship the Iris," who stated: "An old sixty four gun ship [the "Jersey"] is allotted for their reception in this harbour, and every possible check has been established to prevent any practices from creeping in, in violation of the laws and precedents of war in similar situations.—The arrangement of exchange and parole is made by the Commissary-General, Mr. David Sproat.—Lieut. Sporne, of the Royal Navy, an officer of experience and humanity, commands the prison ship, which is victualled by a Purser, with the very same provisions that the officers and seamen in the Royal Service are supplied with, and it is issued to them in the same manner."—N. Y. Merc., F 12, 1781. Dawson's letter followed the inquiry in which he participated on Feb. 2 (q. v.).

Arbuthnot did not reply until the latter part of April. He said, in part: ". . . notwithstanding that I then thought, as I now do, that my own testimony would have been sufficient to put the truth past a doubt, I ordered the strictest scrutiny to be made into the condition of all parties concerned in the victualling and treatment of those unfortunate people. . . ." He added: "Permit me, now, Sir, to request that you will take the proper steps to cause Mr. Bradford, your Commissary, and the Jailor at Philadelphia, to abate the inhumanity which they exercise indiscriminately upon all people who are so unfortunate as to be carried into that place . . . that in future they may not be fed in winter upon salted clams, and that they may be afforded a sufficiency of fuel."—Dandridge, Am. Prisoners of the Rev., 401.

30 The Candid Retrospect or the American War examined, by Whig Principles is published by Rivington. A letter is preserved within Smith's diary, in Rivington's handwriting, in which the writer "presents his Comp^{ts} & sends Chief Justice Smith 100 Candid Retrospect."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. A copy of this anonymous pamphlet, hitherto unnoticed in Revolutionary studies, is preserved in the N. Y. H. S. It was first printed in Charleston, Sept. 30, 1780 (q. v.). It is proven by his diary (see Ja 6 and Jl 20, 1780) that William Smith was the author. The presentation to him of 100 copies, as soon as the book was issued, is, therefore, easily understood. So is this remark, offered by Smith (see F 6) in answer to an inquiry regarding its authorship: "I ans^{d} evasively that it was imputed in Charles Town to one Williams a lawyer." Smith bound to secrecy (see Jl 20, 1780, and Jl 1, 1781) those few contemporaries to whom he made the fact of his authorship known. Sometimes he wondered if the British military family in the city suspected him "to be the Author" (see Jl 1). No evidence of such a suspicion appears, however; indeed, the authorship is publicly revealed for the first time in this work. The purpose of the pamphlet was, to quote the author, "to work a Change in the Whiggs" in the Carolinas. Throughout one observes the effort to conciliate, that ever marked Smith's writings and utterances.

It begins: "The political creed of America . . . may be comprised in the twelve following articles:

"I. Every nation has authority to frame such a government for itself, as will, without injury to others, be most conducive to its own felicity.

"II. The national sovereignty under every form of government . . . is absolute; for no State can exist, if any of its members may by force or fraud attempt its subversion with impunity: And therefore, every nation punishes treason, or an attempt tending to overturn the constitution, as the highest crime of which a subject can be guilty.

"III. No man can be innocent, even Foro Conscientiæ, in an endeavour to change the government of his country, if the meditated revolution will light up a civil war, and the miseries in prospect are likely to exceed those, which the community have been accustomed to endure. Jan. 30

"IV. The establishments made in America by English emigrants and their associates might in the early day of the colonies, if the parent country had been so determined, have been prevented or broken up.

"V. The Lords and Commons of England, being connusant of the grants and charters . . . for the encouragement of the colonies . . . and afterwards co-operating for regulating the plantations . . . they cannot therefore be considered as merely Royal, but Parliamentary, or national establishments.

"VI. The grants and charters to the colonies, and the posterior settlements, regulations and usages . . . are incontestible proofs of a great national covenant between the Mother Country and the colonies, for her favours . . . by inspiring the Colonists with confidence, and exposing them to hazardous and expensive undertakings, created rights; . . .

"VII. Before the year 1764, the King, Lords and Commons, were universally acknowledged to be the supreme law-givers of the whole empire; of which the colonies were members.

"VIII. The national covenant bound the parent country to protect and promote the colonies . . . as far as was consistent with the general weal of all the dispersions of the nation; and it obliged the plantations to submit to her authority in all cases not repugnant to their grants, charters and establishments; and to such acts and contributions, as were necessary for the common defence and felicity of the empire.

"IX. Neither of the contracting parties may dissolve this compact, as long as their joint aim in the union, to wit, their mutual prosperity, can be attained by it.

"X. As no provision was made for constituting an impartial Judge between them, . . . their controversies are to be decided by negotiation and treaty, or an appeal by battle to the Lord of Hosts; for neither is obliged to surrender its essential rights at the will of the other, and each is justifiable in exerting its own self-preserving powers.

"XI. When one of them wants either will or ability to fulfil its engagements, the other, if not instrumental to this disaffection or impotence, will be discharged from the original obligation. But,

"XII. Since amongst imperfect beings offences are inevitable, the contractors are by the laws of a judge who cannot be deceived, reciprocally bound, upon exceptions taken, to pursue every measure of a re-conciliatory nature, consistent with the end of the union; and to such mutual condescentions, as tend to the re-establishment of the general felicity, peace and harmony." In the application of these principles to the present quarrel, "neither Great-Britain nor America will appear to be without blame." The former's language to her colonies, at the passing of the Stamp Act was: "You Americans are absolutely ours. We may dispose of your persons, your commerce, your lands and acquisitions as we please. You have no rights. The grants of our kings to your ancestors do not bind this nation. The privileges and securities of Englishmen cannot be yours unless you return to the old realm. . . . All America is subject to our taxations; nor will we hear of your complaints, until you first own our authority to deal with you as we please, and acknowledge that such benefits as you request, are to be expected not as of right, but of grace." The author remarks: "Had England such principles at the first emigrations, she was bound to declare them to the adventurers, before they gave themselves to the winds and the seas, to gain her a share of the wealth and commerce of the new world, by which her island has been converted into a Nation of Princes." He further declares:

"1. That the present animosities are imputable to the pride and avarice of Great-Britain, in assuming an authority, inconsistent with the compact by which the empire had been long prosperously united. . . .

"2. That the Colonies were justifiable in censuring the new law devised to execute the tea duty act; for that aiming to enforce the claim of absolute sovereignty obliged to some conduct or declaration against an unconditional submission. . . .

"3. That the resentment of Great Britain, on the destruction and expulsion of the tea cargoes . . . was utterly unjustifiable, 1781 Jan. 30 and an infraction of the league, which obliged Great Britain to protect the colonies. . . .

"4. That the provinces were not blameable in forming a Congress, to unite their counsels and ward off danger, as they did in September 1774.

"5. That it was the duty of the American Assemblies, and of the Congress acting for the whole continent, at that time to tender a plan to the Mother Country for restoring peace, consistent with the compact, by which the Parliament of Great Britain was to enjoy a supremacy for the common felicity of the empire; and consequently, that the declaration they then made, of the right of the colonies to an exclusive legislation . . . was a departure in terms from the original league. . . .

"6. That it would not have been inconsistent with the dignity of Great-Britain, if instead of declaring war against her Colonies, . . . she had animadverted upon the denial of her authority in all cases respecting internal polity, as an error. . . . And that the parliamentary vote of the 20th of February, 1775, would have more naturally effected a treaty of reconciliation, had it explicitly asserted, that the right reserved to Parliament, of approving the quantum of the Colony contributions towards the common defence, was . . . claimed . . . only on her right to judge of the exercise or defect of a due sympathy in any branch of the empire, to the general necessities of the whole body. . . .

"7. That it was a fault to issue that proposal, in terms capable of being construed, into an attachment to the principle of unlimited submission, and accompanying it with acts for augmenting her force at Boston . . . more especially for her irritating sally to Concord and Lexington, on the 19th of April 1775 [q.v.], when no Governor but Mr. Gage had received the Parliament's conciliatory resolve.

"8. That as this vote . . . favoured the opinion of its being contrived, to deceive and divide the Provinces, the Congress of 1775, had some pretext for flying to arms . . .

"9. That the total rejection of it in August 1775, and the neglect of the Congress to recall or explain the declaration of 1774, had a natural tendency to exasperate the nation; and . . . her Congress deserves the charge of abandoning to passion . . .

"10. That the neglect of Great-Britain to supersede the orders to the navy, for sacrificing every town on the American coast, which should prepare for defence; and her continuance of hostilities after the petition to the King, . . . confirmed the charge of her commencing a war to maintain an illiberal dominion.

"11. That the Congress would have had merit with their countrymen, if . . . they had at the same time expressly assured his Majesty, that they meant not by their declaration of rights in 1774, to exclude Parliament from participating in the regulations respecting the internal polity of the Colonies . . .

"12. That every partial view, whether of Great Britain, to aggrandize herself by extortionate exactions from the Plantations, . . . or of America, to figure as an independent power . . . is unrighteous in the sight of God . . .

"13. Both countries being chargeable with inattention to the obligations they were under to pursue the measures requisite to a reconciliation, neither of them could reject terms consistent with the original compact . . .

"14. That Great-Britain even in passing the prohibitory act of December 1775 [see D 21, 1775], Opened a door to pacification . . . and more especially as the King's Ministers had so early as September (soon after the Congress's petition to the King) dispatched messengers, who in January 1776, had interviews with certain of the Delegates at Philadelphia, and made such intimations, as gave just ground to hope for an immediate termination of all differences, had the Congress sent others on their part, to confess their willingness to negotiate upon the overtures . . .

"15. That the concealment of these pre-intimations . . . added to the guilt of the Congress, and favoured the perilous design of drawing the people into the precipitate renunciation of the dependency of the Colonies, the 4th of July, 1776, and of plunging their countrymen into a tedious and desolating war.

"16. That there is reason to suspect, that the views which prompted to that awful resolution, will lead the Delegates to practise every artifice, to hide its horrible tendency from the eye of the publick; and if possible, to turn the quarrel to their own emolument, at the expence of the blood and treasure of their country.

"17. That the Appeal being made by the sword to the Omniscient Judge . . . and the war wasting the empire, . . . it concerns those who began, as well as those who support and protract it, . . . to cultivate concord, and a return to their ancient union . . . Jan. 30

"18. If it was the duty of the Congress by withholding at first or afterwards retracting the declaration of 1774 . . . to have prevented an open war; or to have terminated it by messages in answer to the overtures of January 1776, . . . no subsequent transaction of the Congress, . . . can bind the rest of their countrymen . . .

"19. Who then are the real enemies of America, if not they who have perverted the virtuous aims of the main body of the people for the defence of their rights and privileges into a war for dominion? . . . who, under the disguise of patriot zeal, did, unauthorized, dispatch an emissary [Silas Deane] . . . to draw the ancient enmity of France into a contention purely domestick . . .

"20. It being manifest that nothing will satisfy the directors of the American Councils . . . but measure incompatible with the safety of the many millions of the same natural stock . . . Great-Britain will be justifiable in exerting all the powers she enjoys for her preservation . . .

"21. . . . it was wise and just as well as merciful in Great-Britain, to issue as she did, in October 1778, general and undistinguishing pardons . . .

"22. That the sufferings of the loyalists in all parts of the continent, . . . will eternally demonstrate the hypocrisy, avarice and profligacy of some, and the fanaticism of the rest of their oppressors; as the forbearance of Great-Britain, in not having yet executed a single rebel in her power, and in restraining from the devastations and complicated calamities, she might have brought upon the avowed ally of her inveterate enemy, is of her lenity and generosity . . .

"Lastly, That Great-Britain independent of her own interest in the controversy, is . . . bound to prevent the ruin of her American friends [the loyalists], at every risk short of certain destruction to herself. . . . If compelled by adversity to conclude a disadvantageous peace, and to part with one or more of her Colonies to France, Spain, or any other foreign nation, [she should] stipulate in clear and strong terms, in behalf of the loyalists who may be found there, for every advantage of disposing of their estates, and free liberty to remove to such of the Colonies or Dominions as may not be unfortunately surrendered at the end of the war to a popish or arbitary power."

Very important source material (the major portion of which is not published elsewhere), upon which the author bases his statements, appears in the form of footnotes. In the Charleston edition abovementioned this source material appeared as an appendix, and it was Smith's request to Rivington (see N 27, 1780) that, in this new edition, "the Appendix be taken in as Notes—to prevent disconnection in the Perusal."

The Candid Retrospect (with all the footnotes) was reprinted in instalments in the Royal Gazette of Mr 28, 31, and Ap 4. Smith's authorship, of course, was not mentioned. Rivington introduced the article with the statement that it was "the least exceptionable of any address for years past from the American press," and added: "Happy had the leaders of the continent been actuated by the spirit it breathes! or that the general mass of the people had been early apprized of the secrets it reveals! Thousands of lives have been sacrificed to the wicked and perfidious concealment,—and it is too much to be feared, that many more continuing uninformed will become victims to the insatiable ambition and avarice of their seducers." The article appeared again in the Gazette of Ag 29, S 1, and 5, 1781.

Smith writes in his diary: "A vessel arrives from Lisbon—Joyne a merchant there writes 14 Nov^r to M^r Shoemaker that they had just rec^d the King's Speech which is spirited and breaths Vigor—that a large Body of Troops are ordered for this cont^t sufficient [if] properly imployed to suppress a Rebellion too long protracted for Want of suitable Exertions."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. The letter is printed in Royal Gaz., Ja 31, 1781. Two days later vessels arrived direct from England bringing the king's speech.—Smith's Diary, ibid. "

Smith writes that "Rivington has struck off 3000 Copies of the Candid Retrospect [see Ja 30], & given out 50 to M^r Shoemaker & 60 to the Board of Directors of loyal Refugees & 100 to me & made up 400 for Gen^l Arnold."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. Feb. 1

An inquiry is held on board the "Jersey," under the command 2

1781 Feb. 2 of Lieut. John Sporne, of the Royal Navy, "respecting the treatment and usage of naval prisoners in all cases." Capt. Dawson of the "Iris" (see Ja 25), and other British officers, are present. The testimony of six of the principal American officers among the prisoners, and seven of the men longest in confinement, shows, with respect to the prison-ships "Scorpion," "Strombolo," "Hunter," and "Jersey," that "their situation was made at all times as comfortable as possible, and that they were in no instance oppressed or ill-treated;" that they regularly received certain stated rations, which are "and ever have been issued to them without drawback or deduction, and of the very same species and quality with which the Commanders, Officers, Seamen and Marines, belonging to said ships were victualled; as also, the Officers and Privates of the respective guards, that have been from time to time placed over them; and that they have at all times had fuel and every necessary convenience for cooking;" and they further say that "the sickness at present among the prisoners, arises from a want of cloathing, and a proper attention in themselves to their own cleanliness;" and that "they have never been, and are not now crowded in the prison ship; and that two or three of each rank are now, and have ever been permitted daily, to go on shore to New-York, to purchase for themselves, or on the part of the rest of the prisoners, whatever they might be in want of."—N. Y. Merc., F 12, 1781.

Following this report, Gaine prints a series of seven different affidavits to the same effect, given voluntarily under oath before Mayor Mathews on Feb. 3. These documents, together with those mentioned above under Jan. 25 (q. v.), are printed in sequence after those cited under Jan. 5 (q. v.).

6 Smith writes concerning The Candid Retrospect (see Ja 30): "The Pamphlet both pleases and offends—It puzzles the Loyalists —[Capt.] Smith asked me who was the author of it. I ans^{d} evasively that it was imputed in Charles Town to one Williams a Lawyer. None of the Gazettes take it up—Rivington does not even advertise it. M^{r} Shoemaker has sent several Copies to Philadelphia. General Robertson & M^{r} Elliot don't open their Lips upon the Subject."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

10 Smith writes in his diary that he has been informed by Israel Knapp, of Connecticut, formerly a deputy commissary in the rebel army, that "The Party that penetrated Westchester lately were 600 under General Parsons—In Raggs, many, about 100 perfectly barefooted. They came for Spoil & plundered Friends & Foes Petticoats & everything to cover Nakedness. This to still Discontents."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Knapp also tells Smith that "The Com^{rs} Declaration is among the People. Parsons thought the Exception a Blunder, said the Exception took in all the Officers for all of them had condemned Loyalists in Courts Martial. . . . The Independents greatly distressed by the lessening of their Party. They gave out that 10 French Ships with 10 Land Forces are soon expected at Rhode Island. The People or 20 to 1 of them reply—What good will that do us—for since we can't raise an army of our own we shall belong to France or G Britain & they had rather be immediately reconciled with the latter than run the Risk of being conquered by latter. The Zealots for Independancy much mortified by the Introduction of British goods from Long Island and the Trade with the Fleet at Gardner's Bay—They think it draws out the Bullion they got from the French & that this with what they would get from us for Provisions would if withheld support the War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

12 At the request of David Sproat, the British commissary of prisoners, Gaine publishes the sworn declaration of one George Batterman, dated Dec. 19, 1780, which appeared in the Penn. Gaz. of Jan. 17, 1781, condemning the treatment he received when a prisoner on the "Jersey;" also the resolution of congress of Jan. 5, 1781 (q. v.), and Sproat's own answer, dated Jan. 29, 1781, addressed to Mr. Skinner, the American commissary, regarding the charges against British management of prisoners.

Batterman's letter relates to the supposed number of prisoners on board (1,100, he says), the poor food, attempts to make prisoners enlist in the British service, the transfer of officers to the "Yarmouth," etc. Batterman says in closing: "They have taken this method of starving us for the want of water, to kill us, or to make us enter into the service. They never allow a man that is sick to go to the hospital ship till they are so week and low that they often expire before they get out of the ship. They never allow the sick to be mustered only when there is a wet or damp air. The commanding officer told us, that his orders were, that if the ship took fire, we should all be turned below and perish in the flames which we experienced one day; by accident the ship took fire in the steward's room; the commanding officer ordered the Hessian guards to turn us below and if we offered to resist that they should fire among us and if any of us should get into the water they should fire on us and kill us if possible." Feb. 12

In his letter to Skinner, Sproat says "That very many of them are sick and die is true; but I will not allow that their disorders proceed from any other cause than dirt, nastiness and want of clothing." Regarding food allowance, he says he posted up the schedule of rations, and "requested of their own officers that they would take in rotation the trouble to see that they got the full quantity of good sound wholesome provisions; and that when a cask happened to prove damaged or otherwise bad, it should not be served to them but headed up again, surveyed and condemned according to the custom of the navy."

He describes his own services, the fitting out and burning of "Good Hope" by the American prisoners (see Mr 5, 1780); he assails the manner in which British prisoners are treated, and declares that the congressional resolution of Jan. 5, 1781 (q. v.), "will hurry on their misery and distress faster than they are aware of and in a short time put the honour of every man to the test who is out on parole. . . ."

Immediately following this correspondence, Gaine printed, at the request of G. Dawson, captain of the "Iris," and commanding officer of British ships at New York, other correspondence on the same subject, embracing Washington's letter of Jan. 25 (q. v.), together with Dawson's reply, and the supporting affidavits made by American prisoners to show their good treatment and satisfactory rations.—N. Y. Merc., F 12, 1781; Banks, David Sproat and the Naval Prisoners, 34–46.

20 By unanimous ballot, the continental congress elects Robert Morris "superintendant of Finance."—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), XIX: 180. He accepted the office on May 7, and took complete control on Sept. 20.—Winsor, VII: 69. See, further, My 26.

" There is prepared "A plan of a piece of Ground belonging to James De Lancey Esq^{r} near fresh water survey^{d} feb 20. 1781—40 feet to an inch."—The original MS. is in the Bancker Coll., in the N. Y. P. L.

26 The office of police invites proposals from any person or persons for cleaning the streets under a contract which gives "an exclusive right to take all the Manure and Rubbish for their own benefit."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 5, 1781.

" Articles found incumbering streets and wharves, contrary to the order of April 6, 1780 (q. v.), have lately been carted by the police to the Common in front of the almshouse. The police board now publishes a notice that they will be sold at public auction on March 12, for the benefit of the poor, unless claimants obtain permission to remove them before that day.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 5, 1781.

" An advertisement, headed "Pro Bono Publico," is published in New York of horse-races to be run on four days, beginning Easter Monday, April 16, "on Ascot Heath, five miles from Brooklyn Ferry." The purses offered are: a "County Subscription Purse," given on two days, of £50 each; a "Noblemen and Gentlemen's Subscription Purse," of £100; and a "City Subscription Purse," of £100. Each race is to be run under carefully arranged conditions and regulations. Among these are the following:

"All Horses to be entered and measured at Mr. Loosley's Brooklyn Hall, on or before Friday, the 6th day of April; or on Saturday the 7th of April, at Mr. Loosley's Booth on the Race Ground, or to pay double entrance at the post."

"No person will be admitted to start a Horse, for either of the Purses, unless the rider is in proper uniform, with a small saddle jockey cap, silk jacket, and light Boots."

"It is expected that no person will attempt to erect a booth on the race ground, without first subscribing at least three guineas, neither to sell wines, liquors, &c. from waggons and other carriages, without subscribing two guineas towards the Saddle, Bridle and Whip [to be run for each day], and other expences attending the races."

"Tavern-keepers Take Notice.

"To avoid suspicion of collusive practice in running, it is expected Gentlemen (who enter Horses for any of the Purses above mentioned) do qualify themselves, that the Horses entered in their 1781 Feb. 26 name is solely their property, and that they have no claim or connection with any Horse entered to run on any of the days, excepting what is patronized by their names."

The advertisement is signed "God Save the King," and dated at "Brooklyn Hall, Feb. 10, 1781."—N. Y. Merc., F 26, 1781. See, further, Je 4. See also "Ascot Heath, a tale of the Olden time," in The Scrap Table, for 1831 (Boston, 1830), which is an historical tale of this race-course on Long Island.

Mar. 1 "The Confederation of the United States of America," is completed, delegates from Maryland, the thirteenth state, having reported to the continental congress that they were authorized by their state to sign the "Articles."—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), XIX: 213–23. For the adoption of the "Articles of Confederation" by the congress, see N 15, 1777. The delegates representing New York State, who had previously signed, were James Duane, Francis Lewis, William Duer, and Gouverneur Morris. The delegates of all the thirteen states have now signed. For the text of the articles, see the Secret Journals of Cong., I: 448–64.

7 The Chamber of Commerce presents an address to Sir Henry Clinton asking him to suspend the collection of duties on imported articles because its enforcement "will be attended with the most fatal effects to the supply of this Garrison and the Mercantile Interest." Clinton complies with the request and promises to send a copy of the memorial to the king's secretary of state.—Col. Rec. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 247–50.

13 Smith writes in his diary: "General Philips sails with a fresh Gale at N. W.—the Force about 2500. Sir H Clinton told me last Night in his Coach as we ret^{d} from Dinner at General Robertson's that the French were not moved last Thursday & we have now here a 50 & 5 or 6 Frigates to convoy the Detachm^{t} going to the Chesapeak. It is calculated that [La] Fayette will not reach Arnold in several Days by being obliged to head the navigable Rivers of Virginia."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

15 New York State passes a law for relieving persons loyal to the United States whose sons have, contrary to their will, joined the enemy, from the payment of certain taxes.—Laws of N. Y., 4th sess., chap. 28 (printed by Holt, 1782).

" It is now supposed "that the enemy must soon leave New York."—From Chatham news in The N. J. Jour., My 30, 1781.

" Brig.-Gen. Samuel Birch publishes a regulation which prescribes that cord-wood shall be of the full length of four feet "including half the scarf." His order also provides that, after July 1, no one shall "drive any iron bound Cart, Truck, or other Carriage, within this city," for carrying goods for hire, under penalty of £5 for each offence.—N. Y. Merc., Mr 19, 1781. See also Dawson's report on city finances in the Revolution, in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 218.

17 A powder-ship is stranded at Corlear's Hook.—Royal Gaz., Mr 17, 1781.

19 Fraunces offers his tavern for sale, describing it as follows: "To be Sold, with or without the Fixtures. An elegant three story and an half brick dwelling house, situate in Great Dock Street, at the corner of Broad Street, the property of Mr. Samuel Fraunces, and for many years distinguished as the Queen's Head Tavern; in which are nine spacious rooms, besides five bed chambers, with thirteen fire places, an excellent garret in which are three bed rooms well finished, an exceeding good kitchen, and a spring of remarkable fine water therein; a most excellent cellar under the whole, divided into three commodious apartments; a convenient yard, with a good cistern and pump, and many other conveniences too tedious to mention; the whole in extraordinary good repair, and is at present a remarkable good stand for business of any kind, and will upon a reestablishment of civil government be the most advantageous situation in this city, from its vicinity to the North River and New Jersey. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 19, 1781. Fraunces did not effect a sale of the property until April 23, 1785 (q. v.).

21 A letter received at Boston from Connecticut states: "The merchants of New-York, and their associates in a number of these states, employ every kind of means for conveying English goods, through this continent. We see, by the New-York Gazettes, and by divers letters from that city, that its inhabitants are enraged at the late resolves of Congress for the confiscation of English merchandise: This is one proof that these resolutions have struck them in a most sensible part. In truth, if we could but agree to do what is in our power towards ruining the commerce of England, should we not cut off an arm of this tyrannical power, and have more hope of speedily reducing her to the terms which form the object of the present war."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 15, 1782. Mar. 21

Under this date, and on April 1, Von Krafft makes mention in his journal of a "Church parade in a stable near Morris' House."—Von Krafft's Jour., 132. 25

A British officer at New York writes to a friend in London: "I have the pleasure to acquaint you, that our affairs go on so extremely well, that I doubt not but we shall soon be Masters of all America, for it is impossible for them to hold out much longer; Washington's army is reduced to a handful of men, half starved, without cloathing, and in want of every necessary, daily deserting, some coming over to us, and others returning home. . . . 27

"This city is crowded with inhabitants who come from all parts of America, to be out of the hands of the arbitrary Congress, who are become odious to the greatest part of the people.

"We have every necessary of life in great plenty; prizes are continually bringing in, both French and Spanish vessels. There are but few American privateers now at sea."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), Ap 27–30, 1781.

The situation of the post-office at this time is indicated in an advertisement for the sale of a house and lot, "No 18, Broad-Street, opposite the General Post Office."—Royal Gaz., Mr 28, 1781. 28

The state legislature passes "An Act more effectually to punish Adherence to the King of Great-Britain, within this State." This provides that any New Yorker who shall teach, write, or print that "the King of Great Britain hath, or of Right ought to have, any Authority . . . in or over this State," or who shall try to persuade others to renounce their allegiance to the state, shall be guilty of felony and may be tried and convicted for that crime. Instead of being sentenced to death, the convicted person may be made to serve for three years on board a war ship belonging to the United States or to France.—Laws of N. Y., 4th sess., chap. 48 (printed by Holt, 1782); Laws of N. Y. State against Loyalists (London, 1786), 110–11; Ind. Gaz., D 27, 1783. 30

The city vestry advertises for proposals, to be received at the almshouse, for renting the Tea Water Pump for the ensuing year.—Royal Gaz., Mr 31, 1781. 31

The first American man-of-war is building at Portsmouth, N. H., under the superintendence of Paul Jones; it is named the "America." It was launched on Nov. 5, 1782.—Adams, Annals of Portsmouth (1825), 276; Maclay. Hist. of the U. S. Navy, I: 144; Hill, Twenty-six Historic Ships (1903), 37. Apr. —

Wm. Smith writes to Clinton: "In the manifest Declension of the severe Restraint heretofore laid upon the Rebel Press and the increasing Eagerness of the Multitude to see what comes from our's I beg leave to remind your Excellency of your Intention that I should inspect certain Papers taken in Virginia that may serve to detect the Frauds upon the People. 2

"Rivington's Gazette being more sought for is the best Vehicle for such Communications but as none of them go out except such as his Customers send to their Friends 'tis humbly submitted whether he ought not to be ordered to put up a 100 Copies & forward them weekly to Connecticut and New Jersey under such Directions by the Flaggs as are most likely to convey them far into the interior Country.

"I am always at your Excellency's Command and with the highest Respect Sir

"Your most faithful and obed^{t} serv^{t}"

—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Smith writes that he finds "by the Rebel Papers the Congress freely handled by anonymous Essayists under the Title of the Indep^{t} American the Druid &c &c." These, he adds, have impelled Gov. Trumbull and the legislatures in New York and Massachusetts to publish "Addresses to the multitude to animate them afresh with strong Implications of their apostacy from their first Principles."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 8

"A number of Citizens having formed themselves into Companies by the names of the Friendly Union, Hand in Hand, and Heart to Heart Fire Companies," with the good purpose of aiding in removing and securing the personal property of inhabitants, endangered by fire, a garrison order is issued that the members of these companies (and they only) are to wear "round hats with black brims and white crowns." They are to be permitted to pass sentries without hindrance, and to be exempt "from handing buckets, or assisting to work the engines."—Royal Gaz., Ap 18, 1781; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 713, " 1781 Apr. 14 Smith writes that the "plain truth" of the Candid Retrospect (see Ja 30) "pleases neither Whig nor Tory." Gen. Robertson indulges in "Expressions of Contempt ag[t] all the old Governors Tryon Martin Franklin for a Diversity of Sentiment on the Conduct of the War." The lack of any system and the "versatility of conduct on the part of the British authorities in New York lead Smith to wonder if they wish "to prolong the War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Submerged rocks, long known to exist near Whitehall, Corlears Hook, and elsewhere on the shore of lower Manhattan Island, again cause disaster. One of Admiral Arbuthnot's ships, the "Royal Oak," goes aground on the rocks opposite Whitehall, when three of his ships try to pass into the East River.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 115. Under date of April 16, Smith writes: "[The admiral] damns the Pilot for running her [the ship] on the Rocks off the Battery Friday last . . . He says the Ship is ruined but forbids me to mention it—I wish it may not be an Apology for not putting to Sea."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

16 Smith writes in his diary: Admiral Arbuthnot "told me as a Secret that without Succours to L[d] Cornwallis he would be ruined."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

17 "The Question being put Whether or not it would be prudent at this Time to rebuild Trinity Church provided a sufficient sum of money could be raised by subscription for that purpose," Trinity vestry votes in the affirmative, and passes a resolution "that a Subscription be set on foot for that purpose."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

19 The American frigate "Confederacy," Captured by the British off the Capes of Virginia, is conducted into N. Y. harbour. The cargo, valued at £50,000, consists in part of clothing for Washington's army. She was bound from Cape Françoise to Philadelphia, with a convoy, of which several vessels have been brought into this port. "She is the largest ship ever employed by the Congress, whose navy" (according to an intercepted letter of Richard Langton, dated Oct. 5 [1780]) "is now reduced to three frigates, viz, the Alliance, Trumbull, and Deane."—Royal Gaz., Ap 21, 1781. Smith says: "The Hopes of gratifying the Soldiers of the Pensilvania Line founded on the Cargoe of this Ship."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

21 Smith writes that he is informed "that Adm[l] Arbuthnot has indiscreetly to say no more issued Blank Licences to merchants for the Importation of Wines &c—Dutch Bottoms have been imployed to bring the Articles from Spain to S[t] Eustatius whence vessels from S[t] Kitts were to fetch and bring them here—£40,000 of such Property seized by Sir G B Rodney . . . How little are even great Officers to be trusted in the Heights of the Venality of the Times! and how inconsistant the Spirit of Commerce with true Patriotism! Arbuthnot is ruined in Point of Character."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Samuel Matlock notifies the public that he has "taken the house known by the name of the White Conduit House, which he has opened on the same plan with the White Conduit House near London; he has provided the best liquors the City can afford."—Royal Gaz., Ap 21, 1781. See Mr 24, 1777.

24 Gen. Washington is honoured by Yale with the degree of "Doctor of Laws."—Yale Corporation Minute Book (MS.), 255. Cf. Conn. Jour. (New Haven), May 2, 1781. Washington's letter (MS.) acknowledging the degree is preserved in the Yale Univ. Library.

25 Intelligence of the battle of Guilford Court House (see Mr 15) reaches New York. Smith records it and adds: "No Rebel Force left in the Country—Green probably with his officers gone to Virginia."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" A large sea-dog is on exhibition at Jacob Jarolomus's Tavern, at the Tea Water Pump, at "One Shilleng a piece each Person."—Royal Gaz., Ap 25, 1781.

28 A feu de joie is fired by all the troops in the garrison "in Consequence of the Victory obtained by Lord Cornwallis, over the Rebel Army under General Greene, at Guilford Court House" (see Mar. 15).—N. Y. Merc., Ap 30, 1781; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 117. "As that success undoubtedly effected a retreat, it were to be wished, upon the purest principles of whiggism, that the enemy might meet with like success every day."—Penn. Gaz., My 16, 1781, under Trenton news.

" "Gentlemen Volunteers" wishing to join a corps being formed, by Col. Conolly are invited to apply at the "Sign of the Ship Corner of Fair [Fulton] Street, and Broad Way, opposite St. Paul's Church."—Royal Gaz., Ap 28, 1781. The Sign of the Ship, in 1778, was at the Fly Market. Apr. 28 "

Brig.-Gen. Birch publishes a set of rules calling upon the inhabitants to keep the city clean (cf. the prior order of Ap 6, 1780).—N. Y. Merc., Ap 30, 1781. On May 6, 1783, this regulation (or "indulgence," since the public carts gathered up the dirt) was revoked, and the inhabitants were required to cart away the dirt at their own expense weekly or as often as necessary.—Royal Gaz., My 7, 1783.

" "James Strachan, Now at the Queen's Head Tavern, On the Dock, Thanks the Gentleman of the Navy and Army, also the Public in general for the great Regard shewn by them to his Interest since his Residence there; and informs them that on May Day next he intends to open Business at the Place well Known by the Name of the Merchant's Coffee-House, Where he intends to pay Attention, not only as a Coffee-House, but as a Tavern, in the truest Sense; and to distinguish the same as the City Tavern and Coffee-House."—Royal Gaz., Ap 28, 1781; Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 293–94. The tavern into which Strachan removed was first opened by Mary Ferrara in 1772 (q. v., Ap 27). It stood on the s. e. corner of Wall and Water Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 979.

On Nov. 30, this tavern was the scene of the anniversary of the St. Andrew's Soc.—Royal Gaz., N 30, 1781. On Ap 23, 1782, the St. George's Soc. met there.—Ibid., Ap 20, 1782.

May 1 The Chamber of Commerce represents to Admiral Arbuthnot that the "Rebel" privateers are a source of great danger to the trade and commerce of New York and suggests that "a couple of fast sailing frigates, constantly to cruize between Delaware and Block Island, and making the Light House at Sandy Hook once or Twice a Week, as the Winds permit, would effectually protect the Trade of this Port from all Invaders." Arbuthnot answered on May 3: "since my return from Charlestown, the greater part of my Force hath been upon this Coast, and during my stay at Gardner's Bay Frigates have not only been cruizing almost constantly off the Barr, but between Montock Point and the Delaware."—Col. Rec. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 255–58.

" A committee of the Chamber of Commerce "for revising the old and preparing a New Charter for the City of New York," reports that they have "made some progress therein." They ask leave "to sit again."—Col. Rec., N. Y. Chamb. of Commerce, 253.

9 Persons from New York report in Trenton that "last week a very hot press took place there [in N. Y.], by which several hundred men from the city were carried on board the fleet—and 309 American prisoners were also carried from the prison ships, and forced on board their [British] ships of war, among whom were Captains, Mates, and other officers." The printed report adds: "Such is the unexampled barbarity of the piratical nation against which we have to contend! They revere neither the laws of God nor of nations."—N. J. Gaz., My 9, 1781.

13 Smith writes: "The Trade suffers much by N England Privateers," concerning which there are "plain Hints from the News Papers." The Chamber of Commerce is also aroused.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

14 Trinity Vestry appoints a committee "to inclose the Yard of S[t] Pauls Church with a Ditch & such temporary fence, as they may think proper."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The fence had not been completed by April 21, 1782 (q. v.).

19 "A Parcel of Refugees undertook to cut Wood for Wages near Fort Lee—perhaps about 200—They have 1 Field Piece—and have been twice assaulted & 'tis said have repelled 400—They did not prepare even the Frame of a Block House.

"What Impeachm[ts] does this furnish upon the British who are still in close Quarters here! Why do they not visit the surrounding Shore, to vex the opposing Militia & if not oppose to open the Intercourse for the Supply of the Garison & the Sale of British Goods."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

21 Washington, at Wethersfield, Conn., holds a conference with Rochambeau and other French commanders, and it is determined to make a united attack upon New York, provided De Grasse can cooperate. This was Washington's plan, but there seems to have been also proposed at this time an expedition against the British in Virginia. Regarding these and concurrent events, see Winsor, VI: 499, 561; Baker, Itinerary of Gen. Washington (1892), 220.

Writing from his headquarters at New Windsor on May 27 to the president of congress, Washington outlined the plan of attack on New York, which culminated in the reconnaisance of July 21, 1781 May 21 and the capture of Fort Independence: "In consequence of the measures concerted at the late interview, all the French Troops, except about 200 to be left as a guard over their heavy stores and Baggage at Providence, are to march as soon as circumstances will admit, and form a junction with me upon the North River.—Five hundred Militia are to be stationed upon Rhode Island for the preservation of the Works which have been erected, and for the security of the harbour. . . . Upon a full consideration of affairs in every point of view, an expedition against New York has been deemed preferable to making further detachments to the Southward, while they can only be sent by land. . . . The enemy, weakened as they now are by detachment, must either sacrifice the valuable Post of New York, or recall a part of their force from the Southward to defend them. . . . I am very apprehensive of a formidable Invasion of the Northern frontier, as the Enemy from Canada are undoubtedly collecting in considerable force at Crown Point. . . ."—From transcript of the original text, pub. in cat. (sale no. 1798) of The Anderson Galleries, New York, of collections of various consignors, to be sold Jan. 23 & 24, 1924 (item 385).

In a letter to La Fayette on May 31, Washington gave a report of the Wethersfield conference, at which, it appeared, he, Rochambeau, Chatelline, Gen. Knox, and Gen. Duportail were present. Writing from New Windsor, he says in this letter: "Upon a full Consideration of our Affairs in every Point of View, an Attempt upon New York with its present Garrison (which, by Estimation is reduced to 4500 Regular Troops and about 3000 Irregulars) was deemed preferable to a Southern Operation, as we had not a Command of the Water. The Reasons which induced this Determination were, the Danger to be apprehended from the approaching Heats, the inevitable Dissipation and Loss of Men by so long a March, and the Difficulty of Transportation; but above all, it was thought that we had a tolerable Prospect of expelling the Enemy, or obliging them to withdraw Part of their Force from the Southward, which last would give the most effectual Relief to those States. The French Troops are to march this Way as soon as certain Circumstances will admit. . . .

". . . you perceive it will be some Time before our Plan can be ripe for Execution, and that a Failure on our Part in Men and Supplies may defeat it; but I am in Hopes that the States in this Quarter will exert themselves to attain what has long been a favourite, and is an important object to them." This letter was intercepted by the British, and was evidently a ruse (see N 23).—Lloyd's Eve. Post, Jl 13–16, 1781.

A letter received in London on July 17 from a British officer at New York declared: "It is believed our General intends attacking Mr. Washington's line; the Rebel Mail which we intercepted, tells us, he, with Rochambeau, and 4000 French troops, propose attacking us; but, alas! Sir, did they but know how well we were prepared to receive them, they would never entertain another thought of it." Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), Jl 13–16, 1781.

23 Lieut.-Gov. Elliott, presiding at a meeting of the council, informs the members that Gov. Robertson has left the city for a short time and has delivered the seals to him; he takes the oaths.—Cal. Coun. Min., 507. Cf. Wm. Smith's Diary, VII, under the same date.

24 Smith writes that he is informed that Sir Henry Clinton "confesses he hates Business that he thinks himself fit for a small army but not for the complicated work assigned him—He wishes a Vice Roy above both him & the admiral."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

26 Congress approves a "plan for establishing a National Bank in the United States, submitted to their consideration, by Mr. Robert Morris, the 17th May, 1781." The resolutions were published in full in the N. Y. Packet (Fish-Kill), Je 14, 1781. See F 20.

" Sir Henry Clinton informs William Smith that he is assured by private letters that the British "are in a fair way of an Alliance with the Emperor of Germany but Ministers are silent . . . till the Treaty is concluded."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

28 Wm. Smith writes that a "Plan of Peace" is under discussion in which the British give up "all the Colonies Northward of the Chesapeak." Cornwallis is said to favour it.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Brig.-Gen. Samuel Birch, the commandant at New York, issues long and detailed market regulations, which are published in full. The reason for this is that "divers persons influenced by a desire of inordinate gain, have been guilty of engrossing and forstalling all kinds of victuals and provisions in this town, whereby the prices thereof are excessively enhanced, . . ." The first regulation is May 28 "That all fresh meats, victuals and provisions of all kinds (fish excepted) shall be openly sold in one or other of the public Market Places, and nowhere else in this city (the place where Coenties Market formerly stood, to be considered as one) on penalty of forfeiture, one moiety to the informer, and the other for the benefit of the poor of this city." No sales shall be made there before sunrise.—N. Y. Merc., Je 4, 1781; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 714; Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 219

The reference to "the place where Coenties Market formerly stood" is a clear indication that it had been removed. The last date prior to this when the building appears of record was Aug. 23, 1780 (see Royal Gaz. of that date), although it is mentioned at a later date in an advertisement for rooms to let in a house "in Dock Street, near the Coenties Market."—Royal Gaz., Je 30, 1781. This reference, however, evidently means the familiar site and neighbourhood, it being thus specifically referred to in another advertisement, two years later, of a merchant's removal "to the house No. 15 in Little Dock Street, between the Old Slip and Coenties Market-Place."—Ibid., My 14, 1783. "This 'Market-place' was not used as such after peace was proclaimed, but the Slip was a grand depot, principally for all the market-boats, which brought farming produce and live stock that came down the East River, and this continued until about the year 1835."—De Voe, Market-Book, 122–23, 125. See also N 16, 1720; Ag 22, 1771; L. M. R. K., III: 958; and descrip. of the Burgis View, I: 244.

"The Grand Races of Ascot Heath [see F 26], Being postponed June till Wednesday the 6th of June, on account of the King's birth day, 4 notice is hereby given the Public, that there will be a Hurling Match on the ground on Tuesday the 5th instant; when those Gentlemen who have a curiosity to play (or see) that antient diversion, will get hurls and bats at the Irish Flag, at twelve o'clock; and at four in the afternoon an elegant saddle will be run for."—N. Y. Merc., Je 4, 1781. See also My 18, 1782.

The American privateer "General Washington" (said to be the 14 property of Gen. Washington and Robert Morris) is brought into port by "The Chatham."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 120; N. Y. Merc., No. 1548.

"Europeans are sent to England in the Confederate, who sailed with the Fleet this Day."—Gaine, op. cit., II: 120. This may have been the captured American frigate "Confederacy."—See Ap 19.

" Von Krafft records that at this time "At New York were still in camp, of the English, the 22nd and 43rd regiments and the 76th Scotch. The Hessian Body regiment was in camp at Johnschen House [Jones's house, "Mount Pitt"—see 1767]; the Prz. Charl regiment by the 7th mile-stone, east side."—Von Krafft's Jour., 140. See, further, Ag 25.

Congress adopts instructions to Adams, Franklin, Jay, Laurens, 15 and Jefferson, authorizing the acceptance of the mediation proposed by the Empress of Russia and the Emperor of Germany. These forbid any treaty of peace which shall not, first, effectually secure the independence and sovereignty of the United States, according to the subsisting treaties with France; and, second, in which the said treaties shall not be left in full force.—Winsor, VII: 92.

Among items of news from the British admiralty office are the 19 following: "Tuesday [June 12] a commission passed the great seal, appointing Robert Digby, Esq; Rear Admiral of the Red, commander in chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels employed on the coast of North-America, and a commission for Sir Henry Clinton, for granting pardons to his Majesty's subjects in America.

"Prince William Henry set out for Portsmouth to embark for North America with Admiral Digby on the 29th."—N. Y. Merc., S 10, 1781. Digby and the prince arrived Sept. 26 (q.v.).

"A Bull Baiting, after the true English manner," is advertised 20 to take place at the Brooklyn ferry. "Taurus will be brought to the Ring at 3½ o'Clock; some good dogs are already provided, but every assistance of that sort will be esteemed a favour. A Dinner exactly British will be upon Loosley's table at II o'Clock, after which there is not the least doubt but that the song called 'O! the Roast Beef of old England' will be sung with harmony and glee." The sport of bull-baiting is somewhat described in blank verse: "A Bull of Magnitude and Spirit, Will dare the dogs presuming merit," etc.—Royal Gaz., Je 20, 1781. See also Ag 29.

Smith writes of Gen. Skinner's "ridiculous Expedition to Mon- 23 mouth for Cattle for the Navy (13 Ships now uselessly anchored at the Hook)." About 1,300 men took part in the incursion but were 1781 June 23 28 July 1 " 2 " 11 so slow in their movements that people and cattle had disappeared when they arrived. Ten men were lost, and only a few lean cattle and 40 sheep taken.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Washington plans "to surprize the Enemy's Posts at the No. end of Yk. Island, . . . having fixed upon the Night of the 2d. of July for this purpose.—and having moreover combined with it an attempt to cut off Delancy's and other light Corps without Kingsbridge."—From Washington's journal (in the Lib. of the Dept. of State, Washington), pub. in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 117–18 (see also 113–14).

Wm. Smith writes that reports come from England that "both the General [Clinton] & Adm[l] [Arbuthnot] are blamed and with great Reason" for their failure to cooperate. "Ministers 'tis said wish them both out of Place, and yet write to them in Civil Terms . . . thro' Dread of increasing the Minority Faction." The admiral sailed for home on the 6th.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Because of failure to receive his salary, and for other reasons, Chief-Justice Smith fancies he may be out of favour with the home government, and says: "Don't they like the Candid Retrospect—am I suspected to be the Author? It is known only to De Rosset and Fanning . . . I will persevere nevertheless in what I conceive to be the true Interest of the whole Empire & if possible bring on an American Parliament."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

This evening and the following day some "Rebels" crossed over North River from Jersey and marched in full view of the Hessians near Fort Independence, "in whole regiments, flags flying and bands playing, down around the lower Courtland House." Many of them were wounded or killed by the "Yagers" (sharpshooters).—Von Krafft's Jour., 143; Winsor, VI: 561. This was a skirmish at Kingsbridge between 200 "Yagers" and 30 horsemen on the one side, and an advance corps of the "rebel army" consisting of 800 foot and 300 horse. The "Yagers" compelled the "rebels" to quit the port, and drove them from the heights as far as Deveaux's house. The troops were ordered to fall back to their former position leaving 100 "Yagers" at Fort Independence, who observed the movements of Gen. Washington's army as he reconnoitered "Spiten Devil."—Royal Gaz., Jl 14, 1781.

Wm. Smith adds: "It remains doubtful . . . whose Loss is greatest—They have carried off the Cattle collected by the Refugees. I believe we have near 40 wounded—40 or 5 killed—I don't learn of more than 21 of the Rebels left dead in different Places. They carried their Wounded off in 9 Waggons.

"There seems to be a general Censure of Sir H as unprepared for a great Force . . . He is blamed for not having Boats at the Bridge nor armed Vessels in the River . . .

"If Sir H wishes the Enemy to venture near our out Posts he ought to be prepared to surround them by the Hudson or the Sound—If he desires to keep them at Home he should fill the Hudson with Vessels & appear to menace West point. He is incapable of Business—He consults No Body—All about him are Idlers & ignorant."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII: under Jl 4.

The battalion of Loyal Volunteers of N. Y. City, commanded by the governour, Lieut.-Gen. Robertson, paraded in Broadway at 5 a. m.; and at 6 marched to the house of Mayor David Mathews on Water St. Here the mayor, their lieut.-colonel, presented the corps with "a pair of elegant colours, a compliment from Lieut.-Gen. Robertson," in approbation of their "loyalty and spirited resolution in forming themselves into a select body for the defence of this city." The officers were drawn up in three ranks in front of the battalion, which stood presenting arms, while a band played "God Save the King." They then proceeded to "the ground of exercise above the ship-yards, and after a very short field day, particularly calculated for immediate service," they marched back to "the fields nigh St Paul's Church," and, accompanied by two light infantry companies, music, etc., "lodged their colours" at Lieut.-Col. Mathew's house. Officers and men numbered 322. They "made an elegant appearance, being a fine body of men, dressed in uniform."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 9, 1781.

"There seems to be no Attention to our Militia, either here or on Long Island or Statin Island—This ought to be Gen[r] Robertson's Care—In short we enterprize Nothing—The Soldiers are now imployed at King's Bridge in Work Cap[t] Scott of the Artillery tells me agreed by the Generals last Summer to set about the next Day—and at Breucklin on what they ought to have done in March, rather than in the present extreme Heats."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

July 11 12 14 " 18

A New Yorker writes: "Jonathan is collecting all his forces, raising Heaven and Earth to besiege us, in conjunction with about 4000 French troops; on this occasion the New-England yankees seem to be very forward, and turn out in great numbers, in hopes of getting possession of this place. Hence we expect some warm work in about a month, as the lads are investing us on all sides; however, should they have formed the resolution of attacking us, as they threaten, from the strength of our lines, and the ardour of our garrison, which, I dare say, with the Militia, consists of 20,000 fighting men at least, am in hopes they will pay dear for their presumption, and may, in its consequences, put an end to the rebellion."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), Ag 31–S 3, 1781.

"Near 5000 men being ordered to march for Kingsbridge, to cover and secure a reconnoitre of the Enemys works on the No. end of York Island, Harlaem river, & the Sound, were prevented doing so by incessant rain."—From Washington's journal (in State Dept., Wash.), pub. in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 119.

Von Krafft records in his journal that his company and "the Body Company" have to move unexpectedly into tents in Fort Kniyphausen, because "the Rebels" are expected.—Von Krafft's Jour., 143.

Washington writes in his journal: "I passed the North River with Count de Rochambeau—Genl. de Beville, his Qr. Mr. Genl. & Genl. Duportail in order to reconnoitre the Enemy Posts and Encampments at the North end of York Island." He records what he discovered, including the following:

"About the center of the Ground leading to Jeffrey's Rock or point a Guard mounts. . . .

". . . the shore from Jeffery's rock downwards was quite open and free—without Hutts of any kind—Houses or Troops—none being encamped below the heights—There did not even appear springs, or washing places any where on the face of the Hill which were resorted to.—

"The Island is totally stripped of Trees, & wood of every kind; but low bushes (apparently as high as a mans waste) appear in places which were covered with wood in the year 1776.

"The side of the Hill from the Barrier below Fort Tryon, to the Bay opposite to fort Knyphausen is difficult of access; but there seems to be a place abt 200 yds above the bay, which has the best appearance of a landing, and is most private—but a hut or two on the heights abt. 200 yds above Fort Knyphausen, & a little above the old long Battery, which was thrown up in 1776 must be avoided by leaving it on the left in getting to the Fort last mentioned.

"In the hollow below Morris's heights (between that & Haerlem) is a good place to land; but near the York road opposite there appeared to be a few Tents—and many Dragoon Horses seemed to be at Pasture in the low land between the heights.—a landing perfectly concealed but not so good, might be made a little higher up the river, and nearer to those heights which ought to be immediately occupied—(between the old American lines and the aforesaid hollow)

"From the point within the mouth of Spiken devil, the way to the Fort on Cox's Hill seems difficult, and the first part of it covered with bushes—there is a better way up from the outer point, but too much exposed to a discovery from the ship which lays opposite to it, and on acct of its being less covered with wood.—

"The ground round the Fort on Cox's hill is clear of Bushes—there is an abatis round the work, but no friezing; nor could I discover whether there is a ditch.

"At the No. Et corner there appeared to be no Parapet—& the whole seemed to be in a decaying state—the gate is next the No. River.

"Forts Tryon, Knyphausen & Ft. George on Laurell, with the Batteries in the line of Pallisading across from River to river appeared to be well friezed, ditched & abattied—In a word to be strong and in good repair.

"Fort No. 8 is also abatied & friezed at the Top—the gate is next Haerlem river—there are no Houses or Huts on the side of the Hill from this work till you come near old Fort Independence.

"On Mc Gowans heights there appears (by the extent of the Tents) to be two Battns encamped.—supposed to be Brittish Grenadiers—a little in the rear of this and on the (enemys) left, are a number of Huts—but whether they are Inhabited or not could not be ascertained—there being different opinions on this

1781 July 18 point from the nearest view we could get of it.—On the height opposite to Morris' White House there appeared to be another Regt. (supposed to be the 38th British) Between this and Fort Knyphausen (abt. half way) are two small Encampments contiguous to each other—both together containing two or 3 and 40 Tents. —Hessians—On Laurel Hill near Fort George is another Encampment in view abt. 40 Tents & Huts which appear to be Inhabited also—by (it is said)—the 57th Regiment.—

"The other, and only remaining Encampment in view, discoverable from the west side of the river, is betwn the Barrier and King's bridge—in the Hollow between Cox's Hill and the heights below—

"One hundred Tents could be counted in view at the same time, and others might be hid by the Hills—At this place it is said the Jagers—Hessians & Anspach lay."—Mag. of Am. Hist., VI: 121.

21 "Again ordered abt. 5000 men to be ready to march at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of reconnoitering the enemy's Posts at Kingsbridge—and to cut off, if possible, such of Delancy's Corps as should be found outside their lines.

"At the hour appointed the march commenced in 4 columns on different roads. . . . The whole Army (Parsons's division first) "arrived at Kingsbridge about daylight & formed on the heights back of Fort Independence—extending towards delancy's Mills—while the Legion of Lauzen & Waterbury proceeded to scour the Necks of Morrisania & throgs to little effect, as most of the Refugees were fled, & hid in such obscure places as not to be discovered; & by stealth got over to the Island adjacent, & to the enemy's shipping which lay in the East River.—a few, however were caught and some Cattle & Houses brought off."—From Washington's Journal, pub. in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 122–23; N. J. Jour., Ag 1, 1781.

22 Washington continues the record of his expedition around Kingsbridge: "The enemy did not appear to have had the least intelligence of our mouvement—or to know we were upon the heights opposite to them till the whole Army were ready to display. . . . I began, with General Rochambeau and the Engineers, to reconnoitre the enemy's position and works, first from Tippet's hill opposite to their left—and from hence it was evident that the small redoubt (Fort Charles) near Kingsbridge would be absolutely at the command of a battery which might be erected thereon.—It also appeared equally evident that the Fort on Cox's hill was in bad repair, . . . From this view and every other I could get of Forts Tryon, Knyphausen & Laurel hill, the works are formidable.—

"There are no Barracks or huts on the East side of the Hill on which Forts Tryon and Knyphausen stands—nor are there any on the hill opposite except those by Fort George.—Near the Blew bell there is a number of Houses, but they have more the appearance of Stables than Barracks.—In the hollow, near the Barrier gate, are about 14 or 15 Tents; which is the only Encampment I could see without the line of Pallisading, as the large one discovered on the 18th through the brake at the Hill betwn Fort Tryon & Cox's hill was not to be seen from any view I had.—

"A continued Hill from the Creek East of Haerlam River & a little below Morris's White House, [Cromwell's Creek, now filled in—Peterson, Landmarks, 128], has from every part of it the command of the opposite shore, and all the plain adjoining within range of shot from batteries which may be erected thereon—The general width of the river along this range of Hills appears to be from one to two hundred yards—the opposite shore (tho' more or less marshy) does not seem miry, & the banks are very easy of access—how far the Battery under cover of the block Ho, on the hill No. West of Harlaem town is capable of scouring the plain is difficult to determine from this side, but it would seem as if the distance was too great to be within the range of its shot on that part of the plain nearest the Creek before mentioned, & which is also nearest the height back of our old lines thrown up in the year 1776. —It unfortunately happens that in the rear of the (continued) hill before mentioned there is a deep swamp, and the grounds, East of that swamp are not so high as the heights near Harlaem river—

"In the rear of this again is the Brunx, which is not to be crossed without Boats below De Lancy's Mills."—From Washington's journal pub. in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 123–24. See also the Military Journal of James Thacher, M.D. (1823), 321.

Von Krafft records that the combined forces of the "Rebels" and French, in whole columns, came marching over, where Independence had been, and "up towards us," in different divisions. From Laurel Hill a few shots were fired from the fort with 24-pounders at the "Rebels;" whereupon they immediately retired behind the height. Afterwards, Von Krafft saw several columns of the "Rebels" march off behind Fort No. 8 (just south of N. Y. University) to the end of "Morrisenie;" but being terribly bombarded from Harlem, from "Shnek-hill" (Snake Hill), they were "soon retreating into the thickets and returning again."—Von Krafft's Jour., 144. July 22

This is one of the early references to Snake Hill, the rocky height now in the centre of Mt. Morris Park, the name of which is taken from the Dutch "Slangberg," on account of the reptiles which formerly infested it.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, cited in 20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 195, where collated historical information regarding the park is published, including other references to "Shnak Hill" from Von Krafft's Jour.

Wm. Smith has a visit from Gen. Arnold, who is "disgusted at the Inactivity of the Day.—Says we have here now 10,300 & odd rank & file of Regulars exclusive of Officers who may be near 2000 more. Yet Washington shewed himself yesterday at King's Bridge & 'tis said in Morrisania. Sir H C[linton] went out this morning at 3 but was back to dine at the Hill formerly Mortier's. 23

"He disapproves of Ld Cornwallis's Stay in Virginia with 7000 Men. He advised his going with 4000 to Alexandria & Baltimore and the Head of Elke—Offered to meet him at either Place with 1500 more by Water—Would by this Time have ousted the Congress at Philadelphia."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "The commodious Wind-Mill, with six lots of ground adjoining, situated near the One Mile Stone, and fronting the Bowery Lane," is offered for sale.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 23, 1781.

"The Pontoons carried to King's Bridge but the Rebels who were yesterday at Morrisania are fallen back.—We took up the Bridge on Sunday—What conduct!"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 24

A letter written from New York contains the following: "The French and the Rebels have lately made their appearance before our lines; but four days ago they fell back towards the White Plains. They industriously propagate through the country that they intend to attempt New-York, which I do not believe. Washington, perhaps, is willing to make a de[s]perate push, but he cannot have the least hopes without the assistance of the French; and we do not think they are ripe to knock their heads against a wall, to please their new Confederates, with whom we are well assured they are upon very indifferent terms. . . . 26

"Those here, who are best informed, entertain not a doubt, that a prudent conduct on our part, must ensure success. However justly odious the leaders of the Rebels are on account of the miseries they have brought on their country, we must, in candour, allow them profound capacity, and unremitting industry."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), S 17–19, 1781.

Congress again resolves (see Ja 5): "That it appears to Congress [from report of a committee headed by Elias Boudinot] that a very large number of marine prisoners and citizens of these United States, taken by the enemy, are now close confined on board prison-ships in the harbour of New York: Aug. 3

"That the said prison-ships are so unequal in size to the number of prisoners, as not to admit of a possibility of preserving life in this warm season of the year, they being crowded together in such a manner as to be in danger of suffocation, as well as exposed to every kind of putrid and pestilential disorder.

.

"That, therefore, the Commander in Chief [Washington] be, and he is hereby, instructed to remonstrate to the proper officer within the enemy's lines. . . .

"That the Commander in Chief be, and he is hereby, also instructed to direct the supplying the said prisoners with such provisions and light clothing. . . ."—Jour. of Cong. (ed. by Hunt), XXI: 829–30; Recollections of the Jersey Prison-ships: from the original MS. of Capt. Thomas Dring, by A. G. Greene (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 131; Dandridge, Am. Prisoners of the Rev., 402. See, further, Ag 21.

The following letter is written by a prisoner on the "Jersey" prison-ship ("vulgarly called Hell"): ". . . Our ship's company is reduced to a small number (by death and entering into the British service) of 19. . . . we bury 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 men a day; we have 200 more sick and falling sick every day; the sickness is the yellow fever, small-pox, and in short everything else that can be mentioned. . . . our morning's salutation is, 'Rebels! turn out your dead!'"—Penn. Packet, S 4, 1781. 10

1781 Aug. 11 "The Fleet of German Troops (3000) arrive from the Weser—The Rebel Frigate Trumbull of 32 Guns taken by the Iris (Capt Dawson) formerly the Hancock and several other Prizes.

"These Troops change the Condition of Affairs. Washington & the French must abandon W Chester. They hoped to induce us to draw off Part of Ld Cornwallis's Forces—Of this they have now no Prospect—I am at a Loss what Veil they can invent to pacify the People who have been promised the Reduction of this Place—Will they both retire to the Highland Forts. Hardly I believe on Account of Contentions. What Disgrace if they fall back—one Army to the Mountains & the Rest to Rhode Island!

"Sir H C ought to muster in the River & acquire the Credit of forcing them to retire. He should do more send 3000 Men to the Delaware to meet Cornwallis at the Head of Elke if the Earl is destined there.—Yet I doubt his attempting any Thing. Mr White says he apologized for not going out with a Part of his 12000 by his Dread of a Party by Water to burn this Town.

"Sir H is a distress'd Man. Drummond the Auditor has shewn his Expenditures greater than Howe's with a larger Force. A Board of Enquiry of Genl Robertson Birch Earl of Linecoln [sic] Patterson Generl Campbel from Pensecola—Elliot & White. What hinders our landing any where at Philad: Boston Providence New London or any other Place where there are Stores? Sir H now commands here 15000—Virginia 8 Thousand & above 4 Thousand in So Carolina—in all 27,000."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

14 A letter reaches Washington from De Grasse, stating that he will sail directly for the Chesapeake. Washington decides to co-operate with him there against Cornwallis, instead of making a descent upon New York (with the expected help of the French fleet under De Grasse) for the purpose of taking the city from Sir Henry Clinton, whose forces are weakened by detachments to the southward.—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), 177, footnote.

15 "General orders are now issued for the army to prepare for a movement at a moment's notice. The real object of the allied armies [in] the present campaign, has become a subject of much speculation. Ostensibly, an investment of the city of New York is in contemplation—preparations in all quarters for some months past, indicate this to be the object of our combined operations. . . . General Washington and Count Rochambeau have crossed the North river, and it is supposed for the purpose of reconnoitering the enemy's posts from the Jersey shore. A field for an extensive encampment has been marked out on the Jersey side, and a number of ovens have been erected and fuel provided for the purpose of baking bread for the army. . . . The royal army at New York, have received a reinforcement of three thousand Germans from Europe" (see Ag 11).—James Thatcher, M.D., A Military Journal (1823), 322.

" "I have written," says Smith, "a very succinct Review of this Campaigne. I wish'd to have censured less & have studied to avoid it, as far as consisted with Fidelity to the Public. I mean to send a Copy to Eden & another to Tryon that one or other may reach the Cabinets. My Views are to prevent a Dereliction of the Colonies or any Part of them from Want of Success by shewing it imputable to erroneous Plans or a shameful Inactivity. I have faulted Lord Cornwallis Idea with Tenderness. I know not how to spare Sir H Clinton. It is from my Disapprobation of his Conduct that I do not avail myself of the openings he gives for an Acquaintance that would grow into Confidence—I am satisfied that he is a Trifler jealous & domineering. Our Neighbourhood has brought me to the knowledge of his Family—Not a Man of Business or Enterprize amongst them. They are servile & study only to make a use of their Genl for their own Interests. I allude to Oliver De Lancey Junr his Adjut General Capt Stapleton & Bibby assistants to De Lancey Colo Crosbie Barrack Master Genl Smith his Chief Secry Capt Russell & Major Philips Deputy or Assist Secretaries Ld Dalrymple Colo Braw Colo Watson Aid De Camp. Of all these there is but one that has the least Pretension to genius or Learning (Watson) but he has rather taste than Strength of Mind & none of the Lott seeks Information. Their Principal I understand gives himself to such Gusts of Passion that No Gent of Spirit and Independency will long continue in his Family—I don't find any of the Generals to have his Confidence—Arnold says they all complain. Elliot & Genl Robertson are most attended to—the latter thinks meanly of him—The former holds his Tongue for his Interest & affects to conceal his Connection with him—Poor Sir Henry! His Want of Parts renders him insensible of his Dangers—He is Civil to me as a Neighbour & I don't wish a more intimate Connection, because it cannot be useful to the Public & may hamper me. It is long since I have visited him."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. For a copy of Smith's "succinct Review," endorsed "Review of Operations in 1781 to 15 Augt," lacking, however, the first pages, see Wm. Smith's Papers (MS), folio 212. Aug. 15

Agreeable to the direction of congress of Aug. 3 (q.v.), Washington writes to Commodore Affleck proposing "that our Commissary-general of prisoners, or any other officer, who shall be agreed upon, shall have liberty to visit the ships, inspect the situation of the prisoners, and make a report, from an exact survey of the situation . . ., whether, in his opinion, there has been any just cause for complaint." 21

In his reply, dated at New York on Aug. 30, the commodore stated, among other things:

"The Government having made no other provision for naval prisoners than shipping [prison-ships], it is impossible that the greater inconvenience, which people on board ships experience beyond those confined on shore, can be avoided, and a sudden accumulation of people often aggravates the evil. But I assure you, that every attention is shown that is possible, and that the Prison ships are under the very same regulations here, that have been constantly observed towards the prisoners of all nations in Europe. Tables of diet are publicly affixed, officers visit every week, redress and report grievances, and the numbers are thinned as they can provide shipping, and no attention has been wanting.

". . . if you think fit to send an officer of character to the lines for that purpose, he will be conducted to me, and he shall be accompanied by an officer, and become a witness of the manner in which we treat the prisoners. And I shall expect to have my officer visit the prisoners detained in your jails and dungeons in like manner, as well as in the mines. . . ."—Recollections of the Jersey Prison-ship: from the original MSS. of Capt. Thomas Dring, by A. G. Greene (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 133–34; Banks, David Sproat and the Naval Prisoners (1909), 2; Dandridge, Am. Prisoners of the Rev., 404–6. For Washington's later observations, see D 27.

" "Our situation reminds me of some theatrical exhibition where the interest and expectations of the spectators are continually increasing, and where curiosity is wrought to the highest point. Our destination has been for some time matter of perplexing doubt and uncertainty; bets have run high on one side, that we were to occupy the ground marked out on the Jersey shore, to aid in the siege of New York, and on the other, that we are stealing a march on the enemy, and are actually destined to Virginia, in pursuit of the army under Lord Cornwallis. We crossed at King's ferry, 21st instant, and encamped at Haverstraw. A number of batteaux, mounted on carriages, have followed in our train, supposed for the purpose of conveying the troops over to Staten Island."—James Thacher, M.D., Military Journal (1823), 323.

On the 22d, the army resumed its march, and passed rapidly through Paramus, Acquackanack, Springfield, and Princeton, passing all the enemy's posts, and pursuing a route, with increasing rapidity, toward Philadelphia. "Our destination can no longer be a secret. The British army, under Lord Cornwallis, is unquestionably the object of our present expedition. . . ."—Ibid., 323–24.

"In an Interview with Sr Henry Clinton this Day he held that the French were 5000 & Washington 7000—He said a late Letter of Genl Parsons's said the Rebels dealt out 10,000 Rations—He alowed for 3000 less—The Rebels had no Women. But I recollect that Parsons made both armies but 8000 as Henry Van Schack had it from Colo Ja: DeLancey who saw and deld the Letters. Sir H also asserted to render his Supposition the more probable that Washington had left the Highland Forts to 400 Invalids—Of his own Force he said he had before 11 Augt when the Troops arrived from the Weser [see Ag 11] but 9200 Rank & file—That Cornwallis had near 8000 & Lord Rawdon above 7000 which last I much wondred at but he took up his Pen & figured out the Number rather above 7000. He said the Idea in England is that I Keep a great army here & yet it is nearly equally divided between N Y Virginia & South Carolina."—Wm. Smith Papers (MS.), folio 212. 23

The 54th Regiment takes possession "of the camp at Jone's House where the Grenadiers had been."—Von Krafft's Jour., 147–48. 25

Gen. Arnold tells Smith he is discontented. "None of his Propositions of Service are listed to & he dispairs of any Thing great or small from Sr H Clinton, who he suspects aims at prolonging the "

1781 Aug. 25 War for his own Interest. He wants me to signify Home his Impatience his Ideas & his Overtures."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

28 "Sir Samuel Hood came to the Hook last night from the West Indies with 14 Ships of the Line several Frigates & 3 Regts said to be 2000—We have then here 17000 men.

"Transports preparing for the Embarkation of 4000 Troops with a Hospital Ship by to morrow morning."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

29 Thos. McMullan advertises a bull-baiting to take place on Aug. 30 "at his house, the sign of his present Majesty, near the fresh water pump." He states that "The Bull is active and very vicious, therefore hopes the spectators will have satisfactory diversion."—Royal Gaz., Ag 29, 1781. Cf. Je 20.

31 "The Town much agitated this morning because No Troops are in Motion to stay the Progress of the Rebels Southwardly. No French Fleet in the Chesapeak last Sunday—Ours can't leave the Hook yet for Head Winds ever since the Night before last."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "The great secret respecting our late preparations and movements can now be explained. It was a judiciously concerted stratagem, calculated to menace and alarm Sir Henry Clinton for the safety of the garrison of New York, and induce him to recall a part of his troops from Virginia, for his own defence; or perhaps keeping an eye on the city, to attempt its capture, provided that by the arrival of a French fleet, favorable circumstances should present. The deception has proved completely successful, a part of Cornwallis' troops are reported to have returned to New York. His Excellency General Washington, having succeeded in a masterly piece of generalship, has now the satisfaction of leaving his adversary to ruminate on his own mortifying situation, and to anticipate the perilous fate which awaits his friend, Lord Cornwallis, in a different quarter. Major General Heath is left commander in chief of our army in the vicinity of New York and the highlands, and the menacing aspect of an attack on New York, will be continued till time and circumstances shall remove the delusive veil from the eyes of Sir Henry Clinton, when it will probably be too late to afford succour to Lord Cornwallis. To our officers, the inactivity of the royal army in New York, is truly unaccountable—they might without risking a great deal, harass our army on its march, and subject us to irreparable injury; but the royalists are more dexterous in availing themselves of treachery and insurrection than in effecting valorous achievements."—James Thacher, M.D., Military Journal (1823), 324. This journal gives particulars of the operations of the American army to the southward, including the siege of Yorktown, Virginia.

Among the original papers in the possession of the Mercantile Library Assn., which were published in 1861, is one partly in the autograph of Sir Henry Clinton presenting some of the circumstances which induced him to permit the allied forces of America and France to proceed from the North to Virginia, without interruption. It is a partial defence of his conduct against the censure which was cast upon him after the capture of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown.—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), 177–84.

Sept. 1 Smith writes: "Reports from Jersey last Night that the whole Rebel army are still moving South. . . . Some say the Southern Delegates carry the Sway in Congress & that Washington moves South agt his own Opinion."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

3 Washington with his army passes through Philadelphia to join Lafayette in Virginia.—Penn. Jour., S 5, 1781.

" Concerning the British régime in New York, Smith writes: "There is no Spirit of Enterprise—The general Dulness kills the Spark that happens to rise in the Mind of any Man. Washingtons present movemt from the Hudson is the severest Censure upon the British Commanders in this Quarter I almost doubt whether Arnold will not be stopp'd, for the very Reason why he should go on. . . .

"This is the 5th Day since Arnold was Notified of his Command agt New London—He is not gone yet—Detachmts from Robertson's & Skinner's Batallions passed thro' Flat Bush towards Whitestone but yesterday. Shameful Delays! The Design was known to the whole Town yesterday—The Wind fair & strong since Saturday afternoon. Some of his Force is now imbarking."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

4 Smith writes that a "Message Boat from Ld Cornwallis" tells us that "a French Fleet arrived there [Virginia] on Thursday 30 Augt 23 Ships in all—17 of them of the Line. . . . How well timed Sir Saml Hoods arrival here 27 Augt [see Ag 28] . . . A week will decide perhaps the Ruin or Salvation of the British Empire! . . . It is said he [Clinton] intends for the Chesapeak on the first News—But this is strange! If our Fleet is beaten he can't go—If they get the Victory he will not be wanted."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. Sept. 4

Rivington publishes a long contribution from "A Friend to America and to Peace," who discusses the overtures made to congress by Lord Drummond in January, 1776, and suggests terms for a new negotiation. In the course of this, the writer refers to "the censures due to the first sett of British Commissioners [the Howes—see Jl 14, 1776], who neglected to unfold to the people of this country at large, the liberality of the government, which they were authorised to publish, and which if divulged had prevented the falsities of that day from imposing as they have done, upon a heated and credulous multitude to the ruin of a country that from that murmur might have enjoyed peace, and before this time been rendered the envy of the world."—Royal Gaz., S 8, 1781. 8

This article was contributed by William Smith to whom Rivington wrote on Sept. 30: "Having a visit from the At Gl who informed me that the manner in which the Howes were mentioned, in the long piece respecting pacification, had given disgust, & being directed to discontinue such freedoms, is the Reason why it does not appear today. But if it could be contrived as to throw out what may be thought to militate against them I will get it into Wednesdays."—From original letter preserved within Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

A council of war is held at New York to determine "how to convey the most effectual relief to the brave Cornwallis." It is unanimously agreed that "a general and vigorous attack should be attempted by sea, and that the British fleet should leave Sandy-Hook on or about the 13th of October for that purpose." Gen. Clinton is to go in person on the expedition with 5,000 men from New York. The sailing of the fleet is deferred a month because "before the 13th of October there will be a great risk in getting over the Bar," and Lord Cornwallis has notified Clinton that his provisions will last until the end of October.—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), N 7–9, 1781. 10

An item of news from Cape Henry says: "Admiral Digby is most assuredly arrived off the Hook with one ship of 90 guns, and two of 74. The reports (from them) say he left England [see Je 19] with six ships of the line, six frigates and 100 transports, for America: but some advices the Admiral received at sea, made it necessary for him to come on with three ships, leaving the transports under cover of three ships of the line and six frigates."—N. Y. Merc., O 8, 1781. See, further, S 26. 13

Smith writes: "Arnold did not return till yesterday afternoon from New London owing to Head Winds—It is a bad Symptom that the Army think their Loss greater than the Rebels. G R[obertson] talks in this pitiful Strain—He is a Dotard & abandoned to Frivolity—He has Parties of Girls in the Fort Garden, in the Midst of his own Fears, and the Anxieties of this Hour."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. "

News reaches New York, writes Smith, "That De Grasse got out of the Chesapeak before our Fleet arrived & had been joined by Barras. That then they were 24 of the Line & had left a Ship or two Frigates as we suppose in the Chesapeak. That our Van had attacked their Rear & Center coming out 6 Insts—and were left in Chace of them 4 Days ago 10 Insts, the French making for the Chesapeak others say N[ew] E[ngland]. This near Curituck Inlet S: of Cape Henry."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 14

Smith is informed that Cornwallis, on Aug. 22, at Yorktown, "had Provisions for 10,000 Men for 62 Days—He must have great Helps from the Country besides. We need not be anxious on this Account till in October."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See O 19. 15

A Committee is appointed to examine the patents, deeds, and other papers belonging to Trinity Church with a view to having them properly recorded, as "many of the Public Records are removed from this City," and it is feared "some accident may prevent their being lodged again in their respective Offices."—Trin. Min. (MS.). A further record under the same date is: "By widening Vesey Street two Vaults belonging to Mrs Mary Ten Eyck & Mrs Jauncey are left without the Church fence of St Pauls."—Ibid. See My 18, 1784. 17

1781 Sept. 17 John Amory, who for a few years was proprietor of Montagne's tavern on Broadway south of Warren St., offers the place for rent on Oct 1. He describes it as the "House and Gardens . . . pleasantly situated in Great-George-Street, opposite the Artillery Park." Enough "furniture to carry on the business will be sold. The situation and convenience of the house and gardens are so well known as to render a further description unnecessary."—N. Y. Merc., S 17, 1781. See O 22.

" Peter Lenox, "From Perth, in North-Britain," notifies the public that he has removed "from where he lately lived near the Merchants Coffee House, to the sign of the Indian King, No. 69, in Cherry Street, near the Ship-Yards. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., S 17, 1781. See Ap 19, 1779.

20 Von Krafft is on active picket duty "in front of Jones House" at the "Landing Place."—Von Krafft's Jour., 150.

23 "10 Ships of Graves's Line of Battle Ships come up from the Hook into the North River to refit."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

24 William Smith, writing to Gen. Tryon, says: "The French Adm[l] has been too cunning for Rodney and is come with his whole Fleet to the Chesapeake where the Enemy had last monday 32 sail of the Line. The Armies that passed us unmolested had not got down—The Force already collected there 3000 French 2000 Cont[ls] & month's men & 4000 Peasants of the neighbourhood

"Digby Digby is the Cry—If he arrives to morrow Graves who has 10 Ships refitting in our Harbour will not be ready to sail in some Days And every Hour is precious to Lord Cornwallis tho' his Provisions will hold out for 6 Weeks

"I wish it was clear that the Fleet will undertake to give him the intended Succours or if they will not that we shall make our Activity in this Part of the Cont[t] counterbalance for our Losses elsewhere And the Enemy's thirst for Peace be equal to our own—My Zeal and perhaps my Ignorance would incline me to march with 10,000 Men to Philad: for the Destruction of every Thing useful for Commerce or for Arms except the Cattle of the implacable Foe wanted here. And if it should please God to give L[d] Cornwallis the Glory of saving the Empire such Services would not deserve Censure . . ." In a postscript he adds: "To our unspeakable Joy Digby is at the Hook 4 of Clock P M—All well—The Presence of the Prince may supply our Deficiency."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 194. The "Prince" was William Henry, the third son of George III.—N. J. Gaz. (Trenton), which paper gives the date of his arrival erroneously as Sept. 25.

26 Prince William Henry was "the first of royal lineage" to visit this continent.—Penn. Packet, O 4, 1781. On the death of George IV, in 1830, he became King William IV, reigning until 1837, when Victoria became Queen.—See "Roster of a Republic's Royal Guests," in N. Y. Times Mag., Ag 24, 1919.

Prince William Henry arrives in the city, "accompanied by the Honorable Admiral Digby; he was received at landing by his Excellency the Commander in Chief, accompanied by the Governor, the Admirals, Generals, and other great Officers of the Crown, conducted to Commodore Affleck's where his Royal Highness dined, and in the evening retired to apartments provided for his accommodation in Wall-Street."—Royal Gaz., S 29, 1781. See also N. Y. Merc., O 1, 1781.

Smith says that the prince, on landing, was "rec[d] by Sir H Clinton the Gov[r] [Robertson] & a Crowd behind Kennedy's House at the North River—They led him on Foot to Commodore Affleck's where he dined with Adm[l] Digby & two Gen[t] in the Interim walked in the Entry."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

27 "The Prince walked thro' a Part of the Town with Sir H Clinton & his Family with Crowds after him whose Curiosity he had gratified all the Morning at the Window. He dined this Day with Sir Henry & went Home at 9 in the Evening."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VII.

28 The seige of Yorktown begins. For particulars, with maps, see Winsor, VI: 501, 547, 550–53. See, further, O 19.

" Wm. Smith writes of the events of this day: "I was called to the Gov[r]'s at 7—& settled a new Draft of an Address wrote by Gen[l] R after some Conversation with Adm[l] Digby who was fearful of bringing the Prince into too much Notice for the King's Inclination—It was in Part composed of my Draft, but I think a better one—Elliot came after we had settled it—& marked but one Alteration which we would not suffer. While we were together Gen[l] Ol: De Lancey & Roger Morris came . . . according to appointment for 8 O'C and after that others of the Council to whom it was read as they entered but no Man Objected—Two Copies were ordered & one sent to the Prince—At 10 o'Clock we went with the Gov[r] & were called up & introduced at the Head of the Stairs to Adm[l] Digby who brought us in to the Prince who had Sir Sam[l] Hood with him. The Passage all thro' was lined with General & other Officers of the Army & Navy waiting to be introduced. Sept. 28

"The Prince stood at the Right of the Fireplace with a Paper in his Hand & up at his Breast and bowed as we entered. Digby was at his right Hand a little behind. Gen[l] Robertson advanced & took out the Address, but not having Spectacles got thro' with great Difficulty. The Prince then read his Answer—After which the Gov[r] named us several as we stood on his Right & down to the Bottom ending with the Mayor & Gen[l] De Lancey—on this he bowed & retired & so we did severally—

"After the Introduction of the Officers the Prince rode out in a Phaeton with Adm[l] Digby to see the Island conducted by Col[o] Watson Col[o] Bruce and came back at 3—at 4 the Gov[r] was to have attended him to shew the Way to his House, thro' a Double Rank of Militia down Wal[l] Street & thro' the Square & he had scarcely left Home before the Prince came in the Gen[l]'s coach—when apprized of the Intention to gratify the Militia & People he consent[ed] to walk up to his Lodging & back again as they did uncovered all the Way in a very hot Sun. I was at that Time in the House with the Adm[l]s Digby Hood Drake, the Council & other Guests for that Day's Dinner.

"We sat down at 5 in the following order—The Prince at the Head between Gen[l] Robertson & General Kniphausen—The Left Wing of a Horse Shue Table was the upper Part of the Room farthest from the Door—and the Guests next to General Knyphausen Digby Birch the Comm[dt] Commadore Afflock M[r] Elliot myself Major Murray Cap[t] Elphingstone—On the other Side after Gen[l] R—Sir Sam[l] Hood Adm[l] Drake The Earl of Lincoln—Col[o] Axtel—Cap[t] [name omitted] M[r] White M[r] Wallace Col[o] De Lancey Col[o] Roger Morris the Princes Chaplain who said grace before any Person seated himself.—There were no formal Thanksgivings.

"At 7 the Prince rose after Coffee on a Nodd from Adm[l] Digby & took Coach to the Fort where he walked the Ramparts a while & then proceed[ed] to Whitehall where he imbarked & was carried to the Ship Prince George and thus ended this Day.—The Prince drank down the left Wing of the Table but few Gen[ls] drank to him or others except those near them & there was no hightoned Conversation. He spoke a good deal to Gen[l] R & Gen[l] Kniphausen & always to the latter in French & accented it very properly—André was a Part of the Conversation but I heard very little of it his Voice being clear but feeble. I heard not a word of Knyphausen's.—No man elevated his Voice so much as Sir Sam[l] Hood a Native of Shropshire but the Image of a Yankey Col[o] both in Person & stiff Behavior."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

The text of the address, published later, is as follows:

"The humble Address of the Governor, his Majesty's Council, and Inhabitants of New-York, May it please your Royal Highness,

"To permit me with the Members of his Majesty's Council, to hail your auspicious arrival on the American Shore.

"At the same time suffer me to express the Congratulations which all the Inhabitants by their Chief Magistrate, have commissioned me to convey to your Royal Highness.

"On the report of your coming [see Je 19], we felt our obligation to our gracious King, for this new and signal proof of his regard. Your Royal Highness's appearance augments our gratitude, by improving our idea of the extent of his goodness.

"Your presence animates every loyal breast, the glow in our own, persuades us you are formed to win every heart; a Rebellion that grew upon prejudice, should sink at the approach of so fair a representation of our Royal Virtues.

"But if a misled faction, not to be vanquished by goodness, persists in the war, every man of spirit will be proud to fight in a cause to which you expose your life.

"May your Royal Highness bring an accession of glory to that distinguished family from which you are descended; and who, as patrons of Liberty, and the Protestant religion, have spread Blessings among Nations."

The prince's reply was as follows: "Gentlemen, I beg you will 1781 Sept. 28 receive my best thanks for your attention to me, and congratulations on my arrival in this country, which I shall certainly take the first opportunity of making known to his Majesty. I desire you will accept of my best wishes for the prosperity of America in general, and this Province in particular."—N. Y. Merc., O 1, 1781.

" "Yesterday [Sept. 28] the Militia and Independent Companies appeared under arms, and his Royal Highness was saluted by them en passant, to the house of his Excellency Lieut. Gen. Robertson, where an elegant dinner was provided for the Prince.

"It is impossible to express the satisfaction felt (by persons of all ranks), from the ease, affability, and condescension shewn by this most pleasing, manly youth, when he appears abroad amongst the happy, and approved loyal subjects of the good and gracious King, our best and firmest friend, the Majesty of England, his Royal Highness's sincerely beloved Father."—Royal Gaz., S 29, 1781; N. Y. Merc., O 1, 1781. Samuel Loudon, at Fish-Kill, reprinted in his N. Y. Packet of Oct. 4 the foregoing item from Rivington's Gaz., adding at the end: "[Whew . . . w . . . w!]."

29 William Smith writes of "agreeable Intelligence" concerning the provincial records. He says the captain of the "Warwick," at his "late departure from Plimouth," received two boxes, but "no orders concerning them for these he would find here—No Intimation being got on his arrival here he has taken them to Sea on his late Convoy of the Detachm[t] with Baron Riedesel to Canada—Suspecting Injury by Rats at Sea he opened them & found they were Books of Records & had mentioned the Boxes to Gen[l] R[obertson]. He wished he was rid of them.

"I called in the Evening at the Deputy Secretary's (Bayards) and as he was in the Country desired his Father that he might be sent for in the morning to attend the Receipt of the Boxes lest they should be carried out again to Sea and lost

"Now the Gov[r] tells me Sir Sam[l] Hood says that he left Records of this Province at Portsmouth at his last coming out to reinforce Rodney—Sir Sam[l] had been a Commissioner of the Navy at Portsmouth and on orders being issued to clear out the Eagle it was reported to him that there were Boxes on Board which they knew nothing about—He discovered they were N. York Records & wrote to London for directions but never had any Answer to his Letter or Letters The Gov[r] asks me what these can be and what he ought to do for their Safety.

"I replied that those must be the Papers now in the Warwick she having sailed from Portsmouth since Sir Samuel left it. Cap[t] Ephinstone says they are large Boxes & M[r] Tryon did not take more from Bayard in 1775 than two Cargo Boxes would contain. Maj[r] Murray has been to Bayards to go with him to the Warwick for these Boxes, but he is not yet in Town & I advise the Delivery to his Clerk, for Fear of the Warwick's Sailing

"I now conjecture that before the Asia Sailed Home, Cap[t] Vandeput delivered his Records to L[d] Howe's order on Board of the Eagle at this Port & that his Lordship had them there till his Return in the Fall 1778 that he left them on Board nor afterwards troubled his head about them. What Shameful Carelessness! These important Papers have been exposed to every Risk in the Delaware & Chesapeak & afterwards when he followed D'Estaigne to Rhode Island.—Were in the Storm that happened in Aug[t] 1778—and the Eagle had been well nigh taken in going Home."

On the next day Smith added: "Called at M[r] Bayards. He has all the Books of Records he delivered to Gov[r] Tryon in 1775, except that containing the Indian Cessions. These Returned are 24 Vol[s] They have suffered by the Damps, but I believe no Part of the writing is lost—Some of them must be transcribed for common Resort—An Act of Assembly may be proper to authenticate such Transcripts. If the Volume of Indian Cessions is lost 'tis the one least Material to the Public."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. Rivington "congratulates the public," on Oct. 3 (q. v.). Bayard made a report to Gov. Robertson regarding the receipt of these records, on Apr. 10, 1783 (q. v.).

Oct. 2 John Jacob Lotheissen, the Hessian judge-advocate at New York, publishes a "Notification" that, as "His Most Serene Highness the Landgrave of Hesse" has approved the sentance of the courts martial, the decree has been carried out which required that three ensigns (mentioned by name with the names of their regiments) "be hanged for Treason and Desertion to the Enemy, and that their effigies be hanged, with their names and crimes thereunto marked, till their persons (now absent) shall fall within the reach of Justice." These effigies, the notice states, "are actually hanged on the gallows at New-York and Fort Knyphausen."—N. Y. Merc., O 8, 1781. Oct. 2

Rivington "congratulates the public, and especially the inhabitants of this Province, upon the King's gracious restoration of those important records, which General Tryon's care and vigilence, secured on board the ship Dutchess of Gordon, in the month of November, 1775" (see D 6 and 9, 1775). He states that a mob, headed by Sears, was about to seize "that inestimable treasure" in the secretary's office, and take it to New England; but "General Tryon [then governour] caused such of the books to be selected as put it out of the power, of almost every land-holder without recourse to them, to give evidence in a court of Law of the title to his estate; and these were brought off in strong boxes under locks and seals. They were carried home to England, in 1778, and lately sent back in one of the King's ships to their ancient deposit. 3

"The residue, or general mass of papers, are among the rebels, having been first conveyed by order of the Provincial Congress to Kingston, in Ulster county, Mr. Bayard the Deputy Secretary was with them, and watched over them, 'till the violence of the times wrested them from his hands and consigned them to others above three years ago; since which, they have been exposed to a perilous transportation from one place to another in carts." After referring to the possible "mischiefs" and "wild confusion in property" had Sear's project succeeded, Rivington states that the records "are at present in the hands of Mr. Bayard, at the Secretary's Office."—Royal Gaz., O 3, 1781.

Commenting on this, Wm. Smith says: "Rivington inserts this Day a Congratulation of the Public on Reciept of the Records, which I drew to show the Landholders, that the Crown had a mortgage upon the Province for her Return to her Fidelity.—It hints obliquely at the Necessity of Recourse to thence to prove their Titles and asserts that Care will be taken to prevent their falling into the Hands of the Usurpers. It may also set the People ag[t] any Project for burning this Town."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Gen. Arnold asserts to Wm. Smith "that the Adj[t] General has informed him that there are now here above 13000 Rank & file—Take out 5 for the Chesapeak there will be 8 left with Officers above 9000. Sir H [Clinton] did not produce his Letter but got him to declare his objects saying the Letter was mislaid. General R[obertson] made the Objection of Danger to N. Y—Sir H help'd by stating his Force here at but 11,000 which Arnold denies to be the Truth."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 4

Chief-Justice Smith is one of the guests dining with the prince and Admiral Digby on board the latter's ship; he writes that he had "every advantage to hear & mix in the Conversation," and thinks very well "of his [i. e. the prince's] Genius & Information as well as of his Manners—He is very sprightly and inquisitive."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 5

The quarterly meeting of the Marine Society is held at "Hewet's Tavern, on Hallet's Wharf."—N. Y. Merc., O 8, 1781. 8

Maj. Oliver de Lancey, of the 17th Regiment of Light Dragoons, is appointed "Adjutant-General of the forces in North-America, vice John André." He is also promoted to be a lieutenant-colonel.—N. Y. Merc., D 24, 1781. 9

In a circular letter addressed to the governour of New York, Robert Morris (see F 20) explains in detail the measures taken to secure financial aid from abroad and the difficulties there met with. He says: "People have flattered themselves with a visionary idea that nothing more was necessary than for Congress to send a minister abroad, and that immediately he would get as much money as he chose to ask for. That when he opened a loan, hundreds would run to see who would have the honour of subscribing to it, and the like, but surely a moment's reflection should have convinced every reasonable man that without the clear prospect of repayment people will not part with their property. Have the efforts to borrow in this country been so successful as to ground any hopes from abroad? Or is it to be supposed that foreigners will interest themselves more in our prosperity or safety than our own citizens? Or can it be believed that credit shall be given abroad before solid funds are provided at home? . . . 15

"The Congress conformable to the public wish have appointed ministers, requested grants, and opened loans. In Holland they have got nothing, and in Spain but very little. Loans were expected from individuals in Holland, but nothing of that sort has been or probably will be obtained. . . .

1781 Oct. 15 "The distressed situation of public affairs forced the Congress to draw bills of exchange on their ministers. Some were drawn on France, some on Spain, and some on Holland. The first were honoured and paid, the second were accepted; but recourse was finally had to the Court of France for the payment of these also, they were drawn at long sight, the sales were slow, they were remitted from time to time, and every opportunity afforded the minister of the United States to obtain the money for discharging them, but in vain. Of consequence these bills have been regularly referred to the Court of France for payment, and this has done us injury by anticipating the aid which France has been disposed to afford us, and at the same time has justly alarmed and greatly embarrassed the French Ministry."

He says further that the king of France granted a subsidy of 6,000,000 livres to the United States and became security for 10,000,000 livres in addition. but owing to reductions which had to be made from such sum, the total remaining available for future use was equivalent to approximately $1,000,000 while the former annual expense of the war was about $20,000,000.

"I should not answer the views of Congress," says he, "if I did not add, that the Court of France place the aid now afforded us, among the number of those extraordinary efforts which cannot be repeated."

The necessity of raising funds by taxation in the several states he urges upon the separate legislatures. "I hope the Congress will soon be enabled to transmit their requisitions, and I shall endeavour that they may be as moderate as possible. But I must pray that every man whether in public or private life, will seriously consider the importance of complying with those requisitions. . . . The superiority of national resources is the sure ground on which to hope for success; . . ." He continues: "the enemy have hoped everything from the derangement of our finances, and on the other hand, as I am well informed, it is from the establishment of a national bank, and the forming of contracts to supply our armies, that they have the greatest apprehensions. . . . If we do our duty now, this war will soon be brought to a close: If not, it may last many years, and what will then be its termination, it is not in human wisdom to foresee. Thoroughly convinced that the enemy must ask peace whenever we are in a condition vigorously to prosecute the war, and that we shall be in that condition, whenever our affairs are reduced to order, and our credit restored:—and that for these purposes, nothing more is necessary than a proper system of taxation, I cannot avoid expressing my sentiments on the subject in all the warmth with which they flow from my heart."—Royal Gaz., Jl 13, 1782. Commenting on this letter, under date of July 15, 1782, Smith says: "Morris the Financier's Letter shews Despair without the Taxes & teaches the Multitude to claim a Right to be collectively consulted—If there are any private negotiations in Europe between the Ministry and the Congress Morris is probably in the Secret. Yet tis said that he has issued his own Notes for 2 Months Pay to the Rebel Army & upon the Point of being ruined for Want of the Money hoped for from the Taxes—It is also said that the Bills upon France for Interest Money to the Lenders to Congress are come back lately protested by Dr. Franklin to the Amount of 30 odd Thousand Pounds Sterling and that this has thrown all the public Creditors into a Fright.

"The Colonies in general have charged that New England is in Default for Contributions—If so they have no Way of preventing the Payment but by reuniting with Great Britain—They will pursue what they concieve to be their Interest and it was a common Apprehension that as they began the Rebellion they would be the first to desert the Rest of the Confederates.

"If one may judge from Appearances the American War is nearly at an End—The Danger to the Loyalists is that the Rebel Power will be over rated by Great Britain."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

16 News from Cornwallis, sent last Friday (O 12) from Yorktown, reaches New York. Smith writes: "The Enemy within 600 yards—About a 100 men lost by the Fire from 40 Pieces of Cannon & 17 Mortars. The Claron Ship of 44 Guns blown up by a red hot Ball—Major Cochran had arrived with dispatches intimating that our Fleet would sail home 12 Ins[t] Two Sloops of War came from cruizing & bring in the Royal Lois Privateer & several Prizes from the Delaware. The Populace rave at the Navy who have been refitting her since 23 Sept."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

18 In a letter to a correspondent in London, a New Yorker says: "Our fleet, which received considerable damage in their spars and rigging in the last engagement off Chesapeak, are now perfectly refitted. Upwards of 5000 troops are embarked on board of the men of war, and wait only for a fair wind to sail to the assistance of our Southern Hero. Gen. Clinton goes with them; for he always accompanies the grenadiers and 42d regiment. There are three ships of 90 guns, 16 of 74, six of 64, and two of 50, besides frigates. The whole of these have for three weeks past been lying in our harbour." —Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), N 21–23, 1781. The fleet sailed on Oct. 19 (q.v.). Oct. 18

The Americans defeat the British at Yorktown, Va. The formal surrender is made by O'Hara, in the absence of Cornwallis, to Lincoln, the representative of Washington.—Winsor, VI: 504. Articles of capitulation are settled between Washington and Cornwallis. An interchange of notes passed between them from Oct. 17 to 19, regarding terms of surrender.—N. J. Jour., O 31; N. Y. Merc., N 5, 1781; Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 35. A letter from Cornwallis, written at Yorktown on Oct. 20, to his commander-in-chief, Clinton, describing the battle and his capitulation, was published in the N. Y. Merc., N 26 (q.v.), one week after Cornwallis himself appeared in New York on his return from Yorktown. See N 19. 19

"The British army became prisoners of war, subject to the ordinary rules of exchange. The only delicate question related to the American loyalists in the army, whom Cornwallis felt it wrong to leave in the lurch. This point was neatly disposed of by allowing him to send a ship to Sir Henry Clinton, with news of the catastrophe and to embark in it such troops as he might think proper [see O 31] to lead to New York, and no questions asked."—Fiske, Am. Revolution, II: 282.

On this very day, Admiral Graves's fleet, with Sir Henry Clinton on board, sails from New York to relieve Cornwallis; it was booked to start a week earlier.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. The news of the surrender reached New York on Oct. 24 (q.v.). "

Anbury wrote on Oct. 30, that "When the British fleet left Sandy Hook [for the Chesapeak, to relieve Cornwallis], Gen. Washington had certain intelligence of it within forty-eight hours after it sailed, although at such a considerable distance as near six hundred miles, by means of signal guns and alarms. A very notorious rebel in New York, from the top of his house, hung out the signal of a white flag, the moment the fleet got under way, which was immediately answered by the firing of a gun at a small village about a mile from our post at Paulus Hook; after that a continual firing of cannon was heard on the opposite shore."—Anbury, Travels through the Interior Parts of Am., II: 545.

"The London Fleet" arrives at the Hook and "brings Provisions for 30,000 Men for 6 months."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. "

Earl Cornwallis writes to Sir Henry Clinton of his surrender at Yorktown, giving a detailed account of the action. In extenuation he adds: "I never saw this post in any favourable light, but when I found I was to be attacked in it in so unprepared a state, by so powerful an army and artillery, nothing but the hopes of relief would have induced me to attempt its defence, for I would either have endeavoured to escape to New-York by rapid marches from the Gloucester side, immediately on the arrival of General Washington's troops at Williamsburg, or I would, notwithstanding the disparity of numbers, have attacked them in the open field, where it might have been just possible that fortune would have favoured the gallantry of the handful of troops under my command. But being assured by your Excellency's letters that every possible means would be tried by the navy and army to relieve us, I could not think myself at liberty to venture on either of those desperate attempts." —N. Y. Merc., N 26, 1781. For Smith's comments on this letter, see N 24 and 26. 20

John Kirk, "who lately kept the Mitre Tavern in the Broadway," announces that he has removed to the "well known tavern in Great George street, opposite the Artillery Park, Kept by Mr. Montagnie, and lately by Mr. Amory . . ." (see S 17).—N. Y. Merc., O 22, 1781. Kirk distinguished the place by the sign of "H. R. H. Prince William Henry."—Royal Gaz., O 27, 1781. For a history of Montagne's tavern, see Ap 5, 1754. 22

Congress assembles and listens to Washington's dispatch of the 19th announcing the victory at Yorktown and the articles of capitulation.—Jour. of Cong., III: 679. 24

A broadside is issued in Philadelphia granting permission to the citizens to "illuminate" in celebration of Cornwallis's sur- "

1781 render at Yorktown.—From an original in the N. Y. P. L. (Evans, Oct. 17309). On Oct. 25, news of the surrender was published at New-24 port in a broadside, a photostat of which is in the N. Y. P. L. (not in Evans).

" "A Flag from Elizabeth Town" brings over prisoners (including one Gwinton Hamilton) who bring an account of Cornwallis's surrender. The news is received with astonishment. Hugh Gaine states: "I believed it, though many would not, and no further account being received thereof, the Report in some Measure was explained away."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 135. Smith says: "I give no Credit to it but suspect it an Artifice to prevent the Insurrection of the Loyalists or some Operations on our Part."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

26 The capture of Cornwallis is confirmed "by a Messenger from Staten Island."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 135.

27 "A further account of the taking of Lord Cornwallis and Part of Articles of Capitulation arrived, but not yet credited by some People."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 135.

30 The continental congress resolves "That the respective states be called upon to furnish the treasury of the United States, with their quotas of the eight millions of dollars for the war department, and civil list, the ensuing year; to be paid quarterly in equal proportions, the first payment to be made on the first day of April next."—Jour. of Cong., VII: 216. Not a farthing had been paid in on April 1, 1782. During the month of May small amounts were contributed by Rhode Island and New Jersey.—Ind. Gazetteer (Phila.), Jl 6, 1782; N. Y. Merc., Jl 15, 1782. William Smith, under date of July 15, cited the Mercury when he wrote: "No part of the Continent has raised a Farthing towards the Taxes of the Gov^{t} but Rhode Island, Pensilvania & Jersey."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VI. Smith must have learned from some other source about Pennsylvania's payment of a partial quota during the month of June (see Ind. Gazetteer, Phila., Jl 20, 1782). New York's quota for the year was 373,589 "dolls.," of which she had paid 300, up to Dec. 1 (ibid., D 21, 1782).

31 "The Bonetta Sloop of War, came up this Evening from Virginia, with a number of Refugees, who, we were afraid, had been given up to General Washington, as he refused to include them in the Capitulation [see O 19]."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 136.

Nov. "In and near New York, Sir Henry Clinton has no less than four — houses; he is quite a monopolizer. At times, when he is visible, he is seen riding full tilt to and from his different seats; in this, he is the Ape of Royalty."—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 846, citing the Political Mag. (London), N, 1781.

1 Samuel Loudon spreads the following notice across the first page of his newspaper:

"BE IT REMEMBERED!

"That on the 17th of October, 1781, Lieutenant-General Earl Cornwallis, with above Five thousand British Troops, surrendered themselves Prisoners of War to His Excellency Gen. George Washington, Commander in Chief of the allied Forces of France and America.

"LAUS DEO!"

—N. Y. Packet (Fish-Kill), N 1, 1781.

" Samuel Bayard, Jr., receives from the ship "Warwick" three cases, containing all the books which, on Dec. 4, 1775 (q. v.), except that of Indian cessions to the Crown, had been ordered put for safety on board the Dutchess of Gordon." For further particulars, see D 6 and 9, 1775; and also Ap 10, 1783 (the date of Bayard's report to Gov. Robertson on the subject).

3 The inhabitants of New York "are so affected by the defeat of Lord Cornwallis, that many merchants refuse to open the goods received by the last fleet; some will not even sell without ready money."—Letter from New York, in N. J. Jour. (Chatham), Ap 17, 1782.

" "Arnold shews me a Pasquinade taken down this morning from the City Hall purporting that he [Clinton] had sacrificed L^{d} Cornwallis to his Envy."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

4 "General Clinton came ashore at the Narrows yesterday, and dined at Roubalêt, with Some of his Suite this Day."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 136.

" The fleet returns to the Hook. It is reported that "Washington & Rochambeau are going ag^{t} Charles Town. . . . Sir Henry came up on Monday [5th]."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II, under date of N 8.

13 Sir Henry Clinton, writing from New York to Lord Germain, says: "Had it been possible for the fleet to have sailed from hence Nov.
at the time it was first imagined they would have been able to do, 13
I have not the least doubt that Lord Cornwallis would have been relieved, by the joint exertions of the navy and army."—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), D 17–19, 1781.

Smith writes in his diary: "Digby came up last Night having 14 sent Sir S Hood away with 19 Ships. Thus ends a most inglorious campaign for I believe Sir H C[linton] means nothing, this year.

"The Disorders under the misrule of the Army add to Discontents for Neglct in the Operations of the War.

"The Distresses are general and very great for want of Fuel. The Kings Barracks indeed are full, but the Citizen suffers. The main Causes are two 1. The want of Guard Ships in the Sound & 2 The order forbidding any to come from Staten Island till the Garison there is supplied. Thus the Innocent bear a Punishm^{t} that ought to fall upon the Staten Island Delinquent who should be made to perform what is most necessary to the Garison.—I have spoken my mind on this Subject to General Robertson. But he said wood coming to Town on Contract is seized & given to Favorites M^{r} John Livingston & Jacob Watson have suffered by this Partiality."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "Brooklyn Hunt. The Hounds will throw off at Denyce's Ferry, at Nine o'Clock on Thursday morning. Dinner on the Table at Three o'Clock at Brooklyn Hall. A Guinea or more will be given for a good strong Bag Fox, by Charles Loosley."—Royal Gaz., N 14, 1781. See My 7, 1779.

Joshua Hett Smith, who aided André in the West Point affair, 16 appeals to the British commander-in-chief thus: "It is impossible for any Pen to describe the Agonies I endured prior to my Arrival here in June last, since which my personal Property has been confiscated, and my Family banis[hed] for the Increase of my Distress in my Seperation here from my Estate and Funds—

"What I had in this Town I have indeed been put into Possession of by the Kindness of General Robertson, but it is with Truth an extreme Mortification, that I can assure your Excellency, it yields me no more than £140 Currency P^{r} Annum, so that I am every Day at Streights, for the bare Necessaries of Life to subsist a Family of Six adult Persons and three Child[ren] in all the Meaness of an unbecoming Economy—It does not become me to add what your Excellency will more [e]asily concieve, than I can express, I will therefore say no more Sir than that unaccustomed to want, and in the intollerable Expensiveness of Living in this Garrison we have wanted even Fire to warm us, and with a Zeal for the Interest of the Crown and a Readiness to serve his Majesty by all the means in my Power, I cast myself and my distressed Family, upon your Excellencys Protection, for such Assistance as other Loyal Sufferers of Condition have experienced from your Goodness."—American Loyalists Transcripts. Memorials, Correspondence, &c, II: 213–15.

Rivington publishes a declaration of independence by Loyalists. 17
It embodies part of the American declaration, but asserts their adherence to Great Britain.—Royal Gaz., N 17, 1781. It is reprinted in Van Tyne's The Loyalists, Appendix A.

A "Charity Sermon," it is announced, will be preached on this 18 day in St. George's Chapel for the benefit of the "Charity School," which at this time "consists of 86 Scholars viz. 56 Boys and 30 Girls." The boys are taught "reading, writing, arithmetic and merchants accounts; the Girls,—reading, writing, arithmetic, and needle-work:—They are all annually Cloathed, and furnished with books, paper &c. The School is visited once a month and the Children are carefully examined by a Committee, consisting of the Rector, and three or four Members of the Vestry of Trinity Church. When any of the Scholars are of age, and properly qualified, they are put out to suitable trades or services; and others are taken into their places."—Royal Gaz., N 14, 1781.

"Lord Cornwallis arrived this Morning from the Chesapeake, 19 and had a Meeting with General Clinton."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 137. See also N. Y. Merc., N 26, 1781. Wm. Smith's observations are: Lord Cornwallis arrives & visits and dines at Head Quarters. He will sail in the Fleet to England before Christmas.—Many Officers come with him—The Rebel Papers which I have seen up to the 14 Ins^{t} are illiberally severe ag^{t} the Earl, & show that they are displeased at the Terms of Surrender. I percieve that a writer in one of the last admits the authenticity of the Letters now published by Rivington to be Deane's—They republish those to Rob^{t} Morris & Duer."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

1781 Nov. 23 While England is anxiously waiting for news concerning Cornwallis the following item appears in a London paper: "Nothing is more likely than that the letters to and from General Washington, which were intercepted by Sir Henry Clinton [see, e. g., My 21], . . . were written for the purpose of being intercepted, and deceiving our General. The attack upon New-York, said in those letters to be intended, was certainly nothing more than one of those feints, so common in every war, which are calculated only to divert the attention of the enemy from the place where the real attack is to be made . . . No more than 5000 men were employed to force the strong lines round the head quarters, defended by innumerable batteries, ships, and at least 15,000 regular troops: The whole was clearly a feint; and we have yet to learn by the next dispatches from the Chesapeak, whether we have not reason to lament, that the intercepted letters . . . ever fell into our hands; as they served only to lull the fears of our Commander in Chief, for every part of our army, except that which lay at New-York: These letters begat security in the minds of our troops for every other post. God grant that Lord Cornwallis be not the victim of that security." —Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), N 21–23, 1781.

24 The letter of Cornwallis (see O 20) "must offend—proves that he disapproved of that Establishm[t] That he would not have been found there if he had not relied on unperformed assurances of Relief and how sharp the implied censure in talking of coming to N Y with that little Army since we could have March[ed] from thence with 12000 more!"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See also N 26.

" Lieut. Von Krafft establishes quarters "at the 5th mile stone, below a tavern named The Dove."—Von Krafft's Jour., 154.

25 The "disagreeable intelligence of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis" reaches London.—Lloyd's Eve. Post (London), N 23–26, 1781.

26 "From 12 till 4 P M. on a visit to Sir H Clinton—He very properly at Parting apologized for boring me so long, for he talked almost all in a desultory Justification of his own Conduct & a Censure of every Body else—Lord Amherst the Secretary of State Sir Geo: Rodney Lord Cornwallis General Robertson Gen[l] Knyphausen General Tryon Adm[l] Arbuthnot M[r] Graves the Fleet &c &c. He is a distress'd man, looking for Friends and suspicious of all mankind & complains of the number of his Enemies—Believes the Ministers wrote the Paper which so severely censures him and was published lately in the English Papers with the Signature of Milo. He wished me to know what had passed between him & L[d] Cornwallis, & beg'd me to take the Trouble of perusing the Correspondence which he would send for that Purpose. . . .

"In talking of Lord Cornwallis's Letter [see O 20] I could not help observing to him that the impression it made was (1) that his Lordship was clear of establishing an unfavorable Past—(2) That he was lost by a Promise of Aid not given & (3) Those who thought well of him & that his little Force could have come here, would ask why Sir H C[linton] did not go to him with 10, or 12000 Men. This touched him seriously & brought on a Continuation of the long Discourse in which he several Times said he had a good Mind to call upon Lord C for an Explanation in writing, with a View to its Publication here. He is very angry at the Letter & says Robertson is abusing Lord Cornwallis very freely—When he spoke of Robertson & Tryon he apologized to me for taking Liberties with my Friends."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Lord Cornwallis, who arrived on the 19th (q.v.), makes his appearance on the street "attended by Several Officers."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 138.

" Joseph Corré, pastry cook and confectioner, "has re-commenced making pastry," etc. at 17 Hanover Square. "Dinners or suppers dressed abroad; he likewise will provide and furnish entertainments. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., N 26, 1781.

Dec. 2 "America, were she to be independant of Great Britain," says a London writer, "cannot be free, France has claims on her which interest as well as ambition will induce them to think can only be liquidated by a footing on the continent, and the old fable of the Horse calling Man to his assistance against the Stag will once more be verified. America must be blind and infatuated indeed, if they do not foresee these consequences from the French connection."—Royal Gaz., Mr 9, 1782.

4 A letter from New York states: "Lord Cornwallis's disaster has indeed deranged our affairs much; but this was done by the French. The rebellion is still languid, and the King's friends in America are as numerous as ever, if not more so. I hope that alliances will be formed in Europe to take the French off, in which case the rebellion must infallibly sink."—London Chron., F 12–14, 1782. Dec. 4

5 A New Yorker writes: "We are under some apprehensions here for the safety of the garrison of Charlestown, South Carolina. If that should meet with the same fate as York Town, in Virginia, America, it is to be feared, will be totally lost to Great Britain; and if that be the case, it will be of no advantage to the Americans; the French are only making a cat's paw of these poor deluded people, to gratify their own thirst for dominion. . . . The French are already shewing them what they may hereafter expect; for in whatever place the French army is, the colours of that nation only fly on the ramparts: If a fortress is summoned to surrender, it is always in the name of the King of France; and when taken, French colours are immediately hoisted."—London Chron., Ja 29–31, 1782.

8 "Lord Cornwallis imbarks this Day in the Robust Man of War—The Fleet is to sail to morrow."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. It did not actually sail until the 15th, and also carried Benedict Arnold, to whom Chief-Justice Smith gave "Notes for Answers to Questions that may be put to him—gave a Hint to Gen[l] Tryon to get him examined by the King & in Parlim[t]—He will concur with Lord Cornwallis in all Measures of Vigor—He will oppose him in the Evacuation of N Y—in a War of Posts & in his Attachm[t] to the Military Governm[t]—He will concur with S[r] Clinton in the Call for Reinforcements & the Retention of N York and the Practicability of restoring the Kings Interest in this Country. He will censure his want of Enterprize. I hope his Representations will be useful."—Ibid. Von Krafft in his journal states erroneously that Cornwallis departed on the 10th, also some ships with inhabitants of New York ("who probably expected nothing good here in America"), and also the Hessian invalids.—Von Krafft's Jour., 155.

10 This date is found on one of Archibald Robertson's drawings (see Jl 12, 1776), entitled "View of the North River from the Beach near Lispenards Brewhouse·10th Dec[r] 1781."

12 Sir James Lowther moves in the house of commons that resolutions be passed purporting: "That it is the opinion of this House, that the war carried on in the colonies and plantations of North America has proved ineffectual either to the protection of his Majesty's loyal subjects in the said colonies, or for defeating the dangerous designs of our enemies," and "That it is the opinion of this House, that under the present circumstances of the country, all further attempts to reduce the revolted colonies to obedience are contrary to the true interests of this kingdom, as tending to weaken its efforts against its ancient and powerful enemies."

The motion was seconded by Mr. Powys, who "most sincerely believed, that it was the only means left to us, in our present situation, by which we could extricate ourselves from our difficulties, and retrieve our rank in Europe. . . . he could not conceive how it came to pass, that now, . . . when repeated disasters and calamities had proved that the reduction of America, by force, was impracticable, there could be found a set of honest, independent gentlemen, who could persevere in supporting those measures, by which the empire had been dismembered and destroyed." He compared the state of the British government to the description, given by Gibbon, of the government of Rome just before its fall.

In the debate that followed, Lord North objected to the resolutions for the following reasons: the wording was too "general and loose;" the second resolution would prevent Great Britain from retaining "any posts in the colonies;" it prohibited "government from acting even against the armed ships and the privateers of America;" the immediate effect would be that "the arrogance of the Americans would rise in proportion as we should sink into despair."

Sir Fletcher Norton refuted Lord North's arguments and defended the resolutions on the grounds that the ministers could no longer be trusted and that the people ought to have a "specific declaration of the House, that this mad and impolitic war should be no longer proceeded in."

Mr. Welbore Ellis declared that if the house adopted the resolutions it would be guilty of "political suicide," and that it was necessary to have posts in America for the prosecution of war against France and Holland.

Mr. John Townsend "reprobated, in most severe terms, the 1781 Dec. 12 total misconduct, ignorance, and mad obstinacy of his Majesty's ministers," and ascribed "the disgraces that had attended his Majesty's arms" to the weakness of the administration. He advocated the adoption of the resolutions as "the only practicable means of putting an end to the accursed war."

Sir Edward Deering expressed his entire confidence in the present ministers. He would not impute the war to them, but dated it from the repeal of the Stamp Act.

Viscount Maitland compared Britain's former power and glory to her present decay and attributed her fall to the present ministers. In an impassioned appeal he urged the House "to do that at last which they ought to have done at first, to hold a bold, constitutional language to those ministers, and tell them, Thus far you have gone with our tame acquiescence, but do not dare to provoke us farther: if you reject our advice, you may feel our vengeance."

Mr. Calvert argued against the motions because he thought they "would at once not only prove her [Great Britain's] incapacity to reduce her rebellious colonies to obedience, but be an act of political despair, that could not fail to increase the ardour of her natural foes and lend a spirit to their hostile enterprizes against her."

Gen. Burgoyne declared that the impracticability of the war was sufficient justification for the present motions, and that he now thought the principle of it was wrong. He said: "I am convinced, upon comparing the conduct of ministers, as time has developed their system, that the American war was but part of a general design levelled against the constitution of this country, and the general rights of mankind. I have further demonstration, the conviction of a whole people. Passion and prejudice and interest may operate suddenly and partially; but when we see one principle pervading the whole continent, and daring, through difficulty and death, for a course of years, it must be a strong vanity and presumption in our own minds to suppose they are not right. It is reason, and the finger of God alone, that implants the same sentiment in three millions of people."

Mr. Burke "spoke with great force in favour of the motions as necessary to be adopted for the satisfaction of parliament and of the people; and adverted to the relaxed and shameless system of government throughout every part of our dominions."

Lord George Germain objected to the motions because they meant "a total relinquishment of the American war, which he conceived to be a project equally weak, impracticable, and dangerous," and declared that if they were passed, he would resign. He maintained "that the moment the House acknowledged the independence of America the British Empire was ruined."

Sir John Wrottesley "advised the House to come to no resolution on the subject till Lord Cornwallis returned to represent the real state of the country, and give them some authentic information to the practicability of the war."

Mr. Turner "spoke in favour of the motion, and said, he had always wished the Americans success, and was pleased when he heard of Lord Cornwallis's defeat and capture as he hoped it would put an end to our further persecuting our fellow subjects."

At two in the morning, Lowther's motions were lost by a vote of 220 to 179.—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XXII: 802–31.

19 Exhibitions of travelling menageries afforded diversion at this period. One is advertised on this day, to be seen at No. 20 Great George St.—Royal Gaz., D 19, 1781. Another made its appearance on May 12, 1789, at 28 Wall St., fronting the Coffee-House.—N. Y. Packet, My 14, 23, 1789.

22 Roger Morris, accused of disloyalty, is exonerated by the governour and council after a hearing.—Cal. Coun. Min., 507.

" "Ordered that the Rector and Mr Shaw wait on Doctor Mallett and Doctor Nooth to request the payment of the Ground Rent due to this Corporation for the Lotts at Vauxhall during the Time the House has been occupied as a Hospital for His Majestys Troops being upwards of Four years."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

26 The following advertisement appears: "The Managers beg leave to inform the Public, that the Theatre is now repairing, decorating, and airing, and they propose opening the House in the course of a few days, of which proper notice will be given.

"N. B. All Advertisements for this Season, will be printed in Mr. Rivington's Paper, and no other."—Royal Gaz., D 26, 1781. For the financial statement of the theatre in this and the preceding season, see Je 24, 1782.

Dec. 27 Washington writes from Philadelphia to the president of congress on the subject of naval prisoners. It appears that there are not enough naval prisoners in the hands of the Americans to exchange for those in British hands. He says, also: ". . . for above two years, we have had no reason to complain of the treatment of the Continental land prisoners in New York, neither have we been charged with any improper conduct towards those in our hands." He considers the sufferings of the American seamen, confined in the prison-ships (see Ag 3 and 21), as largely due to want of such American regulations, as would require "all Captains of private vessels to deliver over their prisoners to the Continental Commissioners upon certain conditions;" for then "the numbers taken and brought into the many ports of the United States would have amounted to a sufficiency to have exchanged those taken from us."—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), IX: 423–24. See, further, ibid., IX: 443–45; and Banks' David Sproat, 59, et seq. (embracing official correspondence through April, 1782, from the papers of the continental congress on the subject of the exchange of prisoners).

31 Congress passes an ordinance "for incorporating the subscribers to the Bank of North America."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (ed. by Hunt), XXI: 1186–90; Winsor, VII: 81, 235. See further, Ap 11, 1782. It was rechartered by Pennsylvania in 1783.—Winsor, op. cit.

1782

— During the British occupation of the city, there was completed, probably in this year, an elaborate survey of Manhattan Island, known as the "British Head Quarters Manuscript Map of New York & Environs," which shows in detail practically all the typographical features, including batteries and redoubts, of the island. It is reproduced and described in Pl. 50, Vol. I.

The four roads in the vicinity of the present Murray Hill which appear on this map are described in the 22d Ann. Rep. of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 152–53. In the same account, the history of this section of the city, including Kipsbury and Inclenberg, is reviewed. (In the description, on p. 363, Vol. I, the reference to "Landmark Map, Vol. II, Appendix," should read Vol. III, Appendix.). On this map, Ellis Island appears as "Oyster Island;" cf. O 19, 1776.

— In this year, also, John Hills completed his survey for the map of the lower part of Manhattan Island, which was presented to the common council by John Lozier, Esq. in ——, but which is now in bad condition, and has been placed for safe-keeping in the N. Y. H. S. It is reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1848), opp. p. 291, and in ibid. (1857), frontispiece; an engraved reduction of this map is in Emmet Coll., 10990. See also Mr 24, 1776.

— A diagram was drawn this year, showing the defensive works on the country estate of Nicholas Bayard, established as a line of defences on the outskirts of the city. A sketch made from this diagram, showing these works adjacent to the Bayard mansion, was published in the Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 611.

— A list was prepared (probably in 1782, or possibly 1783) of barrack houses in the garrison of New York, showing street, number of house, and by whom or how occupied. The following, "selected at random," are all that are printed in the condensed record in the work cited:

Broadway,	No. 3—"Commander-in-Chief's Secretary's Office."
"	No. 24—"Royal Artillery Hospital."
"	No. 82—"Mr. Cox of the Board of Refugees."
"	No. 87—"Mr. Bull, Clerk of the Church."
Great Dock Street,	No. 8—"Doctor Nooth."
Hanover Square,	No. 10—"Admiral Digby."
" "	No. 17—"his secretary's office."
Water Street,	Nos. 98, 127, 133, 164 and 165—"Commissary General's Stores."
" "	No. 25—"Jacob Hart, a refugee."
" "	No. 53—"Mr. Law, Captain of the Port."
" "	No. 203—"Mr. Lorentz, Hessian Paymaster."
Mill Street	—"seems to be devoted to stores and stables."
Wall Street,	No. 3—"Commandant's house."
" "	No. 7—"General Lossberg."
" "	No. 10—"Colonel Morse, Chief Engineer."

1782 — Wall Street No. 18—"Mr. Shoemaker, of Philadelphia."
" " No. 25—"public guard-house."
" " No. 48—"Commodore Affleck."
" " No. 62—"Mrs. Webster, refugee."
Bowery Lane, No. 1—"barracks for the 17th Dragoons."
" " No. 68—"a powder house."
Church Street, No. 10—"negro barracks."
Old Slip, Nos. 6, 7 and 8—"medicine stores."
Hunter's Quay and Burnet's Quay — "largely occupied by the Commissary General's Stores."
—From Rep. on Am. MSS. in the Royal Inst. of Gt. Brit., III: 305–6.

Jan. 1 "Our friends in New-York," says a London writer, "may safely stand their ground—Government here does not intend to give up the contest, and I am convinced they will send out all the force that can be spared from this country and Ireland, early in the spring; but the war will be conducted on a new system, and so confident am I, that this country will strain every nerve for the recovery of America, that I shall not think of any arrangements in my concerns, which some panic struck creatures might be induced to adopt after the Chesapeak affair" (Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown—see O 19, 1781).—Royal Gaz., Mr 6, 1782. Extracts to the same purport from two other London letters are printed in the same issue of the Gazette.

" James Robertson, having returned to New York (see Je 27, 1780), forms, with his brother Alexander, Nathaniel Mills, and John Hicks, the firm of Robertsons, Mills, and Hicks, for the publication of The Royal Am. Gaz. They continued as its publishers up to the last-known issue, that of July 31, 1783 (Vol. IX, No. 604).—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 489–90. See, further, Ag 5, 1783.

4 Some 30 Loyalists held captive at West Point break the "strong stone Rebel prison," garrisoned by McDougall with "about 600 rebel troops," and "upwards of twenty of those unhappy people are safe arrived in this city."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 14, 1782.

11 A long loaf of bread "made of sweet flour, of the first quality," must now weigh $2\frac{1}{4}$ pounds and sell for 14 coppers; while the round loaf, of inferior quality of merchantable flour, must weigh $2\frac{3}{4}$ pounds, and sell at the same price.—Royal Gaz., Ja 12, 1782. Cf. N 20, 1780. See also Van Tyne, The Loyalists, 250–51.

17 What was known as the "Garrison Assembly" opens for the season at Roubalet's Tavern (the present 115 Broadway), and continues once a fortnight. Officers of the army, navy, and public departments are requested to send the subscription price (two guineas) to Major Brigade Amiel, 37 Hanover Square.—Royal Gaz., Ja 16, 1782.

18 The queen's birthday is celebrated in New York. Chief-Justice Smith writes that he dined "at the Admirals with the Prince . . . and attended him to the General's Ball in the Evening . . . The Prince is lively & sensible."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Ja 19. See Jan. 18, 1777.

19 A series of subscription concerts begins on this day at Roubalet's Tavern (City Tavern, 115 Broadway).—Royal Gaz., Ja 16, 1782.

22 Gen. and Mrs. Arnold arrive at London.—London Chron., Ja 22–24, 1782.

" "We [the British] lose daily by Desertions. A Sarjeant & 10 more from Arnold's Dragoons last week,—A Cap^{t} & others of De Lanceys Refugees—Complaints of the Neglect of the Army—bad Quarters for want of Repairs—The Com^{r} in Chief often within 10 Days past at the Exercize of Fires, with his Aids de Camp."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

24 Cornwallis is back in London after an eventful voyage from New York. His countrymen appear to have forgotten the unfortunate circumstance at Yorktown (see O 19, 1781). "In his way to town, [he] was complimented by the Mayor and corporation of Exeter, with the freedom of that City; and so pleased were the People with his arrival, that he was carried from the London Inn to Guildhall on mens shoulders, accompanied by an incredible number of spectators."—Royal Gaz., Ap 24, 1782.

30 The publication of Abbé Raynal's The Revolution of America is advertised. "The author of this publication," it is stated, "displays such a depth of observation, such a political penetration, and such an animated zeal in the cause of freedom as are rarely to be found. Here liberty appears in the most captivating garb, and philosophy condescends to speak in the language of common sense, and though the author discovers an ardent partiality to America, he appears never to be regardless of candour equity and reason. Vide the Reviewers. Jan. 30

"This book was burned by the Hangman, and the Author obliged to fly from Paris for protection from the civil power."—Royal Gaz., Ja 30, 1782.

Philip Kissick, "intending for England," offers all his property for sale as well as his stock of liquors, groceries, etc.—Rivington's Royal Gaz., F 3, 1782. Kissick was a tavern-keeper as well as a "vintner," and was for several years proprietor of the tavern later famous as Montagne's. See Ap 5, 1754. Feb. 3

Von Krafft records his being "on field picket in the so-called Red house on the North River, behind St. Paul's church."—Von Krafft's Jour., 157. "

The public is informed that "The Rev. Mr. Sayre having been solicited to exhibit a Course of Electrical Experiments in this city, presents his respects to the Gentlemen of the Navy and Army, . . . and begs leave to inform them, that having joined forces with Mr. Thomas Medenhall . . . and having been politely encouraged by his Excellency Lieutenant General Robertson, Governor of this Province, and by Brigadier General Birch, Commandant of this City, in the accommodation of a convenient and capacious apartment in the City Hall, . . . he, assisted by Mr. Mendenhall, proposes to give a Course of Lectures on Electricity. 9

"The first Lecture will be on Thursday next [Feb. 14], to begin precisely at Eleven o'Clock in the forenoon, in the centre room of the City Hall.

"Ladies and Gentlemen will be pleased to observe, that there are two stairways leading to the room, at each of which attendance will be given for the admission of the company; the most eligible will probably be that next the Commandant's House; as there will be less interruption from the passage to the Guard Room." Each lecture to be repeated in the evening of the day when it occurs; admission, one dollar.—Royal Gaz., F 9, 1782. An analysis of the first lecture was published in ibid., F 13, 1782. The second lecture was advertised to be given Feb. 23, after postponement on account of moisture in the air, which, it was stated would prevent the operation of the experiments "with the wished for beauty."—Ibid., F 20, 23, 1782. The fourth exhibition was advertised for March 2.—Ibid., Mr 2, 1782.

Brig.-Gen. Birch establishes regulations "for the Security of the Ships and Vessels lying at the different Wharfs on the East and North Rivers." The four wardens of the port are assigned to four sections of the water-front on the East River, one to superintend a section "From the Ship Yards to the Crane," one "From the Crane to the Fly Market," one "From the Fly Market to the Old Slip," and one "From the Old Slip to Whitehall." They are to appoint patrols in their respective districts, whose duties, briefly stated, will be to guard against the danger of fire, to arrest persons on the wharves after dark who cannot give a satisfactory account of themselves, and to report any irregularities that happen during the night.—Royal Gaz., Mr 13, 1782. 11

The first news arrives from England since Oct. 29 last, and the content of the king's speech at the opening of parliament, on Nov. 27, 1781, is made public. The portion relating to the American colonies reads thus: "No endeavours have been wanting on my part to extinguish that spirit of rebellion which our enemies have found means to foment and maintain in the Colonies, and to restore to my deluded subjects in America, that happy and prosperous condition which they formerly derived, from a due obedience to the laws; but the late misfortune in that quarter [the surrender of Cornwallis—see O 19, 1781] calls loudly for your firm concurrence and assistance to frustrate the designs of our enemies, equally prejudicial to the real interests of America, and to those of Great-Britain. . . . 12

"In the prosecution of this great and important contest in which we are engaged, I retain a firm confidence in the protection of Divine Providence, and a perfect conviction of the justice of my cause; and I have no doubt but that by the concurrence and support of my Parliament, by the valour of my fleets and armies, and by a vigorous, animated and united exertion of the faculties and resources of my people, I shall be enabled to restore the blessings of a safe and honourable peace to all my dominions."—Royal Gaz., F 13, 1782.

The king's speech pleases, says Smith, "but not so much as one would imagine—This is Proof of the extreme Dejection into which the Minds of the Loyalists have been plunged—They want 1782 Feb. 12 strong Cordials—Confident Expressions great Promises & hoped to have heard of formidable Alliances.

"There are few or no private Letters. Not a Packet for even the Gov[r]—I believe the General & Admiral have ungrateful Intimations. Nothing transpires from them—But the Papers shew that L[d] Denbigh in the upper & Lord G G[ermaine] in the lower House charge all the Disasters upon the Commanders & talk of Trials.—Gen[l] R[obertson] suspects he has Letters & that they are withheld till warrants are drawn, Locke takes it that Clinton is recalled and confesses to me that he wishes for the Devolution [sic], sensible as he is of his own Insufficiency that he may begin to get the army in order which is now utterly neglected.

"Not the least Intimation of a Change in the Ministry. The Opposition have not attempted even a Riot among the Pot wallopers of the turbulent City of Westminster—a motion to amend the Addresses, in both Houses but not a word directly of yielding to the Independence of America."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII., under F 13.

15 At some time between Feb. 15 and May 24, of this year, Samuel Horner became partner of William Lewis, forming the firm of Lewis and Horner, for publishing The New York Mercury; or, General Advertiser (see S 3, 1779); but Horner retired in July or August, and Lewis again became the sole publisher.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 459. See, further, Ag 15, 1783.

20 Smith writes of a meeting "at Head Quarters" to which he was summoned. Mayor Mathews and Col. Beverly Robinson "had reported Houses & Stores for which the Proprietors demanded Rent. The Sum amounted to £12000—Elliot was for the Paym[t] Gen[l] R[obertson] took alarm at the Expence & set his Face ag[t] the Principle as drawing after it Demands of £200,000. The Commander in Chief saw a Choice of Difficulties—I advised to give up as many of the Houses as possible—State the Matter to the Gov[r] as to the back Rents & make advancements as Prudence & the Condition of the Sufferers might require pro Bono publico to prevent evil Reports and a bad Spirit. . . .

"It came out that the giving up of 12 Houses might still Clamours and 'tis agreed that the Command[r] report the whole Stock of Property and its condition before any further Measures be taken as to the back Rents." He adds: "I believe the King's Interest suffers by too great Partialities to the army. Why so great a Collection of Soldiers & Officers in Town all winter when many of them might be distributed in the Eastern Parts of Long Island!" —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Rivington feels compelled to make answer to "Mr. F. H.," who, in the Penn. Packet of Feb. 9, declares "three and twenty lies" in one issue of the Royal Gazette to be "a thing not unlikely." He says: "I am far from denying that my Gazette does sometimes contain articles of intelligence which afterwards appear to be not well founded. But this is a misfortune incident to all such publications, in which our readers expect to find, not only the facts but the reports of the day. But I defy you and all your host of rebel Typographers, to point out a single instance of my ever publishing, as a serious fact, what I knew to be false at the time, as you have in the instance above quoted; and as they have all, in innumerable instances, to serve the wicked designs of a traitorous faction.

"I likewise hereby offer and engage, that for every falsehood you will point out in the Royal Gazette since the commencement of the rebellion, to produce at least a dozen in any of the rebel newspapers published in the same period; or forfeit all that stock in trade which you so much envy me for, and which you have had the stock of impudence to advertise for sale.

"Till this challenge is accepted, you ought to hold your peace; but if you will not mend your manners, I shall think myself perfectly excuseable hereafter if I handle you and your abettors without mittens."—Royal Gaz., F 20, 1782.

" Robert Smith advertises his villa and farm "Ruremont," for sale. It is described as "delightful and elegantly situated . . . adjoining the East River. . . . within four miles and three quarters of the city, . . . on which is an extraordinary good dwelling house."—Royal Gaz., F 20, 1782. It lay between 54th and 57th Sts. (in the plan of the modern city), and was later known as the Thos. Buchanan property.

22 Gen. Conway introduces a motion in Parliament to discontinue the war. It is lost by one vote. On Feb. 27, he proposed a similar resolution, which was passed by a vote of 234 to 215.—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XXII: 1028–85; Winsor, VII: 95, 96.

Feb. 24 Benjamin Thompson, of Massachusetts, who had been alienated on account of Royalist sympathies and had gone abroad, returned in this month to New York and raised a troop which he called the "King's American Dragoons." Of this he was commissioned colonel on Feb. 24. Returning to Europe after the war, he gained fame as a scientist and statesman, and received the honorary title of Count Rumford. He is ranked as one of the earliest American scientists of note. There is a statue of him in Munich; and an oil painting of him at Harvard University, where he established by will a professorship in physics and mathematics as applied to the useful arts.—Ellis, Memoir of Sir Benjamin Thompson, Count Rumford (1871); Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 197. A stipple portrait of him was published in the European Mag., March 1, 1797. A copy of this (reversed) was drawn and engraved by the American engraver E. C. Trenchard and published by D. West, Boston. A portrait of him by Gainesborough, bequeathed by the late E. C. Converse to Harvard Univ., was produced in the N. Y. Times (Rotogravure Sec.), Oct. 26, 1924.

26 Robert R. Livingston, secretary of foreign affairs, writes from Philadelphia to Lafayette regarding conditions in the United States. He refers to the perfectly defenceless condition of New York; the exchange of Gen. Burgoyne; the negotiation of an exchange of Lord Cornwallis for Mr. Laurens, etc.—From the original letter, sold by Henkels, Phila. (item No. 321), Oct. 22, 1919.

Mar. — Col. Matthias Ogden, of the First Regiment, New Jersey Line, presents to Gen. Washington a plan for capturing Prince William Henry and Admiral Digby who are now in New York and bringing them within the patriot lines. The prince and the admiral are living in Hanover Sq. Their quarters, as explained by Col. Ogden in his letter to Washington, are guarded by "two sentinels . . . quartered in Lord Stirling's old quarters in Broad Street. . . . The main guard, consisting of a captain and forty men is posted at the City Hall—a sergeant and twelve at the head of the old slip, a sergeant and twelve opposite the coffee-house" The plan is to make a night raid across the Hudson river from New Jersey, with a company of forty men in four whale-boats and carry away the prisoners before an alarm can be made to rescue them.—Fitzgerald, Life and Times of William IV, I: 11–15, citing the letter of Col. Ogden; also Watkins, Life and Times of William the Fourth, 66–70. For Washington's answer, see Mr 28. See also Hist. Mag., 2d ser., V: 131.

1 An item of London news reads: "It is said passports are sent over to Amsterdam for Mr. John Adams, the only person in Europe vested with power to negociate from the American Congress, and that he is expected in London next week, for the purpose of opening a treaty."—Penn. Packet, My 7, 1782.

" Sir Henry Clinton complains to Smith of "Enemies here—who propagate that he is censured in England for the last Campaign . . . He raves—calls Denbigh a Fool—Germain a Villain . . . Speaks with Contempt of the Ministry—Takes Care to let me know that he is not recalled & that he will not leave the Country in its present condition voluntarily."—Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Von Krafft is on "working command . . . to dig a canal behind the Brew House on the North River and make the necessary ramparts." He records in his journal: "This made us apprehend that the General-in-Chief expected nothing good."—Von Krafft's Jour., 158.

2 A sloop which left New York on this day brought intelligence to Greenock that "there were no King's ships lying there [New York], but the Rotterdam and two or three frigates. The troops were all collected, every place was strongly fortified, and a cut made across York Island, as also Long Island, at the narrowest spot. The French had no ships at Rhode Island, but a strong fleet from the Southward and a number of troops were daily expected there; and after their arrival, it was imagined that Gen. Washington would make an attack on New York. The troops were in high spirits and had plenty of provisions."—London Chron., Ap 13–16, 1782.

4 "The Americans," says a satirical London writer, "advance rapidly to independence. At the beginning of the contest they were independent of principle, independent of credit, and independent of all gratitude to the mother country, for having raised them into political importance, and protected them from the encroachment of their enemies. Since which time thousands have been independent of cash, clothing, law, liberty, domestic comfort, and every social enjoyment that can be valuable to a reasonable creature. Besides 1782 Mar. 4 which, by the exertions of this country, they are entirely independent of New-York and Charlestown; and, by the friendship of France, they are not only independent of Rhode-Island, but are shortly likely to be so with respect to Virginia. These blessings, added to the great advantages they have derived from the destruction of their towns and shipping, the loss of many thousands of lives, the neglect of agriculture, and the ruin of trade, must of course enable them in time, when the few remaining provinces are wrested from them by their good ally, to become a great, powerful and independent people."—Royal Gaz., My 1, 1782.

" The garrison at New York, fearing an attack by Gen. Washington, is "busily employed in fortifying the island, and making every preparation to resist the enemy." Trade is "almost at a stand, there being no commercial intercourse whatever between the garrison and the Americans." Washington is in the Jerseys with about 11,000 men.—From N. Y. news in London Chron., Ap 16–18, 1782.

" The "beautiful and delightful Villa, situate on the Bowery Road, about two miles and a half from this city, formerly possessed by William Burton, Esquire," is advertised for sale. The property includes "about twenty-two acres of luxuriant meadow and arable land."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 4, 1782.

" "To be Let, The Delightful Seat of Belvoir, Commonly called the White Conduit House, with garden, stable, and sundry buildings thereto belonging, near the General Hospital, a small mile from the city. Apply to Mr. Howard, King-street. Possession may be had immediately."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 4, 1782. See Mr 24, 1777.

8 In the house of commons, Lord John Cavendish moves the following resolutions:

"That it appears to this house, that since the year 1775, upwards of one hundred millions of money have been expended, on the army and navy, in a fruitless war.

"That it appears to this house, that during the above period, we have lost the thirteen colonies of America, which anciently belonged to the crown of Great-Britain . . .

"That it appears to this house, that Great-Britain is at present engaged in an expensive war with America, France, Spain, and Holland, without a single ally.

"That it appears to this house, that the chief cause of all these misfortunes, has been the want of foresight and ability in his majesty's ministers." After a long debate the resolutions are passed by a majority of 10. In consideration of these resolutions, Sir John Rous, on March 15, proposed that the commons resolve that "the house could have no farther confidence in the ministers, who had the direction of public affairs." This was lost by a majority of 9. On March 20, Rous's motion was about to be brought up again, when Lord North assured the house "that the present administration was no more, and that his majesty had come to a full determination of changing his ministers." The house adjourned on this day and during the recess a new administration was formed under the Marquis of Rockingham.—Ann. Reg. (1782), 173–77; Parl. Hist. of Eng., XXII: 1114–50, 1170–1211, 1214–32. See Mr 27.

" "Working in the Fortifications all this Week."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 145.

11 "When I was with Sir Henry yesterday morning he told me Lord Cornwallis was exchanged with the Consent of Congress before he went Home . . . I observed . . . that the Rebels deny that Lord Cornwallis is exchanged—He replied they don't chuse to have it known by the Multitude."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Clinton reports to me a letter from Lord George Germain "forbidding Discrimination between American & European Loyalists on Complaints from the Board of Associated Loyalists of N Y."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Another country seat (see Mr 4) is offered for sale. This is "Bellmont." It is described as "Three miles and a half from this city, adjoining the high road to King's Bridge, containing 25 acres of land, in good order for either the plough or scythe, with a choice selection of bearing fruit trees. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Mr 11, 1782.

13 "When the Engineer had displayed [in the council of general officers] his map of New York Island, and had described the line he intended to throw up for the Defense of the Town—The Commander in Chief asked the opinion of the General officers whether they thought it would be right to close the line & have a close work in a proper part of it in order to prevent the enemy from getting Possession of the Town by a Coup de Main & destroying our stores & magazines, or leave everything open as it is & trust to the Decision of a Battle. . . .

Mar. "General Robertson said that whenever we could not meet the Enemy in the Field & fight them this Plan must fail; he therefore 13 could not see the use of a closed work or closing the line—but would give his advice against it . . .

"All the General officers, however, except General Robertson, agreed to the Propriety of having a closed work & closing the line, to prevent the sweep of a Coup de Main, for the Reasons specified by the Commander in Chief."—From "Memorandum of the Debates in Council," among Sir Henry Clinton papers, in possession of W. H. Bixby, Esq., of St. Louis, Mo.

14 The attorney-general introduces in the house of commons a bill "to enable his Majesty to conclude a Peace, or Truce, with the revolted Colonies in North America."—London Chron., Mr 14–16, 1782. This was passed on June 19 (q.v.).

16 It is reported that "all Hands . . . will soon be ordered to work on the Fortifications."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 145.

" The "ancient and favourite Irish game of Common" is advertised to be played, on March 18, "for a Supper, etc." The "Sons of St. Patrick" are invited to participate, and requested "to leave their names at the Bar of the Royal Punch House, near the Tea Water Pump." The game is to be played "at the Jew's burying ground."—Royal Gaz., Mr 16, 1782. See also Ap 1.

17 The city militia is ordered to join working parties at Bunker Hill every morning at 6 o'clock. The original order, signed by Isaac Low, Lt. Col. of 3d Battalion, is preserved with the Bancker Papers, in N. Y. P. L.

18 "The Mayor's Battalion goes to work on the Fortifications."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 145.

21 The governour's council is convened to consider the expediency of reviving civil government in the province. The members advise against it, Chief-Justice Smith dissenting. The minute reads as follows: "As the direct Object of all military Operations ag^t the Rebellion is the Restoration of the King's Government there can be no Doubt of the General Expediency of reviving the Civil Authority as soon as a Legislature can be convened to frame Laws suited to the present Condition of the Colony and disposed to promote the Success of his Majesty's Arms.

"But since the calling of an Assembly could avail to none of the Ends to be expected from their Councils Example & Assistance if it should be his Majesty's Pleasure to remove his Forces now here and it remained unknown (to them at least) that any authentic Intimations of the National Councils for the Operations of the Year have as yet been received they therefore unanimously advised his Excellency to defer the Measure to a more eligible Juncture or until there be some further Communication of his Royal Intentions and Commands."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII; Cal. Coun. Min., 507.

25 In a letter to a correspondent in London, a New Yorker says: "General Clinton has lately had a visit from Ethan Allen, the Chief of the Vermont Association, offering to become the allies of Great Britain under certain circumstances. He had every attention paid him by our Commander; but unluckily, on his return, he and his party, except one or two, fell into the hands of the rebels, who lodged them in gaol at Albany, and sent an account to General Washington of the circumstance; mean while the Vermontese came in a large body, who were opposed by the rebels and Albany militia, some of which, however, joining the Vermontese, a bloody action ensued, in which many fell, but the latter were complete victors, and rescued their chief, Ethan Allen, who has sent fresh assurances to General Clinton of the most firm resolutions to espouse the British cause, with above 7000 fine troops."—London Chron., My 16–18, 1782. Regarding Allen's pretended friendship with the British, see D 16, 1780.

" Brig.-Gen. Samuel Birch, the commandant of New York, prohibits the practice of throwing dirt into the streets. His proclamation states that "the Indulgence heretofore granted to the Inhabitants of laying in the Streets, the Dirt collected in their Houses and Yards, in Order that the same might be removed by the Carts employed for that Purpose, has been productive of many bad Consequences." They are now required to "collect the same in some convenient Place in their Yards or Cellars, ready to be thrown into the said carts when called on. . . ."—Royal Gaz., Mr 27, 1782; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 722.

27 The Rockingham ministry takes office (see Mr 8). It formed on the following conditions: 1. Peace with the Americans, and the acknowledgment of their independence not to be a bar to the at-

1782 tainment of that object;—2. A substantial reform in the several
Mar. branches of the civil list expenditure. . . .;—3. The diminution
27 of the influence of the crown."—Ann. Reg. (1782), 173–77; Royal Gaz., My 8, 1782.

28 From his headquarters at Morristown, Washington issues the following instructions to Col. Matthias Ogden: "The spirit of enterprise, so conspicuous in your plan [see March] for surprising in their quarters, and bringing off the Prince William Henry and Admiral Digby, merits applause; and you have my authority to make the attempt, in any manner, and at such a time, as your own judgment shall direct. I am fully persuaded, that it is unnecessary to caution you against offering insult or indignity to the persons of the Prince and Admiral, should you be so fortunate as to capture them; but it may not be amiss to press the propriety of a proper line of conduct upon the party you command.

"In case of success, you will, as soon as you get them to a place of safety, treat them with all possible respect; but you are to delay no time in conveying them to Congress, and reporting your proceedings with a copy of these orders. Take care not to touch upon the ground, which is agreed to be neutral, namely, from Newark to Rahway and four miles back."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IX: 466–67. The original of this letter was sold at The Anderson Galleries, May 6, 1920, with the library of the late Chas. L. F. Robinson, of Hartford. The catalogue states that, on the verso of the document, is a signed statement by Robert Gilmor that he secured it from Louis McLane, who was Minister at the Court of Great Britain, and who showed it to King William IV (the former Prince), who remarked: "I am obliged to General Washington for his humanity, but I'm damn'd glad I did not give him an opportunity of exercising it towards me."

On April 28, Washington wrote that he had intelligence that the "centries at the doors of Sir Henry Clinton's quarters were doubled at eight o'clock every night, from the apprehension of an attempt to surprise him in them. If this be true, it is more than probable the same precaution extends to other personages in the city of New York—a circumstance I thought it proper for you to be advertized of."—Ibid., IX: 467 (footnote); Hist. Mag., 2d ser., V: 131. Cf. Irving, Life of Washington, IV: 361–63, who adds: "These precautions very probably disconcerted the project of Colonel Ogden, of which we find no other traces."

" By the March packet from Falmouth, information is brought "that no farther Offensive War is to be carried on in this Country." —Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 148.

30 "Various Reports of a Peace, and Some believe it."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 148.

Apr. In this month, Washington left Philadelphia and rejoined the — army, establishing his headquarters at Newburgh.—Winsor, VI: 744.

1 "The presence of a great personage at the last game of Common" (see Mr 16) induces "a number of Gentlemen" to advertise a second game to take place on this day "for a genteel supper." Those who intend to participate are requested to leave their names "at the Royal Punch House, Sign of King George IIId. near the Tea water Pump (where Commons are provided)." The game is to be played, as before, "at the Jew's burying ground."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 1, 1782.

"A good new House, situated in Chatham-Street, No. 25, next the Tea Water Pump, known by the name of the Old Punch House," was advertised later in the year to be sold at private sale.—Royal Gaz., Ag 28, 1782.

3 Admiral Digby writes to Gov. Robertson: "There are already above one Thousand Men out in Privateers, and four more ready, to man which will take above 200 men. I must therefore beg your Excellency will withhold granting any more Commissions till the return of some of the large Privateers whose cruizes are expired, as there are two frigates now in the port that cannot be sent to sea for want of men. . . . I must beg leave to take this opportunity of informing your Excellency that unless they [the privateers] are kept within bounds, it will be impossible to carry on the King's service." Robertson laid this letter before the Chamber of Commerce, and in its answer the Chamber praised the work of the privateers and declared that "however difficult it may be to carry on the King's Service, unless Privateers are kept within bounds, it will be found much more so if these bounds be reduced to too narrow a compass. . . .

"If . . . there were Ten Thousand men instead of only One Thousand in Privateers from this Port, it were far less an Evil considered in the most unfavorable light, even supposing not one of them could ever be got to enter on Board the King's Ships, than to have them in Privateers acting against us, which would certainly be the alternative. . . . Apr. 3

"The late unfortunate disasters, the few arrivals, and the peculiar dulness of Trade, all conspire to render the want of Seamen greater than usual; but when it is considered how many Vessels have been purchased and manned for the Public Service, besides the King's Ships of various denominations, and the great number of Seamen which this Port has constantly furnished, We rather wonder whence they could be collected than that no more have offered, and in this important View we are confident this Port can be exceeded by none upon this Continent, and perhaps is not far below the second in Great Britain."—Col. Recs. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, 280–83.

Notice is given of the desertion of a negro lad from "the black 9
Company of Labourers in the service of the Royal Artillery." Information is to be given to "the Office of Ordnance, opposite St. Paul's."—Royal Gaz., Ap 10, 1782.

The state legislature passes "An Act to prevent the establish- 11
ment of any bank within this State, other than the Bank of North America, and for incorporating the same within this State."—Laws of N. Y. (1782), chap. 35. On May 26, 1781, congress approved Robert Morris's plan to establish a national bank, and the Bank of North America was incorporated Dec. 31, 1781 (q.v.).

Admiral Rodney defeats the French fleet under De Grasse at 12
Dominique in the West Indies.—Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 351. A letter from Rodney describing the engagement appears in the Royal Gaz., My 15, 1782.

Gen. Samuel Birch, the commandant, grants an increase in " wharfage rates to owners whose wharfs are in good condition—Royal Gaz., Ap 20, 1782; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 722–23

An act of the state of New York is passed to prevent more 13 effectually illicit trade with the enemy. It provides that "all Goods, Wares and Merchandises, other than such as are herein after excepted, which shall have been brought from any Place within the Possession of the Enemy, and which shall, after the first Day of May next, be brought into any Part of this State, not in the Possession of the Enemy, shall be considered as contraband Goods, and be liable to Seizure and Condemnation."—Laws of N. Y., 5th sess., chap. 39. This law was renewed by an act of July 22, 1782.—Ibid., 6th sess., chap. 7. An act to limit these acts was passed March 24, 1783.—Ibid., 6th sess., chap. 44.

The state legislature passes a law permitting tenants of forfeited 14 estates to pay half of their rent in certain certificates, and staying the sale of forfeited lands in the southern district.—Laws of N. Y., 5th sess., chap. 45 (printed by Holt, 1782).

"Yesterday was brought to this city, and safely lodged in the 17
Provost, Sir James Jay, one of the rebel senate of New-York. . . . We hear that among other papers of a mischievous tendency found upon him, there was one from George Clinton, the titular Rebel Governor, authorising him to procure a quantity of specie from this City or Long-Island. 'Tis clear from hence, that Bob Morris's Bank Notes will not do, since the supporters of the rebellion are so anxious to get the Shiners."—Royal Gaz., Ap 17, 1782.

John Adams secures recognition by Holland as minister of the 19
United States.—Winsor, VII: 133. See S 27, 1779.

Prince William Henry is elected to the Order of the Knights of " the Garter. While in New York he received the insignia of the order.—Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire, by Nicholas Harris Nicolas (London), II: lxxiii.

"Ord[d] That the Fence round Saint Pauls burial Ground be 21 compleated in the manner it has been begun [see My 14, 1781]." —Trin. Min. (MS.). See My 27, 1784.

Lord Dunmore visits New York and tells Wm. Smith of his 22 ambition to have "the Command of all the Provincials with such as he can collect & Liberty to raise several Corps of Blacks upon the Promise of Freedom." He wants "to be taken Care of in Virginia 3 months and then desires no further Assistance from the Regulars . . . He is very open in Censures ag[t] L[d] Cornwallis—both as a Statesman & a Soldier—The Police of Charlestown infamous—The Rebel Army Cloathed from it—Rum Wine &c &c—Vessels pass to them unsearched."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

A "Refugee Concert," is advertised to be held at the theatre in 24
John St.—Royal Gaz., Ap 24, 1782.

1782 Apr. 26 On application of Alexander Hamilton, who is not ready to take examination for admission to the bar on account of his service in the army, the supreme court, sitting at Albany, suspends in his favour until the October term the court rule which requires a three-years' clerkship, among other things, before admission.—Min. Supreme Court of Judicature (MS.), 1781–1783, p. 183 (in county clerk's office, Manhattan).

27 Sir Henry Clinton is removed as commander-in-chief of the British forces. The news comes with the arrival in New York of the "Cartaret." "A fortunate Event," says Smith.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

30 The city vestry submits to Gen. Robertson an account of the "receipt and disbursement of all money raised for the support of the Alms-house, other charitable purposes, and the exigencies of the city of New York," from Nov. 1, 1777 to this date. The receipts amount to £63,419:36 and the expenditures to £61,063 : 12 : 11. The receipts were derived from "Rents of Houses, the property of Persons out of the Lines," "Licenses to Tavern-keepers and Retailors of Liquor," "Brooklyne Ferry Rents," "Lotteries," and "Fines and Forfeitures." The latter include the salaries of certain city officers, "cash paid for repairs of buildings, ferries, pumps, lamps, fire engines, &c," "cash paid for cleansing, paving and repairing the streets, including the first general cleansing of the city," "cash paid different charities, itinerant distressed objects, and passage money for shipping off some of them," and "cash paid for repairing and cleaning the arms of the militia." At the request of Gen. Robertson, three well-known citizens certified to the correctness of the report on May 27.—Royal Gaz., Je 1, 1782; Henry B. Dawson's report on the city finances during the Revolution, printed in Proc. Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 219–21. The vestry's second report was made on April 14, 1783 (q.v.). For an account of the vestry and its powers, see D 27, 1777.

May 1 "Orders this Day for no farther Hostilities at any of our Ports, and the Refugees not to go out any more without orders."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 148.

" Gen. Robertson occupies the Dr. James Beekman country-seat, on East River, near 52d St. He remained there until April 16, 1783 (q.v.).—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 554.

2 It is reported that British cruisers "will be called in very soon."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 148.

3 It is reported in New York "that General Washington has issued orders for a Cessation of Hostilities also."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 149.

4 Gov. Robertson informs his council that, as he is now commander-in-chief, he is able by his own authority to restore civil government in the province of New York, but that he desires their opinion before taking this measure. The council resolves, that no good interest to the king or happiness of the people can arise from the restoration of civil government at this time and under the present circumstances.—Stevens's Cat. Index of MSS., 1763–1783, in Library of Congress, citing the original record in the Pub. Rec. Office, London, Vol. 297, p. 335; Cal. Coun. Min., 507.

5 "Sir Guy Carleton, K. B., Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Forces in North America, and his Suite," land at Whitehall. There is a discharge of cannon from Fort George to announce his arrival. He is received "by a Party of Horse and Foot, the Gentlemen of the Army, most of the respectable Inhabitants of the City, and a numerous concourse of People."—N. Y. Merc., My 6, 1782; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII; Winsor, VI: 745; VIII: 137. He is to succeed Sir Henry Clinton in the command of the British army.—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 149. "Having been also appointed in conjunction with admiral Digby a commissioner to negotiate a peace, he lost no time in conveying to General Washington copies of the votes of the British Parliament, and of a bill which had been introduced on the part of administration, authorizing his majesty to conclude a peace or truce with those who were still denominated the revolted colonies."—Life of Geo. Washington, by John Marshall, IV: 569. At the same time, the fortifications at New York were altered and improved under his direction.—See descrip. of Pl. 50, Vol. I.

8 A lottery for the poor is announced to be held on this day at "Kirk's Tavern, near the New Bridewell."—Royal Gaz., My 4, 1782. This was at Montagne's Tavern, 253–254 Broadway.

10 A "splendid Entertainment" is given "at Roubalet's Tavern, by the principal officers of the Army, to his Excellency Sir Henry Clinton, previous to his Departure for Europe, at which were present their excellencies Sir Guy Carleton, and Rear Admiral Digby, many other officers, and Persons of Distinction."—N. Y. Merc., My 13, 1782. See My 13. May 10

" The "pleasant situated house and elegant gardens at Corlaer's Hook," formerly known as Campbell's Tavern, and now occupied by John Hylton, are offered for sale. The place is suited for either "a gentleman's seat, or for the public business."—Royal Gaz., My 11, 1782. 11

" A sadler advertises his trade at No. 85 Broadway, "opposite the Grand Parade, three Doors from the Corner of Wall Street."—Royal Gaz., My 11, 1782.

13 Smith writes in his diary: "I find hourly Evidences of the Reluctance of the High Tories as they are called to a generous Conciliation—and discover my Visits to create Jealousy. It requires Caution to tread safely even in the Paths of Peace . . . What this Class of Men hope for is a Triumph by the Sword."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "Sir Henry Clinton & Gen[l] Knyphausen imbark at White Hall. He was attended by Sir Guy Carleton & L[t] Gen[l] Robertson & al."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII; Von Krafft's Jour., 160.

15 A lottery is advertised for the benefit of the poor. The capital prize is a three-story brick house and adjoining distillery with its utensils, offered by the owner (who holds it on a long term lease). These buildings are "in two lots of College ground" on the North River.—Royal Gaz., My 15, 1782. An earlier lottery of poor relief was advertised in ibid., F 23, 1782. See also 1780.

16 Because New York may be evacuated by the British, London merchants are advised by the secretary of state not to send further supplies here.—Penn. Gaz., Jl 24, 1782.

18 The inhabitants of the city are requested to attend an important meeting at Roubalet's Tavern on this day at 12 o'clock. The notice is signed by Mayor Mathews.—Royal Gaz., My 18, 1782.

" The "ancient and manly game" of hurling is advertised to be played on the 20th "back of the Jew's burying place."—Royal Gaz., My 18, 1782. See also Je 4, 1781.

19 Smith writes that Sir Guy Carleton has told him "he wished to put our Affairs on such a footing that when the Army left the Country it should be because they were no longer of use from such a Settlement as was perfectly pleasing to the People & useful to Great Britain."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

20 The British and Hessian troops in New York, and those "cantoned in its vicinity" are reviewed by Gen. Carleton, the new commander-in-chief; and on the following day, the Grenadiers, the 27th Light Dragoons, and other corps on Long Island are reviewed. The "appearance of the troops on both days infinitely surpassed every exhibition hitherto presented in America."—N. Y. Merc., My 22, 1782. The review on the 20th was "near the Jews' Burying Ground."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 150.

22 "Joseph Corre begs leave to acquaint his friends and the public in general, that he has removed from No. 17, Hanover-Square, to No. 19 Wall-Street, next door to Messrs. Taylor and Bayard's vendue store, where his friends and customers may be supplied, as formerly, with all kinds of confectionary and pastry, &c."—Royal Gaz., My 22, 1782.

23 From his conversation with Carleton, Smith says he has "discovered very clearly" that the new commander "had been all along with the Opposition & that the old Ministry had as I conjecture cast their Eyes upon him to please the Opposition & upon the same Principle listened to my Instances for the Peace Bill."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

24 The inhabitants of the city of New York present an address to Sir Guy Carleton, congratulating him on his appointment to "the Chief command of his Majesty's armies in America," and on his safe arrival. They believe "that the pacific disposition of the parent state will abate the prejudices of the deluded inhabitants of America." The address is signed by Mayor David Mathews. In reply, Sir Guy expresses the belief that such a sentiment from this country cannot fail to re-unite the people of England and America "on the principles of common liberty and general advantage."—Royal Gaz., My 25, 1782.

26 A quarrel occurs on one of the ferry boats between a serjeant and the ferryman. "The latter was had up before certain Officers on Wednesday—& on Friday brought out to be whipp'd 200 Lashes & fainting under 106 was dismissed—It is said that no Witnesses were sworn & that Gen[l] Patterson had confirmed the Judgm[t] of a few Officers as a Sentence of a Court Martial. It is said the Ferry-

1782 My26 man is a worthy Loyalist of Mariland."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Je 4.

27 "Before Dinner at Headquarters Sir Guy Carleton took me aside and talked of Courts to decide by Grand Juries & Petty Juries exclaiming ag[t] referring Decisions to Courts Martial or as he expressed it to the Sash & Gorget &c[a] and expressed his Wish that I would with other Gentlemen in Law Offices undertake the Trust—I approved his Intention of putting Business in a Train less repugnant to the Principles of the Law than the present Mode by Police & Military Discretion but said it would require a Consult[a] how best to effectuate his Wish—On which M[r] Ch[ief] J[ustice] Smyth and M[r] Kemp were called in & it was agreed we should consult & report."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

In some notes written on the proposal, Smith states that if the success of the British forces in any colony is such "as to render it peaceable to reestablish its Legislature, it ought to be immediately convened; because there will then be a Power, as well to aid the Military operations, as to give the People the Protection of the Crown." He thinks that "infinite Confusion would be created, by a partial Re Establishment of the Judicial and other Branches of the Executive, without the Legislative authority." He adds:

"There are Difficulties in the Choice of any Models, to be proposed for the Government of the Districts in the British Possession. . . .

"Under the Military Government there must needs be a Defect of Justice in the Criminal Department; for the Power of Life & Death, when not authorized by the Laws, wears too formidable a Complexion, to inspire the Confidence of any Magistracy, who are to depend for Safety upon the . . . Crown or the Legislature.

"If to such a Judicatory we prefer the Opening of the Courts, . . . the Course indeed will be legal; but it is necessary to be apprized, that the Judges may walk by no other Rule than the Laws of the Land, without Deference to Power of any King, being bound by Oath to disrespect even the King's Letters to the Contrary, if any such should be sent to them

"They must also act with equal Freedom in the Dispensation of Justice in Civil concerns until the Law is changed. . . .

". . . it seems to be deducible . . . that previous to the Moment which will admit of the Restoration of the Legislature, little more can be done, than to bind the Hands of Criminals, especially when the Punishment extends to Life or Limb; and that for the great objects of preserving Order, preventing Oppression, & compelling to substantial Justice, as far as the Situation of the Country will permit it may be proper to cons[t]itute a Board or Judicatory supported by & answerable only to the Commander in Chief, with compleat authority to form a Code of Regulations for general Conformity & to meet Monthly & hear all Complaints & Appeals from Subordinate Distributions of Power & to afford effectual Redress according to their Discretion as nearly as possible according to the Measure and Spirit dictated by the Laws & Constitution."—Wm. Smith Papers (MS.), folio 194.

28 In celebration of the victory of the British fleet over the French in the West Indies, "the Artillery Company with their field pieces and the two battalions of the Kingston regiment of foot militia" assemble on the parade, and after going through the manual exercise, fire a "Feu de Joie." In the evening, the town is "most splendidly illuminated."—Royal Gaz., My 29, 1782.

29 A report or sketch bearing this date shows Sir Henry Clinton's plan "for securing the peace, interest and trade of the inhabitants in the three Islands [Manhattan Id., Long Id., and Statan Id.]; Establishment of the police; landed estates of the rebels parcelled out amongst needy refugees under certain restrictions, and granted during pleasure; arrangement for trade of the garrison."—See Report on Am. MSS. in the Royal Inst. of Gt. Brit., II: 503.

30 The "loyal Refugees of the Province of New York" present an address to Sir Guy Carleton. They state that their "dispersed situation" prevented their congratulating him when he arrived. They give the following account of themselves: "Many of the King's friends, in this province, have suffered ignominious deaths, for their uniform attachment to Government; many have been persecuted, imprisoned and banished from their estates and families, while others of us, after being treated with unparalleled cruelty and oppression, were stript of our property, and obliged to seek an asylum here and in Canada. Thousands are now in actual service, and numbers have perished nobly in defence of their King and the constitution." They are ready to hazard their lives, as they have sacrificed their fortunes, "to assist in bringing the Colonies to a re-union with the Mother-Country." He replies that he wishes most warmly "that peace and union may be restored on such generous and liberal terms, as may insure greatness and security to the whole, as well as happiness and freedom to all its parts."—Royal Gaz., Je 1, 1782. May 30

An open letter to Sir Guy Carleton appears in the Pennsylvania Packet. It is subscribed "Agricola," and reads: June 3

"The united states of America, heard with pleasure of your appointment to the command of his Britannic majesty's troops in America. Your birth in a land of freedom and urbanity, has secured you from the prejudices and vindictive spirit of a Briton—An Irishman is a traitor to his native country, when he becomes the enemy of liberty.—You were once, we are told, the master and afterwards the pupil of the immortal Wolfe. Your behaviour in Canada and your general conduct, have procured you the character of a gentleman and a hero.

"It is your misfortune to be called as a solemn witness of the dissolution of the British empire.—Your predecessors in command have left you nothing to work upon. They have expended the whole strength of your nation in fruitless sieges, battles, marches, and even victories. A Marlborough or a Eugene, could do nothing in America, in your present situation.

"You have but one thing left and that is to be HONEST. Tell your master that the time is past for making the least impression upon this country. The people are uniting daily, more and more, in support of their independence. The French alliance they now see to be founded in interest, and the once deluded adherents of the crown of Britain, now expose for sale in our city, cargoes of goods manufactured by the hands of Frenchmen.

"The royal standard has been raised in every state to no purpose. Crown officers and a few vagrants called by you Refugees have crowded to it. The rest of the king's friends would not take up arms to rescue their Saviour, and there is no government so obnoxious to their principles, to which they would not swear allegiance.

"Beware of the company of Billy Smith. He deceived sir Harry Clinton, who deceived the late ministry. He likewise deceived governor Johnson, who afterwards deceived the British house of commons. His ambition and avarice have blinded his understanding, and with all his pretensions to loyalty, he is in heart a staunch republican.

"Put an end to the tortures of the Prison-ships. Let sir William Howe, and sir Harry Clinton, feel in their consciences All the punishment of putting American seamen to death in cold blood. Let not your name and laurels be stained with any one of their crimes."—Penn. Packet, Je 3, 1782.

Commenting on the reference to himself in this letter, the chief-justice says: "[It] appears to attack me & yet may come from a Friend to the general Reconciliation. It is but lately Mr. Donaldson writes that an English Gazette censured me as the Projector of Arnold's expedition to New London & this supposes me a Republican."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Smith writes: "General Robertson Gen[l] Birch & Elliot are gone Home [following a conference at headquarters] with little Credit & much Anxiety—They have all been vehement advocates for the Military Power, which they see will no longer be countinanced and Gen[l] R in particular must have felt greater Restraints, for having hidden his real sentiments from the Ministry & the Pains he has taken to mask them before me."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. "

The king's birthday is celebrated. "At noon a royal salute was fired from the guns of Fort George, and answered by the ships of war, adorned in a distinguished manner by an infinite variety of colours, presenting a beautiful exhibition. His Excellency the Commander in Chief, attended by a numerous procession of principal officers, waited on his Royal Highness Prince William Henry, with their compliments of congratulation.—Very elegant entertainments were given by his Excellency Sir Guy Carleton, Rear Admiral Digby, and Lieutenant General Robertson. A Feu de Joie was fired in the evening, amongst many thousands of rejoicing inhabitants, and the night was closed with perfect hilarity and harmony."—Royal Gaz., Je 5, 1782; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 4

In an advertisement of the "Brooklyn-Hall Charity Lottery," at the tavern of Charles Loosley (see My 7, 1779), beginning on "

1782 June 4 this day, the public is notified that tickets may be had at the printer's (Rivington's) and at the following taverns: Mr. Strachan's City Tavern and Coffee House (Merchants Coffee House); Mr. Roubalet's Tavern, Broadway (City Tavern); Mr. Kirk's Tavern in the Fields (Montagne's); Mr. Hearn's Tavern in the Fields; Mr. Bryan's Tavern, opposite the Coffee House; Mr. Campbell's Tavern in Irish Street; Mr. O'Brians Tavern, Fly Market; Mr. Hays Tavern, Broadway; Barden's Queen's Head, Jamaica; Mr. Rapalye's Tavern, New-Town, and Mr. Griffen's at Howard's Half Way House, Long Island.—Royal Gaz., My 25, 1782. This list probably includes the most popular taverns of the time in and about New York.

5 Washington writes to Rear-Admiral Digby concerning a visit he has received from Capt. Daniel Aborn and Dr. Joseph Bowen in behalf of the American naval prisoners. He states that, as he has "no agency on naval matters," the application was made upon "mistaken grounds." In addition he declares that the prisoners' chief complaint is about overcrowding, and that he is sure Digby's "feelings for fellow men" will induce him "to proportion the ships (if they must be confined on board ships) to their accommodation and comfort, and not by crouding them together in a few, bring on disorders which consign them by half dozens in a day to the grave." Admiral Digby answered this letter briefly by suggesting that Washington could mitigate the sufferings of the American naval prisoners by exchanging some of the British soldiers in his hands for them.—Royal Gaz., Jl 3, 1782. See also Ag 21, 1781; Je 11 and 24, 1782.

7 "General Orders" are issued—a first step toward the restoration of civil government—in these words:

"Whenever it should be found necessary to confine any Person not Military he is to be immediately reported to His Excellency L^{t} Gen^{l} Robertson who will take the necessary Steps for his being brought to Tryal."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Je 9.

8 A "neat Brick House, With a Store, three Rooms a good Cellar-Kitchen, and Yard, in Great George Street, opposite the Artillery Park," are offered on lease. "For particulars apply to John Amory, Whip-Maker, No. 229 Queen Street, near the Fly Market."—Rivington's Royal Gaz., Je 8, 1782. This was the old Montagne tavern, on Broadway, between Warren and Murray Sts. See Ap 5, 1754.

11 David Sproat writes a letter from New York to the prisoners on the "Jersey," informing them that Capt. Aborn and Dr. Bowen, their representatives, have conveyed to Gen. Washington (see Je 5) the appeal concerning their "disagreeable situation," and have solicited him to grant them relief by exchanging captured British soldiers for them. Sproat informs the prisoners that Aborn and Bowen are now bringing to them Washington's reply, which is a "flat denial," and encloses copies of three letters that have passed between himself and the American commissary (see Je 24), "which will convince you that every thing has been done on the part of Admiral Digby, to bring about a fair and general exchange of prisoners on both sides."

As a result, the prisoners on the "Jersey" address a letter to "Friends and Fellow Countrymen of America," which closes thus: "What is to be done? are we to lie here and share the fate of our unhappy brothers who are dying daily? No, unless you relieve us immediately, we shall be under the necessity of leaving our country, in preservation of our lives."—Royal Gaz., Je 12, 1782; Recollections of the Jersey prison-ship, from the MSS. of Capt. Thomas Dring, by A. G. Greene (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 138-42; Banks, David Sproat, 73-80. See, further, Jl 3.

12 The American commissary of prisoners writes to the secretary of war, Benjamin Lincoln: "I am solicited by our naval Prisoners at New York and the British Commissary to obtain a permission for a Boat to fish on the Jersey Coast—this Boat they propose to man by some of the Prisoners, and some persons to be employed by the Enemy, and the Fish to be appropriated to the Use of the Prisoners on Board the Prison Ship and other places where they are confined.

"The British Comissary has also proposed to purchase within our Lines a Quantity of Wood for which he will pay the Cash and it shall be for the Use of our Prisoners solely—the Applications are founded on these Principles; The Fish will afford the Prisoners two or three fresh Meals a Week and the Price of Wood being so much lower within our Lines than at New York, the greater allowance will be given the Prisoners.

"I am extremely sorry to inform you that the Situation of those Men is truly deplorable—all Hopes of their Release is frustrated and no Exchange can take Place. I owe the Enemy a Balance of 1,000 Men in the naval Line, and they will not consent to exchange those they now have unless we give them an equal Number of Seamen or Soldiers and pay off the Balance—I would therefore wish to be authorised to contribute towards the Comforts of those Prisoners and that if you think proper that they should be indulged with the necessary permission to fish and that the British Commissary be allowed to purchase Wood for the Use of our Prisoners." Lincoln sent the letter to congress on June 28 recommending a compliance with the requests, and on July 1, congress referred the matter to Washington for execution. The secretary of war's report of the transactions is indorsed: "General Heath and General Knox will endeavour to make arrangements for carrying the inclosed proposition into execution without improper use being made of the indulgence."—From a copy of the report in Emmet Coll. (No. 8738) of N. Y. P. L. June 12

"The New-York Freeholder Number I" appears. The writer says: "I am bona fide, a New-York Freeholder; my farm, which lies at a small distance from the City, and within the British lines, hath always enabled me to live in affluence; and thus I am interested in the welfare of America. Twenty pounds currency would pay all the debts I owe in the world; and I have no pension from Great-Britain, France, or America; so that it is impossible that any bias on account of these should hang on my judgment. I never received any personal insult, nor material injury in my estate, from the active friends of Congress; therefore I cannot have any personal resentment against them. I still consider them as brethren, though mistaken; and anxiously wish for the day when I shall embrace them as friends. In fine, although I am a hearty friend to every part of the British Empire; yet my prejudices are peculiarly in favour of America, and my interests are inseparably connected with her's. 15

"Thus circumstanced, and with this disposition, I propose to examine some points of the last moment to America. . . . I dare not promise that I shall throw much light on them—that must be left to the determination of others. They shall at least be discussed with calmness and impartiality.

"Whether America is likely to be happier and more flourishing by independency, than by a continual union with Great-Britain—Whether independency is really attainable at this time—Whether America should not accept of the accommodation proposed by Great-Britain, provided the terms are generous, honourable, and advantageous to America—Whether the present alliance between France and America is beneficial to the latter—And whether the Americans should not be justly alarmed at the designs and efforts of France, all circumstances considered—These, besides literary, moral and other political subjects, are points which I intend to treat of. I shall assign my reasons for the opinions I adopt concerning each of these; and as I wish, like Montesquieu, rather to make people think, than make them read, I hope they will consider those reasons with candour and impartiality. . . .

"The present period calls loudly on every friend of America to lay aside passion and prejudice, and to dismiss every narrow, selfish, and party principle. The state of things is greatly changed from what it was lately. Matters are now brought to a most interesting crisis, when the conduct of my countrymen must determine whether America is to continue a theatre of war and desolation; or whether peace with its attending blessings shall revisit us, and whether we shall become once more a free, flourishing and happy people. My earnest wish is, that wisdom, virtue and cool judgment may preside in their deliberations, and regulate their conduct."—Royal Gaz., Je 15, 1782.

Commenting on the article, Smith says: "I suspect it to be sent from Head Quarters and that it is one of a Set sent out from England to prepare the Way for correcting the Vindictive Spirit of the Refugees."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Je 18. Additional numbers of "The Freeholder" appeared in Royal Gaz., Je 22, 29, Jl 6, 13, 20, 27 and Ag 3, 1782. See Jl 20, for a conjecture by Smith as to the identity of "The Freeholder."

A New Yorker writes: "Our new Commander in Chief [Sir Guy Carleton] goes on retrenching—not ground—but expences. The arrangements he has already made will occasion a saving of near a million in the annual charge. He sees every thing with his own eyes, and hears every body: he is up and about before four in "

1782 June 15 the morning: Before the quarter-part of his army have opened their eyelids, he has perhaps rode ten or a dozen miles; he comes almost every day to the parade, which is a signal that immediately after he will have a levee, where every one may tell their story, or request a private hour, which I am told is generally fixed for that day or the next, and those who have had conversations with him go away very much satisfied with his patience and condescension: In short, his conduct, as far as it has gone, has procured him the respect of the army, and the love of the Loyalists.

"The newspapers will inform you, that the rulers of America are not in the least disposed toward peace, unless independence is acknowledged, and their great and good ally included in the treaty. . . .

"The whole army is now under orders to encamp beyond Kingsbridge, it is said, with intention to cover some miles of the country, in which forage can be collected together. Washington is drawing together his force at New-Windsor, where the greater part of the French troops from Chesapeak are to join him."—London Chron., Jl 20–23, 1782.

" "Weir's Tavern, the Sign of The Grand Master, below the Coffee-House, Will be opened on Tuesday next [June 18] for the reception of company, where an Ordinary is intended to be kept up in the genteelest manner."—Royal Gaz., Je 15, 1782. When Sarah Bolton Loftus offered her property for sale on Jan. 6, 1783, one of the items listed was a house on "the corner of the Old-slip, next to the house wherein Mr. James Wier lately kept tavern."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1783.

17 Court is held in the city hall for the trial of piracies by a commission acting under a statute of King William III.—Royal Gaz., Je 19, 1782. Gov. Robertson presided and the bench included the governour and council of New Jersey as well as the council of New York. "We proceeded," says Smith, "upon the Record of a Commission issued in 1762, and when sworn signed & sealed a Warrant to the Military Provost Marshal to deliver & to Ludlow as Marshal of this Court to receive and bring before us

"John Clarke—James Wigmore & Joseph Royn. The Court assembled at 10 A M & sat till Dusk—We unanimously found Clarke guilty, & sentenced him to be executed 28 Ins[t]—Wigmore was also found guilty by a great Majority—but intending to recommend him for Pardon, we ordered his Execution on the first Monday in June 1783—A great Majority acquited Joseph Royns & he was instantly discharged.

"The Com[rs] unanimously agreed to admit the Prisoners to have Counsel, & it was declared to them, but they said they were not able to procure any.

"There were several Witnesses on the Part of the Crown. viz[t] John Davis, Richard Magrath, James Inan, Francis Smith & James Bruce.

"The Prisoners called for Edward Parkinson & William Noy."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See also Wm. Smith Papers (MS.), folio 197, where a more detailed account of the trial is given.

19 An act of Parliament, passed on this day, authorizes George III to make peace with the United States.—Jour. House of Lords (1779–83), 537; Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 258. See also Mr 28. For the debates in parliament at this period, see Almon's Parliamentary Register, Vols. XXI–XXVI.

20 The first seal of the United States is adopted by the continental congress.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 39; Hunt, Hist. of the Seal of the U. S. (1909), 41.

22 Twelve masters and one surgeon of American vessels which have been captured by British cruisers and brought into port, having obtained the "enlargement" of their paroles from Rear-Admiral Digby, to return to their homes, have appointed six of their number to inspect the prison-ships in the harbour, including the "Jersey;" and, accompanied by David Sproat, the British commissary-general for naval prisoners, and by George Rutherford, the surgeon of the prison hospital-ships, they visited these ships, and then prepared a written report, of this date, with considerable detail added, to the effect "that they have found them in as comfortable a situation as it is possible for prisoners to be on board of ships at this season of the year, and much more so than they had any idea of, and that anything said to the contrary, is false and without foundation. . . ."—Royal Gaz., Je 26, 1782; Greene, Recollections of the Jersey Prison-ship, from the original manuscripts of Capt. Thomas Dring, one of the prisoners (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 143–45; Banks, David Sproat and Naval Prisoners in the War of the Rev. (1909), 81. June 22

The publication of this report had a certain limited influence in effecting a much needed exchange of prisoners (Greene, op. cit., 111); but, for the motives that are said to have prompted or forced the report itself, see Ag 7.

Jay arrives in Paris to relieve Franklin.—Winsor, VII: 108. 23

Smith writes in his diary: "The Presbyterians mutter for Want of one of their Churches. I spoke to Gen[l] R[obertson] upon the Subject this Morning & advised him to oblige them if possible & to oblige the Hospital to Report in Writing the Reasons for withholding the New Church which has sick Hessians in it and whether another Place can't be found."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. "

The American commissary of naval prisoners, Abraham Skinner, having seen the published letters of June 11 (q. v.), writes to the British commissary, David Sproat, giving a long and earnest exposition of the American position and claims in the matter of exchanging prisoners for the relief of the many Americans crowded into a few ill-kept British prison-ships. He reviews the British principles and policy which he conceives actuate Sproat's superiors, who, he says, are trying to induce the Americans to join the king's forces by assuring them that they are neglected by their countrymen, and that all their miseries are due to Washington's disinclination to exchange them. Skinner declares that it is impossible for Washington to do this because the exchange of naval prisoners is under the direction of the secretary of war, also because the Americans haven't enough British naval prisoners and the exchange of soldiers for seamen is contrary to the original agreement which specified that officers should be exchanged for officers, soldiers for soldiers, citizens for citizens, and seamen for seamen (see Mass. Hist. Soc. Proc., 1860–62, p. 334). He adds that Aborn and Bowen (see Je 5 and 11) "appeared to be sensible of the force of those reasons, however repugnant they might be to the feelings and wishes of the men who had destruction and death staring them in the face," and that if better accommodations were not provided, Washington would retaliate "by confining the land prisoners with as much severity as our seamen were held." 24

Sproat answered this letter by recapitulating the British position, by referring to the declaration of June 22 (q. v.) by American shipmasters concerning the favourable condition of American naval prisoners, by again offering to exchange the American seamen for British soldiers, and by attacking the treatment accorded to British prisoners in Philadelphia and Boston. These letters, together with those referred to under June 5 (q. v.), were published at Sproat's request in the Royal Gaz., Jl 3, 1782. See also Greene, Recollections of the Jersey Prison-ship, from MSS. of Capt. Thomas Dring (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 145–53, and Banks, David Sproat, 85–98, 101.

The financial statement of the New York Theatre, covering the general account of receipts and disbursements for the last two seasons, and showing the balance in hand at this date, is published as a broadside. It is taken from the books of the theatre, in the possession of the treasurer, and is shown to enable persons, until Aug. 31, to present any outstanding demands against the theatre, after which the surplus will be given to charity. It is signed by four managers. It shows gifts of £291:0, and of £827:7:6, in the two seasons respectively, to the widows and children of 35 military and naval organizations, to refugees, and to inhabitants of New York and vicinity. The receipts include large donations from the governour and the several British generals in the city. There were taken in at the doors of the theatre, in the two seasons, £4,520:17:6 and £323:17:8 respectively.—From original broadside, in N. Y. P. L. "

Prince William Henry is in town again from the "Warwick."—Jour. of Hugh Gaine, II: 151. 28

The "encampment near Mr. Bayard's in the Bowery" is mentioned in an advertisement.—Royal Gaz., Je 29, 1782. 29

Smith records the fact that Sir Guy Carleton, in conversation with him, expresses the wish that "I would take up the Pen blaming the contracted Idea of treating the Colonies like petty Corporations as M[r] York & other Lawyers had in England; & he applauded much the large Mind & Principles of Lord Chatham & the present Chancellor.—I ment[d] Difficulties from the uncertainty respecting the Views of the present Ministers—He replied that they would countenance free Sentiments—I mentioned the King's Mind & Intentions—He said he could perfectly support them, that he thought well of the old Sett, but was convinced they could not serve July 1

1782 July 1 him any longer & that their Principles had been injurious to the Nation and his own Family, & were founded in Mistake.

" "I made no Promises but see it probable that the Freeholder now publishing by Rivington is a Paper from Head Quarters."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Notice is given to the refugees and others that the governour permits those who have no seats "in either of the Episcopal Churches" in New York, to use "the Great Court Room in the City Hall" for divine service on Sundays, which the "Refugee Clergy" will conduct in rotation.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 1, 1782.

2 Charles James Fox, in a speech in the house of commons, says: "It is the intention of the administration to give America unconditional and unequivocal Independence."—The Speech of the Right Honourable Charles James Fox on American Independence: Spoken in the House of Commons, On Tuesday, July 2, 1782 (London, 1782).

12 The state legislature passes "An Act to abolish Entails, to confirm Conveyances by Tenants in Tail, to distribute Estates Real, of Intestates, to remedy defective Conveyances to joint Tenants, and directing the Mode of such Conveyances in future." The text of this law is included in a compilation entitled Laws of the Legislature of the State of New York, in force against the Loyalists, and Affecting the Trade of Great Britain, and British Merchants, and Others Having Property in That State (London, 1786), 91.

" "It is intimated to me," says Smith, "that Mr Magrudie Prince Wm's Tutor wished a Copy of my History [see 1757] might be put into Adml Digby's Hands for his Royal Highness & says it will be well recd—I did not like the Parade of a Letter to the Admiral & preferr'd giving it to Magrudie, but he declines it out of Delicacy to the Admiral—I therefore sent a Copy bound up with the Review of the Military Operations published in 1756 to Adml Digby with a short Letter & the Adml answered it this Day & says the Prince recd it with Pleasure."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

15 The people of Connecticut, "being determined to release their Brethern as fast as possible," send about 90 prisoners to New York to exchange for as many seamen confined here.—N. Y. Merc., Jl 15, 1782.

" All free male negroes, over 14 years of age, not employed in "the Public Departments," are required "to appear on the Common fronting the Provost," to be registered.—Royal Gaz., Jl 13, 1782.

" Cricket is to be played "on the Green, near the Ship Yards."—Royal Gaz., Jl 13, 1782.

20 Smith expresses to Gen. Robertson the hope that before the latter departs he will "first give the City a good Charter for the Sake of his Fame as well as the public Good." Along the same line Smith suggests that "a Mayor's Court might be instituted to relieve the Police."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" The field officers of the four battalions of the City Militia publish a denial that there have been desertions from these battalions.—Royal Gaz., Jl 20, 1782.

" The batteries along the water at Fort George are being changed and repaired.—Von Krafft's Jour., 164.

" A "Genteel House" is advertised for sale, located on the street "on the North-side of St. Paul's Church, leading down to the Hay Magazine."—Royal Gaz., Jl 20, 1782.

24 "Sir Guy Carleton has visited all the prison ships at New York, minutely examined into the situation of the prisoners and expressed his intentions of having them better provided for: That they were to be landed on Blackwell's Island, in New York harbour in the day time, during the hot season."—N. Y. H. S. Bull., Jl, 1921, citing N. J. Gaz., Jl 24, 1782.

29 In a letter to Major Poynton at Edinburgh, a New Yorker says: "People here in general talk much of peace; many wagers are laid that it will be confirmed by next packet; but though I do most sincerely long for peace, I fear it will be patched up, greatly in favour of the Rebels, and against Britain; and it is expected. Washington will very soon be obliged to disband his men for want of money to pay them, as they can raise none by taxes, and the New England Yankees are quarrelling among themselves, and send off flags to exchange their prisoners, contrary to Washington's positive orders. Within a few weeks a number of vessels have come in here from that part of the country with provisions, and got protections from the Admiral."—London Chron., S 24–26, 1782.

" Carleton has "Proper Sentiments," writes Smith in his diary, "of the Imbecility of the Rebel Party. He is anxious to hear from England & fearful that the Ministry may strike Hands with the Congress Agents in Europe under too high an Estimate of their Power here. If they have not Sir G [Carleton] will correct their false Views—We are all impatient for the arrival of the Commissioners that the whole Work may proceed upon American Ground: I intimated to the Com: Genl as I have to Sir Guy Carleton that I thought the Congress already in the Project of preparing the People for a Reunion & looking to the Crown for Favor to themselves. I shewed him at the same time that it would be the Ruin of them in this Country which they had too long abused for their holding general Esteem in it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. July 29

A man who left New York in the beginning of August reported on his arrival in London that "he saw and conversed with the Deputies from the New England Colonies, that were then at New York with Sir Guy Carleton, to know what terms had been proposed by this Country [Great Britain] to Congress, and what terms the Colonies they represented, were to be offered. That notwithstanding the Congress laws subsisting to the Southward of New York, to prevent all communication between them and the King's garrison, there was an uninterrupted intercourse between New York and the Colonies to the Eastward; that vessels had gone out loaded with British goods into Connecticut, one of which had to the amount of 1200 l. others of less value; and a vast number of horses loaded with every species of goods, that was portable by such conveyances, went out of the line into the country."—London Chron., S 14–17, 1782. Aug. —

An elaborate ceremony takes place in New York on this day when Prince William Henry delivers to the "King's American dragoons" the standards of their regiment. It is thus described in a letter written from the city on Aug. 7: "The regiment . . . was formed on very advantageous ground in front of their encampment, with two pieces of light artillery on their right. About 60 yards in front of the regiment a canopy was erected 20 feet in height, supported by 10 pillars; on the east side of which was a semicircular bower for the accommodation of the spectators. The standards were planted under the canopy on the right and left of the center pillar. At one o'clock his Royal Highness Prince William Henry, with his Excellency Admiral Digby, General Birch, and many other Officers of distinction, came on the ground at the right of the regiment, and having passed along both in front and rear of the line, receiving the usual salute, trumpets sounding, and music playing 'God save the King!' posted themselves in the canopy, when all the officers of the regiment saluted together. The regiment then formed into half troops . . . and the whole passed in review before the canopy, performing the usual marching salutes. After having returned to their ground they dismounted and formed as a battalion, and then marched in close order, and formed a semicircle in front of the canopy. Their Chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Odell, advanced and delivered a pointed and elegant Address calculated for the purpose; after which the whole regiment, officers and men kneeling, laid their helmets and their arms upon the ground, held up their right hands, and took a most solemn oath of allegiance to their Sovereign, and fidelity and attachment to their standard, the whole repeating the oath together. This being finished, the Chaplain pronounced a solemn benediction, the regiment still kneeling. The regiment then returned to their ground, and again formed as a battalion, with their artillery on their right, and fired a royal salute; being again mounted, the whole saluted the standard together, and again marched by the canopy saluting the standards as they passed. 1

"As soon as the consecrating and saluting the standards was over, the regiment formed, his Royal Highness Prince William Henry, attended by Admiral Digby and Gen. Birch, and followed by the Hon. Lieutenant-colonel Fox and Lieutenant-colonel Small (bearing the standards), came forward to the centre of the regiment, where his Royal Highness, receiving the standards from his Excellency Admiral Digby, presented them with his own hand to Lieutenant-colonel Thompson, who delivered them to his eldest Cornets; upon a signal given the whole regiment, with all the numerous spectators, gave three shouts, the trumpets sounded, the music played 'God save the King!' the artillery fired a royal salute, and the ceremony was concluded."—London Chron., O 3–5, 1782.

Sir Guy Carleton and Admiral Digby write to Gen. Washington that they have just received information from England "that negotiations for a general peace have already commenced at Paris; and that Mr. Grenville is invested with full Powers to treat with 2

A S K E T C H

OF THE

Rates and Conditions of Insurance,

OF THE

Mutual Assurance Company of the City of New-York,

For the Purpose of insuring Houses and other Buildings in the said City from Loss by Fire.

NEW-YORK HISTORICAL SOCIETY

FIRST RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all Houses and other Buildings built of Brick or Stone, with Party-Walls carried twelve Inches or upwards above the Roof, and covered with Tiles, Slate, Copper or other safe Materials, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

SECOND RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all Houses and other Buildings, built of Brick or Stone, covered with Tile, Slate, Copper, or other safe Materials, but without such Party-Walls as above described, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

THIRD RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all Houses and other Buildings built of Brick or Stone up to the Roof, but covered partly with Tile, Slate, Copper, or other safe Materials, and partly with Shingles, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

FOURTH RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all Houses and other Buildings, the outside Walls of which are built of Brick or Stone up to the Roof, and which are covered wholly with Shingles, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

FIFTH RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all framed Houses and other Buildings, with Brick or Stone Fronts, and the Sides filled in with Brick, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

SIXTH RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all framed Buildings, filled in with Brick, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

SEVENTH RATE.

THAT for and upon insuring all wooden Buildings, the Premium and Deposit on every Hundred Pounds shall be, for seven Years,

	Prem. p. C.	Deposit.	Total.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
First Rate	0 3 0	12 0	0 15 0
Second Rate	0 4 0	16 0	1 0 0
Third Rate	0 5 0	1 0 0	1 5 0
Fourth Rate	0 6 0	1 4 0	1 10 0
Fifth Rate	0 7 0	1 8 0	1 15 0
Sixth Rate	0 8 0	1 12 0	2 0 0
Seventh Rate	0 10 0	2 0 0	2 10 0

THE Expence therefore of insuring Five Hundred Pounds for seven Years, in a Building as described in the Fifth Rate, which comprehends the greatest Proportion of Houses in this City, will appear as follows :—

Premium on £. 500	at 7s. per Cent.	£. 1 15 0
Deposit,	at 28s. per Cent.	7 0 0
Policy and Badge,		0 10 0
		£. 9 5 0
If the Amount of the Premiums is found sufficient to pay the Losses by Fire, and the incident Expences of the Office, the whole of the Deposit will be returned at the Expiration of seven Years, is		7 0 0
		£. 2 5 0

WHICH shews the Expence of insuring £. 500 for seven Years may not, in all probability, exceed two Pounds five Shillings; a small Cost for securing said Sum for such length of Time.

NO Sugar-House, Brew-House, Bake-House, Still-House, Cooper's or Joiner's Shop, or other House or Shop wherein any of the hazardous Trades or Business following are carried on, viz. Chymists, Ship Chandlers, Tallow Chandlers, Stable-keepers, Tavern-keepers, Printers, Malt-Driers, Oil or Colourmen; or which are used as Stores for hazardous Goods, viz. Hemp, Flax, Tallow, Pitch, Tar, Turpentine, Spirits of Turpentine, Rosin, Gunpowder, Shingles, Hay, Straw, Fodder of all kinds, and Corn unthreshed, will be insured, but on such Terms only as the Directors shall specially agree.

ANY Person applying to the Secretary of this Office for Insurance, must deposit twenty Shillings for each Policy, to defray Expences of Survey, &c. which will be allowed in Part of such Insurance when made, but on Default, will be forfeited to the Company.

AS the MUTUAL ASSURANCE COMPANY is established on Principles of reciprocal Advantage, without attending to the Interest of any Individual, it is necessary that all Persons, before their Insurance commences in this Society, pay their Premium and Deposits on receiving their Policies, signed by three of the Directors and subscribing the Deed of Settlement.

ANY Person insured by this Society becomes a Member thereof, and is eligible to be chosen a Director.

ALL Losses or Damages by Fire are to be paid or repaired within ninety Days from their Settlement in the Office.

By Order of the Directors,

John Pintard, Secretary.

No. 57, KING-STREET.

NEW-YORK, March 11, 1788.

Printed by J. and A. M'LEAN, No. 41, Hanover-Square, where Printing is carried on in its various Branches with Accuracy, and on the most reasonable Terms.

A. BROADSIDE PUBLISHED BY THE FIRST ESTABLISHED INSURANCE COMPANY IN NEW YORK. SEE JUNE 15, 1787 (P. 1218).

B. PAGE OF CHRISTOPHER COLLES' ROAD-MAP, 1789, SHOWING ROADS ON MANHATTAN ISLAND. SEE P. 1234.

1782 Aug. 2 all the parties at war;" also, that the king, "in order to remove all obstacles to that Peace which he so ardently wishes to restore, has commanded his Ministers to direct Mr. Grenville, that the Independency of the Thirteen Provinces should be proposed by him, in the first instance, instead of making it a condition of a general treaty; however, not without the highest confidence, that the Loyalists shall be restored to their possessions, or a full compensation made them for whatever confiscations may have taken place . . ."

Transports, they state, have been prepared to convey American prisoners to this country, to be exchanged here. They urge, "by every consideration of humanity, the most speedy exchange." A proposal has been made that the British soldiers, so exchanged, "shall not serve in or against the Thirteen Provinces for one year." —Royal Gaz., Ag 7, 1782. Inhabitants within the British lines were requested to appoint delegates to meet at Roubalet's Tavern on Aug. 9 to consider this communication and adopt suitable measures.—Ibid. Commenting on the news, Smith writes that it is "Evidence of great internal Debility—or of Menaces from other European Powers . . . That it must light up a Civil War in Great Britain unless it was not absolutely necessary to Self Preservation—That the Ministers who advised it would not be safe from Assassination in the Streets of London—That it would transfer the Affection of all America to France—That we thought we had in himself a sure Pledge for Liberality to America & vigor to put down Opposition to any unreasonable Partialities, And that as the Situation of our Affairs was at present more flattering to our Wishes than at any Time within the five Years past, those who advise the Measure must have Republican Desires to overturn the Constitution and upon the whole that this Information shook me as much as the Loss of all I had in the World & my Family with it."—Wm. Smith's Diary, VII. Subsequently "some observations" upon this letter were printed in the Royal Gazette of Ag 17 (q.v.). His diary discloses that Smith wrote these "observations."

3 Smith writes that he hears it asserted "that the People of England are in general tired of the War & desirous of Peace at any Price."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Henry Ludlam advertises a bathing house, for the use of ladies, which he has erected in his yard on North River, adjoining Powles Hook Ferry. His charge is four shillings for bathing "each time." —Royal Gaz., Ag 3, 1782.

5 "This evening all the citizen watches in New York were discontinued on account of the peace, by the English and Hessians." —Von Kraffi's Jour., 165.

6 A letter written from New York contains the following: "The communication of this place with the country is so open, that boats, &c. from Philadelphia, Boston, and all the northern provinces, are admitted without flags of truce to come in and purchase goods, &c. without molestation. The troops are encamped between King's Bridge and Greenwich. Washington is about 15 miles off; both armies remain quiet, and [there is] no appearance of hostilities." —London Chron., S 12–14, 1782.

7 One "Captain Rover" publishes the following letter, dated at Boston, Aug. 7, and addressed to "Mr. Printer:"

"Happening to be at Mr. Bracket's tavern last Saturday, and hearing two gentlemen conversing on the surprising alteration in regard to the treatment our prisoners met with in New-York, and as I have had the misfortune to be more than once a prisoner in England, and in different prison ships in New-York, and having suffered every thing but death, I cannot help giving all attention to any thing I hear or read relating to the treatment our brave seamen met with on board the prison ships in New-York. One of the gentlemen observed that the treatment to our prisoners must certainly be much better, as so many of our Commanders had signed a paper [see Je 22] that was wrote by Mr. David Sproat, the Commissary of naval prisoners in New-York. The other gentleman answered, and told him he could satisfy him in regard to that matter, having seen and conversed with several of the Captains that signed Mr. Sproat's paper, who told him that altho' they had put their hands to the paper, that Mr. Sproat sent them on Long-Island, where they were upon parole, yet it was upon these conditions they did it, in order to have leave to go home to their wives and families, and not be sent on board the prison ship, as Mr. Sproat had threatened to do if they refused to sign the paper that he sent them. These Captains further said, that they did not read the paper nor hear it read. The gentleman then asked them, how they could sign their names to a paper they did not read; they said it was because they might go home upon parole. He asked one of them why he did not contradict it since it had appeared in the public papers, and was false; he said he dare not at present, for fear of being recalled and sent on board the prison ship and there end his days; but as soon as he was exchanged he would do it. Aug. 7

"If this gentleman, through fear, dare not contradict such a piece of falshood,—I dare, and if I was again confined on board the prison ship in New-York, dare again take the boat and make my escape, although at the risk of my life.

"Some of the Captains went on board the prison-ship with Mr. Sproat, a few moments, but did not go off the deck.

"In justice to myself and country, I am obliged to publish the above. Capt. Rover."

—Ind. Chron. (Boston), Ag 15, 1782.

An affidavit, denying the statements contained in the report of the ship-masters, was made on July 16 by one John Cochran, a prisoner on the "Jersey" at the time these captains made their superficial inspection from the deck of the ship; it was published in the Penn. Packet, S 10, 1782; and in Greene's Recollections of the Jersey Prison-ship: from the MSS. of Capt. Thos. Dring (ed. by Dawson, 1865), 156–57.

9 An "Officer of Rank at New York" writes to a friend in London: "It is currently talked of to-day, that the French are landing on the east end of Long Island, and that the rebels appear in force near the post at King's Bridge, on this island. What will be the event of it God only knows: this I know, that the offers of independency, which were made public a few days ago, will be a great detriment to the garrison in repelling a serious attack on this place, as the militia (a body of near 5000 men) and the refugees (near 1000) are extremely alarmed at the acquiescence of the Ministry, and concessions of Government. The majority of these people have already sacrificed their property to their principles, and now have the mortification to find the one will avail them as much as the other." —London Chron., S 28–O 1, 1782.

10 "Addresses to the King and to His Majesty's Commissioners having, by the direction of a very respectable number of Gentlemen, been prepared, I am desired to give this notice, that the said Address will be read this Day at Twelve o'Clock, to such persons as choose to attend at Roubalet's Tavern, in order to receive either their approbation or dissent. Robert Alexander, Chairman."—Royal Gaz., Ag 10, 1782. See Ag 15.

" "A plan of Mount Pitt in the Out Ward," the residence of Supreme Court Justice Thomas Jones, drawn by E. Bancker, Jr., bears this date of survey. It shows a "Pale Fence" where Grand St. was later cut through; and another "pale Fence" directly in front of the house. It shows the position of the mansion, stable, kitchen, fowl house, and other out-buildings, as well as trees. It is preserved in the Bancker Coll., in the N. Y. P. L.

15 The address of Aug. 10 (q.v.) to Gen. Carleton and Admiral Digby from "the Loyal Inhabitants and Refugees at New York," is answered.—Report on Am. MSS. in Royal Institution of Gt. Britain, III: 72.

16 The "Military" and the "Fire Club" assist the city firemen to put out a fire in Wall St., which "threatened the destruction of the city."—Royal Gaz., Ag 17, 1782.

17 "I gave Rivington," says Smith, "a note of Reasons to shew that the Whiggs are as disgusted as the Tories to raise an Idea in the Towns & Country of the Emptiness of such an Independency as is proposed [see Ag 2]—It is in this Days Paper."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. So it is now possible to publish the fact that the "Correspondent" from whom the printer has received "some observations" is William Smith. Rivington explains further that the correspondence relates to a "Note, which was annexed to a mutilated Copy of the Royal Commissioners Letter to General Washington, dated August 2d [q.v.], and which it is thought proper in this place to reprint, from the Philadelphia Journal, dated August 10th." These "observations" read:

"Though one might have imagined, that nothing could have given more joy to the Party of Independents in the different Colonies, than the consent of Great-Britain to their having, as they stile it, a Name among the Nations, yet the truth is, that the late intimation of the proposition to admit their Independency, creates as much disgust in them, as it does in the Loyalists, who always thought this imaginary blessing, the heaviest curse that could befal this country.—The objections that arise, are as various 1782 Aug. 17 as their apprehensions of its effects upon their interests and views."

Some of the reasons given are:

"Many conceive it would be impossible, even with a more extensive dominion, to raise the immense sums requisite to satisfy the Loyalists . . .

"Others are alarmed at the demands that are to follow for the debts to the French Governors and Merchants, as well as to other nations. . . .

"The American soldiery perceive the vanity of the promises of their vast arrears of pay, and of the land premiums they have been led to expect, in the luxury of liberty beyond the Blue Mountains.

"The Congressional creditors are in pain both for their interest and principal . . .

"Still less do the herd of purchasers of confiscated estates see ground to hope for an indemnity, to restore what they are to give up, by a general tax . . .

"The merchants too are under the keenest anxieties, as they have no kind of a claim upon the community at large for what they owe abroad . . .

"Perhaps no class of men feel greater apprehensions than those who have been the chief instruments in gulling on their countrymen to contend for this phantom [of Independency] . . . after the clear proof they have of the general aversion to their quaudom [sic] and ruinous politics, by the refusal of all the provinces but three, to contribute to the monstrous taxes they have imposed for the protraction of the war."—Royal Gaz., Ag 17, 1782.

21 The birthday of Prince William Henry, who is 18 years of age, is celebrated. Admiral Digby gives "a very elegant Dinner . . . to all the great Officers of State;" and in the evening "a splendid illumination, Ball and Supper" are held in his honour at Greenwich, by Capt. Salter, commander of H.M.S. "Santa Margaretta."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 26, 1782.

22 Probably the most complete records of court-martial proceedings during the British occupation of New York are those for the trial of Col. Cosmo Gordon, of the Third Regt. of Foot Guards, who was charged with neglect of duty before the enemy on June 23, 1780, near Springfield, N. J. Beginning on this day, in New York, the trial continued until Sept. 24. The proceedings were published in London in this year.—See Bibliotheca Americana (Cat. of the John Carter Brown Library), item No. 2866.

26 Hugh Gaine offers for sale "An actual Survey of the Coast of America from Sandy-Hook to Cape Breton, on a very large Scale."—N. Y. Merc., Ag 26, 1782.

31 The rental of quarters for the British army from June 1 to this date, paid out of the vestry funds, amounts to £1058:13:4, New York currency; a statement to this effect is signed by John Smyth, treasurer.—Stevens, Cat. Index of MSS., 1763–1783, Library of Congress, citing the original record in the Royal Inst. of Gt. Brit., L: 133.

Sept. — In this month, The New-York Evening Post, a tri-weekly newspaper, was established. The date is determined from that of the only issue located, that of Mar. 21, 1783, which is No. 86 of Vol. II. This was a paper of quarto size, published by the firm of "Sower, Morton, and Horner," consisting of Christopher Sower, Jr., William Morton, and Samuel Horner. It is in the archives of the N. Y. H. S.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 410. See, further, Ap, 1783.

4 Lieut. Von Krafft, on a "Work command," states that "Men were sent out to dig wells," but "could not find anything but the faintest and poorest springs, even at a depth of 30 and 40 feet." All "the wells and ditches round about were dried up."—Von Krafft's Jour., 167.

8 "Sir Guy Carleton has in several Days past collected his Army from Long Island and means to reside himself near them at Hoor's [Horn's] Hook."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See S 17.

9 The barracks of the American post "at Bergen-Point, near Paulos-Hook, on the Jersey shore," are destroyed by fire.—Penn. Gaz., S 11, 1782.

10 In a letter to ex-Gov. Tryon, William Smith expresses the opinion that it is still not too late for England to effect a reconciliation with the colonies. If the ministry will "send authority to drive the Compact here, and discontinue the Negotiations at Paris, your American Affairs are still recoverable, and I flatter myself now they are rid of the madmen of the Rockingham Heresy that all will still go well . . . New York is now moving Congress to amend the Confederation—This I think imports much good & [we] shall soon know what is meant by those who would gladly be American Peers."—Wm. Smith Papers (MS.), folio 208. Sept. 10

Writing to a friend in England, a New Yorker says: "The refugees have abandoned their post at Bergen Point; many of them, perhaps all, are going to Halifax, where lands, according to their merits, are to be assigned them. The army here is encamped in two lines across the island; one at Macgowan's Pass, nine miles off. Col. Robinson's Corps and some Hessians have charge of the city. I suppose the march of the French troops from the southward to this neighbourhood, has occasioned these movements."—London Chron., O 29–31, 1782. "

11 A British officer on board the "Prince George" man-of-war writes from New York to a friend in Edinburgh: "Every necessary here is beyond imagination dear; beef and mutton from 2 s. to 2 s. 6 d. and none under a General or Commissary can get a fowl or goose. I yesterday gave three dollars for a pair of shoes. The political situation of things here, by the enquiries I have made, has continued much the same as after the unfortunate affair of Cornwallis.

"The Prince went to sea in the Warwick the day before we arrived off the hook. Admiral Digby's cruisers have been very successful."—London Chron., O 26–29, 1782.

14 An officer in Admiral Pigot's fleet writes from "off Sandy Hook:" "We arrived off here on the 4th instant all well, and were immediately joined by the Warrior and Invincible, who, after undergoing their repairs pushed after us, from Jamaica . . . Our fleet at present consists of 26 sail of the line, 1 fifty, and 7 frigates. . . . We have shifted our station, 13 sail of us being now moored at Staten Island, while Mr. Pigot, with the remainder of the fleet, lies abreast of New York. We find great plenty of provisions, and are abundantly supplied with fresh beef twice a week. Vegetables are scarce, owing to the dryness of the season, which is universally complained of on this coast. We found 8000 British troops encamped at King's Bridge, and about 4000 in different small encampments round New York. The Rebel army, under Washington, are at the White Plains, and, as we are told, have lately been joined by a considerable body of French troops."—London Chron., O 22–24, 1782.

Another letter from New York states: "Savannah is abandoned; Charlestown will share the same fate in a very short time; and we suspect this place will scarcely remain in our possession this Winter . . . "

"There has been a disorder here similar to your influenza; few families have escaped it."—London Chron., O 26–29, 1782.

15 Carleton left town this morning, says Smith, "& went into West Chester County with 3000 Men & brought in before Night near 100 Loads of Forage. He was doubtless apprehensive that it would be carried off by Washington as soon as joined by Rochambau who must [be] now about crossing at King's Ferry—Washington is at Verplanks Point with all his Forces—He will probably go out again for more."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

17 Carleton moves "his Baggage and Family to the Army 7 Miles out of Town [see S 8]. This Vigilance pleases the People."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

25 "Rivington publishes a General Idea of the State of North America. The Packet is to sail next week & the Intention of this Paper is doubtless on this Side of the Water to repress a Vindictive Spirit—On the other to correct the Design of the Rockingham Party for giving up the Dependency of the Colonies—Mr Shoemaker had the Perusal of the Draft last Monday and no other Person."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

A lot is advertised for sale which is described as "fronting Petty-Coat Lane or Field Market Street."—Royal Gaz., S 25, 1782. For the history of this street, see L. M. R. K., III: 1005. "

27 On account of the scarcity of butter in the market for private sale, a public auction is to be held of 1,000 firkins of butter "at the Kings Stores in the yard opposite to Waddington's Brewery."—Royal Gaz., S 25, 1782.

30 A horse-race is announced for this day "at Mr. George Mason's, at the end of Harlem Lane," the prize a "very neat Saddle and Bridle."—N. Y. Merc., S 80, 1782. The next month, a similar prize was offered to the winner of a race to be held Oct. 2, "at the Bull's Head Tavern, Bowery."—Ibid., S 20, 1782. This custom of racing on the public roads was deemed very dangerous, and on Ag 30, 1783 (q.v.), the sport was interdicted.

1782 Oct. — Capt. Alexander Coffin, Jr., an American naval officer, captured by the British, wrote later an account of his experiences on the "Jersey" prison-ship, which was in part as follows: ". . . We arrived about the beginning of October at New-York, and were immediately sent on board the prison-ship in a small schooner called, ironically enough, the Relief, commanded by one Gardner, an Irishman. This schooner Relief plied between the prison-ship and New-York, and carried the water and provisions from the city to the ship. In fact, the said schooner might emphatically be termed the Relief, for the execrable water and provisions she carried relieved many of my brave but unfortunate countrymen by death, from the misery and savage treatment they daily endured. Before I go on to relate the treatment we experienced on board the Jersey, I will make one remark, and that is, that if you were to rake the infernal regions, I doubt whether you could find such another set of DÆMONS as the officers and men who had charge of the old Jersey prison-ship. . . . On my arrival on board the old Jersey, I found there about eleven hundred prisoners; many of them had been there from three to six months, but few lived over that time if they did not get away by some means or other. They were generally in the most deplorable situation, mere walking skeletons, without money, and scarcely clothes to cover their nakedness, and overrun with lice from head to foot. The provisions, Sir, that were served out to us was not more than four or five ounces of meat, and about as much bread, all condemned provisions from their ships of war, which no doubt were supplied with new in their stead, and the new in all probability charged by the commissaries to the Jersey. They, however, know best about that; and however secure they may now feel, they will have to render an account of that business to a Judge who cannot be deceived. This fact, however, I can safely aver, that both the times that I was confined on board the prison-ship, there never were provisions served out to the prisoners that would have been eatable by men that were not literally in a starving situation. The water that we were forced to use was carried from this city; and I positively assert, that I never, after having followed the sea thirty years, had on board of any ship, (and I have been three years on some of my voyages) water so bad as that we were obliged to use on board the old Jersey; when there was, as it were to tantalize us, as fine water, not more than three cables' length from us, at the mill in the Wallabout, as was perhaps ever drank.

"There were hogs kept in pens on the gun-deck by the officers of the prison-ship for their own use; and I have seen the prisoners watch an opportunity, and with a tin pot steal the bran from the hogs' trough, and go into the galley, and when they could get an opportunity, boil it on the fire, and eat it as you, Sir, would eat of good soup when hungry. This I have seen more than once, and there are those now living beside me who can bear testimony to the same fact. . . . I reflect how many hundreds of my brave and intrepid brother seamen and countrymen I have seen in all the bloom of health, brought on board of that ship, and in a few days numbered with the dead, in consequence of the savage treatment they there received; . . ."

In early March, 1783, again a captive, Capt. Coffin was once more confined on the "Jersey," where, he says, the greater number of his former fellow-prisoners "had taken up their abode under the surface of that hill . . ., where their bones are mouldering to dust. . . ." The "Jersey" being crowded, he was transferred with other prisoners to the "John," which was a transport of about 300 tons. "There we were treated worse, if possible, than on board the Jersey; and our accommodations were infinitely worse, for the Jersey being an old condemned sixty-four gun ship, had two tier of ports fore and aft, air ports and large hatchways, which gave a pretty free circulation of air through the ship; whereas the John being a merchant ship, and with small hatchways, and no ports, and the hatches laid down every night, and no man allowed during the night to go on deck, . . . was enough to destroy men of the most healthy and robust constitutions. All the time I was on board this ship not a prisoner eat his allowance, bad as it was, cooked, more than three or four times; but eat it raw as it came out of the barrel. . . . Almost (and in fact I believe I may safely say) every morning a large boat from each of the hospital ships went loaded with dead bodies, which were all tumbled together into a hole dug for the purpose, on the hill where the national navy-yard now is. . . ."—From The Destructive Operation of Foul Air, Tainted Provisions, Bad Water and Personal Filthiness upon Human Constitutions; exemplified in the unparalleled Cruelty of the British to the American Captives at New York during the Revolutionary War on Board their Prison and Hospital Ships, in a communication to Dr. Mitchill, dated September 4, 1807 [citing the Medical Repository, XI: 260–67]. Also A Letter to the Tammany Society upon the same subject, by Captain Alexander Coffin, Jun., One of the surviving sufferers, with an Introduction by Charles I. Bushnell (N. Y., 1865). Oct. —

A "Gentleman of Character in New York" writes to a friend in England that "the army is still encamped towards King's Bridge, and that of the Rebels and French near Crom-Pond. The latter does not exceed 8000 men, so that there is no danger of an attack on New York. . . . Rebellion is still up in the three middle colonies, who have paid more taxes than all the others, and their leaders are still very violent: . . . The post at Loyd's Neck is abandoned, and what is to be done with the wretched Refugees I know not; the door is shut against their return, and they have no hopes from Britain, where men, they think, are more inclined to their enemies than to them. The panic that we had on the first news, occasioned alarming desertions in some of the provincial corps, but it is getting over, as those who deserted did not find the reception they expected, but the late removals we have had, (the battalions are now encamped at New York,) will in part continue it. . . . Admiral Pigot with his fleet is still here; the French at Boston; the Admiral has fortified the islands in the bay, with an appearance of fear of an attack, and the Brigadiers of militia are ordered to have the militia ready. . . . Ships have sailed to bring off the garrison of Charlestown, a second division follows in a day or two; an evacuation of New York is expected, and many are preparing accordingly."—London Chron., N 16–19, 1782. 2

"To day the Prince [William Henry], the Admiral [Digby] and all the Generals reviewed the whole army which was in camp drawn up in three lines of battle, in the neighborhood of Harlem." —Von Krafft's Jour., 169. 4

The first convoy of loyalists sails from New York for Nova-Scotia. It consists of "a fleet of transports, having on board a number of Loyalists with their families, amounting in all to 460 persons." Previous to embarking, "they were supplied from the King's stores with provisions of all species, sufficient for their support for a full year, besides an allowance of 21 days rations for their passage; they were also furnished at the expence of Government with comfortable cloathing for men, women, and children, with a proper assortment of medicines, various kinds of husbandry tools and arms and ammunition for hunting and defence. They are to have liberal grants of lands in that province, surveyed and laid out for them at the public cost; such of these Loyalists as were in the enjoyment of pecuniary allowances from government, received also a full year's pay in advance. They are mostly Farmers who have been driven from their dwellings and possessions by the enemies of Gt. Britain, and having families to support and seeing no prospect of a speedy peace, petitioned to be allowed a settlement in Nova Scotia."—Royal Gaz., O 19, 1782; Winsor, VII: 199. The entire company of refugees in America was concentrated in New York, by the gradual reduction of the number of British posts. See the chapter on "Expatriation," in Van Tyne's The Loyalists (1902), 286. 6

Col. John Roberts, lately sheriff of New York, is allowed £50, "in lieu of rent of houses used as goals for rebel prisoners," from July 1 to Sept. 30.—Report on Am. MSS. in Royal Inst. of Gt. Brit., III: 168. 14

"A great number of refugee families are preparing to leave New-York; and the best informed gentlemen on the lines assure us, that great preparations are making, which they suppose for a general evacuation.—David Mathews, the mayor, and several other active loyalists, have taken vessels for the transportation of themselves and families."—N. J. Gaz. (Chatham), O 23, 1782. 19

Washington writes to Lafayette that, while there is some belief that the British are to evacuate New York, they still remain there. —Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 101–2. On Dec. 18, he wrote in the same vein to Maj.-Gen. Greene. The British force in New York was then over 10,000.—Ibid., p. 125. 20

Lieut. Von Krafft moves temporarily into "Arnold's house No 82, . . . (in the Pump Street)."—Von Krafft's Jour., 170. "

Valentine Wirth advertises his residence for rent, "in Greenwich Street, No. 9, and a good stable and a copper [boiler?], . . . near the Foundery, opposite the Oil Mill."—Royal Gaz., O 23, 1782. 23

A British officer writes from New York to a friend in Cork: "The 24

1782 Oct. 24 Congress have treated the offers of Independence, made to them by Great Britain, with the utmost contempt . . . The offer of Independency has not been of the smallest use; but, on the contrary, has been of much mischief. It has made the rebels very violent.

"The hard money tax has been collected with more ease than it otherwise would; indeed it appeared that the rebels could not have collected one-sixth part of the stipulated sum, had it not been for the unfortunate offer of Independency. Every thing seemed to be at a stand with them, and I am fully convinced, that if nothing was done by us, except that we held New York and Charlestown, and ruined their commerce, in a very little time they would wish for peace; but whilst Independency is in agitation, and evacuation talked of, it is no wonder they are in high spirits."—London Chron., Ja 4–7, 1783.

26 John Adams, one of the peace commissioners, arrives in Paris. —Winsor, VII: 133–34.

Nov. — Towards the end of 1782, Jean Michel Mongolfier, and his brother, Jacques Etienne Mongolfier, of Annonay, France, made the first practical balloon. On June 5, 1783 they inflated with heated air a linen globe, 105 ft. in circumference, and released it in the presence of a considerable concourse of people.—Description des Expériences de la Machine Aerostatique, by the MM. de Mongolfier (Paris, 1783). For later experiments, see Aeronautica (London, 1879). On Aug. 30, 1783, M. Charles, at Paris, released the first hydrogen balloon.—See Benj. Franklin's account of this in A. A. S. Proc., XVIII (N. S.): 260.

5 Lieut. Von Krafft takes up quarters "at Martin's Wharf in Leffert's house, where Gen. Carleton had lodged this summer and where now 6 officers occupied the large number of rooms."—Von Krafft's Jour., 172.

9 The following letter is written by a privateer officer imprisoned on the "Jersey:" "The deplorable situation I am in cannot be expressed. The captains, lieutenants and sailing masters are gone to the provost, but they have only got out of the frying pan into the fire. I am left here with about 700 miserable objects, eaten up with lice, and daily taking fevers, which carry them off fast."—Salem correspondence in Penn. Packet, Ja 2, 1783.

" A young Irishman, recently arrived in New York in a cargo brig from Cork, records in his journal: that, "being a Presbyterian," he "enquired for a meeting House, but was informed there was none, that Profession being as much distressed as possible since the Commencement of the War." He comments on this: "is it not terreable to think that English Subjects on this side the Atlantic cannot enjoy that Liberty of w^{ch} they boast so much on the other, but are depending on the Caprecious tempers of governers—who deprive them even of the exercise of their religion. . . ."—From the original MS., printed in N. Y. P. L. Bull., Nov., 1923.

11 A fleet of "twenty-three sail of victuallers and transports" arrives at Sandy Hook. They had sailed from Quebec on Oct. 11 "under convoy of his Majesty's ships Albemarle of 28 guns, Horatio Nelson, Esq; [later Lord Nelson] commander, and the Pandora, of 24 guns, . . ."—Royal Gaz., N 13, 1782. Nelson was at this time a captain, 24 years of age.

In a private letter, written on board the "Albemarle" on Nov. 13, he told of meeting Prince Wm. Henry in these words: "I had the honour of an introduction to the Prince on board the Barfleur by my Lord Hood, was much pleased with him he will make a good sailor or I am much mistaken we shall be proud of him."—From facsimile in Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 872; N. Y. Genealog. and Biog. Rec. (1871), II: 35.

In later years, the prince described this interview which had left a vivid impression upon him. He said: "I was then a midshipman on board the Barfleur lying in the narrows off Staten Island, and had the watch on deck; when Captain Nelson of the Albermarle came in his barge alongside. He appeared to be the merest boy of a captain I ever beheld, and his dress was worthy of attention. He had on a full-laced uniform, his lank unpowdered hair was tied in a stiff Hessian tail of extraordinary length: the old-fashioned flaps of his waistcoat, added to the general quaintness of his figure, produced an appearance which particularly attracted my notice, for I had never seen anything like it before, nor could I imagine who he was, nor what he came about. My doubts were, however, removed, when Lord Hood introduced me to him. There was something irresistibly pleasing in his address and conversation; and an enthusiasm, when speaking on professional subjects, that shewed he was no common being."—Watkins, Life and Times of William the Fourth (1831), 84. Nov. 11

"The Creditors of Mr. Charles Loosley, are requested by the Trustees, to meet this Evening, at Six o'Clock, at the Widow Todd's Tavern, near the Ferry-Stairs."—Royal Gaz., N 16, 1782. 16 Loosley had taken over the tavern at the Brooklyn Ferry in 1779 (q. v., My 7). His house furnishings were sold for the benefit of creditors on N 26 (q. v.).

An advertisement announces the auction sale of Looseley's effects. 26 The list of goods reveals somewhat the character of the furnishings of a high-class tavern of the period. His furniture and effects include: "all the genuine Household Furniture, consisting of Mahogany and other Bedsteads, Feather Beds and Matrasses, Chintz and other Curtains, Blankets, Sheets, &c. Mahogany Drawers, Dining, Tea, and Card Tables; an elegant Clock in a Mahogany Case; a curious Collection of well chosen Paintings and Pictures; a large Pier and other Looking Glasses, in gilt and plain Frames; Table and Tea Sets of China, Plate, &c. A capital well toned Organ, made by one of the first Hands in London. A Billiard Table, lately put in thorough Repair. Near twenty Globe Lamps, fit for Hall or Passage. A large quantity of Damask and other Table Linen. Kitchen Necessaries of all Kinds. Waggon, Horses, Cows, &c. Two Tenements adjoining the House. A Flag Staff, with Ensigns, Pendants, and several Hundred of transparent and Tin Lamps, fit for an illumination.

"N. B. The Things to be viewed any Time, before the Day of Sale

"Anthony Van Dam, Charles Keeling } Trustees."

—Royal Gaz., N 20, 1782.

Provisional articles "for treating of peace" between Great Britain and the United States are agreed upon and signed in Paris by Richard Oswald, the British commissioner, and John Adams, B. Franklin, John Jay, and Henry Laurens, four of the commissioners of the United States. These articles are "to be inserted in, and to constitute the Treaty of Peace, proposed to be concluded, . . . but which Treaty is not to be concluded, until terms of a Peace shall be agreed upon between Great-Britain and France; and his Britannic Majesty shall be ready to conclude such Treaty accordingly."—Published with the Acts Passed at the Second Session of the Congress (1790), 161–64. See also an address delivered before the N. Y. H. S., on Nov. 27, 1883, by John Jay, on The Peace Negotiations of 1782 and 1783, pub. by the society, 1884; and Winsor, VII: 87, 144; VIII: 414, 463. The announcement of this event, which later culminated in the signing of preliminaries to a general peace on Jan. 20, 1783, was made in New York on March 25, 1783 (q. v.). For the Definitive Treaty, see S 3. 30

Joseph Stevens, a livery-stable keeper, advertises that he has provided a four-horse carriage to make regular trips from his house, No. 16 Broadway, near Fort George, to Fort Knyphausen and return.—Royal Gaz., D 4 1782. Dec. 4

In a speech to parliament, King George says: "I have pointed all my views and measures, as well in Europe as in North America, to an entire and cordial reconciliation with those Colonies. 5

"Finding it indispensable to the attainment of this object, I did not hesitate to go the full length of the powers vested in me, and offered to declare them Free and Independent States, to take effect whenever terms of peace shall be finally settled with the Court of France.

"In thus admitting their separation from the Crown of these kingdoms, I have sacrificed every consideration of my own to the wishes and opinion of my people. . . . Religion, language, interest, affections may, and I hope will yet prove a bond of permanent union between the two countries: To this end, neither attention nor disposition shall be wanting on my part. . . .

"Having manifested to the whole world, by the most lasting examples, the signal spirit and bravery of my people, I conceived it a moment not unbecoming my dignity, and thought it a regard to the lives and fortunes of such brave and gallant subjects to shew myself ready on my part to embrace fair and honourable terms of accommodation with all the powers at war.

"I have the satisfaction to acquaint you, that negociations to this effect are considerably advanced, the result of which, as soon as they are brought to a conclusion, shall be immediately communicated to you."—N. Y. Merc., F 17, 1783. See F 25, 1783.

Carleton informs me, says Smith, that he has "written for Leave 11

1782 Dec. 11 to come Home & that he expected it by the next Packet.—I told him with Emotion that then the Business of America was up & every Man would as soon as this was known look to himself. That the Whiggs would impute his Resign^n to a Discord between his Liberality & the Designs of the Governm^t & believe the worst of the latter as they did the best of him & his Intentions.

"He said that the present Ministers had cross'd his Plan & sought others which he believed had been treated with deserved Contempt—That he did not want the Profits of his Place & he could [not] pursue Measures he did not approve. . . .

"He said he was importuned from all Quarters to know what he had to offer to America—and felt himself very unhappy to be able to give no Answer to the Expectations of the People.

"He complained at the same Time of the Restraints upon his Arms tho' he wished he said not to use them nor thought any Thing more was necessary than to have it known that he was not restrained to give Success to proper Overtures.

"He agreed with me that as no Accident had weak[en]ed our Navy the Disposition of America became daily more favorable to negotiations & would continue while we maintained a Naval Superiority—I remark'd that this proved no Time had elapsed to our Detriment and that the news we had this Day of the Repulse of the Enemy & the Relief of Gibraltar, were Grounds for high Confidence had he his expected and requisite Powers.

"I believe on the whole that his Request of Leave to resign is a Stroke of Policy, to serve Lord Shelburne in the Cabinet and please the King, as well as to exalt his own Character. He seems pleased at all my Fears of the Event of his Departure and as I rose to leave him beg'd me to take Reference of Compl^ts for the Non Restitution of Property and said he would support my Opinions & Reports."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

24 "A Fleet of 80 or 90 Sails leave the Hook for England. It is probable that Vandreuil's Fleet are gone or about to Sail from Boston and many have anxieties for our's. It is strange that they have been here so long. It is imputed to Digby's Desire to imploy the Men of War on the Coast.—We are also uneasy for a Fleet expected from Charles Town—Vandreuil may think fit to visit that Coast. By the Boston Papers the French Army came on to Boston about 3^d Instant to imbark."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" Carleton tells Smith "he has not his expected Powers—that they do not consent to his Absence—will wait his Reconsideration. Does not seem to like the Implication of Rashness & the Possibility of Changing his Mind.—I express'd my Hope that before his Letter now gone arrived, he would have his wishes gratified by competent Authorities—He replied they were promissed, but he doubted the Fulfilment, because they ought to have come long since. This led me to observe that Lord Shelburne was imbarrassd by his Engagements when in Opposition and then to shew that tho' accidents might have happened to render the Detention of the Powers censurable, yet that nothing was lost but matters mended by the 12 April & Relief of Gibraltar. He spoke ag^t the Negotiations at Paris, and I replied that they gained Time & this gave Place to the abatement of the Frensy of Party. He censured the Mutability of Temper in England, express'd astonishm^t that the Rockinghams should be popular for backing the Independency, & now be ruined for contending for what the People then approved." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

27 The Masonic Lodge, No. 210, has its quarters "at Brother Kirk's Tavern, in the Fields" (see O 22, 1781).—Royal Gaz., D 25, 1782.

30 John Delafons, "Agent Victualler," publishes the following: "Notice is hereby given, to any Person or Persons, inclinable to enter into a Contract for supplying Fresh Beef to his Majesty's Ships at this Port, to send in their Proposals to me, in Writing, sealed, on or before the 18th of January next, on board the Centurion Victualler, at Hallet's Wharf, or at No. 217, Water-Street." —Royal Gaz., Ja 1, 1783; De Voe, Market-Book, 171.

1783

— In this year, Pelatiah Webster wrote and published a tract entitled A Dissertation on the Political Union and Constitution of the Thirteen United States of North America, . . . By a Citizen of Philadelphia, in which he proposed that the federal government have a congress of two houses, a federal judiciary, and heads of departments. This having started discussion, Noah Webster, in 1785, wrote and published Sketches of American Policy, to express the need of a stronger government. 1783 —

A manuscript judgment-roll, consisting of the names of loyalists, arranged alphabetically, against whom judgments have been found under the Confiscation Act (see O 22, 1779), shows their names, addresses, occupations, dates when indictments were found, and dates when judgments were signed (most of them in 1782 and 1783). This roll occupies the latter half of a thin folio ledger (MS.), the first half of which consists of naturalization statistics (1740–1769), and a list of immigrants (1802–1814). It is preserved in N. Y. P. L. (MSS. Div.). —

For a list of privateers fitted out at New York from 1777 to 1783, inclusive, see Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 875–79. —

The following description of the eastern shore of Manhattan Island, from Corlaer's Hook to Kipps' Bay, as it was in 1783, was published in 1835 and signed "Joshua:" —

"At the point of Corlaer's Hook were the ruins of an old house, and the remains of a fortification thrown up by the Americans in 1776; to the northward of the point were the houses of Abraham Cannon, of Caspar Miller, and a Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Cannon kept a tavern, and ferry boats to carry passengers over to Bushwick. The houses above mentioned were the only dwellings which stood near the river, between Corlaer's Hook and the house of Mr. Kipp at Kipp's bay. The house of Mr. Kipp was dreadfully shattered by cannon balls when the British landed at that place. Between Corlaer's Hook and Brande Molen Point, lay a small island. The Point itself contained about two acres of land, which on the easterly side had an elevation of about fifteen feet. Between Corlaer's Hook, the Island, and the Point, lay the meadow called Stuyvesant's Meadow. From the Point northwesterly, the land gradually descended to a hard shore, which connected the Point with the Stuyvesant Farm. On the bluff of the Point were the remains of a small breast work, also thrown up in 1776. Two heavy pieces of ordnance, from this point, hulled the Rose frigate (Captain Wallace) with seventeen balls in eighteen discharges. The ship would have been sunk if the darkness had not saved her; she was removed in the night. . . .

"Between Corlaer's Hook and Brande Molen Point, lay the Corlaer's Hook Fishery. The fishermen erected their shanties on the small Island before noticed. A flat lay between the Hook and Point, whereon the seines were drawn.

"On the northeasterly side of Brande Molen Point, lay Stuyvesant's Fishery, in the cove bearing the owner's name. From the Point towards the Cove, the bottom and shore was hard, with a few rocks for about two hundred yards; then began an extensive mud flat, which continued beyond the Stuyvesant Farm."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 10, 1835. For further description by "Joshua," see 1787.

The street commissioner's report of Feb. 6, 1809, to the common council, respecting the high-water mark on the Hudson River from the Battery to the State Prison (see L. M. R. K., III: 973) states that "A map in the possession of Trinity Church made in or about the year 1783, . . . pretty distinctly delineates the line of high water along the property of Trinity Church from Partition [Fulton] Street to the extremity of Anthony Lispenard's possessions."—M. C. C. (MS.), XIX: 395. —

At this time, the mansion of the Philipses, on the corner of King (Pine) and Smith Sts., was kept as a lodging-house. Later it became the Bank Coffee House, under the famous host, William Niblo (see 1814).—Duer, N. Y. as it was during the latter part of the last century, 9–10. —

St. Jean de Crèvecœur writes from Caen to Benjamin Franklin: "I have been Wittness whilst I was in America of a CirCumstance which I think, it Imports Your Excellency to Know; my Good Intention will I hope, apologyse for the Liberty I am taking, if your Excellency is acquainted With it; if unknown, it is Certainly my duty as a good Cytysen of that Country to Inform you of what Follows— Jan. 3

"In the year 1775 [error for 1776—q. v., F 11] Samuel Bayard Junior deputy Secretary of the then Province of New York, was ordered by ye Convention to the house of Nicholas Bayard a Mile out of Town, in order to Watch over the records of the Province, then under the Guard of a Capt. & 30 Men; Some time after [Je 14, 1776.—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 494], they were Transported to Kingston on the North River, Vulgarily Called Eusopus [see O 10, 1777]; under the Guard of the Same Person, & the Same 1783 Jan. 3 Military Party; 18 Months after the said Samuel Bayard, Contrary to ye oath he had Taken to ye Convention, found Means of Sending that part of those Records which Contained the Grant of Lands &c[a] to Gov[r] Tryon then on board the Dutchess of Gordon; Since that, they have been Conveyed to the Tower of London, where they now are; those papers, fortunately become useless to G. Britain, at the return of the Peace, must be of the Greatest Consequence to that State, because, as you well Know, they Contain not only the Title of Lands but the Copy of Wills &c."—Crèvecœur, Letters of an American Farmer (1904), 340–42 (a reprint, with additions, of the original edition of 1784, entitled Lettres d'un Cultivateur Americain).

6 Alexander Grant, of the "Navy Coffee-House, Sign of Lord Cornwallis, near the Battery," returns his thanks to the Public in general, and to the Gentlemen of the Navy and Army in particular, for their past favours;—begs to inform, that a good Dinner will be provided every day at 3 o'clock precisely."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 6, 1783. The Navy Coffee House was evidently one of the many taverns opened during the British occupation of the city, and closed before Evacuation Day. Cf. O 7, 1778.

14 Gov. Robertson issues a proclamation appointing Jan. 23 as a day of thanksgiving. In it he says: "it hath graciously pleased Almighty God to bestow signal Victories on his Majesty's Arms, and to defeat the united efforts of combined nations, whose powers, even when separate, have been formidable to all Europe." He recommends that prayers be offered "that these events may not only prove advantageous to our nation, but conducive to the Peace and Happiness of mankind. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Ja 20, 1783.

15 "Sir Guy [Carleton] told me," says Smith, "on Monday Evening [the 13th] that he expected to return to England on the arrival of another Mail.—He is plainly disgusted at the Want of the promised Powers & grows more so as he percieves the Probability of his Success in the Use of it—I ventured to Suggest that the present ministry had committed themselves to him—That if they did not secure the Reunion he could ruin them by disclosing that it had been in his Power—He said if they effected it he should be content."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

20 Preliminary articles of peace between Great Britain and France and Great Britain and Spain are signed at Versailles by representatives of the three nations.—London Chron., Ja 28–30, 1783. See N 30, 1782; also Winsor, VII: 87, 158. The preliminary treaty, however, does not affect the relations between the United States and Great Britain while the war continues between England and France.—Ibid., VII: 155.

Feb. 1 "The General does a very popular Act in ordering 35 Suits of Cloathing for the Naked Prisoners—Upham when [went] upon the Business yesterday & they were in an Extacy at the Relief. Many of these are Naval Prisoners who wish'd themselves under the Gen[l] & not the Admiral. He says he shall think all that Suffer Objects of his Care—This is adopting what we in our Report suggested as his Intention—viz that there should be no Misery in the House which Justice and the public Safty did not require.

"The Dinner to Day is another popular Act—I found there several Connecticut Refugees & several more just come in to drive Schemes of Commerce and among them a Pierpoint Edwards who has been a popular Leader—He is a New Haven Lawyer—Son of the celebrated Minister of Northampton—married Robert Ogden's Daughter of Elizabeth Town—They will sing Sir G's [Carleton's] Fame thro' Connecticut on their Return."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" This is the date of the first of three monthly lists, published by Valentine, signed by William Cunningham, "Captain and Provost Marshal" at New York, showing the names, birthplaces, residences, crimes, and dates of confinement of prisoners in the provost. The names are divided into "Civil Prisoners," "Naval Prisoners of War," and "Land Prisoners of War," and following each list are annotations, showing the number of prisoners released since the last return, casualties (none being recorded), and newspaper extracts (possibly inserted by Valentine) making reference to certain prisoners and crimes recorded in the lists. Among these extracts is that regarding John Paulding, one of the captors of Major André, who was himself captured in the attempted kidnapping of Col. De Lancey on Jan. 25 (see Royal Gaz., Ja 29, 1783).—Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 906–12.

3 "A House to be let, on Whitehall Dock, the sign of Lord Hood; and another in Little Dock street, No. 5, known by the name of the London Tavern.—Enquire of Patrick Blancherville, at No. 170, Water-street, near Burling's-slip."—N. Y. Merc., F 3, 1783. Feb. 3

The "large and commodious tavern, No. 110, Water-street" (see Jl 1, 1780), which has been run by John Cochran, is offered to let on May 1. The advantages of the house are numerous, "having long been used and resorted to as a public house," while the water from a pump in the yard is considered superior to the common tea water.—N. Y. Merc., F 3, 1783. "

'5 "It is Matter of Joy to some to find Sir G Carleton constituting Courts Martial for the Trial of Citizens, after the great Reluctance he has expressed to this Measure. . . .

"He could not avoid it at this Juncture as to such Criminals as were not dischargeable in the Exercize of Hab: Corpus Powers, unless he detained the Prisoners ag[t] their Request to be tried.

"It is a Court both of American & British Officers—vid Rivington's Paper of this Day.—Does not leave to the Court as formerly Civil concerns and is meant to procure the Discharge of the Prisoners from the Stain of rash Commitments & check the Police by exposing them when they are precipitate.

"The same Paper publishes the List of all Prisoners in the Provost agreable to our advice—The Adm[l] will not like it as to his Naval Prisoners—Sir G Carleton has distributed among the Naked there forty odd Suits of Cloaths, which they rejoice at with much Gratitude."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

The king issues at St. James's palace a proclamation, "declaring 14 the Cessation of Arms, as well by Sea as Land, agreed upon between his Majesty, the Most Christian King, the King of Spain, the States General of the United Provinces, and the United States of America, and enjoining the observance thereof." It is published in the Whitehall Evening Post of Feb. 18.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 7 and 14, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 774–75. See also broadside in N. Y. P. L. (Emmet Coll., 3271). It was proclaimed at New York on April 8 (q.v.).

The legislature passes "An Act to prevent private Lotteries, to " remit certain Penalties . . ." imposed under the act of 1774. Lotteries are deemed a nuisance, and are made indictable; but those established by congress are excepted.—Laws of N. Y. (1783), chap. 12; Ross, "The Hist. of Lotteries in N. Y.," in Mag. of Hist., V: 217.

" "At Dinner with the Adm[l] [Digby] he tells me," writes Smith, "the Congress is in his Debt for Naval Prisoners about 4000—That 12000 Came from England—He has paroled 17000 & put in the Prison Ships about a 1000. No argum[ts] can persuade Morris Marine agent to exchange cloath or subsist them—They die here now 50 of a Week.—I advise him to publish a List & the Correspondence but he talks of printing private Letters as indelicate—In Short is a Fool unless he has secret Reasons for his Conduct of which he is ashamed."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

Major Mackenzie (dep. adj. gen.) sends to Smith "two Drafts of 15 General Orders one to favor the Restoration of Houses &c to Persons within the Lines—The other to Persons without them [see F 18]—The Gen[l] called this Evening to converse upon the Policy of them and tho' with some Reserve gave me to understand that it was intended to evacuate this Place by May & that he meant to cultivate a Temper friendly to the Loyalists & to stimulate the Loyalists to look out for their own Estates."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

An extract from the Courier de L'Europe of Nov. 29, giving the 17 articles of peace as settled in London, is published in New York. It contains an "acknowledgment of the independence of the thirteen United States." By a particular article between Great Britain and the United States, "liberty is given to the Loyalists to remain in America without molestation, or to dispose of their property if it has not already been confiscated."—N. Y. Merc., F 17, 1783.

The following orders, signed "Ol. De Lancey, Adjutant- 18 General," are issued from "Head-Quarters, New-York:"

"Should there be any Persons, at present within the Lines, whose Houses or Lands have been with-held from them on Account of Offences or supposed Offences against the Crown, they are desired to make their respective Claims to the Offices of Police in New-York, on Long-Island or on Staten-Island, who will report the same to the Commander in Chief.

"All Persons without the Lines, who have abandoned Estates within, are desired to send their Claims to the Offices of Police aforesaid, and all persons occupying Estates with the above Descriptions, are strictly enjoined to take due Care thereof, as they 1783 Feb. 18 will be made answerable for any Damage, Waste, or Destruction, that may hence-forward be committed on the same. They will likewise permit any Person authorized from either of the abovementioned Offices, to visit the said Estates, and take Inventories of all Effects thereunto belonging."—N. Y. Merc., F 24, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 727. In regard to this, Wm. Smith writes:

"The Adjutant General Col° D[elancey] calls to shew me a Change in the two orders for Restitution of Property [see F 15] and to know whether I object. He says he carried the first to General R[obertson] who suggested that the appointment of Ch. Justice Smyth and myself implied Censure upon the Polices & that the Commander in Chief thought so himself. I replied that my Consent was to oblige the General & the Release could not but be a great Relief to me from a great deal of Trouble

"Both orders I find are united in one and the Polices of N Y & Long Island are to report to the Commander in Chief. I am satisfied in escaping the Wrath of the Loyalists and shall nevertheless be consulted on the Reports and ultimately have power to prevent Injustice; But I don't believe Gen[l] Robertson actuated by the Motives that incline me to approve of this alteration in the Orders which Col° D said if I had no Objections would he believed be out to Day in general orders."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

In consequence of this order, and another similar one on March 27, "many persons (who had been very active during the rebellion) were admitted within the British lines & in conforming to the mode prescribed in these orders were permitted to view their Estates, take inventories & unmolested or insulted to return."—"Case of William Butler," in N. Y. during the Am. Rev., 157–59.

25 "I sent Rivington for to Morrow's Gazette conjectures on the King's Speech (see D 5, 1782) which I shewed yesterday to M[r] Leaming and he wished to be thrown out [i. e., published] as instrumental to awe the Congressional advocates into a Distrust of each other and a Tenderness towards the Loyalists and to bear up the sinking Spirits of the latter, and reconcile them to the Whigg Leaders as ingaged in promoting the Reunion—If it stimulates the public Creditors Washington's Army and the Holders of confiscated Estates to foresee in a Reunion the best Hope of Satisfaction & Safety the Effects will be friendly to the common Interest."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. This extract from the diary reveals the authorship, hitherto unknown, of the column printed in heavy type in the next day's issue of the Royal Gazette. It reads as follows:

"To all that are not in the Secret of the Articles, agreed upon by the British Ministry, and the American Agents, the King's Speech to Parliament on the 5th of December last, or to speak more properly, what the Gazettes have given us for it, must be mysterious.

"The dismemberment of the Empire is deprecated, and yet an Independency offered to the Thirteen Colonies;—offered as the means to obtain an entire and cordial reconciliation—is a term of the pacification which the King trusts Parliament will see just cause to approve, and yet the grant nevertheless, his Majesty still hopes for a permanent Union between the two Countries.

"How happy if the revelation of the mystery, shall offend none but the enemies whom it is perhaps for the common interest to find offended—the enemies both of Great-Britain and America! Eternal Glory to the contrivers! if the investiture of the Provinces with Independency for a moment, is the instrument of enabling them, as a contracting power, to settle fundamentals to reunite them for ever.

"Well do we recollect the day, when the wisest and best men of America, dreaded Great-Britain's abandonment of her Colonies as their utter destruction; and that too was the day of their most elevated prosperity and coolest reflection—and can it be less tragical for this event to befall her in the hour of her extreme poverty and complicated embarrassment and distress? Mistaken advocate for the fatal separation! think you that Felicity and Independency are two words for the same thing?—anticipate the possession of your wish—thirteen petty nations with jarring interests controled by a majority that leaves real sovereignty to none, with power to oppress all of them! and at the same time, suppose Canada, Nova Scotia, and the two Floridas, to monopolize the fostering care of the Mother Country, once divided among all her Colonies, full handed as she is, to make them and such others as she may be induced to plant all along the Western Frontiers, the objects of your envy, and perhaps of your dread; and then condemn if you can, that plan of wisdom, which by the extinguishment of all animosities in America, shall restore even the authors of the general ruin to the confidence of their countrymen. Feb. 25

"Ambitious Delegates! will your thirst for office dare to sit in Congress at that perplexing Crisis, when the debt to France shall be exacted;—when the army, already Clamorous under misapplied tax-money, in courses of private commerce, shall insist upon millions more; and when the thousands of families that are ruined by the Paper Money Bubble, with the whole host of your other creditors, will compel you to the alternative of risking their resentment; or the more formidable vengeance of the rest of the Continent, all interested against your creditors, and neither able nor willing to be taxed any longer for their relief.—En quo discordia cives perduxit miseros! Merciful Heaven! Avert the scenes of horror in prospect—but where are the Funds adequate to the wants that must be satisfied, to prevent fellow-citizens from falling upon each other? Fortunate Americans! if your leaders have at last led you back to the only connection that can insure the redemption of your country, from such deluges of misery, that what you have already experienced, may be pronounced to be but as it were only the beginning of sorrows."—Royal Gaz., F 26, 1783.

A New York letter contains the following: "A large quantity of shipping are preparing here, which rendezvous at the Hook, for the purpose of transporting his Majesty's garrison and effects to England; there are now 37 sail of large transports here for that purpose. How soon the business may commence, it is, however, impossible to say, as we do not hear that the negotiation with Congress goes on at all briskly. America has her old doubts and fears, a circumstance which causes many obstructions, besides being highly disagreeable to the persons engaged in the business."—London Chron., Mr 18–20, 1783. "

An item of Fishkill news reports that a number of "determined Whigs" have agreed that any Tory printer in New York who, after March 1, uses the term "rebel" in his paper ("in contradiction to the declaration of their king, in his late speech to the contrary"), shall have his "ears cropt."—Penn. Packet, Mr 4, 1783. 27

Several prizes are brought into port. One is a ship of 22 guns, another of 16 guns, etc.—Penn. Packet, Mr 8, 1783. Mar. 1 "

The "Diary of the Moravian Congregation" of New York City records that "The soldiers have been lately employed in filling up and raising the grade in Trinity Churchyard, it having grown too shallow for the graves, whence injurious effects were apprehended. . . ."—Penna. Mag., X: 444.

New York State passes a law to permit people whose buildings have been destroyed by the enemy to secure timber for rebuilding from the forfeited estates.—Laws of N. Y., 6th sess., chap. 21 (printed by Holt, 1783). 4

"The Philadelphia Papers arrived this morning contain Rob[t] Morris's Resignation of the Office of Financier on the 24 Jany & 26 Feb last. It is a Confirmation of the Bankruptcy revealed in the Ans[r] of Congress to the Pensilvania Memorials 30[th] Jany. . . . If Morris's Letters of Resignation had been 4 or 5 Days later than the last of the two I should have thought him stimulated by the Publi[n] in Rivington's Gazette of 26 Feby—However that Publication must be seasonable in the Country at large and especially in the Army—Nothing was known in Phila: of this Resignation till the 1 Ins[t]."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 6

Carleton is "inquisetal for my Opinion," says Smith, "whether Washington had Hopes of setting himself up [as king]. I mentioned it as Arnold's Suspicion but that I thought M[r] Washington very ignorant of this Country if he had any such Ideas of Royalty as Arnold supposed." Carleton is "in a growing Disapprobation of the Negociations at Paris—He said firmly—America is the proper Ground—He added that he was in perfect Ignorance of what was doing on the other Side of the Water & assented to my Conjecture that Lord Shelburne could not but wish to connect [h]is own Name with the glorious Event of restoring the Empire.—Sir G doubtless is desirous of that Honor for himself."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. 8

Carleton discusses with me, says Smith, the idea of intimating "beyond the Lines that he will receive the Rebel Army into his own." However, he suggests "no Particular Gratifications." He would "receive Washington as a Collegue—confirm the Officers in their Standing, & give a Bounty as some Compensation for lost Pay, but not undertake the Discharge of Arrears."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Mr 5 and 8. "

1783 Mar. 14 A memorial, presented to Sir Guy Carleton by the commanding officers of 14 provincial regiments, is printed as a broadside. One of these was sold with the library of Henry F. De Puy, Esq. at The Anderson Galleries, New York, Nov. 18, 1919. In the same sale was a manuscript list of "His Majesty's Provincial Corps in N. America, from 1775 to 1782," dated June 12, 1783.

17 The legislature of the state passes an act "for granting a more effectual Relief in Cases of certain Trespasses." It makes it lawful for any "who are, or were inhabitants of this State, and who, by reason of the invasion of the enemy, left his, her, or their Place or Places of abode, and who have not voluntarily, put themselves respectively, into the power of the enemy, since they respectively left their places of abode, . . ., to bring an action of trespass against any person or persons who may have occupied, injured, or destroyed his, her, or their estate, either real or personal, . . ."—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783; "Case of Wm. Butler," in New York in the Am. Revolution, 165.

" In a copy of Gaine's New-York Pocket Almanack, For the Year 1783 (now in the N. Y. H. S.) is the following MS. memorandum of this date reading: "Packet Cap^{t} Bolderson arrived with 3 Mails & Articles [of Peace] between Britain & America. N. B. much such a conclusion, I had long ago expected. great distress will be experienced by many—many thous[ands] faithful subjects, and I suspect no good eventually to this my native country. please God I will remain, whig & Rebel violence notwithstanding." Von Krafft gives the date of the arrival of the packet as March 19.—Von Krafft's Jour., 179. See also Mr 25.

24 Congress orders the recall of all armed vessels cruising under commissions from the U. S.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 179.

" A very comprehensive compilation of papers relating to the evacuation of the city by the British, commencing with this date (on the subject of "a general peace"), and ending Nov. 25, has been published (without, however, the citation of authorities) in the Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 772–844.

25 Sir Guy Carleton receives letters via Philadelphia "importing that the Preliminaries of a general Peace were signed 21 Jan^{y} to take Place in Europe 20 Feb^{y} & here 20 March. Sir G C[arleton] was much affected at the dishonorable Terms & the whole Town credited the Report." After noting this on March 26 in his diary, Smith wrote:

"This Day we were called to a Council upon them at the Request of the Adm^{l} and were unanimously of Opinion that he ought not to discontinue his Vigilance, but send out the Cruizers immediately—

"It seems probable that there may be what is called Ruse de Guerre. I suspect that D'Estainge has sailed for the West Indies & that he looks to Supplies from America for his armaments.

"There are strong Grounds for Suspicion."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" An unsigned bulletin is published at New York from Rivington's press, announcing "A General Peace." It states: "Late last Night, an express from New-Jersey, brought the following Account. That on Sunday last, the Twenty-Third Instant, a Vessel arrived at Philadelphia, in Thirty-five Days from Cadiz, with Despatches to the Continental Congress, informing them, that on Monday the Twentieth Day of January, the Preliminaries to A General Peace, Between Great-Britain, France, Spain, Holland, and the United States of America, were signed at Paris, by all the Commissioners from those Powers; in consequence of which, Hostilities, by Sea and Land, were to cease in Europe, on Wednesday the Twentieth Day of February; and in America, on Thursday the Twentieth Day of March, in the present year . . . This very important Intelligence was last Night announced by the Firing of Cannon, and great Rejoicings at Elizabeth-Town.—Respecting the Particulars of this truly interesting Event no more are yet received, but they are hourly expected."—From facsimile in N. Y. P. L., of a broadside preserved in the old senate house, Kingston, N. Y.

26 According to a published notice of this date "Mr. Lenox's Tavern, in Cherry-Street" was a meeting place for Loyalists.—Royal Gaz., Mr 26, 1783.

27 The legislature passes an act to supplement that of Oct. 23, 1779 (q. v.), for the government of the Southern District of New York. This enables the council, named in the above-mentioned act, "to make any Convention or Conventions with the Commander in Chief of the British Forces, for the Speedy obtaining Possession of the Southern District of this State, or for the purpose of gaining Possession of any Post or Place occupied by the British Troops; and for giving those Troops the Protection they may be entitled to by any Treaty of Peace, or the Laws of Nations, as the said Persons may in their Discretion judge proper." Such conventions shall remain in force only until the British troops leave this state.—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783. Mar. 27

" Oliver de Lancey, adjutant-general, issues the following notice from headquarters (see F 18): "In order to save much unnecessary Trouble, Notice is hereby given, That no Persons whatsoever, are to be admitted into the British Lines, without having previously obtained Passports for the Purpose from the Commandant of New-York; any Persons who may have come in without Leave, are directed to report themselves immediately at the Commandant's office, otherwise they will be subject to very disagreeable Consequences.

"The General Officers commanding in the several Districts, will see that particular Attention is paid to this Order by the Officers at the Out-Posts."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 7, 1783.

28 The following announcement of peace is recorded under this date in the headquarters orderly-book kept while Washington was personally in command at Newburgh:

"Altho the public dispatches from our Commissioners in Europe have not arrived, and the Commander in Chief has it not in his power to announce officially a General Peace to the army yet he cannot resist the pleasure of Communicating the happiness he Experiences from a Certainty of that event and for the Satisfaction of every brave officer and Soldier under his Command he orders the following extract of a letter from his Excellency the Minister of France to be made public.

"'Philadelphia 24 March 1783.

"'Sir. It is with most lively and sincere joy that I have the Honor to inform your Excellency of the Conclusion of a peace. It crowns in the most happy manner your labours and the efforts of the United States. You'll sincerely participate the Complete satisfaction that this event gives me and I take the greatest possible share in the pleasure it will afford you.

"'I have not this news officially but it is not the less Certain and I pray you to permit me to offer the Officers of your army and all the American Troops my Congratulations and the tribute of respect due to their Virtue and Courage.'"

Following this: the "Commander in Chief is pleased to direct that all military arrangements shall continue the same as at present until further orders, that no relaxation in discipline or Police of the army shall be suffered," etc. See April 8. The general orders of Washington, compiled by Maj. Edw. C. Boynton, one of the trustees of Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, were published in that city in 1883.

In this month, the first issue of The New-York Morning Post was published. Its date is determined from that of the earliest issue found, that of Aug. 5, which is No. 128, of Vol. III. It appears to have been a continuation, without change in sequence of numbering, of The New-York Evening Post (see S, 1782). Morton and Horner were the publishers, the name of the third partner, Christopher Sower, being dropped. The latter had difficulty in adjusting his accounts (see his letter in the Royal Gaz., S 27, 1783). The paper was of folio size, and was published semi-weekly.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 463, 410. See, further, F 23, 1785. Apr. —

Writing to a friend in London, a "Gentleman of Character and Fortune in New York" says: "Peace has been proclaimed here this week; but the proclamation brought no peace to the poor Loyalists. Never was there so settled a gloom before on the countenance of the audience, on such an occasion. The multitude that attended was great—but no one hazza'd, or shewed any mark of joy or approbation, but the reverse. The Americans are now threatened with a terrible Indian war. . . . The withdrawing the French army, and divisions among the Loyalists, will prevent the latter from joining the French, as was the intention of many. The Loyalists, for the present, must bow under the yoke—there is no prospect of deliverance."—London Chron., Je 5–7, 1783. 6

" David Sproat wrote on May 10 to Maj. McKenzey, secretary to the British commander-in-chief: "In compliance with your request, I beg leave to inform you that on Sunday, the 6th of last month [April], his Excellency Rear Admiral Digby ordered Captain John Beazley, of His Majesty's ship Ampheon, to go on board the prison ships accompanied by me and read the proclamation [for the cessation of arms—see F 14, and Ap 8], which was 1783 Apr. 6 accordingly done. The same day it was read to the naval prisoners in the Provost, and a circular letter sent off express to the prisoners who were on parole on Long Island informing them thereof, and desireing them to hold themselves in readiness to be sent out. The next day I had six vessels in the Walabough under flags of truce, which on the 9th of April took the whole of the prisoners on board and carried them to their respective places of abode to save them expence and the fatigue of long marches—excepting about 18 or 20 sick and wounded who cou'd not be removed with safety. . . .

"The provost was cleared of the marine prisoners (without exception) on the 10th of April. And on and after the 7th of same month passports were granted to those who were on parole to go out, as it suited their convenience."—Rep. on Am. MSS. in the Royal Institution of Gt. Britain, IV: 76–77. For further information regarding the American "martyrs" on British prison-ships, see 1808.

8 At noon, the town major reads at the city hall the king's proclamation of Feb. 14 (q.v.), declaring the cessation of arms.—Royal Gaz., Ap 9; N. Y. Merc., Ap 14, 1783. It is reprinted by Rivington from the broadside received from London.—See a copy in the N. Y. P. L. The reception of this proclamation among loyal citizens is thus described in a Philadelphia news item:

"We are informed by persons who were present at New-York when the proclamation for a cessation of hostilities was read, in the presence of a great number of people, that at the conclusion, instead of the signs of approbation generally exhibited on such occasions, nothing but groans and hisses prevailed, attended by bitter reproaches and curses upon their king, for having deserted them in the midst of their calamities. The greatest dispair is depicted in every countenance, and the little comfort they can possibly experience in the desarts of Nova Scotia will tend to heighten their distress. It is said that the number of persons last embarked for that country amount to near four thousand."—Penn. Packet, Ap 17, 1783. See Mr 24.

On the same day, the deputy adjutant-general of the British army arrived at the American headquarters at Newburgh, with dispatches from Sir Guy Carleton to Gen. Washington, announcing "the ratification of the Articles of Peace."—Royal Gaz., Ap 19, 1783.

9 Washington wrote to Carleton on April 9 expressing his satisfaction at receiving the "joyful annunciation" of Carleton's having received "official accounts of the conclusion of hostilities." Without "official authority from Congress," but "perfectly relying" on Carleton's communication, Washington states that he will instantly issue orders "to the American out-posts, to suspend all acts of hostilities until further orders." He adds: "I shall be happy in the momentary expectation of having it in my power to publish to the American army a general cessation of all hostilities between Great Britain and America."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford), X: 221. See Ap 11.

" All the prisoners of war in New York and on board the prison ships are released.—Penn. Packet, Ap 17, 1783.

10 Gov. Robertson, who is soon to return to England, addresses the council. The seals, etc., are to be left with Lieut.-Gov. Elliott. —Cal. Coun. Min., 507.

At this meeting, held at the house of Gov. Robertson, the deputy-secretary of the province, Samuel Bayard, submits a report on the provincial records now in his custody, which, on Dec. 4, 1775 (q.v.), had been ordered placed on board the "Dutchess of Gordon," and which were returned to him (except the records of Indian cessions to the Crown) on Nov. 1, 1781 (see S 29, 1781). He says: "the books when received were in very bad condition, many of them much mildewed and greatly injured, in the binding particularly, owing, as I apprehend, to their having been a long time on shipboard and exposed to great damps, but as far as I have discovered, the writing is yet legible or in very few places defaced. I have used my best endeavors to preserve them, having frequently exposed them to the sun and air, and several times had them brushed through every leaf."—Senate Jour. (1820), 46 (embodied in a report to the legislature by Sec. of State J. V. N. Yates); Cal. Coun. Min., 507. Cf. "Tragedies in New York's Public Records," by Victor Hugo Paltsits, in Ann. Report Am. Hist. Ass'n (1909), 369–78 (in which, however, the date of Bayard's report is erroneously given as Apr. 9, 1788). See also D 6, 1775; F 11 and Ag 27, 1776; Mr 24, 1778.

11 In accordance with the king's proclamation of Feb. 14 (q.v.), which was read in New York on April 8 (q.v.), congress on its part issues a proclamation declaring the "Cessation of Arms."—Jour. of Cong., Ap 11, 1783. This was made public in the American camp at Newburgh on April 19 (q.v.), and sent by Washington from headquarters there to Sir Guy Carleton at New York on April 21.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 231; Winsor, VI: 746; VII: 87. Apr. 11

13 A Loyalist writes from New York to a correspondent in London: "I must confess though I stood prepared for bad terms, yet I did not think it was in the power of the greatest villains on earth to place us in so humiliating a situation; even the Rebels affect to pity our case. . . . All accounts from the country bespeak the utmost violence. Threats are thrown out, and vengeance denounced against all here. The town now swarms with Americans, whose insolence is scarce to be borne. Many of the Yorkers are meanly cringing and currying favour; such conduct will only insure contempt; not a person from New York is permitted to pass in the country, notwithstanding the great indulgence shewn here; should the troops be hastily withdrawn from this place, a scene of confusion and distress will take place that words cannot describe. . . . The French Gentlemen, and there are several now in this city, execrate the Ministry; they openly declare, that though pleased with the advantages their Monarch has acquired, yet as good subjects they feel hurt at the humiliating state they see the Loyalists placed in."—London Chron., My 17–20, 1783.

" Another New Yorker writes: "The last packet which arrived here about a week since, brought the distressing confirmation of a peace with America; by which I find the Loyalists in this country are most shamefully and traiterously abandoned. . . . Our fears at present surpass all description. Never was there upon the face of the earth a set of wretches in a more deplorable situation. Deprived of all hope of future comfort or safety, either for themselves or their unhappy wives and children, many have lost their senses, and are now in a state of perfect madness. Some have put a period to their miserable existence by drowning, shooting, and hanging themselves, leaving their unfortunate wives and helpless infants destitute of bread to support them; and I [am] afraid many more will follow the dreadful example."—London Chron., Je 7–10, 1783.

14 A humorous item of Boston "news" reads: "We hear from New-York, that the Independent Fever rages there to such a degree, among the tories and refugees, that it carries off great numbers weekly; and that general Carleton, in order to prevent the infection from spreading, has ordered many away to New-Scotland."—Penn. Packet, Ap 29, 1783.

" A New Yorker writes: "Peace being now restored to the country, our old inhabitants are beginning to come in and mix with us again; and I think matters will terminate here much better than many people were led to believe. Those that have come to town seem well pleased, and wish for a speedy reconciliation with their old friends."—London Chron., My 24–27, 1783.

" The city vestry's second financial report (for the first, see Ap 30, 1782) extends from May 1, 1782 to this date. It was audited by James Gautier.—See Henry B. Dawson's report on the city finances during the Revolution, in Proc. Bd. of Aldermen, LXXXIV: 222. See Ag 30.

" Among taverns in New York during the British occupation was that of one Ashley, at No. 2 Water St.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 14, Jl 14, 1783. The Marine Society held its meetings there.

15 Adj.-Gen. Oliver de Lancey issues an order of the British commander-in-chief (Carleton) that the following extract from the seventh article of the "Provisional Treaty between Great Britain and the United States" shall be strictly observed:

"And his Britannic Majesty shall, with all convenient speed, and without causing any Destruction, or carrying away any Negroes, or other Property, of the American inhabitants, withdraw all his Armies, Garrisons, and Fleets from the United States, and from every Post, Place, and Harbour within the same; leaving in all Fortifications the American Artillery that may be therein, and also order and cause all the Archives, Records, Deeds, and Papers, belonging to any of the said States, or their Citizens, which in the Course of the War may have fallen into the Hands of his Officers, to be forthwith restored and delivered to the proper States and Persons to whom they belong."

The order also announces that three British officers and two Americans have been appointed "to superintend all embarkations, and see that the above stipulations are strictly observed.

1783 Apr. 15 "Any Person claiming Property embarked, or to be embarked, will apply to any of these Gentlemen, who will call a Board to examine into the Merits of their Claims. . . . Should any Doubts arise on examination, the Circumstances of the case are to be minuted down, so as to furnish proper Evidence to Commissioners, who may hereafter be appointed on both sides to adjust and settle all claims and controversies between the parties. . . .

"Three of these Gentlemen will please to examine every Transport previous to its sailing, to prevent any evasion of this Order.

"The Refugees, and all Masters of Vessels, will be attentive that no person is permitted to embark as a Refugee, who has not resided Twelve Months within the British Lines, without a special Passport from the Commandant. It is also recommended to the Refugees, to take Care no Person of bad Character is suffered to embark with them. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., Ap 21, 1783.

Another order, on April 28, directed "that all persons in possession of any Archives, Records, Deeds, or Papers, as above recited, shall forthwith deliver them into the Secretary's Office, at Headquarters, taking a Receipt for the same."—Ibid., My 5, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 730; ibid. (1870), 778, 781.

Announcement was published on Sept. 16 that the "Board of Claims" would sit until Sept. 30, and no longer.—Royal Gaz., S 17, 1783.

16 Sir Guy Carleton issues a proclamation appointing a "Board of Commissioners for the settling and adjusting all matters of Debt, Case or Accounts, of the value of Ten Pounds, or upwards, contracted by any of the Inhabitants of this City, and its dependencies, since the first Day of November, 1776." They are to meet at the city hall on certain days, summon parties and witnesses, inspect books, papers, etc., to elucidate the facts, and determine, in a summary way, between the parties, as they may judge consonant with justice and equity.—N. Y. Merc., Ap 21, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 729.

" Gov. Robertson leaves New York for England.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1882), 181.

" Dr. James Beekman returns to his country-seat on East River, near the present 52d St.; he remained only two months, yielding possession to Gen. Carleton on June 16 (q. v.).—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 554.

" "Cock Gaffs, For the Royal Pastime of Cock Fighting. To be sold. Enquire of the Printer."—Royal Gaz., Ap 16, 1783.

17 About 5,000 refugees sail from New York for Nova Scotia.—Penn. Packet, Ap 22, 1783. See also Mr 24.

" Lieut.-Gov. Andrew Elliot presides in the council, having received the seals and instructions. He takes the oaths of office.—Cal. Coun. Min., 508.

19 The declaration by congress of a "Cessation of Arms" (on Ap 11) is proclaimed by Washington to the American army at Newburgh.—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), X: 231; Winsor, VI: 746; VII: 87.

" "The People have flocked hither from the Country since the proclaiming of the Cessation of Arms [see Ap 8 and 11] without any Regard to the Authority assumed on the other Side of the Lines—There are now upwards of 2000 in Town.

"The Dissolution of the American Army is hourly expected to take Place. The Soldiers will consider their Terms as out & go off to their respective Homes—The Officers are obliged to be content to become Creditors for 5 years Pay at 6 per Cent.

"There appears to be a general Desire to construe the Peace as perfectly compleated so anxious are the People for a Return to the Employments of a State of Tranquility."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

23 An open letter to Robert Morris, subscribed "Lucius," appears in the Freeman's Journal; it reads in part: "I have stated your conduct in publishing your letter of resignation, as so daring an instance of depravity deserves. The mortal wound it gave to our credit, both at home and abroad; the dangerous commotions it tended to excite in the army; and the invitation it held out to the enemy, to continue a war from which the desolation of our finances, and the dishonour of our public councils, as stated by you, gave the most flattering prospect of success; were consequences to be apprehended from such a publication, so palpable and glaring, that they could not possibly have escaped you. . . .

"How that august body to whom your resignation was originally addressed, could endure language of such insolence and reproach, is not to be comprehended. . . .

"Your friends and yourself had the art to excite great expectations from your appointment to the superintendance of our finances. Will you inform us how you have fulfilled our hopes. Tell us what ingenious plans of revenue you have produced; what loans your credit has obtained; what new resources you have opened; what savings you have made; and what debts you have discharged. This surely would have better become you than vain boastings of the sacrifices you have made of property and domestic bliss, while in the bosom of your family, in full enjoyment of your mercantile connections, with splendid appointments, lucrative patronage, and unrivalled power."—Freeman's Jour. (Phila.), Ap 23, 1783. Apr. 23

Under date of May 10, Smith says this letter intimates "Strong Suspicions of his [Morris's] Designs to ruin the American Cause & it supposes a Party in the Congress in his Views—He and Washington are intimate.—The Latter is written by Doct^{r} Arthur Lee who is connected with L^{d} Shelburne."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

The following letter, signed by "An American," is printed in a New London paper: "To all Printers of Public News-Papers. Tell it to the whole World, and let it be published in every news-paper throughout America, Europe, Asia and Africa, to the everlasting disgrace and infamy of the British king's commanders at New-York, 25

"That during the late war, it is said Eleven Thousand Six Hundred and Forty-Four American prisoners, have suffered death by their inhuman, cruel, savage and barbarous usage on board the filthy and malignant British prison ship called the Jersey, lying at New York. Britons tremble lest the vengeance of Heaven fall on your Isle, for the blood of these unfortunate victims!"—Conn. Gaz. (New London), Ap 25, 1783.

No investigation has been made by the present author to ascertain whether this is the earliest publication of the foregoing letter. That it was reprinted in an almost endless chain appears probable (see, for example, Penn. Packet, Ap 29, 1783); indeed it seems possible that this very statement is the foundation upon which American historians in later years based their evidently exaggerated estimates of the numbers who perished on the "Jersey" prison-ship.

During the ceremonies of the Tammany Soc. attending the interment of the remains of these martyrs at the Wallabout (Brooklyn) in 1808 (q. v., My 26, passim), orations, pamphlets, newspaper articles, and banners repeated the tale. An inscription containing these figures was afterwards engraved over the ante-chamber of the vault. Valentine published in the Manual of 1851 (pp. 417–18) an article on the prison-ships, by H. Onderdonk, of Jamaica, L. I., containing the statement: "Even as early as 1783, a reckless newspaper writer estimated (on what authority it is not stated) that precisely 10,644 seamen perished on board the Jersey, and this baseless conjecture has gradually passed into sober history, for a well-attested fact, as if 10,644 men could have died out of one ship in the space of three years, and been buried on the adjacent shore! The number that perished was doubtless fearfully great, and needed no exaggeration." Nevertheless, as late as 1890, a second appeal to congress (the first being in 1888) was published by the Society of Old Brooklynites "for the Erection of a Monument over the remains of 11,500 prisoners who died on board the British Prison Ships during the Revolutionary War." It contained the statement (p. 12): "It is estimated that between 11,000 and 12,000 prisoners perished on these vessels, it being claimed that the mortality on the Old Jersey alone amounted to five a day."

The statement is made in the present work (Vol. I, p. 328) that "about twelve thousand perished miserably" on these ships. Substantial credence was lent to the report of the large number who died, by the testimony of prisoners (see, for example, Ag 10, 1781; Je 11, Oct., and N 9, 1782), which shows that as many as eleven in one day died during their confinement on the "Jersey;" also by the statement published by Dandridge in Am. Prisoners of the Rev. (1911): "It is well known that twenty hogsheads of bones were collected in 1808 from the shores of the Wallabout, and buried under the auspices of the Tammany Society. . . . These were but a small part of the remains of the victims of the prison ships. Many were, as we have seen, washed into the sea, and many more were interred on the shores of New York Harbor, before the prison ships were removed to the Wallabout."

A perusal of the official correspondence, regarding conditions on the prison-ships and the interchange of prisoners, printed in the 1783 Apr. 25 Chronology, will probably convince the fair-minded reader that serious injustice has been done the English authorities in connection with this matter. Mr. James Lenox Banks, who published in 1909 David Sproat and Naval Prisoners in the War of the Revolution, states, in a letter to the author, that he has been unable to find in the commissioner's records of either the United States or England any facts to substantiate the statement that so many prisoners died during the period of British occupation of New York. Moreover, there appears to be no single official American report substantiating all the charges against the British management of prisoners. Nevertheless, that extremely unsanitary conditions and brutality existed in the provost jail and prison-ships, resulting in a very great loss of life, is evidenced by the testimony of prisoners, too numerous and detailed to be ignored. These have been summarized by Danske Dandridge in a recent work (1911), entitled American Prisoners of the Revolution. See also, concerning the provost jail, S 16, N, and N 18, 1776; and, regarding earlier investigations and observations concerning naval prisoners, see, e. g., Ja 25, F 2, 1781; Je 5, 11, 22, 24, 1782, etc.

26 A "Gentleman of Distinction in New York" writes: "New York is filled with persons from different States. Some have come in about business, others to claim and get possession of their houses, in which they are much disappointed, as none of them will be given up till the army goes off, and that I believe will not be possible for some months. It is said General Carleton will first see the articles of the treaty complied with, which the different States seem averse to, especially that respecting the Refugees. . . . General Carleton goes next week to meet General Washington and Governor Clinton of this State [see My 6], and no doubt will do every thing he can for us poor unfortunate Refugees; but I dread the time when the British troops leave us.

"I have conversed with many persons from the different States, who declare that almost every body in the country must be ruined, especially those who owe money. Lands, they say, will not rent for more than their taxes, and little or no money among them. All come in very hungry, and expect the Long Island farmers will let their money on interest; but few stay above a day or two, except those who have relations or friends houses to go to. They do not like to pay half a dollar a night for their bed, a dollar for their dinner, without wine or any thing else. Some of them, it is true, have made fortunes; but many more are ruined. General Robertson's going home gave P. V. Levingston possession of his house. He says, that by depreciation of the money, he has lost 20,000 l. and they all make similar complaints."—London Chron., Je 5–7, 1783.

27 A fleet of 75 vessels sails from New York for Nova Scotia, carrying about 7,000 persons, including troops and their effects, artillery, and public stores.—From Carleton's letter to Washington of May 12, in Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 543; see also N. Y. Merc., Ap 28, and My 5, 1783.

29 Several vessels from different parts of the United States have lately arrived at New York, "that port being at this time open for the American flag."—Penn. Packet, Ap 29, 1783. This report appears to have been somewhat premature.—See Jl 17.

" The following garrison order is issued by Brig.-Gen. Birch, commandant of New York: "In order to prevent any Waste or Destruction in the Houses under the direction of the Vestry or Barrack Office, Notice is hereby given, that the present possessors of Houses under the above description, are on no account to quit them without giving previous notice to the Commandant, that an examination may be made into their state; and on removal, the keys are to be lodged at his Office, No. 61, Wall-street: Any person presuming to take possession of such houses, without permission from the Commandant, must expect the most disagreeable consequences."—N. Y. Merc., My 5, 1783; Man. Com Coun. (1863), 731; "Case of William Butler" in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 161–62. See My, and Jl 10.

May — In a memorial of this date to Lord North, Benedict Arnold gives an account of his treason, and mentions the sum of money he received (£6,000). In addition, he speaks of raising in New York the "American Legion" to be used against his former brother-officers in America. He mentions also Mrs. Arnold and his family, how they had to flee from this country and his brilliant prospects in the American colonies. This memorial to Lord North is an appeal to be placed on the British establishment, as his and Mrs. Arnold's pensions would be greatly inadequate for the support of his numerous family. He says, in part:

"Your Memorialist, Influenced by Sentiments of Loyalty to the King, and Attachment to the British Constitution, has sacrificed a handsome property in America . . . and at the most Eminent hazard of his Life, Co-operated with Sir Henry Clinton, Commander in Chief of the British Army in America, which will appear by his official letters to Lord Sackville. But his Intentions and measures being discovered before they would be brought to a happy issue, which bid fair to put a fortunate end to the war in America. He was obliged to fly, and very narrowly, but fortunately, escaped from the Americans, and having joined the British Army in New York, the Commander in Chief was pleased to confer on him the Rank of Brigadier General, which was approved by the King . . . And your Memorialist begs leave further to observe that in Consideration of his Corps, and Services, he has received from Government only six thousand pounds sterling, one thousand pounds of which he has expended in raising his Regiment. May —

"Your Memorialist has not only sacrificed his Fortune, but is deprived of Four Hundred and Fifty pounds sterling per Annum, which he was intitled to receive from Congress, as also a large tract of land, and by the decided part which he has taken, his Family have been Banished from America, and he has sacrificed his prospects for providing for them there, which were undoubtedly of equal if not of greater Importance to them than his Fortune, which with that of others has been given up by the late Administration for the desirable purpose of obtaining Peace," etc.—From catalogue of the library of Henry F. De Puy, sold at The Anderson Galleries, Nov. 17, 1919, quoting from the original MS. Cf. O 9, 1780.

— A report is made, commencing with this date, showing the vestry houses occupied, the names of the occupants and of those who pay no rent, with the reasons for their being exempted.—Stevens, Cat. Index of MSS., 1763–1783, in Library of Congress, citing the original in the Royal Inst. of Gt. Britain, L: 128. See Ap 29.

1 Because the British have not yet evacuated New York, a number of the city's former inhabitants, who mean to return and have given up their houses in the country, "are obliged to disperse and separate their families, amongst such hospitable farmers who may be able to give them shelter." Their predicament "is more distressing than it has been for the past six years, for having neither house, garden, or other conveniency than what is obtained by mere favour."—Penn. Packet, My 6, 1783.

4 The following order, signed by Adj.-Gen. Oliver de Lancey, is issued from headquarters at New York: "As many Claims and Demands have been exhibited to the Commander in Chief for Properties supplied to the British Army, or Officers in the several publick Departments, since the 19th Day of April, 1775, and as it is expedient that the Nature, Extent, and Validity of such Claims and Demands should be known and ascertained, in order that Right and Justice may be finally administered," a board of commissioners is appointed "to receive and examine all such Claims and Demands, to call for and investigate the Proofs that may be exhibited thereof, and to register the same preparatory to a future Liquidation." It was announced that this board would assemble on May 8, at the city hall, and sit from 10 to 2 o'clock every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.—N. Y. Merc., My 5, 1783. The board met from the time of their appointment to within a very short time before the evacuation of New York, and many claims and demands against the British army and public departments were presented to them. —"Case of William Butler," in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 162–63 et seq.

5 Nathaniel Cooper advertises his store, which is at 67 Wall St., "between the Main Guard [city hall—see Ag 14] and the burnt church" (Trinity).—N. Y. Merc., My 5, 1783.

6 Gen. Washington and Gov. Clinton meet Sir Guy Carleton and Admiral Digby at Tappan to discuss "the evacuation, and other arrangements." Entertainment is prepared by "Mr. Francis" (Samuel Fraunces). His bill, it was said, amounted to £500.—Penn. Packet, My 13, 1783.

William Smith accompanied the British officers and, in his diary, under May 9, gives a vivid picture of the conference: "Yesterday morning I returned from the Interview with Washington for which we set out Sunday the 4 Inst Sir G Carleton in the Perseverance Frigate Capt Lutwycke but Mr Elliot and Myself in the Greyhound Yatch.

"We reached Dobbs's Ferry Monday Evening, when Major Beckwith who had been sent in a Whaleboat a Head in the Morning 1783 May 6 to announce our approach came on Board with an Invitation to land at the Sloot the next Day & to a Dinner at Orange Town.

"Sir Guy with his two Aid de Camps Majors Beckwith & Upham Cap^{t} Lutwycke & a Col^{o} Smith who had just come from Washington went a Shore in one Barge—and M^{r} Elliot M^{r} Secretary Morgan & myself in another. We landed about 11 o'Clock Tuesday 6th & met on the Shore Washington and two other of his Aid de Camps, Col^{o} Cobb & Col^{o} Humphreys & I think M^{r} Trumbul the Sec^{ry}—There was a Charriot in which the two Generals proceeded—Horses were offered to the Rest but M^{r} Elliot & I walked with Col^{o} Smith the other Aid de Camp.

"We met at M^{r} Dewints the House of Rendezvous M^{r} Clinton M^{r} Scott M^{r} Duer M^{r} Benson and several others—An Hour was spent in Congratulations & seperate Chat in & before the Door, when the two Generals took a Room & M^{r} Morgan Called M^{r} Elliot & myself in.

"There was soon collected a Number Consisting of The Generals M^{r} Clinton the Gov^{r} M^{r} Scott—One of his Council M^{r} Albert [Egbert] Benson—Att^{y} General M^{r} Trumbul Washingtons Sec^{ry} L^{t} Gov^{r} Elliot M^{r} Morgan & My Self.

"when all seated Washington opened the Business addressing himself to Sir Guy Carleton and said it respected three Points

"1 The Preservation of Property from being carried off and especially the Negroes

"2 The Settlement of the Time for the Evacuation of Newyork &

"3 The extending the Governm^{t} of the State of Newyork as far as might be convenient before the intire Evacuation took Place.

"He proceeded upon the Supposition that there was a Treaty, and delivered himself without animation with great slowness & a low Tone of Voice when he had inlarged upon his Points a little Sir Guy Carleton who heard without Interruption replied That he should proceed to the Evacuation with all possible Expedition but it must of Necessity take Time—That he had sent a Fleet already to Nova Scotia with about 6000 Souls—That to prevent the irregular Embarkation of Property he had appointed Persons to inspect the Ships & as to Negroes to make a Registry that the Owners might eventually be paid for the Slaves who were intitled to their Freedom by British Proclaimations & Promises—

"Here Washington affected to be startled—already imbarked says he Sir Guy then observed, that no Interpretation could be put upon the Articles inconsistant with prior Engagem^{ts} binding the National Honor which must be kept with all Colours, and he added that the only Mode was to pay for the Negroes in which Case Justice was done to all Parties the Slave and his Owner.

"Washington observed that the Point of expanding the Governm^{t} of Newyork was not so immediately the Object of Congress tho' it fell within his Trust as connected with the General Evacuation & it was left to M^{r} Clinton to add what related to this Object.

"Before this not a Word had been dropp^{d} by any [but] by the two generals.

"The Necessity of Order in West Chester & the Gratification of the Long Island Refugees by a Return to their Estates made up the Request that the Counties of West Chester and Sulfolk if not a Part of Queens County might be left to the Gov^{t} of the State of New York.

"Sir Guy gave Hope as to West Chester—said he had already withheld the Supply of Provisions to De Lanceys Refugees & he believed he should evacuate the whole county in a short Time.

"But as to Long Island he saw too many Difficulties and left one to their Consideration the Prevention of Desertions—He doubted whether it was in their Power to remove that Objection

"M^{r} Scott changed the Ground by Intimating that it would be for the Consideration of M^{r} Clinton whether it was worth while for M^{r} Clinton to call a Council upon Proposals to be made by Sir Guy Carleton—This was strange as the Request came from M^{r} Clinton &must depend upon Sir Guy's Consent & M^{r} Morgan interfered for Openings in the interior County to the Loyalists here there were several Speakers—M^{r} Scott took up the vulgar Idea that the Articles were fulfilled on their Side by Congress & recommending tho' the States did not comply & dropp'^{d} that they could not suffer those to stay among them who had waged war ag^{t} them.

"It was observed by M^{r} Morgan that ever since the Pacification Acts inconsistant with the Articles were Passed—He menioned the Trespass Act—Scott justified it but the Rest denied that the Articles were then known—I observed that M^{r} Apthorp so late as the 10 April was summoned to traverse an Indictm^{t}—They replied that it was an executive Procedure upon an Act in 1779. M^{r} Clinton said there had been no Legislation since the Articles to stop these Things. May 6

"Scotts loquacious Indiscretion chaffed. M^{r} Morgan. The latter insisted that no subordinate Power could settle the Interpretation of the Articles—Scott did not percieve the Drift of it, and talked of the Courts of Laws Right of deciding—He supposed a Question as between France and Great Britain & thought Westminster Hall would adjudge upon the Treaty—In the Altercation I was appealed to by Benson & being in Pain for Fear of Indecorum I cutt short the Disputes by observing—That verbal Conferences were not only useless but dangerous. It is a Matter of extreme Delicacy to expound Treaties which are to be satisfactory to both Parties or to be followed by War. I asked whether they would undertake to sign the Opinion that if the States refused what Congress recommended they had right so to do. Clinton replied by no Means & that he would be answerable for Nothing that would be said till he had consulted the Legislature—and here a sudden Stop was put to all further Conversation between the Disputants.

"Sir Guy then with liberal Professions of a Desire as much as possible to oblige said he should willingly attend to any Propositions that might be made—

"After a Pause Washington repeated that the intermediate Extension of the Gov^{t} of New York was only Subordinate to his General Trust of effecting the Evacuation.

"Sir Guy was very full in asserting that no Time could be fixed from the Contingences attending it Winds Waters &c &c.

"Washington pulled out his Watch & observing that it was near Dinner Time offered Wine & Bitters—We all rose with Sir Guy & Nothing more was said except that Washington observed that to prevent Mistakes he should shew his Report of what had passed before he wrote to Congress—Sir Guy approved it well as the best means to guard ag^{t} Misunderstandings.—We all walked out & soon after were called to plentiful Repast under a Tent.

"We returned to the Landing & on Board Ship in the Evening."
—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

According to the expressed agreement to have things in writing, Washington wrote a letter to Carleton immediately after the conference, asking the latter to write him as to what measures were being adopted for the evacuation of the posts now in possession of the British, and when the fleets and armies would probably be withdrawn. Washington called attention to the embarkation that had already taken place, in which a large number of negroes had been carried away. He asked whether this was "consonant to" or "an infraction" of the treaty, and gave his own view that it was totally different from its letter and spirit.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 244–47; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 783. Carleton answered on May 12 (q. v.).

Five hundred British prisoners are to march from "the New-jail" in Philadelphia for New York to be liberated. About the same number will march on May 7.—Penn. Packet, My 6, 1783. They arrived at Staten Island on May 9.—Ibid., My 15, 1783. "

A new police regulation, affecting the quality, weight, and price of bread, requires that a loaf of the best grade shall weigh three pounds and sell for 14 coppers, and the loaf of inferior grade shall weigh three and a half pounds and sell for the same price. Other parts of the regulation are as before (see Ja 11, 1782).—Royal Gaz., My 7, 1783. "

Information reaches New York from London "that William Eden, Esq; Member of the British and Irish Parliaments, is appointed to be Consul General to the United States of North America," and is to come with his family to New York; also "that the Right Honourable Charles Howard, Earl of Surrey, son and heir of the Duke of Norfolk, and Deputy Earl Marshal of England, is appointed to be the Ambassador of Great Britain to the United States of North-America."—N. Y. Merc., My 12, 1783. 10

At the "Cantonment of the American Army, on Hudson's River," Maj.-Gen. Baron de Steuben presides at a meeting of officers of the American army which considers forming a society among themselves. A committee is appointed to revise the proposals and submit them at the next meeting, on May 3. On that day, the representatives met and adopted the plan of an organization or "Society of Friends" to be known as the "Society of the Cincinnati." The name is derived from that of the Roman general, Lucius Quintius Cincinnatus, it being their desire to return, as he "

1783 May 10 did, from military life to "citizenship."—N. Y. Packet, N 13, 1783; The Institution and Proceedings of the Society of the Cincinnati . . . (with the Proceedings of the Massachusetts State Society of the Cincinnati) . . . (Boston, 1812); James Thacher, Military Jour. (1823), 391; Kapp, Life of Frederick William von Steuben (1859), chap. 26. Regarding the opposition to this society, which soon developed, see Winsor, VI: 746; VII: 219; McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., I: 167–76.

12 In answer to Washington's letter of May 6 (q.v.), Carleton writes that at present it is impossible to tell when the evacuation of this city can be completed. The quantity of shipping that will be sent to him and the number of persons that will be forced to abandon New York cannot be guessed. Carleton also says that he has given an order to prevent the carrying away of any negroes or other property of the American inhabitants. He refers to proposals he made, on April 14, in a letter to the minister of foreign affairs,—the naming of American commissioners to assist those appointed by him to inspect all embarkations,—a proposal which Washington had already approved by making appointments.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 543; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 786.

" "The Provincial Secretary's Office is removed to the house of Mrs. Barclay, in Nassau-street, next the corner of John-street."—N. Y. Merc., My 12, 1783.

" An accounting, bearing this date, shows the debt of Trinity Corporation in 1778 and what has been paid off since that time. The original MS. is preserved by the N. Y. H. S.

" Charles Roubalet advertises that he has opened a livery stable and coach house adjoining his inn, which is at No. 18 Broadway (the City Tavern, at the present 115 Broadway).—N. Y. Merc., My 12, 1783. This numbering of Broadway had been changed before 1786, when, according to the first directory published, Mrs. Barham, a tavern-keeper, was at 18 Broadway, while John Cape was proprietor, in this later year, of the City Tavern, which is merely indicated as on Broadway. By 1791, another change had taken place in the numbering, for Alexander Macomb is listed as at No. 18 Broadway.—See Vol. I, p. 423. The Macomb house stood at the present 39–41 Broadway.

19 Coenties Market-place (referred to under My 28, 1781, q.v.) is advertised to become soon the starting-point of "stage-boats" connecting with a stage-line for Newark. It so appears in an advertisement of "Peter Stuyvesant, who for many years drove a Stage Waggon from Powles Hook, to Brown's Ferry."—N. Y. Merc., My 19, 1783.

20 The first two sloops from New York to trade with Albany since peace came about are permitted by the inhabitants of that city to sell their cargoes.—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1783.

" Certain Loyalists meet at the home of Michael Grass, in the Out Ward (in Chatham St. near the Tea Water Pump), and sign their names "to form a settlement at Fort Frontinac, at the mouth of Lake Ontario, and head of the river St. Lawrence, in Canada, the only eligible place left by the late treaty, for the king's subjects to carry on the Indian and fur trade." The commander-in-chief gives them the "encouragement" they desire.—Penn. Packet, Jl 1, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 788.

22 A news-letter from Fish-Kill states that "A correspondent observes that he has lately viewed the Churches and Houses in New York, and that all the Churches are, except the Episcopal, the Moravian, and the Methodists, converted into stores or barracks, and appear in a very loathsome condition; the fences which encompassed the burying-yards being destroyed, the pews in all, and the galleries in some of them pulled down, the windows broken and otherwise much abused." The letter is a plea that Gen. Carleton will order that these edifices and the streets be cleaned of dirt and filth before he leaves, "to prevent the curses of an injured people."—Penn. Packet, My 27, 1783.

24 "The L^{t} Gov^{r} shewed me yesterday M^{r} Scott's Requisition of the Records—agreed a Council be called—I dined at Head Quarters & intimated before Dinner that until the Empire was actually seared the Books ought not to be given up. . . .

"At the Council all agreed not to give up the Records."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

26 Adj.-Gen. De Lancey issues an order from headquarters that "All Persons desirous to leave New-York are to give in their names" at his office, before June 7, stating "the Place of their former residence, and where they wish to be removed to."—N. Y. Merc., Je 2, 1783. On June 7, the persons who had given their names to the adjutant-general, "for Passages from this Place," agreeable to this notice, were directed to apply to the gentlemen appointed in De Lancey's announcement of April 15 (q.v.) to examine their claims, who will attend for that purpose at the city hall every day except Sundays from 11 to 2 o'clock.—Ibid., Je 9, 1783. May 26

27 News reaches Philadelphia "that an embarkation of 6000 men is taking place at New York. The British guards, with most of the troops that were under Cornwallis and Burgoyne, with the Hessian and other foreign troops, are going to England."—Penn. Packet, My 27, 1783.

30 "The Mill at the One Mile Stone in the Bowery Lane" is to be sold at auction at the Coffee House.—Royal Gaz., My 28, 1783. It was again advertised to be sold on June 19.—N. Y. Merc., Je 9, 1783.

June 2 A wild beast "The most curious that has been in this city these many years," is on exhibition at the "sign of Rodney's engagement below the Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., Je 2, 1783. Lord Rodney's victory over the French fleet under Comte de Grasse, on April 12, 1782, is the event which was probably crudely depicted on this tavern sign.

4 The king's birthday is celebrated as usual, "with every demonstration of loyalty and joy." A royal salute is fired from Fort George, and by "his Majesty's ships" in the harbour. In the evening a feu de joie is fired from the lines, followed by an exhibition of fireworks from the fort.—Royal Gaz., Je 7, 1783. To prevent accidents by fire the inhabitants are requested not to illuminate their windows.—Ibid., Je 4, 1784.

7 By order of the commandant, "Permission is hereby granted to all Persons coming from any Part of the Country with live Stock for the use of the Markets, to kill and dispose of the same, provided the Stock is slaughtered at such Places as are set apart for that purpose.

"Hucksters, or any other Persons who may be detected in forestalling any Provisions or Vegetables brought to this City for the Supply of the Markets, may depend on being treated with the utmost Rigour."—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1783. See, further, S 5.

9 "A new Map of the United States of America, laid down from the best Authority, agreeable to the Peace of 1783, . . ." is "sold by the Printer."—N. Y. Merc., Je 9, 1783. An earlier map of the United States, probably the first, 18″ x 21¾″, was published April 3, 1783, by John Wallis, Ludgate Street, London. A cartouche contains the full-length portraits of Washington and Franklin. A copy of this now very rare map is in the author's collection.

10 "The Soldiers of the American Army that were inlisted for the War were discharged last Week.

"Those for 3 Years are not, but daily desert & are not pursued.

"Those who have Discharges have an Indorsement purporting that it is a Furlough for 4 Months—They rec^{d} some Pay to carry them Home but it is in Goods which they can't sell for half the money at which they are debited & the Men cry out all along the Road at this last Cheat.

"I learn this from Col^{o} P R. Livingston and Joseph Penny—the latter lives but 7 Miles from the Camp at Newburgh—He says the Horse of the Troop are sold & that they are now daily selling Waggons Boats &c.

"I am left in Doubt as to Washington's Design in discharging his Soldiers—Penny says they have uniformly ever since the Peace sworn that there was Peace & should be Peace for that they would neither draw a Sword nor pull a Trigger any longer.

"The Invention of the Furlough is to get rid of them quickly, for it implies that they are to have pay for the 4 Months—all swear they will never come back again nor ever reinlist."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" The captains of "the City Volunteer Companies and Militia" are ordered to collect the arms issued to their companies, and give notice thereof "to Brigade-Major Amiel, at No. 5 Wall street."—Royal Gaz., Je 10, 1783.

12 Washington writes from Newburgh to Gov. Benjamin Harrison of Virginia, expressing at length his ideals and hopes for the United States as an independent power, while stating his intention to return to "domestic retirement."—Penn. Packet, Jl 15, 1783, citing Virginia Gaz., Jl 5, 1783.

13 Egbert Benson and Daniel Parker, commissioners, assist in superintending the embarkation of 14 transports bound for Nova 1783 June 13 Scotia, having about 3,000 persons on board. Among these persons were at least 130 negroes, "who appeared to be the property of the citizens of the United States" (see My 12). The commissioners wrote to Washington the next day, asking whether it was necessary to write further remonstrance to Sir Guy Carleton against his permitting the slaves of American subjects to leave. On June 17, they wrote to Carleton that they would consider any further such embarkation an infraction of the Treaty of Peace.—From correspondence pub'd in the Daily Adv., Ja 24, 1794. See also Je 18; and Winsor, VII: 203, 213; VIII: 137.

14 Sir Guy Carleton offers the same encouragement for Loyalists to settle on the island of Abaco, one of the Bahamas, as that given to the Loyalists who have gone or are going to Nova Scotia. They are required to leave their names "at the house of Mr John Davis, on Commissary Leake's dock, at the North River."—N. Y. Merc., Je 16, 1783. See Jl 5.

" A line of stages between Elizabeth-Town and Philadelphia is put into operation by Grumman and Mercereau,—the first since peace was declared. The trip was made in one day. A stage from each city goes to Princeton, makes an exchange of passengers there, and returns.—Royal Gaz., Je 14, 1783.

15 Sir Guy Carleton signs a return of British and German regiments for embarkation.—From the original in Emmet Coll., item No. 11064.

16 "After the arrival of the preliminary articles & before the definitive Treaty arrived, from the vindictive & persecuting disposition of the Americans, the refugees & other Loyalists were cut off from all hope of remaining in the States after the British troops should be withdrawn. They therefore made application to Sir Guy Carlton to be transported with their families & effects to Nova Scotia, on the same terms as the other refugees had gone there, that under the protection of his Majesty's Government, they might find an asylum from the tyranny & oppression of their Countrymen. They were accordingly sent to such parts of that province as they requested. In consequence of such removal many of the derelict Estates became vacant, whereupon the Commander in chief was pleased to issue the following order

"'Head Quarters New York 16 June 1783 Orders The proprietors of houses or lands lately evacuated will apply to Lieut Gen[l] Campbell for the possession of those on Long island, To Brigadier General Birch for those on York island & to Brigadier General Bruce for those on Staten island. These General officers will be pleased to cause all such Estates to be immediately delivered up to the Proprietors or their attorneys unless where they may see sufficient reasons for detaining them some time longer, which reasons they will report to the Commander in chief. In like manner, all Estates which shall hereafter be evacuated are to be surrendered up to the proprietors. O. L. De Lancey Adjutant General.' [—N. Y. Merc., Je 23, 1783.]

"From the 16th of June to the day of evacuation of New York the property which had been from time to time vacated was restored to the proprietors. But many houses & stores absolutely necessary were detained from the Proprietors until the evacuation of the city."—From the "Case of William Butler," in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 159–61; Public Papers of Geo. Clinton, VIII: 203; Penn. Packet, Je 21, 1783. See, however, Jl 10.

" Gen. Carleton takes possession of the Dr. James Beekman country-seat, where he remained until the British evacuated the city.—Man. Com Coun. (1854), 554.

18 From his headquarters at Newburgh, George Washington issues his last circular letter to the governours of the states, as follows: "The great object for which I had the honour to hold an appointment in the service of my country, being accomplished, I am now preparing to resign it into the hands of Congress, and return to that domestic retirement, which, it is well known, I left with the greatest reluctance . . .; but, before I carry this resolution into effect, I think it a duty incumbent on me to make this my last official communication, to congratulate you on the glorious events which Heaven has been pleased to produce in our favour, to offer my sentiments respecting some important subjects, which appear to me to be intimately connected with the tranquility of the United States, to take my leave of your Excellency as a public character, and to give my final Blessing to that country, in whose service I have spent the prime of my life. . . .

"The Citizens of America, placed in the most enviable condition, as the sole Lords and Proprietors of a vast Tract of Continent, comprehending all the various soils and climates of the world, and abounding with all the necessaries and conveniences of life, are now, by the late satisfactory pacification, acknowledged to be possessed of absolute Freedom and Independency; they are from this period to be considered as the Actors on a most conspicuous Theatre, which seems to be peculiarly designated by Providence for the display of human greatness and felicity. . . . June 18

"There are four things, which I humbly conceive are essential to the well-being, I may even venture to say, to the existence of the United States as an independent power.

"1st. An indissoluble union of the States under one federal head.

"2dly. A sacred regard to public justice.

"3dly. The adoption of a proper peace establishment. And,

"4thly. The prevalence of the pacific and friendly disposition among the people of the United States, which will induce them to forget their local prejudices and policies, to make those mutual concessions which are requisite to the general prosperity, and, in some instances, to sacrifice their individual advantages to the interest of the community.

"These are the pillars on which the glorious fabric of our Independency and national character must be supported.—Liberty is the basis. . . .

"On the three first articles I will make a few observations; leaving the last to the good sense, and serious consideration of those immediately concerned.

"Under the first head . . . it will be a part of my duty, and that of every true patriot to assert, without reserve, and to insist upon the following positions—That unless the States will suffer Congress to exercise those prerogatives they are undoubtedly invested with by the Constitution, everything must very rapidly tend to anarchy and confusion. That it is indispensible to the happiness of the individual States that there should be lodged, somewhere, a supreme power, to regulate and govern the general concerns of the confederated Republic, without which the union cannot be of long duration. . . . It is only in our united character, as an empire, that our Independence is acknowledged, that our power can be regarded, or our credit supported among foreign nations. The treaties of the European Powers, with the United States of America, will have no validity on a dissolution of the Union. . . .

"As to the second article, which respects the performance of public justice, Congress have, in their late address to the United States, almost exhausted the subject; they have explained their ideas so fully, and have enforced the obligations the States are under to render complete justice to all the public creditors, with so much dignity and energy, that, in my opinion, no real friend to the Honor and Independency of America can hesitate a single moment respecting the propriety of complying with the just and honorable measures proposed. . . .

"The ability of the country to discharge the debts, which have been incurred in its defence, is not to be doubted: An inclination, I flatter myself, will not be wanting; the path of our duty is plain before us: Honesty will be found, on every experiment, to be the best and only true policy. Let us then, as a nation be just; let us fulfil the public contracts which Congress had undoubtedly a right to make for the purpose of carrying on the war, with the same good faith we suppose ourselves bound to perform our private engagements . . .

"For my own part, conscious of having acted, while a Servant of the Public, in the manner I conceived best suited to promote the real interests of my country; having, in consequence of my fixed belief, in some measure, pledged myself to the army, that their country would finally do them complete and ample justice, and not wishing to conceal any instance of my official conduct from the eyes of the world, I have thought proper to transmit to your Excellency the inclosed collection of papers, relative to the half-pay and commutation granted by Congress, to the Officers of the army; from these communications, my decided sentiment will be clearly comprehended, together with the conclusive reasons, which induced me, at an early period, to recommend the adoption of this measure in the most earnest and serious manner. . . . In some lines, the Soldiers have perhaps generally had as ample compensation for their services, by the large bounties which have been paid to them, as their Officers will receive in the proposed commutation; in others, if, besides the donation of land, the payment of arrearages of clothing and wages, . . . we take into the estimate, the boun-

1783 June 18 ties many of the Soldiers have received, and the gratuity of one year's full pay, which is promised to all, possibly their situation . . . will not be deemed less eligible than that of the Officers. Should a further reward, however, be judged equitable, I will venture to assert, no man will enjoy greater satisfaction than myself in seeing an exemption from taxes for a limited time . . . or any other adequate immunity or compensation granted to the brave defenders of their country's cause. . . .

"It is necessary to say but a few words on the third topic which was proposed, and which regards particularly the defence of the Republic. . . .

"The Militia of this country must be considered as the Palladium of our security, and the first effectual resort in case of hostility: It is essential, therefore, that the same system should pervade the whole; that the formation and discipline of the Militia of the Continent, should be absolutely uniform; and that the same species of arms, accoutrements, and military apparatus, should be introduced in every part of the United States . . .

"I have thus freely disclosed what I wished to make known before I surrendered up my public trust to those who committed it to me . . .

"It remains, then, to be my final and only request, that your Excellency will communicate these sentiments to your Legislature, at their next meeting; and that they may be considered as the legacy of one who has ardently wished, on all occasions, to be useful to his country—and who even in the shade of retirement, will not fail to implore the Divine Benediction upon it . . ."—Royal Gaz. Extraordinary, Jl 12, 1783.

Commenting on Washington's letter, Smith says: "It would seem as if Washington had resolved to avoid any Loss of Popularity but whether with a View to be useful in the Reunion or to set up for himself is the Question."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII, under Jl 15. See also Winsor, VI: 746.

" Smith writes that he is informed the "Fleet now going to Nova Scotia is to bring back Coal for the Garison here . . . This don't look like a speedy Evacuation."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See also facsimile of an enumeration, signed by Guy Carleton on June 17, of the refugees embarked for Nova Scotia, in Man. Com. Coun (1855), opp. p. 554.

" Elias Boudinot writes from Philadelphia to Benjamin Franklin that the inhabitants of the United States are irritated to an alarming degree by the "cruelties, ravages, and barbarisms of the refugees and loyalists," while the citizens of New York "are kept out of their city, and despoiled daily of their property, by the sending off their negroes by hundreds, in the face of the treaty" (see Je 13). —Life of Elias Boudinot (1896), I: 326.

20 A London letter states that "The transport service alone, in withdrawing the troops from New-York, will cost this country near half a million of money."—Penn. Packet, S 11, 1783.

21 In Philadelphia, about 300 American troops with fixed bayonets surround the house in which congress is sitting, and demand a redress of grievances. Congress, thus "grossly insulted" by a mutiny of unpaid soldiers, adjourns to Princeton.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 231. See Je 27, 29, 30.

24 A newspaper advertisement announces that, "By Permission," there will be presented on this evening, "at the Theatre in New-York, A Tragedy, called the Grecian Daughter, . . . To which will be added, An Entertainment, called the Lying Valet." Mr. and Mrs. Ryan are to be among the performers.—Royal Gaz., Je 21 and 24, 1783. Advertisements of performances appeared in almost every subsequent issue of the paper until Aug. 30. On that day, the announcement included this notice: "On account of the short stay that the Company make here, the Nights of Performance, until further notice, will be on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings.

"Mr. Ryan takes this method of returning his sincere thanks to those Ladies and Gentlemen who have hitherto favoured his attempts; humbly hopes for a continuance of their patronage, which will be gratefully acknowledged."—Ibid., Je 25 to Ag 30, 1783. Ryan's advertisements reappeared on Sept. 13, and continued until Oct. 25. From Oct. 11 to Oct. 25, his company performed alternately with the military players.—Ibid., S 13–O 25, 1783. The theatre was closed from that time until Aug. 12, 1785 (q. v.).

27 On motion of Lord North, the house of commons votes half-pay to Loyalist officers.—Winsor, VII: 196.

June 27 Smith writes in his diary: "Reports from Philad: that the Congress are at Trenton. That 500 of the 3 Years Men of the Pensilvania Line have entered the Town of Phil[a] last Week & beset the Congress & extorted Promises—That the Congress called for the Protection of the Militia but not getting it had written to Washington & retired from the Place of Insult. They dread a Discharge without Pay as was lately the Case of those inlisted for the War." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

29 "The Congress are at Prince Town & so is the French Minister & Morris the Financier—They fled in the Nights of Mond: & Tuesday & execrate the Gov[r] & People of Philad:"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

30 Congress assembles at Princeton.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 232. See N 4.

July 2 The household effects of the late Christopher Blundell are offered for sale. The house, also, is to be let. It is situated "on the Battery," and is considered "the most eligible one for a tavern keeper on this island."—N. Y. Merc., Je 30, 1783. See also L. M. R. K., III: 949 (Coker's house).

7 Loyalists who have enrolled to go to Port Roseway with the five companies now embarking, but who cannot go at this time, are to meet this evening "at Grant's Tavern, at the Sign of Lord Cornwallis."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 7, 1783.

A Philadelphia news item reads: "The unnecessary delay on the part of the British to quit the city of New-York, has only served to encrease the spirit and resentment of the people against the loyalists, which, instead of subsiding, seems every day to rise and be more determined against their re-admission among us; insomuch that most of those who had concluded to stay, now begin to think the experiment too dangerous to be tried, and have resolved to go off, which indeed is the most prudent step they can take."—Penn. Packet (Phila.), Je 22, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 794.

10 "Americanus," in an open letter, published in the N. Y. Packet (Fishkill) on this day, says in part: "How general Carleton will be able to reconcile the honor and justice of the British nation, so much arrogated to themselves, with the open acts of injustice so evidently practiced every day, is hard to determine. About the nineteenth of February, the general published in general orders, that all persons without the British lines, having property within, should send in their claims, &c. &c. . . . On the publication of the ratification of the preliminary articles of peace, many of the old citizens of New-York, who had fled from the city at the approach of the British, sold and disposed of their places in the country (thinking as all the world thought besides, that it was actually peace) and went to New-York, but to their utter disappointment, and to the astonishment even of the loyalists, those people were not permitted to go into their own houses; the keys of all empty houses and such as should be evacuated, being ordered to the commandant's office,—who out of his very great goodness condescended to let such houses, on the party hiring, paying him down three months rent. We need not enquire who pockets this three months rent, with all other rents within the British lines, unjustly detained from the rightful owners. . . ."—Penn. Packet, Jl 22, 1783.

Another correspondent asserts: "A number of houses in New York being now empty, many of the former owners have applied for leave to repossess them, but have in general been refused."—Ibid., Ag 23, 1783. See Ap 29.

11 Twenty-six "sail of vessels" are to start for Nova Scotia on this day. The Hessian and other foreign troops taken with Burgoyne have sailed for Canada. Another embarkation consisting of British troops is preparing, among these being the frigate "South Carolina," accommodating nearly 1,000 men. It is expected the city will be clear of the British army in the course of August and September. —Penn. Packet, Jl 15, 1783. See also Winsor, VII: 213, and letter of Wm. S. Smith, in N. Y. City during the Rev. War, 141–42.

12 Lieut.-Gov. Andrew Elliot sails for England with his wife and family.—Penn. Packet, Jl 22, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 797.

13 More seats are to be placed in the room in the city hall used for divine service for the refugees and others who have no seats in the churches.—Royal Gaz., Jl 13, 1783.

21 A post-rider is to set out from New York for Fishkill, going and returning through the towns of Bedford, Upper Salem, Van Cortland Manor, North Castle, White Plains, etc. He is the first post-rider, since peace was concluded, to the Hudson River towns. —Royal Gaz., Jl 16, 1783.

24 Gov. Clinton is offended, writes Smith, "at the Non Delivery

1783 July 24 of the Records to Mr Scott—Intimates that this Act of the Council is an Offence after the Treaty admitting the Independence for which the Articles provided no Indempnity Calls the Reasons futile."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "It comes out from one John Powers a Copper plate Printer that he has counterfeited Millions during the War at the Instance of Persons on the other Side of the Lines and chiefly in their Commissary Departments. And that within a Fortnight he had been solicited to counterfeit Morris's Bills by a Person of Consequence on that Side who is one of those assembling at Black Sam's with the American Comrs to superintend the Embarkation."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

25 It is not publicly known whether the Definitive Treaty was brought by the "Mercury" frigate, or not; but it is thought that some piece of news of importance has been received, as the troops have been ordered some miles nearer the city.—Penn. Packet, Jl 31, 1783.

26 There is a review of "his Majesty's VIIth Regiment of Foot," on the Common near the city, by Brig.-Gen. Alured Clark. They "performed their different Evolutions and Firings, with great Alertness and Precision."—N. Y. Merc., Jl 28, 1783.

30 Sir Guy Carleton is dismantling the fortifications at Kingsbridge. —Penn. Packet, Ag 5, 1783.

31 It is reported from Boston that 100 transports are bound from England to New York, "in order to convey the British troops, Negroes, Refugees, and other Tories, from thence to England, Nova-Scotia, and elsewhere, consisting in the lump, to upwards of 22,000 souls."—Salem (Mass.) Gaz., Jl 31, 1783.

Aug. 5 The firm of Robertsons, Mills, and Hicks, publishers of The Royal Am. Gazette (see Ja 1, 1782), is dissolved, and its property is advertised to be sold at auction.—Royal Gaz., Ag 6, 1783.

7 Congress resolves that a bronze equestrian statue of Washington be erected "at the place where the residence of Congress shall be established." On report of a committee appointed to prepare a plan of it, congress resolves "That the statue be of bronze: The general to be represented in a Roman dress, holding a truncheon in his right hand, and his head encircled with a laurel wreath. The statue is to be supported by a marble pedestal, on which are to [be] represented, in basso relievo, the following principal events of the war, in which general Washington commanded in person, viz. The evacuation of Boston—the capture of the Hessians at Trenton —the battle of Princeton—the action of Monmouth, and the surrender of York. On the upper part of the front of the pedestal, to be engraved as follows: The United States in Congress assembled, ordered this statue to be erected in the year of our Lord 1783, in honor of George Washington, the illustrious commander in chief of the armies of the United States of America, during the war which vindicated and secured their liberty, sovereignty and independence.

"Resolved, That a statue conformable to the above plan, be executed by the best artist in Europe, under the superintendence of the minister of the United States at the court of Versailles; and that money to defray the expense of the same, be furnished from the treasury of the United States.

"Resolved, That the secretary of Congress transmit to the minister of the United States at the court of Versailles, the best resemblance of General Washington that can be procured, for the purpose of having the above statue erected; together with the fittest description of the events, which are to be the subject of the basso relievo."—Jour. of Cong., IV: 251–52.

8 At a meeting of Loyalists in Roubalet's Tavern, it is proposed to leave a memorial there, addressed to the commander-in-chief (Sir Guy Carleton), to be signed by those intending to settle in Nova Scotia.—Royal Gaz., Ag, 1783. On Aug. 15, a committee, appointed at this meeting, presented the memorial to him. It is a protest against making large grants of the best lands in that province to favoured groups of persons. It states that the memorialists are informed that 55 persons have joined in an application to Carleton for 275,000 acres in Nova Scotia, and sent agents "to survey the unlocated lands, and select the most fertile spots, and desirable situations." That application, which has been "studiously concealed," they fear has succeeded. They observe, further, "that the persons concerned (several of whom are said to be going to Britain) are most of them in easy circumstances, and with some exceptions, more distinguished by the repeated favours of government, than by either the greatness of their sufferings, or the importance of their services." They regard such grants, if carried into effect, "as amounting nearly to a total exclusion of themselves and families, who, if they become settlers, must either content themselves with barren or remote lands, or submit to be tenants to those, most of whom they consider as their superiors in nothing but deeper art, and keener policy." They ask that inquiry be made into their own "respective losses, services, situations and sufferings," to ascertain if they are not equally entitled "to the favour and protection of government" with the former applicants.—N. Y. Merc., Ag 25, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 806. Gen. Carleton's answer was reassuring.—Ibid. Those who signed the memorial were requested to meet on Aug. 16 at Roubalet's to receive the answer.—Royal Gaz., Ag 16, 1783. Aug. 8

Notice is issued from the city hall (the "Main Guard") that all Loyalists within the British lines who desire "to emigrate from this Place before the final Evacuation" must give in their names at the adjutant-general's office, on or before Aug. 21, and be ready to embark before the end of the month.—Royal Gaz., Aug. 16, 1783. Under date of Aug. 18, Smith wrote in his diary: "The Town is in general Distress by Orders for Emigrants to report their Names by the 21 of this Month."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. See Ag 19. 14

Notice is published that draught and saddle horses, wagons, carts, harness, etc., belonging to the king's service, will be sold at auction every Wednesday "at the Waggon-Yard, at Brooklyne," and every Saturday "at the Waggon-Yard near Fort Knyphausen." —N. Y. Merc., Ag 18, 1783. "

The last issue found of The New-York Mercury; or, General Advertiser (No. 211, Vol. 4) bears this date. John Ryan is now partner of William Lewis in its publication.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 459. 15

The hulls of the two prison hospital ships "Perseverance" and "Bristol Packet," which lie at the Wallabought, are to be sold at the Merchants' Coffee-House.—Royal Gaz., Ag 16, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 801. 16

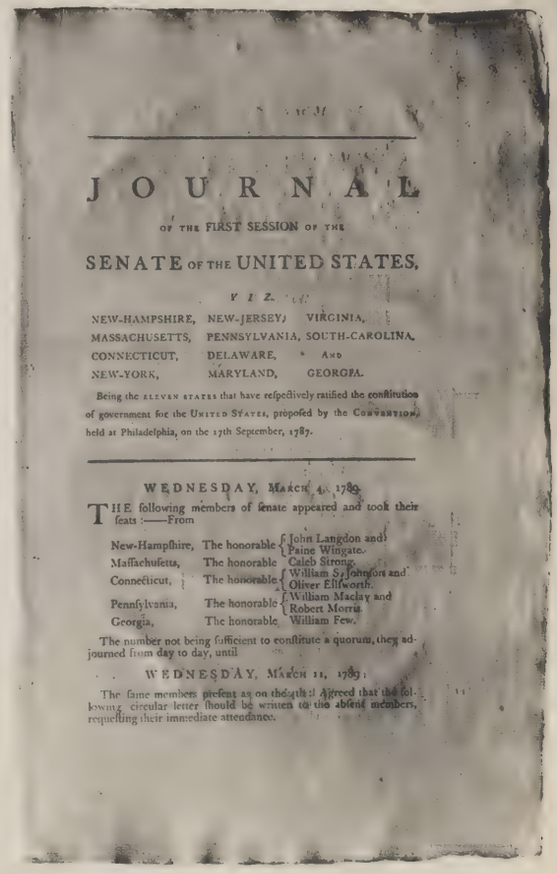
Carleton, in a letter to Elias Boudinot, the president of congress, says: "The June packet lately arrived, has brought me final orders for the evacuation of this place; be pleased sir, to inform Congress of this proof of the perseverance of the court of Great Britain, in the pacific system expressed by the provisional articles, and that I shall loose no time, as far as depends upon me, in fulfilling his Majesty's commands. 17

"But notwithstanding my orders are urgent to accelerate the total evacuation, the difficulty of assigning the precise period for this event is of late greatly increased . . .

"The violence in the Americans, which broke out soon after the cessation of hostilities, encreased the number of their countrymen to look to me for escape from threatened destruction; but these terrors have of late been so considerably augmented, that almost all within these lines conceive the safety both of their property and of their lives depend upon their being removed by me, which renders it impossible to say when the evacuation can be compleated. Whether they have just ground to assert, that there is either no government within your limits for common protection, or that it secretly favours the committees in the sovereignty they assume, and are actually exercising, I shall not pretend to determine; but as the daily gazettes and publications furnish repeated proofs, not only of a disregard to the articles of peace, but of barbarous menaces from committees formed in various towns, cities and districts, and even at Philadelphia, the very place which the Congress had chosen for their residence, I should shew an indifference to the feelings of humanity, as well as to the honour and interest of the nation I serve, to leave any of the loyalists that are desirous to quit the country, a prey to the violence they conceive they have so much cause to apprehend.

"The Congress will hence discern how much it will depend on themselves and the subordinate legislatures, to facilitate the service I am commanded to perform, by abating the fears they will thereby diminish the number of the emigrants: but should these fears continue and compel such multitudes to remove, I shall hold myself acquitted from every delay in the fulfilling my orders and the consequences which may result therefrom; and I cannot avoid adding, that it makes no small part of my concern, that the Congress have thought proper to suspend to this late hour, recommendations stipulated by the treaty, and in the punctual performance of which, the king and his ministers have expressed such confidence."—Freeman's Jour. (Phila.), S 10, 1783; Man. Com. Coun.

Dr Sir



It is in my opinion intirely necessary that the Common Council should be convened this day in order to pass an act for appropriating the City Hall to the use of Congress. that act should be published in the papers & notified by some Officer of mine and not will enough by a committee a member from board to the Senators & Representatives as they arrive — The Philadelphia are endeavouring to raise some cavil on this ground — The thing must not pass to day. For propriety & decency requires that the Members should be waited on by a Committee of the Board & the day for

Yrs

A. Hamilton

Members

A. LETTER FROM ALEXANDER HAMILTON TO MAYOR DUANE ADVISING THAT THE COMMON COUNCIL FORMALLY TENDER TO CONGRESS THE USE OF THE CITY HALL. SEE P. 1235.

JOURNAL

OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

VIZ.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE, NEW-JERSEY, VIRGINIA,
MASSACHUSETTS, PENNSYLVANIA, SOUTH-CAROLINA,
CONNECTICUT, DELAWARE, AND NEW-YORK, MARYLAND, GEORGIA.

Being the ELEVEN STATES that have respectively ratified the constitution of government for the UNITED STATES, proposed by the CONVENTION held at Philadelphia, on the 17th September, 1787.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1789.

THE following members of senate appeared and took their seats:——From

New-Hampshire,	The honorable	John Langdon and Paine Wingate.
Massachusetts,	The honorable	Caleb Strong.
Connecticut,	The honorable	William S. Johnson and Oliver Ellsworth.
Pennsylvania,	The honorable	William Maclay and Robert Morris.
Georgia,	The honorable	William Few.

The number not being sufficient to constitute a quorum, they adjourned from day to day, until

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1789.

The same members present as on the 4th: Agreed that the following circular letter should be written to the absent members, requesting their immediate attendance.

B. FIRST PAGE OF THE U.S. SENATE JOURNAL UNDER THE CONSTITUTION; DATED MARCH 4, 1789. SEE PP. 1235–36.

1783 (1870), 802. This letter was drafted for Carleton by Wm. Smith,
Aug. as revealed in the latter's diary, Sept. 13, which is made public for 17 the first time in this Chronology. Smith further says that "This [letter] & the News of the Gift of Half pay to the American Officers in the British service give much Pleasure to the Loyalists and the Conclusion is that we shall not evacuate this Place till the Spring." —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

19 "The Evacuation is going on as fast as the number of transports here will admit. There are still between 16 and 18 hundred loyalists to be provided with passages to Nova Scotia. A general influenza seems to have seized the inhabitants of this city." On Aug. 16, 5,339 persons were entered at the adjutant-general's office for passages.—Penn. Packet, Ag 26, 1783.

20 Another report of the receipts of and disbursements made by the city vestry (see Ap 30, 1782 and Ap 14, 1783) extends from April 15 to this date. This, too, was audited by James Gautier.—Dawson's report in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 223–24. See O 31.

22 A subscription is opened "at Mrs. Withers's, at the Red Lion, on Cruger's Wharf, No. 10, and in Pearl Street, No. 9, adjoining the battery," for those Loyalists who have given in their names to emigrate to Annapolis Royal, and have not joined any particular company.—Royal Gaz., Ag 23, 1783.

26 Col. Wm. S. Smith, in a letter from New York to Washington, states that "About six thousand Hessians have sail'd for Europe & all the artillery & stores are nearly Embarked & will sail immediately for the West Indies—Sir Guy Carleton appears anxious to effect the Evacuation speedily." He explains that Carleton told him "the only thing which detained him was the refugees whose situation humanity obliged him to attend to," and he discusses the status of discharged British soldiers who wish to remain, and the general subject of allegiance. This letter also contains an interesting reference to Col. Smith's shipment of books, a list of which Washington had selected from a bookseller's catalogue, published in a gazette. The titles of these works, to which Washington's thoughts were directed at this time, was published in Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 431, as follows: Life of Charles the Twelfth; Life of Louis the Fifteenth; Life and Reign of Peter the Great; Robertson's History of America; Voltaire's Letters; Vertot's Revolution of Rome and Revolution of Portugal; Life of Gustavus Adolphus; Sully's Memoirs; Goldsmith's Natural History; Campaigns of Marshal Turenne; Chambaud's French and English Dictionary; Locke on the Human Understanding; Robertson's Charles the Fifth.

28 The last issue of The New-York Packet (No. 331) published at Fishkill bears this date; several weeks later (see N 13), the paper was republished in New York City.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 235.

29 Adj.-Gen. Oliver de Lancey issues an order, for the commander-in-chief, forbidding the demolition of buildings, until the board of commissioners for settling and adjusting matters of account, debt, etc., shall satisfy itself regarding the ownership of the premises.—N. Y. Merc., S 8, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 735; ibid. (1870), 808.

30 A New York citizen, who has been seven years in exile from his "wonted habitation," writes from Hackensack: "I was lately over at New York, and though I did not meet with any considerable personal insults, I had the mortification to see some overgrown tories stalking about, whose looks I did not altogether approve of. There is one Tilton I saw there in particular, whose practice has been these six or seven years to burn grist mills and meeting houses without the lines. This fellow walks constantly with a spear cane, and talks of nothing but rebels and rebellion, and such like stuff. As to the British they are tolerably civil and polite, and though there are centries placed at almost every hundred yards distance, they molest no one who behaves himself with propriety . . .

"I met with some of my old acquaintances here, who were, some of them, formerly very fat, stout men, that are now reduced to mere skeletons, at the prospect of leaving this place with the army." One "tory gentleman," he thinks, will "fret himself into the grave."

"There is no end to auctions and vendues; everything is selling off, and I believe a great deal more than the venders can make a good title for. . . . Few or no negro slaves are given up. . . .

"An American officer was lately in town . . . and having met with some ill usage, complained to David Mathews. This father of the city, it is said, treated him very roughly, and by way of shortening conversation, wished all d——d rascals to hell. . . .

"The meeting houses are in a most deplorable condition, . . . Aug.

"Except theft and pilfering, there is very little business carried 30 on at present . . ."—Penn. Packet, S 18, 1783.

Writing to a friend in London, a New Yorker says: "At length " the period of our leaving this place advances most certainly, and the next advices from England will fix the day for the final embarkation of the last troops from hence; four large storeships are arrived from England to take away the artillery and ordnance stores, as nothing will be left of that kind which is not truly American, and these are very few.

"This city is now fuller of inhabitants than at any period of my residence (though numbers embark every week for England, or other parts of the British dominions), occasioned by the families who flock here from all parts to take their departure, among which there are some who have not been proscribed by any of the provinces; their reasons therefore for quitting this continent are obvious, that they see some storm gathering, and that the difficulties of the inhabitants of this western world are not yet over, though they have at length seen independence settled in peace."—London Chron., O 2–4, 1783.

Horse-racing on the highways near the city is forbidden, by " order of the commandant, as it endangers the lives of "Passengers." Likewise, persons "going out with Fowling Pieces, to shoot near the High Roads" are subject to arrest.—N. Y. Merc., S 8, 1783.

Forty-four refugee citizens of New York, including Samuel Sept.
Loudon and Alex. Lamb, writing from "New Burgh," address an 1 appeal to Gov. Clinton and the other members of the board, "constituted by Law for the temporary Government of the Southern District of the State," in which they beg that an ordinance be enacted and a committee appointed to distribute the houses belonging to returning residents and now occupied by the English.—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 42–44. For the terms of this ordinance, see a printed broadside in the Emmet Coll. (No. 10878), a facsimile of which was published in Man. Com. Coun. (1855), opp. p. 564, and ibid. (1856), opp. p. 540.

The Definitive Treaty of Peace, between the United States and 3
Great Britain, is signed in Paris by David Hartley, M. P., for Great Britain, and John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and John Jay for the United States. Its preamble recites the desire and disposition of "Prince George the Third" and the United States "to forget all past misunderstandings and differences that have unhappily interrupted the good correspondence and friendship which they mutually wish to restore; and to establish such a satisfactory and beneficial intercourse between the two countries, upon the ground of reciprocal advantages and mutual convenience, as may promote and secure to both perpetual peace and harmony." The fact is recited that the "foundation of peace and reconciliation" has already been laid by the provisional articles signed at Paris Nov. 30, 1782 (q. v.); and the substance of the provisional articles are embodied in the present treaty.—Published in Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 26, 1783; also with the Acts Passed at the Second Session of the Congress (1790), 180–83; Important State Papers (1795), 61–67; Lamb, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 267. See also Winsor, VII: 87, 165.

The "Peace of Versailles" was separately signed, on Sept. 3, between Great Britain and France, and between Great Britain and Spain.—Winsor, VII: 87.

A private letter from New York states: "Robberies are so " frequent, that it is unsafe to walk the streets in the night, or be in a crowd in the day."—Penn. Packet (Phila.), O 14, 1783. On Oct. 4, it was stated: "The city of New-York has lately been much infested by robbers; insomuch that fifteen of them were at one time last week taken up.—Notwithstanding this, scarcely a night passes without a robbery.—The inhabitants have formed associations for a nightly watch."—Ibid., O 4, 1783.

There are between 12,000 and 15,000 refugees, men, women, 4 and children, to be embarked at New York, Long Island, and Staten Island, for "Nova-Scotia, St. Johns, and Abacco." Among these "are many persons of fortune and landed estates, who leave nothing but their terra firma behind them. Many of them pretend, that it is not fear of ill treatment, after the departure of the army, that urges them to leave the country, so much as a conviction that the new republics must sink in a short time under their immense national debt, and the exorbitant taxes with which they will be loaded."—Penn. Packet, S 4, 1783. The fleet sailed on Sept. 15 (q. v.).

By order of the commandant, the market order of June 7 5

1783 (q. v.) is republished, with the added provision that live stock
Sept. must be slaughtered either at the places in this city set apart for 5 that purpose, or on board the vessel in which it is brought. The order also states that "The Market at Peck's-slip is now clearing, and will be reserved for the sole Use of the Country People who may kill their Stock to bring to Market."—N. Y. Merc., S 8, 1783. De Voe says that, during the British occupation of the city, up to this time, this market had been used as one of their store-houses.—Market Book, 303.

9 "No news here but that of evacuation. . . . Some look smiling, others melancholy, a third class mad. . . .; some there are who represent the cold regions of Nova Scotia as a new-created Paradise, others as a country unfit for any human being to inhabit. . . ."—Penn. Packet, S 23, 1783.

11 A weekly newspaper, The Town and Country Journal; or, the American Advertiser, is established in New York. The date is determined from that of the only issue found, that of Dec. 11, 1783 (in Yale College Library), which is No. 14, Vol. I. It is printed by W(illiam) Ross.—Brigham, in A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 501.

13 "I can't learn," says Smith, "that any Taxes go forward according to the Congressional Requisitions—The Congress seems to be No Body. The Officers of the American Army give up the Hope of Commutation Money—Those to the Southward being rich are indifferent."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "The Flight of the Loyalists is also painful not only to the wiser Sort who see the Evils of it in general Policy, but to private Friendship and what is more to private Interests. Partners in Trade—Fellow commoners in Lands—Debtors—Ex^rs and Adm^rs &c &c to go away to the confusion of all that have Settlements to be made with them

"That Additions are hourly made to those who see Cause to condemn the Intemperance that begot the Quarrel or made it the Instrument for severing the Empire."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

" "Every preparation is making for the speedy evacuation of New York, the heavy ordnance from Fort George being already embarked."—Penn. Packet, S 13, 1783.

15 A fleet of vessels sails for Nova Scotia. About 8,000 persons are embarked on these ships, and on three others not yet sailed.—Royal Gaz., S 17, 1783.

19 According to announcements of forthcoming sales of "the King's Draught and Saddle Horses," the "Waggon-yard," where the sale is to be held, is "behind the Bridewell."—Royal Gaz., S 17 and O 1, 1783.

20 Loyalists who fail to go aboard their ship, bound for Port-Roseway, lying "at the Commissary's Wharf, near the Fly Market," by 3 o'clock on this day, will be "precluded from their Passages at the Expence of Government."—Royal Gaz., S 20, 1783. A general notice to all Loyalists, bound for Nova Scotia, to embark on or before Sept. 20, had been issued on Sept. 12.—Ibid.

30 Writing in London, Lord Sheffield makes "Observations on the Commerce of the American States," including the following: "The American States are separated from us, and Independent, consequently foreign; the declaring them such, puts them in the only situation in which they can be; all difficulty is removed, nothing is hazarded, no hidden mischief is to be dreaded; but relying on those commercial principles and regulations under which our trade and navy have become so great, Great-Britain will lose few of the advantages she possessed before the American states became independent; and with prudent management she will have as much of the trade as it will be her interest to wish for, without any expence to the State, of civil establishment or protection."—N. Y. Gaz., D 6, 1783. See letter subscribed by "Common Sense" in ibid., D 10, 1783, commenting on these "Observations."

" Refugees reaching Halifax, by the sloop-of-war "Vulture," eight days from New York, report that there are 14,000 still to come from New York to the different parts of Nova Scotia; and that numbers from various parts of the continent are coming to New York, determined to seek an asylum in Nova Scotia.—Royal Gaz., O 15, 1783. See O 12.

" This is the last day for the "Board of Claims" to sit, provided for in Adj.-Gen. De Lancey's order of April 15 (q. v.).—Royal Gaz., S 17, 1783.

Oct. Draught horses are to be sold at public vendue "at the Artillery
4 Stables near St. Paul's Church."—Royal Gaz., O 4, 1783.

6 Carleton informs Smith that "the Evacuation will take Place in the Course of the next Month."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Oct. VII. 6

An officer of the British ship "Duc de Chartres" writes from 12
Nova Scotia: "The great emigration of Loyalists from New York to this province is almost incredible, they have made many new settlements in the Bay of Fundy; and considerably augmented those of Annapolis Royal and St. John's River; they are so numerous at the last mentioned place as to build two towns [Carlton and Clinton]. . . . Numbers of families are also gone to Halifax, but the majority are fixed at Port-Roseway, where they have erected a large city [Shelburne] which contains nine thousand inhabitants, exclusive of the Black town, containing about twelve hundred free Blacks, who have served during the war."—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 814.

John Cape who, during the Revolution, kept a tavern with the 13
French arms in Trenton, announces that he has returned and taken the noted "House and Stables formerly called Hull's, but during the war Roubalet's, Tavern."—N. Y. Packet, O 22, 1783. See also L. M. R. K., III: 977, under "City Tavern." In the following year, Cape renamed the house the "State Arms of New York." Cape remained here until the spring of 1786, when Joseph Corré, a pastry cook and confectioner, became the proprietor.—See Mr 16, 1786.

Gov. Clinton writes from Poughkeepsie to Gen. Washington, 14 who is at Rocky Hill, near Princeton, N. J., expressing the fear that Carleton "may not give me timely Notice, as he promised to do in his first Letter, for the establishment of the Jurisdiction of the State over that District [the southern district] on his Departure, and Disorder will consequently take place, before Measures can be taken by the State to prevent it." He therefore asks "that the Troops on the Lines in Westchester County might have Orders to move to the Neighborhood of the City, the moment the British leave it," subject to his directions.—Public Papers of Geo. Clinton, VIII: 257. Washington replied on Oct. 23 that he had written to Gen. Knox, desiring him to confer with Clinton, "and make every necessary arrangement for taking possession of the city the moment the British quit it."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 490.

Congress adopts proclamations directing the disbandment of 18
the army on and after Nov. 3, and setting apart the second Thursday in December (the 11th) as a day of public thanksgiving.—Jour. of Cong. (Way & Gideon ed.), IV: 298–99; Winsor, VI: 746.

" "Sir Guy Carleton, K: B: General and Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Forces, within the Colonies lying on the Atlantic Ocean from Nova Scotia to West Florida inclusive," orders an investigation made concerning the origin of the great fire of Sept. 21, 1776 (q. v.). Three British officers are appointed to take testimony.—From the original commission (MS.) in the N. Y. H. S.; Report on Am. MSS. in Royal Inst. of Gt. Brit., IV: 416. The following is a condensed statement of the testimony taken at the hearings:

By Dr. Mervin Nooth, supt.-gen. of his majesty's hospitals in North America: That he saw a man on top of Trinity Church with a fire-brand, and that he believes the church was set on fire by him; also that an explosion occurred in one of the chimneys of "the Vaux-hall hospital."

By Major Mackenzie: That he saw a fire start next day in a house in Chatham Row, four or five houses east of Dr. Inglis's house, which was opposite St. Paul's Church; that he and others believed it was separately set on fire, and that the City was not set on fire by the king's troops.

By Mr. Chew, ass't commissary and sec. of Indian affairs: That he saw the first house in flames, a small one on the dock at Whitehall; then a high house in "Wincoop Street," two hundred yards away, which had the appearance of having been purposely set on fire; that he went on shore from his ship next morning and a sailor who accompanied him found two bundles of cedar matches under a warehouse; that a few days later he found other matches in a cooper shop in Smith Street concealed in a barrel of shavings; and saw several matches that had been discovered by different persons in different parts of the City; that Trinity Church was seen from his ship to be set on fire; that he had been informed that many of the pump handles were taken away and the pumps otherwise rendered useless, and the fire buckets hid or cut to pieces.

By Baltus Dash, tinman: That he had been appointed by Gen. Robertson (when the king's troops took possession of the City)

1783 Oct. 18 to take charge of the fire-engines and lamps of the city and the light-house at Sandy Hook (which position he still holds); that on the cry of fire "which first broke out at Whitehall, whither he immediately repaired with all the Engines being twelve in number;" that he soon after was told a house was on fire near the North River, back of the rector's house which was near Trinity Church, half a mile from Whitehall; that failing to check the fire which was burning Trinity Church, the Lutheran Church and many other buildings, he "repaired to S[t] Paul's Church to attempt to save that which by great exertions was effected;" that at daylight he saw several persons taken into custody for having matches concealed in their clothes, one of whom was rescued from the rage of the sailors and soldiers in Broadway near the Oswego Market; that from observation and experience he believes the City was purposely set on fire in different places.

By Major Adye: That an inquiry had been made a few days after the fire, but nothing appeared to show that the fire had been caused by the king's troops.

By Henry Law, captain of the fort: That from his observation of the fire starting in several places at the same time, and from the capture of men with matches, he never supposed the fire was accidental or that it had been set on fire by the king's troops; that a man he knew "was put to death and hung up by the heels for cutting the handles of the fire buckets as reported."

By John L. C. Roome, and others: That before the British occupation "he heard it frequently said by the American soldiers then in the City that it would be burnt whenever the king's troops should take possession of it."

By Comfort Sands, a member of the provincial congress for New York: That he never heard the city was set on fire by direction or authority of the United States or any officer or member of the American army, and does not think it was; that he never heard or knew that fire buckets had been taken from private families.

By William Waddell, alderman: That he was directed by Gen. Howe immediately after the king's troops took possession "to see the pumps fire buckets & engines repaired," and that this was done before the fire; that "Many matches & other Combustibles were discovered in the Stores on Cruger's Wharf, which he was informed were prepared for the purpose of fitting out fire-ships;" that "Some persons were taken up having matches about them which he supposes they had taken from the stores from mere motives of curiosity, without any design of doing mischief with them;" that he heard the day after the fire "that it began in a small house at Whitehall where it was said some sailors or soldiers had carelessly left a fire."

By William Hervey, merchant: That he had been appointed by Gen. Robertson soon after the fire to examine the houses; that he found in a house in Smith St., near Pitt's statue, a cartridge of powder under a straw bed, and a large train of powder leading from it down to the back door in the yard, and showed them to a neighbour.

By Andrew Kerr: That he saw Trinity Church take fire from the sparks that fell upon it, while he stood "on top of Mr Seabury's house in Smith Street;" that the fire had then progressed up Broad St. nearly to Beaver St.; that it "was currently reported that several applications were made to Gen. Washington by the N. Eng[d] people to have N York burnt, previous to the Kings Troops taking possession of it;" that it "was reported that G. Washington said in answer to them that he would severely punish any who attempted to set fire to the City;" that "many of the fire buckets and bags were taken from the inhabitants before the American Army evacuated it, . . . the bell was also taken about the same time from Trinity Church & carried off."

By William Shipman, cashier in the deputy paymaster-general's office: That at about sunset on the night of the fire "he walked by a small house formerly the ferry house kept by one Johnson upon the dock at Whitehall," and "near the corner saw several sailors, women and others whom he supposed to be British, some of whom were drunk, and a fire in the chimney; that he went home and on the alarm of fire he suspected the fire was in this house, and immediately went there and found that it was; that he went "to the pay-office in the Broad-way where Stevens's livery stables now stand," and remained there all night; that "he saw Trinity Church take fire from the sparks and flakes of fire which fell upon it;" that the fire "had reached up the Broadway to the Lutheran Church" when he saw Trinity Church take fire, the south side of the roof near the steeple catching fire first, the roof being covered with shingles; that he supposed the fire the result of accident; that the matches that were found were "prepared for fire-rafts;" that "the wind blew very fresh from S. E.," as he judged from the direction of the flames, and shifted more to the east about the time Trinity took fire. Oct. 18

By Jeronymus Alstine, blacksmith: That the engine he had charge of at the fire was prevented from playing properly by "the Key" being put out of place; that he saw Trinity take fire on the south-west side of the roof and steeple from the flakes of fire that fell, when the fire had passed Beaver St. in Broad St. and the Lutheran Church in Broadway; When he first saw the fire it had reached from Whitehall nearly to the bridge in Dock Street; that "most of the bells were taken away & carried into the Country before the King's troops took possession of the City."

By Dr. Charles Inglis: That the fire began on the south-east side of the slip at Whitehall; that the wind "carried the sparks from the burning Houses cross the White Hall Slip over the Battery, Pearl Street & Fort George;" that while he "stood at the upper end of Stone Street, fire was discovered on the Roof of M[r] Kempe's House, though out of the line of the sparks;" that while looking for an iron suitable to use as a pump-bolt (which was missing), he was told that two houses were on fire on New St., which was still farther out of the line of the sparks; that this led him to believe the city had been purposely set on fire; that he informed Gen. Robertson whom he found at his home in Broadway below Trinity Church; tried the gates of Trinity Church yard, and found them locked as usual. Dr. Inglis also states that he received a narrative from a ship-master named Devereux who had been captured by a "Rebel" privateer from Boston in the late autumn or early winter of 1776, and who was informed by three sailors on board, regarding the fire in New York, which, they stated, they had set on fire, and that they were "part of forty Seamen from Boston & Marble Head, who had been left in the City of New York when it was evacuated by the Continental Army, for the purpose of setting it on Fire."

By Rev. Benjamin Moore: That he went upon the top of the rector's house near Trinity Church, and saw the flakes of fire fall upon the roof of the church and the building take fire, that it would be impossible to save the rector's house, and quitted it, and went up the steeple of the Church "to endeavor to save his books which had been deposited there upon the Episcopal clergy quitting the City upon the declaration of independence."

Brig.-Gen. Clarke, Samuel Bayard and others gave circumstantial evidence. William Elsworth stated that in the summer of 1776 he had collected the fire buckets from vacant houses and deposited them in the city hall to be ready in case of need. James Wells stated that the house where the fire started "was rather a shed communicating with the ferry house on one side and Hilyard's tavern on the other, both of which were wooden buildings." Lee Ashton, a soldier, testified that he saw a man cut the handles of fire buckets, and he took the knife from him and had him sent to the Provost; also that he helped push a man into the flames who was found with matches. Another soldier testified he caught a man setting fire to a shed.

The original papers of the commissioners appointed by Gen. Carleton to investigate the causes of the fire were presented in 1890 to the N. Y. H. S. by Joseph W. Lawrence, of St. John, New Brunswick. See mention of the gift in Mag. of Am. Hist. (1890), XXIII: 509.

20 A vessel in New York harbour, flying the colours of the United States, is boarded "by the Canaille," who tear down the flag and carry it in triumph through the streets, "attended by a chosen band-itti of negroes, sailors, and loyal leather apron'd statesmen." —Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 817. On Oct. 27, Gen. Carleton and Admiral Digby issued a proclamation denouncing the outrage as a breach of the peace, and as having "a mischievous Tendency to prolong the Animosities, which it is the design of the Provisional Articles to assuage and extinguish."—N. Y. Morn. Post, N 7, 1783. Chief-Justice Smith drafted this proclamation, as he had done in many prior instances; his diary, of Oct. 28, contains the following note: "Sent Sir Guy Carleton yesterday Draft of a Proclamation by him and the Admiral on a late Insult here of the American Colours. It implies that the Americans are Foreigners if they so please to interpret it. a Draft by Gen[l] Mosgrave had erroneously called them a nation distinguished from the British which I observed to the Gen[l] supposed the Provisional to be definitive Articles."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII.

23 Washington writes from Rocky Hill, N. J., to Knox regarding 1783 Oct. 23 "arrangements for the Celebration of Peace," which he thinks should be deferred "until the British leave the City, and then to have it at that place, where all who chuse to attend can find accommodation."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 328.

24 Samuel Loudon issues the following notice "To the Public:"

"At the Commencement of the late War, the Subscriber left this City, and took Residence in Fish Kill; where, during more than seven Years, he furnished his Fellow Citizens with the New-York Packet, although embarrassed by many and great Difficulties; which the Troubles of the Day occasioned. The happy Restoration of Peace to this Country, has invited his Return to the City; where, he intends, to resume the Publication of his Paper. . . .

"He intends to publish Two Papers a Week; on Monday and Thursday; His First will be published on Thursday the Thirteenth of November next [q.v.]. Price Three Dollars per Annum, the Price before the War; Half to be paid at Entrance. . . .

"Subscriptions are now taking in, at his House, No. 5, Water-Street. He flatters himself, that no News-Paper, published in this City, will have a more general Circulation through the Country, than the New-York Packet.

"Advertisements, Essays, &c. will be thankfully received; it is requested that they may be furnished in due Time.

"He hopes that Gentlemen of Abilities and Leisure, will lend him their Assistance. Every Thing that has a Tendency to improve the Mind, reform the Manners, promote Literature, political Speculation, Essays on Government, Improvement in Manufactures, Husbandry, Intelligence foreign and domestic, &c. will be gratefully received, and duly inserted."—N. Y. Merc., N 3, 1783. See N 13.

27 Cornelius Bradford announces the opening on this day of "The Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., O 27, 1783. This was the Merchants' Coffee House.—See L. M. R. K., III: 979. Bradford had been proprietor of it before the Revolution beginning May 1, 1776 (q.v.); but had retired after the British occupation of the city, and the Coffee House was for a few years in charge of James Strachan (see Ap 28, 1781). Bradford died on Nov. 9, 1786. In an account of his death, he was described as "a steady patriot during the late arduous contest for American liberty," and the Coffee House, "under his management, was kept with great dignity, both before and since the late war, and he revived its credit from that contempt into which it had fallen during the war."—N. Y. Packet, N 10, 1786. Mrs. Bradford continued to keep the tavern, being there as late as Feb. 23, 1793 (q.v.).

31 The fourth financial report (see Ag 20) made by the vestry includes the period from Aug. 21 to this date. It is printed in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 224–25. See N 24.

Nov. 1 An advertisement reads: "Robert Montgomery, Watch and Clock-Maker, and Engraver, Opposite the Coffee-House Bridge, Informs his friends, and the public, that he intends carrying on his business, in all its various branches. His serving a regular apprenticeship, will, he hopes, gain him encouragement."—N. Y. Packet, N 20, 1783; Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 181.

" The sketch of a survey, entitled "A Draught of Andrew Eliot's Seat in the Bowery Lane, November 1, 1783," shows an estate bounded on the west by Bestaver's Rivulet (or Minetta Brook). It was called "Minto" at this time, when owned by Paymaster-Gen. Elliot; it was later owned by Robert Richard Randall, and became known as the Sailor's Snug Harbour. The survey is preserved in the Bancker Coll., in N. Y. P. L. See also L. M. R. K., III: 951.

2 Washington issues, from Rocky Hill, near Princeton, N. J., his farewell address to the army.—Winsor, VI: 746; Thacher, Military Jour. (1823), 419.

3 "Macpherson, Acquaints the Public, that he has opened a Porter House at the sign of the Bunch of Grapes, on the New-Dock, between the Fly-Market and Brownejohn's wharf. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., N 3, 1783.

4 Congress adjourns at Princeton, to meet at Annapolis on Nov. 26 (q.v.).—Jour. of Cong., IV: 316.

5 Firemen are advertised for, to fill vacancies in the engine companies. "None need apply but those who are sober discreet persons."—Royal Gaz., N 5, 1783.

" The City Tavern is offered for sale. The advertisement describes the property as follows: "Those two elegant and well finished Corner Dwelling-Houses and Lots of Ground, being on the Westerly side of the Broad-Way; one of them formerly Roubalet's Tavern, together with the Assembly-Room, Out-Houses and Stables, adjoining the same. The Houses are in good repair, and every other Convenience to recommend them. The Situation of those Houses render them valuable, being in an airy and most pleasant part of the city; they now rent together for £450 per Annum. . . ."—Royal Gaz., N 5, 1783. Just a few weeks before (see O 13), John Cape had become the new proprietor of the tavern. In the spring of 1784, the houses were again offered for sale. They were then described as the property of John Peter Delancey, Esq. "one of them formerly Roubalet's, now Cape's Tavern . . . the other rented by Mr. Willard."—N. Y. Packet, Mr 4, 1784. Nov. 5

Persons having claims against "the Civil Departments of the Royal Artillery" are required to present them at the "Artillery Office, opposite St. Paul's Church, Broad-Way."—Royal Gaz., N 8, 1783. 8

Apparently, the issue of The New-York Gazette; and the Weekly Mercury of this date (issue No. 1673) is the last one, and the paper is discontinued.—Early Newspapers, II: 422; and N 11, 1776. 10

Cornelius Bradford, at the "New-York Coffee-house," publishes the following notice: "All Masters of vessels arriving in this Port are hereby informed, that the subscriber who keeps the New-York Coffee-House, has prepared a book in which he will insert the names of such as may please to call on him, the names of their vessels, the port from whence they came, and any other particular occurrences of their voyages, in order that the Gentlemen of this city, or travellers may obtain the earliest intelligence thereof: particular care will be taken in the delivery of all such letters as may be entrusted to his care."—N. Y. Merc., N 10, 1783. See also Mr 11, 1784. Bradford had returned with the patriot army, and re-opened the Merchants' Coffee House (see L. M. R. K., III: 979) on Oct. 27 (q.v.). "

On or about Jan. 28, 1784, Cornelius Bradford and Malcolm McEwen entered into partnership in the "plumbing and pewtering" business at No. 70 Water St., nearly opposite the Crane Wharf; but Bradford continued as proprietor of the Coffee House. —Ind. Gaz., F 5, 1784. See Mr 11.

Sir Guy Carleton writes to Gen. Washington that he hopes the withdrawing of British troops from New York may be accomplished before the end of the present month. He adds: "At all events, I propose to relinquish the posts at Kingsbridge, and as far as McGowan's Pass inclusive on this Island, on the 21st instant; to resign the possession of Herrick's and Hempstead, with all to the eastward on Long Island, on the same day; and, if possible, to give up this city with Brooklyn, on the day following; and Paulus Hook, Dennis's, and Staten Island, as soon after as may be practicable." He points out the possible need of a free use of "the Shipyard," after the town is evacuated, if any of the British ships should want repair.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 545. 12

Samuel Loudon re-establishes his newspaper in New York, after publishing it in Fishkill from Jan. 16, 1777 (q.v.), to Aug. 28, 1783 (q.v.); the first issue here (No. 332), a semi-weekly, bears this date, and the title The New York Packet. And the American Advertiser.— Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 1474; Early Newspapers, II: 426. See, further, O 24, 1783; N 11, 1784. 13

Washington writes from West Point in reply to Carleton's letter of Nov. 12 (q.v.): "To day I will see the governor of this State, and concert with him the necessary arrangements for taking possession of the city of New York, and the other posts mentioned in your letter, at the times therein specified."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 497. (This letter is not found in the Ford ed.). 14

Washington and Clinton are expected in New York on Saturday, Nov. 22.—Penn. Packet (Phila.), N 25, 1783. "

Ephraim Smith, inspector of markets, cuts down and carries to his house the bell of the Fly Market, assisted by a party of soldiers, and threatens to tear down "the whole of the erections there." This is to deprive the Americans (whom he calls "Damned Rebels") from enjoying this convenience. The commandant, on hearing of it, reprimands him and orders the restoration of the bell.—Penn. Packet, N 25, 1783; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 821. "

Andrew Elliot, the British superintendent of the port, publishes a notice that, by order of the commandant, the business of his office will be finally closed on Nov. 20.—Royal Gaz., N 15, 1783.

Gov. Clinton issues a proclamation at Poughkeepsie, in view of the expected withdrawal of British forces from the southern district of this state, requiring the council. which was constituted under the 15

1783 Nov. 15 act of Oct. 23, 1779, to meet at Guyon's Tavern, at East Chester, on Nov. 21, and requiring all citizens to yield due obedience to the laws of this state, and to preserve peace and good order. The council, as required by the act of 1779, is "to provide for the temporary government of the southern parts of this State, whenever the enemy shall abandon or be dispossessed of the same, and until the Legislature can be convened."—Penn. Packet, N 25, 1783. See, further, N 21.

" Gov. Clinton writes from Poughkeepsie to John Morin Scott appointing him to receive the public records at New York, and stating that it is Sir Guy Carleton's wish that the persons so appointed may be in New York on or before Nov. 22d, the day (later postponed) for the evacuation of the city.—Public Papers of Geo. Clinton, VIII: 281. Scott replied, on Nov. 19, that his right had been questioned to have the custody, not only of "the Records belonging to the Secretary's Office," but also "those belonging to the City and the other Counties of the Southern district." He had been notified of this opinion by Mr. Elliot. Col. Van Cortlandt had called upon him this morning, "and offered to deliver up the City Records" to him; but he had shown him Elliot's letter and the colonel had replied that he looked for Clinton's order "for the delivery of the papers."—Ibid., VIII: 286–87.

" James Barclay advertises an auction sale, on this day, of a number of soldiers' cribs, boards, etc., "at the Friend's Meeting [see My 5, 1774], upward end of Queen-street."—Royal Gaz., N 15, 1783; L. M. R. K., III: 928.

" James Hallett, coach-maker (who has been in business in New York since 1750, q.v.), presents his bill to Sir Guy Carleton just prior to the British evacuation of the city. This document was found by Geo. W. W. Houghton, ed. of The Hub, among the Carleton MSS., in the library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, Albemarle St., London. Carleton's country-seat was at the present south-east corner of Varick and Charlton Sts.—Houghton, Coaches of Colonial N. Y. (1890), 28–29; Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 467. This was the Mortier house, "Richmond Hill."—L. M. R. K., III: 951.

16 The following garrison orders are issued at West Point: "The Definitive Treaty being concluded, and the city of New-York to be evacuated on the 22d Instant, His Excellency the Commander in Chief proposes to celebrate the Peace at that Place, on Monday the First Day of December next, by a Display of the Fire-Works, and Illuminations, which were intended to have been exhibited at this Post, or such of them as have not been injured by Time, and can be removed."—N. Y. Packet, N 20, 1783; Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783. The celebration actually occurred on Dec. 2 (q.v.).

" "Provisions are very dear; the Americans bring in meat, corn, and vegetables, the first and last however but in small quantities, and which they sell at high prices only for ready money, as specie is universally preferred on every part of the continent."—From a N. Y. letter in London Chron., D 18–20, 1783.

17 The first issue of a new weekly newspaper, The Independent Journal, or, the General Advertiser, makes its appearance. Webster and McLean, the publishers, advertised the new sheet in Rivington's paper of Nov. 15, declaring that "Advertisements, Articles of Intelligence, &c. will be gratefully received at their Printing-Office, No. 32 Maiden-Lane."—Royal Gaz., N 15, 1783. See also Early Newspapers, II: 421. A copy of the first issue is preserved in the N. Y. H. S. See, further, D 25.

18 "It is requested of the gentlemen who have served in the American army, now in town, on the arrival of his excellency general Washington, to appear with their union cockades, in compliment to his excellency, and our great and good ally, Louis XVI."—Penn. Packet, N 25, 1783.

"It is too obvious . . . that nothing chagrins the Britons more than the Union Cockades which appears in the hats of the American officers, in honour to our worthy Allies."—Salem Gaz., D 18, 1783.

" At a meeting "of a large and respectable number of Inhabitants (lately returned from a seven years' exile) at Mr. Cape's Tavern [see O 13], Broad-Way," the following resolutions are adopted, Col. Henry Bicker being "Moderator:" That every person who remained in New York during "the late contest" be requested to leave the room, and not be admitted to any future meetings of this body; that each person will do his utmost to "prevent any confusion that may arise, on and after the day when this city shall be evacuated by the troops of his Britannic Majesty," as required by Gov. Clinton's proclamation; and that certain named persons be a committee to meet at Simmons's Tavern on the evening of Nov. 19, "to form a Badge of distinction, to be worn on the day of evacuation—appoint the place of meeting, previous thereto, and agree as to the manner in which this body shall receive his Excellency the Governor, on that day."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783; Holt's Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783. See N 20. Nov. 18

Sir Guy Carleton writes to Gen. Washington: "His Majesty's troops will retire from Kingsbridge and McGowan's Pass on this Island, on the 21st instant, as notified to your Excellency in my letter of the 12th (q.v.); and I shall resign the possession of Herrick's and Hempstead, with all to the eastward on Long Island, the same day. Paulus Hook will be relinquished on the day following; but, though every exertion has been made with a view to evacuate this city at the same time, which it was my hope and intention to do, I now find it impracticable. Yet, notwithstanding the winds have been lately very unfavorable, If I have proper assurances that we shall retain a free and uninterrupted use of the Ship-Yard and Hallett's Wharf in New York, and the Brewery and Bakehouse on Long Island (which the admiral represents as indispensably necessary for the shipping and sick seamen), until we can be ready to take our final departure, I shall retire from this city and from Brooklyn on Tuesday next [Nov. 25] at noon, or as soon after as wind and weather may permit; only retaining (in addition to the reservation above specified) Statan Island, with Dennis's, New Utrecht, and the circumjacent district on Long Island, for such time as may be found absolutely requisite for the troops, that may then remain unprovided with transports." Carleton warns Gen. Washington that he has learned of "a deliberate combination . . . to plunder this town whenever the King's troops shall be withdrawn."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 546. 19

Washington, however, states in his reply on Nov. 22 (writing at Harlem) that this latter intelligence does not appear to him to be well founded, and that arrangements have been made to prevent such outrage or disorder, unless the evacuation is so long delayed that "a much larger number of people shall be collected from the country, than have been assembled as yet for the purpose of going into town."—Ibid., (Ford ed.), X: 335.

" The "Pacquet Le Courier de L'Europe," after a stormy passage, arrives from Port L'Orient, having as passenger "Thatcher, Esq; Secretary to John Adams, Esq; Ambassador from the United States of America to the States General of Holland, charged, by the American Commissioners, with the Definitive Treaty, signed by them, (on the 3d of September,) and on the part of Great-Britain, by Mr. Hartley; with which he, on Thursday morning [Nov. 20], sat off to deliver it to the Honourable General Mifflin, President of Congress."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz. (Supplement), N 22, 1783. See also Holt's Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783.

On this ship also came "Hector St. John, Esq; appointed by the Court of France to be Consul, and Superintendent of the Pacquets, now established between this City and Port L'Orient."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz. (Supplement), N 22, 1783. See also the issues of this paper of Dec. 10, 17 and 20 for further announcements regarding the five ships of this packet line. Besides "Le Courier de L'Europe," they are "Le Courier de L'Amérique," "Le Courier de New-York," "Le Courier de l'Orient," and "L'Allegator." The "design" of the line was "to facilitate the communication between France and America, and the concerns of commerce between both countries."

At a meeting held this evening at Cape's Tavern the following resolutions are adopted, Col. Frederick Weissenfels being in the chair: 20

"I. Resolved, That the Badge of Distinction, to be worn at the Reception of the Governor, on his Entrance in this City, be a Union Cockade, of black and white Ribband, worn on the left Breast; and a Laurel in the Hat.

"II. Resolved. That the Place of Meeting be at the Bull's-Head Tavern, now kept by Mrs. Verien, on Saturday next, at 9 o'Clock, A. M.

"III. Resolved, That if it appear eligible, his Excellency Governor Clinton, and his Excellency General Washington (should he accompany the Governor) shall be received by the Citizens, drawn up in the Form of a Square, and in that manner conducted to his Quarters.

"IV. Resolved, That the Field and other Officers, who now

1783 Nov. 20 Serve, or heretofore have served, in the Continental Army, be requested to form themselves on the Flanks of the Square, in the conducting his Excellency.

"V. Resolved, That Mr. Samuel Broome [and twelve others] . . . be a Committee for the purpose of conducting the Procession.

"VI. Resolved, That the Committee do meet To-Morrow, 11 o' Clock, A. M. at the Coffee-House; and that Captain Randall and Captain Dennis notify the Members thereof.

"VII. Resolved, That if the whole of the Committee should not be present, the attending Members be authorized to appoint others in their Place.

"VIII. Resolved, That Mr. James M' Kinney be requested to furnish the Laurels, and deposit them at the Bull's Head.

"IX. Resolved, That Mr. Daniel Green be requested to carry the colours of the United States, on the occasion."—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783. See N 21.

" Loyalists who have signed for passage to the island of Abbaco (see Je 16) are requested to go on board their vessels at "New-Slip," to be mustered, at noon on Nov. 21; as after that they will be "precluded from passages at government's expense."—N. Y. Packet, N 20, 1783. Over 29,000 refugees left New York within a year (see O 6, 1782).—Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1902), 293.

Regarding the loyalists' claim of their right to indemnification for losses sustained during the war, see The Case and Claim of the American Loyalists impartially stated and considered. Printed by Order of their Agents (London, 1783); also Historical View of the Commission for enquiring into the Losses, Services, and Claims of the American Loyalists at the close of the War, between Great Britain and her Colonies, in 1783; with an Account of the Compensation granted to them by Parliament in 1785 and 1788, by John Eardley-Wilmot (London, 1815); also transcripts of papers relating to American Loyalists copied from originals in the British Pub. Rec. Office, and preserved in the MSS. Div. of the N. Y. P. L.

" "Running Machines"—a line of "Stage Waggons"—are advertised to make a one-day run from Newark to Philadelphia. "Constant attendance is given by the boats at the Ferry Stairs, near the Exchange, at three o'clock in the afternoon, to bring passengers to Communepau, where the Newark stage will be ready to convey them to Kinney's tavern" (in Newark).—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783.

21 Lieut.-Gov. Van Cortlandt recorded in his note-book his movements from Nov. 18 to 25, as follows: "I went from Peekskill Tuesday the 18 of Novemr. In Company with his Excellency Gover'r Clinton, Coll. Benson, and Coll. Campbell, Lodged that night with Genl Cortlandt at Croton River, proceeded & lodged Wednesday night [19th] at Edw. Covenhov'n [Tarrytown] where we mett his Excellency Genl Washington & his aids, the next Night [20th] Lodged with Mrs. Fred'k V Cortlandt at the Yonkers after having dined with Genl Lewis Morris. Fryday morning [21st] wee rode In Company with the Commander In Chief as far as the widow Day's at harlem, where we held a Council. Saturday [22d] I rode down to Mr. Stuyvesants stay'd there until Tuesday [25th]. Then rode Triumphant into the Citty with the Commander."—Mag. of Am. Hist., V: 134.

" Gen. Washington and Gov. George Clinton arrive "at Haerlem, at Day's tavern [on the present 126th St. near Eighth Ave.] 9 miles from the city of New York." They are attended "by a number of gentlemen of the army, members of the senate and assembly, and other officers of distinction. The continental troops are stationed at or near M'Gowans pass; our pickets are advanced to the Dove tavern, five miles from the city."—Penn. Packet, N 29, 1783.

A discharge of cannon announces the embarkation of Rear Admiral Digby.—Ibid.

" The council, appointed as provided in the act of Oct. 23, 1779 (q. v.), and which meets at Harlem, passes a measure "for preserving peace and good order within the City and County of New York, and the Counties of Suffolk, Queen's, King's, and Richmond," and for apprehending and securing all offenders. It is made lawful for the commander-in-chief (Washington), or other officer commanding the troops of the United States, to issue orders to the troops to perform this service. This ordinance is to be published in newspapers and hand-bills.—N. Y. Packet, N 24, 1783.

" "At a Meeting of a Number of the Officers of the American Army, held at the Request of the exiled Inhabitants of the City of New-York, for the Purpose of adopting a Mode to receive his Excellency Governor Clinton, and his Excellency General Washington, on their Entrance in this City.

"It is proposed, that all the Officers of the Line and Staff, who are now, or may be, in Town, meet at Mr. Cape's Tavern, at Nine o'Clock, To-Morrow Morning, and march in a Column to the Bull's Head, in the Bowery Lane: On the arrival of their Excellencies, the Officers will wheel by Platoons; and form a Column in the Rear of the American advanced Guard, and in Front of the Governor and General. The Citizens at the same Time, will march by Files. on each Flank of their Excellencies, and form a Column in the Rear. Nov. 21

"Colonel Weissenfels is requested to lead a Column of the American Officers."—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783.

Some "staunch and avowed friends to the American cause, living in the vicinity of Chapel-street," on a supposition that Gen. Washington and Gov. Clinton were to make their "public entry" into the city (they had reached Harlem the preceding day, q. v.), hoist the American flag on their houses, "in compliment to those illustrious characters." In a short time this "procured them a visit from the humane and polite Captain William Cunningham (le Bourreau General) at the head of a party of British Hannibals, in all the pomp of military parade. Monsieur le Bourreau, with his usual politeness, having pronounced some scores of double-headed Damns, besides the genteel epithets of Rebel Bitches, &c. without number, in the true milesian cadence, proceeded with his party, sabre à main, to tear down the obnoxious colours, and carried them in triumph to his Den, where it is said they were hoisted with the British colours over them." 22

Also, a "fracas" is reported to have happened at the Coffee House in consequence of a British officer having, unprovoked, grossly insulted an American officer. "The British son of Bellona received the discipline of the horsewhip, besides about half a dozen coups de pieds au derriere. None of his brethren interfered or countenanced him in the least, as they were eye-witnesses of his being the aggressor."—Salem (Mass.) Gaz., D 12, 1783. See also N 25.

John Holt re-commences publication of his weekly newspaper (formerly the Journal—see Ag 29, 1776) in New York, after its career in Kingston and Poughkeepsie (see Jl 7, 1777; My 11, 1778). He now calls it The Independent New-York Gazette, and gives it a new series of numbers, beginning with No. 1.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 443; ibid. (1918), 90. In a letter headed "The Printer to his Customers," Holt says: "

"Amidst a Variety of new Candidates for your Favour in the News-Paper Business:—I trust my Countrymen will not be regardless of the Interest of an old Friend, who has spent the prime of his Life in their Service, and to the utmost of his Abilities, always acted with Consistency and Uniformity for the public Good:—For the Truth of this, he relies upon the Evidence of every one who was acquainted with his Publications;—they were all calculated to promote Virtue, Religion, useful Knowledge, or innocent Amusement:—When the Differences between Great-Britain and America first arose, he laboured as far as the influence his Business gave him extended, to remove the Cause; when a Reconciliation became impracticable, which was not till after the British court had avowed the hostile attack at Lexington; there then remained no alternative, but resistance or slavery.

"After this, his Publications tended to animate his Countrymen to a vigorous Defence of their just Rights and Freedom.

"In Pursuit of this Object, he freely published the Sentiments of Freemen, though in Opposition to the Frowns and Menaces of a powerful Body, Men of Power in high Stations, and though the weak Endeavours of an Individual may only be counted as a drop to the Ocean, yet to our united Efforts, Heaven has been pleased to grant the Success which we are now about to celebrate, and on which we desire to join our Countrymen in reciprocal Congratulations.

"We have only to desire the kind Indulgence of our Readers for the Defects in this Paper, which at this Time appears under every Disadvantage—Hastily published, in a House not fitted for the Purpose, nor our printing Letter and Materials, yet come to Town, except a small Quantity, and that in Disorder; nor have our Correspondents had Time to get their Intelligence into a proper Channel of Conveyance. When these Impediments are removed, we hope to give our Customers as much Reason to be satisfied with our Publications as ever they have had formerly, nor shall we be less Assiduous to please."—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 22, 1783. For later changes in name and ownership, see Early Newspapers, II: 424; and D 13. "

1783 Nov. 22 With the issue of this date (No. 747), Rivington changes the title of his newspaper (see D 13, 1777) to Rivington's New-York Gazette, and Universal Advertiser.—Early Newspapers, II: 428. See, further, D 31.

23 Rutger's brewery, "on Brewer's-hill," and the dwelling-house adjoining, are destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Packet, N 24, 1783. Lieut. Von Krafft, now on shipboard, describes the scene in his journal: "The city was all full of Rebels, although all the watches in the city were still occupied by the English, . . . In the night time between 11 and 12 o'clock a terrible fire occurred in New York. Then the ringing of alarm bells and the uproar made by the disgustingly drunken sailors of our ship who had been in the city until late, made it quite a restless night. The fire continued until 3 in the morning, when we could see no more."—Von Krafft's Jour., 199.

24 In conformity with the notification given by Carleton to Washington on Nov. 19 (q.v.), he now writes to him: "I purpose to withdraw from this place to-morrow at noon, by which time I conclude your troops will be near the barrier. The guards from the redoubts and on the East River shall be first withdrawn; but an officer will be sent out to give information to your advanced guard when the troops move."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 547. For the "barrier," see N 25.

" A broadside bearing this date is circulated, stating that, "The Committee appointed to conduct the Order of receiving their Excellencies Governor Clinton and General Washington,

"Beg Leave to inform their Fellow-Citizens, that the Troops, under the Command of Major-General Knox, will take Possession of the City at the Hour agreed on, Tuesday next; as soon as this may be performed, he will request the Citizens who may be assembled on Horseback, at the Bowling-Green, the lower End of the Broad-Way, to accompany him to meet their Excellencies Governor Clinton and General Washington, at the Bull's Head, in the Bowery—the Citizens on Foot to assemble at or near the Tea-water-Pump at Fresh-water.

"ORDER OF PROCESSION.

"A Party of Horse will precede their Excellencies and be on their flanks—after the General and Governor, will follow the Lieutenant-Governor and Members of the Council for the temporary Government of the Southern Parts of the State—The Gentlemen on Horse-back, eight in Front—those on Foot, in the Rear of the Horse, in like Manner. Their Excellencies, after passing down Queen-Street, and the Line of Troops up the Broadway, will alight at Cape's Tavern."

The rest of the broadside relates to good order during the ceremonies, patrols, night watch, etc.—See Pl. 49-a, Vol. V, where the document is reproduced from the unique original in the author's collection; or see a facsimile in Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 474. See, further, N 25.

" "We are credibly informed that his excellency governor Clinton, will make his public entrance into this city to-morrow. He will certainly be received with every mark of distinction due to so great and dignified a character.—The grateful citizens long sensible of his extraordinary virtues, will naturally exult as one man on his return, and anticipate the happy effects consequent on their being subjected to the government of so wise and judicious a legislator.

"It is expected that his excellency general Washington, will accompany the governor. There is no doubt but that the strictest decency and decorum will be observed on the occasion by all ranks of people. They will naturally view him with that pleasing wonder, and heart-felt sincerity, which must expand the human mind on the appearance of a hero returning crowned with laurels, (after a long absence) whose singular and inflexible probity, constantly commands universal esteem; and whose individual merit as a guardian and protector of public liberty, is unparalleled in history."—From New York news in Penn. Packet, N 29, 1783.

" The final report of the city vestry during the Revolution continues New York's financial records (see Ap 30, 1782) from Nov. 1 down to this date, the eve of the evacuation of the city by the British. The report is in Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 225–26.

25 "Last Tuesday morning [Nov. 25] the American troops marched from Haerlem, to the Bowery Lane. They remained there [near the present junction of The Bowery and Third Ave.] until about one o'clock, when the British Troops left the Posts in the Bowery, and the American troops marched into, and took Possession of the City, in the following Order, viz.

"1. A Corps of Dragoons.
"2. Advanced Guard of Light Infantry. Nov. 25
"3. A Corps of Artillery.
"4. Battalion of Light Infantry.
"5. Battalion of Massachusetts Troops.
"6. Rear Guard.

"After the Troops had taken Possession of the City, the General and Governor made their Public Entry in the following Manner:

"1. Their Excellencies the General and Governor, with their Suites, on Horseback.

"2. The Lieutenant-Governor, and the Members of the Council, for the temporary Government of the Southern District, four a-breast.

"3. Major General Knox, and the Officers of the Army, eight a-breast.

"4. Citizens on Horseback, eight a-breast.

"5. The Speaker of the Assembly and Citizens, on Foot, eight a-breast.

"Their Excellencies the Governor and Commander in Chief, were escorted by a Body of West Chester Light Horse, under the command of Captain Delavan.

"The Procession proceeded down Queen [Pearl] street, and through the Broadway, to Cape's Tavern.

"The Governor gave a Public Dinner at Fraunce's Tavern; at which the Commander in Chief and other General Officers were present.

"After Dinner, the following Toasts were drank by the Company:

"1. The United States of America.
"2. His most Christian Majesty.
"3. The United Netherlands.
"4. The King of Sweden.
"5. The American Army.
"6. The Fleet and Armies of France, which have served in America.
"7. The Memory of those Heroes, who have fallen for our Freedom.
"8. May our Country be grateful to her Military Children.
"9. May Justice support what Courage has gained.
"10. The Vindicators of the Rights of Mankind in every Quarter of the Globe.
"11. May America be an Asylum to the persecuted of the Earth.
"12. May a close Union of the States guard the Temple they have erected to Liberty.
"13. May the Remembrance of This Day be a Lesson to Princes.

"The arrangement and whole conduct of this march, with the tranquility which succeeded it, through the day and night, was admirable! and the greateful citizens will ever feel the most affectionate impressions, from that elegant and efficient disposition which prevailed through the whole event."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 26, 1783; Holt's Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783. See also Winsor, VI: 746.

John Austin Stevens, writing in 1885, gave the following account of the evacuation, which contains some interesting details: ". . . On Monday the 24th the British Commander gave final notice that he would withdraw from New York at noon of the following day, at which time he presumed the American troops would be near the 'barrier.' This was a part of a fortified line across the island, originally made in 1775, and later strengthened by the British; it crossed the Bowery on the line of the present Grand Street. The American pickets were already stationed near the Dove Tavern, on the old post road within five miles of the city, near the present Sixty-fifth Street. The commander appointed to conduct the order of reception issued a notice the same day inviting the honorary escort to assemble on horseback at the Bowling Green, near the lower end of Broadway, where Major-Gen. Knox would request them to accompany him to meet the commander at the Bull's Head on the Bowery; the citizens on foot to assemble at or near the Tea Water Pump.

"At eight o'clock on the morning after memorable 25th November, the troops which had been stationed at McGowan's Pass, the light infantry acting as main guard, were marched to the Bowery Lane in the upper ward, and were then halted until one o'clock, when the British troops left their post at the barrier, and the Americans, consisting of a corps of dragoons, an advanced guard of light infantry, a corps of artillery, a batallion of light infantry, 1783 Nov. 25 a battalion of Massachusetts troops and the rear-guard, Major-General Knox commanding, entered the city [Mrs. Lamb says the troops under Knox marched from Harlem 'to a point near the Fresh-Water Pond, where they remained seated on the grass until about one o'clock in the afternoon'], and marching through the Bowery to Chatham, then through Queen, now Pearl Street, to its junction with Wall Street, thence through Wall to the Broadway, where the main body was drawn up in line in front of Cape's Tavern (later the City Hotel, now [1885] the Boreel Building), while a detail of infantry and artillery proceeded to Fort George at the Bowling Green, where the last British colors were hauled from the flag staff and the act of occupation was finally completed.

"The pageant of the day was now opened. General Knox with the honorary escort of citizens rode back from the Bowling Green to the Bull's Head Tavern, which stood near the site of the late Bowery, now Thalia Theatre. Here the citizens were gathered about the old Tea Water Pump, which stood at the corner of Orange (now Baxter) and Chatham Streets, and the General and Governor with the civic procession made their public entry."—Rep. of the Joint Com. on the Centennial Celeb. of the Evac. of N. Y. by the British, with hist. introd. by John Austin Stevens (1885), 19.

It has been related that the column moved slowly, and that, as it passed the historic Beekman house on the shores of the East River, "these officers, their staffs and a few civilians who accompanied them, were entertained in its drawing-room with punch made with lemons plucked from trees growing in the green-house."—De Lancey, Memoirs of James William Beekman (The St. Nicholas Soc., N. Y., 1877), 13.

A letter from New York, dated Nov. 26, stated that the British "cut away the halyards from the flag staff in the fort, (formerly fort George) and likewise greased the post: so that we were obliged to have a ladder to fix a new rope. Invention prevented any delay; for the glorious stripes were fixed in the sod, and a discharge of thirteen fired. The city has been remarkably quiet."—Penn. Packet, D 2, 1783.

Commenting on this final act of the British, a newspaper contributor said it was a demonstration of "their meanness of spirit and indisposition to conciliate the affections of the Americans; men who have proved themselves their superiors in every virtue, and who may without arrogance be denominated their Conquerors."—Salem (Mass.) Gaz., D 4, 1783.

Lieut. Anthony Glean, who was one of the officers invited by Washington to march with him into the city on Nov. 25, 1783, stated, in 1830, that he joined him near Fort Washington, "and marched with the main army into the city, filling and occupying the different posts that the British evacuated. Gen. Washington halted the army near the old tea-water pump, when the officers of the revolution formed into a line, and marched through the British army, then in the fields, (now the Park) which was on the eve of embarking—while the American army proceeded down Pearl street and Wall-street to Trinity Church, (then burnt) and there again met those officers and fired a salute of 13 guns."—N. Y. Gaz., N 26, 1830.

Capt. John Van Dyck, reviewing and criticising the autobiographical statements of Lieut. Glean, wrote, in 1831: "I first met a troop of American horse in front of our troops, commanded by Captain John Stakes (a native of New York), half way up Chatham-street to Pearl-street, from thence I went down Broadway to Fort George, hearing or seeing no salute of 13 guns being fired at Trinity Church." Referring to other features of Glean's biography, Van Dyck says: "Instead of the flag staff standing on the Battery, it stood on Fort George, on the north end, or bastion; and the fort walls were about twenty feet above the battery. I have known the flag staff to stand there for 66 years. I lived in the vicinity of the Battery and Fort, and I never knew a flag staff on the Battery, until the Corporation of New York had one put up at, or after, the taking down of Fort George. [See also Vol. I, p. 434–35.]

"I was on Fort George, and within two feet of the flag staff. The halyards were unreeved, the cleats were knocked off, the flag staff was slushed, and a sailor boy (not a man) tried three times, and got up about three feet when he slipped down. Some persons ran to Mr. Golet's, iron monger, in Hanover square (now Pearl street), and got a hand saw, hatchet, hammer, gimblets, and nails; one sawed lengths across the board, one split the cleats, and some bored, until they had plenty of them.

"The sailor boy tied the halyards around his waist, filled his outside sailor jacket pockets full of the cleats, then began to nail them on from the ground, on the right and left of the flag staff; as he ascended the flag staff he nailed the cleats on, then he reeved the halyards, and when the American flag was then hoisted on Fort George, a salute was fired of 13 rounds immediately, and three cheers were given."—Com. Adv., Je 30, 1831. Nov. 25

Capt. Van Dyck also stated in this letter that "there was no British flag on the staff to pull down;" but this statement was controverted by James Riker in a pamphlet entitled Evacuation Day (1883), in which he presented the recollections of Capt. John Van Arsdale, who, when a young sailor, climbed the flagstaff, and tore down the British flag on that occasion. Regarding the greasing of the flagstaff at the fort, see also N 25, 1792.

Another incident of the day was recorded in 1863 by Charles I. Bushnell, in a note appended to A Narrative of the Life and Adventures of Levi Hanford (1863), 72, as follows: "A gentlemen, of this city, now in the 89th year of his age, who was present at the evacuation of New York by the British in 1783, informs me that he lived at that time at the lower end of Murray Street, on the north side of the street. Opposite his residence was a tavern kept by a Mr. Day. An American flag had been hoisted from the tavern before twelve o'clock, the time appointed for the Americans to enter the city, and Cunningham, incensed at the premature display, came there to pull it down. He was met at the door of the tavern by Mrs. Day, a stout, athletic woman, very loyal in her sentiments, who refused him admittance, and upon his attempting to force his way into the house, a scuffle ensued between them, in which she boxed his ears warmly, made the powder fly from his hair, and caused him to beat a hasty retreat, amid the jeers and laughter of some few spectators who were present at the scene. My informant further says that Cunningham was a ruddy-faced Irishman, nearly if not quite six feet in stature. He wore his hair tied in a cue, with powdered bat-wings over his ears. He wore light-colored knee-breeches, and his manner was that of a coarse, insolent and imperious fellow." See also N 22.

Among the British who left New York at the end of the war, to return to England, was this William Cunningham, the notorious provost marshal. For his later history, which ended in his execution, for forgery, at Newgate prison, London, on Aug. 10, 1791, see Genius of Liberty (Morristown, N. J.), Jan. 15, 1801. Regarding his record in New York, see Ag 4, 1774; S 16, 1776.

The Hon. William Smith, the historian of New York Province, who had been in New York City since June, 1777 (see Je 3, 1777), went to England with Sir Guy Carleton. There he remained until appointed Chief-Justice of Canada, in 1786, a station which he occupied until his death, Dec. 3, 1793.—From "Memoir" of William Smith, by his son, in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1829), IV: XIV; cf. Mag. Am. Hist., Je, 1881, p. 430.

For a compilation of documents relating to the evacuation of New York by the British forces, commencing with the news of a "general peace" on March 24, see Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 772–844.

Trumbull made a drawing of the scene of the evacuation, for the background of his portrait of Washington which he painted for the corporation of New York.—See descrip. of Pl. 51, I: 364; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1883), X: 387, citing Trumbull's Autobiography (1841), 164; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 843.

A singular occurrence, worthy of note, is said to have marked this day. In the news from Springfield (Mass.), published in the Salem (Mass.) Gaz., of Dec. 25, 1783, it was reported as "an undoubted fact, that Mr. James Rivington, printer at New York, was, as soon as our troops entered the city, protected in person, and property, by a guard, and that he will be allowed to reside in the country, for reasons best known to the great men at helm." This has been explained as follows: "Of all the mysteries that occurred in the American Revolution, the employment of Rivington, editor of the Royal Gazette, in the secret service of the American commander is the most astounding.

"The time that this remarkable connection took place is of course unknown. There is much probability that it may have commenced as early as the closing of the campaign of 1776, as it is known that about that period, Robert Morris borrowed of a Quaker five hundred guineas in gold for the secret service of Washington's army, and that intelligence of vital and vast importance was obtained from the disbursement of the Quaker loan.

"In 1783 this remarkable mystery was solved. When Washington entered New York a conqueror, on the evacuation by the British forces, he said one morning to two of his officers: 'Suppose, 1783 Nov. 25 gentlemen, we walk down to Rivington's bookstore; he is said to be a very pleasant kind of a fellow.' Amazed, as the officers were, at the idea of visiting such a man, they of course prepared to accompany the Chief." Custis goes on to relate that, arrived there, Rivington took Washington into his private room, the door of which "closed very imperfectly and soon became ajar, when the officers distinctly heard the chinking of two heavy purses of gold as they were successively placed on the table."—Custis, Recollections of Washington, 293–94, 296–97.

James Duane, a member of the "Council for the Government of the Southern District of New York," who entered New York with Washington, Clinton, and his fellow-exiles, took possession of his dilapidated property. "He found his houses in King (now Pine) street, and at the corner of Water street and Fly market, almost entirely destroyed. His farm, as he calls it, consisting of about twenty acres, at what is now called Gramercie park and its vicinity, was in pretty good order, the house having been occupied by one of the British generals.

Nov. 25 "The council took possession of the property of Trinity church, set aside an election of vestrymen that had been held just before the Americans regained New-York, and ordered a new election, in which Mr. Duane was chosen one of the church wardens, and other whigs vestrymen. This election was afterwards confirmed by act of Legislature, and the persons elected chose as rector of the church the Rev. Samuel Provoost, a whig who had left New-York when the British took possession, and who was afterwards the Bishop of this Diocese. The property was afterwards restored, and Mr. Duane continued to be elected church warden. . . ."—From Hon. Samuel W. Jones's "Memoir of James Duane," in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), IV: 650.

"The number of negroe slaves taken away by the British from New York in 1783, was upwards of three thousand. The value of each is moderately estimated at 200 dollars, which gives 600,000 dollars for the whole." It was estimated in 1795 that, with 12 years' interest added, this would amount to $1,500,000.—N. J. State Gaz., S 15, 1795.

CHAPTER IV

PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION NEW YORK AS THE STATE AND FEDERAL CAPITAL

1783–1811

CHAPTER IV

PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT AND RECONSTRUCTION NEW YORK AS THE STATE AND FEDERAL CAPITAL

1783–1811

1783 Nov. 26 A BRIEF summary of the principal events of the Period of Adjustment and Reconstruction, from the evacuation of New York by the British troops (see N 25) to the completion and filing of the Commissioners' Map of the city on April 1, 1811, is contained in Vol. I, Chap. IV.

" The Definitive Treaty (signed at Paris on Sept. 3, q. v.) is published in New York, the text being taken from English newspapers which arrived in New York on Nov. 23.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 26, 1783. Cf. N 30, 1782.

" The ninth session of the continental congress under the Confederation opens at Annapolis. It adjourned from day to day until Dec. 13, when a sufficient number of delegates were present to proceed to business.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 316.

" An address, dated Nov. 22, is given to "His Excellency George Clinton, Esq., Governor of the State of New York, Commander in Chief of the Militia, and Admiral of the Navy," by the "Citizens of New York, who have returned from Exile, in Behalf of themselves and their suffering Bretheren." It expresses the good will of the people, and their pledge "to support order and good government in the community," over which he has been elected to preside. A similar address, dated Nov. 22 (altered to 26), signed by a committee of 13 citizens, "at request of the Meeting" headed by Thomas Randall and Daniel Phoenix, is presented to Washington. These addresses and the replies of Clinton and Washington are published in Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783; Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 42–46, 166–67; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 827–29. For facsimiles of the original address to Washington and his reply, see ibid. (1861), opp. p. 474, which shows the date of the address "22" altered to "26."

" William A. Duer, who, as a boy, came to New York with relatives shortly after the close of the war, wrote in 1849 the following description of the city as it was at this time:

". . . the Burnt District . . . extended . . . up both sides of Broadway to Rector-street, with the exception of some half dozen houses left standing near the 'Lower,' or present 'Battery.'

"No visible attempts had been made since the fire to remove the ruins; . . . The semi-circular front of old Trinity still reared its ghastly head, . . . But before reaching it, the gloom was cheered by . . . the sight of some remaining pickets of a stockade in the lane opposite Verlentenberg Hill, which once formed a portion of the old city wall, crossed Broadway diagonally, passed down the opposite street, and gave to it its name.

". . . The old [City] Hall, before its conversion to the use of the federal government, stood upon open brick arches, under which you passed from street to street, in one direction, and, in another, along the same street in which we were travelling. Nearly opposite, was the modest dwelling of Alexander Hamilton, upon part of the site of the Mechanics' Bank. Beyond, at the intersection of Smith (now William) street, we beheld the effigies of a more widely celebrated, but not more illustrious man. There, erect upon its pedestal, was the statue of the elder Pitt, mutilated and defaced in resentment of his speech against the acknowledgement of our Independence, . . .

"Our family party now wheeled to the left, and passing up Smith-street, till we came to the corner of King, now Pine-street, we took up our abode for the winter at the family mansion of the Philipses, then kept as a lodging-house . . ., but afterwards, before its fall, more renowned as the Bank Coffee House, kept by the inimitable host Niblo, so famous as a caterer for the public taste. . . .

"On the next May-day [1784], . . . we arrived at the upper extremity of Broadway, at the utmost limit of the City pavement, where we took possession of the house opposite St. Paul's Church, now [1849] occupied by the Chemical Bank. . . . The fields were open to the north, as far as a line ranging eastwardly from Warren-street, where the prospect was bounded by . . . the Bridewell, the Poorhouse, the Gaol and the Gallows. Towards the west, however, there was nothing to obstruct the view of the North River, but two low houses at the corner of Vesey-street, and the College building, as yet unfurnished with wings, and unadorned with stucco. The 'fields,' as the area comprised in the Park was then called, were green, but neither inclosed nor planted, and the only trees in sight, besides the young, now old, ones in front of the College, were the stripling growth that peered above the tea, and mead and cake gardens along the west side of the fields. Nov. 26

"Although the streets leading from Broadway to the river, had been laid out as high as Warren-street, yet they were but partially built upon, and that, for the most part, with houses of an inferior description. None above Dey-street had been regulated and paved; nor had the ridge, commencing near the Battery, and extending the length of the island, been dug through as far even as Cortland-street. Great Dock-street, or that part of Pearl, between Whitehall and Coenties Slip, with the other streets in the immediate neighborhood of Fort George, within which the Colonial Government-house was situate, had long been considered the Court-end of the town; but, even before the revolution, Wall-street was regarded as a rival seat of fashion; to which it established an exclusive claim, and maintained it until superseded by Park Place, or Robinson-street, as it had previously been called; whose pretensions in that respect have, in their turn, become [1849] nearly obsolete. Little Dock-street, now [1849] merged in Water-street, and that part of the original Water-street which lay adjacent to the Albany Pier, were occupied by the river trade; while the remainder of Water-street, and such parts of Front-street as had already been recovered from the river, formed the emporium of foreign commerce. This, indeed, was the case as far up as the Coffee House Slip, and gradually extended to Maiden Lane, at the foot of which were the Vly Market, and the Brooklyn Ferry; whilst at the head of it stood the Oswego Market, fronting on Broadway. Above, on the East River, as far as Dover-street, the wharves were chiefly improved by our eastern brethren with their cargoes of notions, or occupied by our neighbors from Long Island, with their more substantial freights of oysters, clams, and fine white sand. Beyond Dover-street, the ship-yards commenced, extending, at first, no farther than to the 'New,' or, as it is now called, 'Pike' Slip." (A foot-note adds: "The Ship-yards were gradually removed towards Corlaer's Hook, and now [1849] extend beyond it.")

The Fresh-Water Pond, or Collect (see descrip. of Pl. 58-a, I: 431), was lined, on its southern and eastern banks, "with furnaces, potteries, breweries, tanneries, rope-walks, and other manufactories; all drawing their supplies of water from the pond. . . . The ground between the Collect and Broadway rose gradually from its margin to the height of one hundred feet, and nothing can exceed in brilliancy and animation the prospect it presented on a fine winter day, when the icy surface was alive with skaters darting in every direction . . .; while the hill side was covered with spectators, rising as in an amphitheatre, tier above tier, . . ."—Duer's New York As It Was during the Latter Part of the Last Century (1849), 6–13. St. John De Crèvecœur, in his Lettres d'un Cultivateur Américain (Paris, 1787), said that the city lost 1,700 houses by the war.—Original letters in N. Y. H. S.; translation in Mag. Am. Hist., II: 748. For another account of the city and its affairs from 1783 to 1789, see "New York after the Revolution," by H. P. Johnston, in Mag. Am. Hist. (1893), XXIX: 305–31.

1783 Nov. 26 Walter Rutherfurd returns to his home at the north-west corner of Broadway and Vesey St.—Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 134. He described the location as "far up the street with an open square in front, and good air, as there are but few houses in the neighborhood." Here he lived until his death in 1804.—Ibid., 109. See Pl. 68-b, Vol. I; Pl. 85, Vol. III.

" The operation of Paulus Hook Ferry was resumed by Abraham Mesier after the Revolution, during which it was suspended.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 124. See My 1, 1774. On March 16, 1785, the common council allowed the widow of Abraham Mesier £80 per annum for the term from Nov. 26, 1783, until May 1, 1785, and ordered a new grant of the ferry issued to her, at an annual rent of £100.—Ibid., I: 124.

27 The fire engineers of the several fire engines and companies of New York represent to Gov. Clinton, in an address, the condition of the fire apparatus and their desire to conduct themselves so as to gain the applause of the citizens. A list of firemen is appended, showing that there were at this time in the city 14 engine companies, 2 hook-and-ladder companies, 16 foremen, and 253 firemen.—See facsimile reproduction of the original address, in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), opp. p. 528; Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 45–46; Costello, Our Firemen, 42–43.

28 Washington, accompanied by a number of general and other officers, with a detachment of the army, waits "at the water side" to receive the minister of France. The latter, perhaps on account of bad weather, did not arrive.—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783.

" The citizens "who have lately returned from exile" give "an elegant Entertainment" at Cape's Tavern to Gov. Clinton and the council. Gen. Washington, the officers of the army, and about 300 gentlemen "graced the feast." After dinner the following toasts were drunk:

"1. The United States.
"2. His Most Christian Majesty.
"3. The United Netherlands.
"4. The King of Sweden.
"5. The Protectors of the Rights of Mankind.
"6. The American Ministers at Foreign Courts.
"7. May an uninterrupted Commerce soon repair the ravages of war.
"8. May the Trade of America center with those who have been foremost to defend her Liberties.
"9. The Constitution of the State of New York.
"10. May the Spirit which produced our happy Constitution, be its continual Support.
"11. May the Faction be chained in the regions of darkness.
"12. May the Sun of American Liberty spread its influence to the end of the earth.
"13. The Friends of Freedom and Virtue.

"The evening was spent in good humour, hilarity and mirth, becoming the joyous occasion of their meeting."—Penn. Packet, D 12, 1783.

" The council which governs the Southern District of New York State (see O 23, 1779) passes an ordinance to prevent extortion and other irregularities on the part of carmen.—Ind. N. Y. Gaz., D 6, 1783.

" The post-office is opened by Deputy-postmaster William Bedlow, "at No. 38, Smith-street, in the house formerly Judge Horsemanden's." He informs the public that "After next week, the Southern, Eastern, and Northern Posts, will arrive . . . every Wednesday afternoon, and set out on Thursday, Ten o'Clock, A.M."—Holt's Ind. N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783; Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix IV, p. 19. See also Mr 17 and Ap 23, 1779.

29 Robert R. Livingston, writing to John Jay, says: ". . . we have been five days in town without the smallest disturbance." The shops of royalists "were opened the day after we came in, and Rivington himself goes on as usual [see N 25] . . . the race of Tories will not, after all, be totally extinct in America."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay (ed. by H. P. Johnston, 1891), III: 98.

" "The Astraea Frigate, and twenty sail of empty transports are lately arrived at Sandy Hook, the latter to carry to Europe the British troops, &c. at present on Staten and Long Islands."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., N 29, 1783.

" A New Yorker writing on Nov. 30 said: "Last night, at half past ten, we had a severe shock of an earthquake: I was writing in my parlour, when, in a moment, without any apparent signs, either in air (for it was quite clear and star-light), or of wind (for it was rather a calm preceding it), I was thrown off my seat, not forward; the birds in their cages, hanging against a brick wall, thrown off their perches; windows, glasses, china, all shattered. It was repeated, not quite so violent, about half past two this morning. On the island it was felt along the southern aspect with the greatest force. The cattle ran lowing about in the greatest distress imaginable: the birds left their roosts, and sought protection in flying about. It is an awful piece of business. . . ."—London Chron., Ja 10–13, 1784. Nov. 29

Sir Guy Carleton, on board the "Ceres" off Staten Island, writes to Washington: "I hope we shall be able to embark the remainder of his Majesty's troops from Long Island and Staten Island, and take our final departure on the 4th instant."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 47; Emmet Coll., No. 7049. Washington replied on Dec. 2: "I . . . sincerely wish that your Excellency, with the troops under your orders, may have a safe and pleasant passage."—Ibid., VIII: 500. Dec. 1

Col. Timothy Pickering, quartermaster-general, writes to Gov. Clinton that he has viewed the barracks and other buildings erected in this state by the British, and has proposed to sell them; but that he finds in New York City that "the proprietors of some of the land on which such buildings stand are desirous of considering them as subject to their claims by way of compensation for the damages they have sustained from the British." While he thinks these demands inadmissible, as the claimants "make but a small part of the numbers who have suffered by the enemy;" nevertheless, to prevent disputes, he asks the advice of the governour and of counsel.—From facsimile of Pickering's letter, in Man. Com. Coun. (1859), opp. p. 481. See, further, My 4, 1784. "

A "very elegant Entertainment" is given at Cape's Tavern by Gov. Clinton to "his Excellency the Chevalier de la Luzerne, Ambassador from his Most Christian Majesty to the United States." General Washington, the principal officers of this state and of the army, and over a hundred gentlemen were present, "who passed the day and evening, with great conviviality."—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 832. 2

"In the evening the Grand Fire Works, in celebration of the Definitive Treaty of Peace, between Great Britain and the United States of North America, were exhibited at the Bowling Green, in the Broadway." A complete list of the exhibits, numbering about 115 features, was published in a report of the event. Balloons, rockets, set pieces, and figures of various kinds were shown in great variety. "These magnificent Fire Works infinitely exceeded every former exhibition in the United States: The prodigious concourse of spectators assembled on the occasion, expressed their plaudits in loud and grateful clangors."—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 833–35. This account published in the Manual was probably taken from Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 3, 1783, for the issue of Dec. 6 makes reference to it. The issue of Dec. 3 is missing from the files of the N. Y. P. L. and N. Y. H. S.; but see another account in Penn. Packet, D 12, 1783. "

A broadside, entitled "Order of Exhibition of the Fire-Works, on Monday Evening the first of December, 1783" (error for Tuesday, Dec. 2), "Printed [by John Holt] at the State Printing-Office, No. forty-seven, Hanover-Square," is preserved in the N. Y. P. L. Washington requested Maj.-Gen. Knox to thank Capt. Price for the display.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 836; Ind. N. Y. Gaz., D 6, 1783.

Washington writes from New York to the Hon. Thomas Mifflin, president of congress, that the evacuation of New York was postponed two days on account of bad weather. When the British troops left, on the 25th, and a detachment of the American army marched into the city, civil power was immediately restored, and "the most perfect regularity and good order have prevailed ever since."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Sparks ed.), VIII: 500. 3

Capt. James Duncan of the British navy, writing on Governor's Island, reports to Gov. Clinton that the remaining British troops are withdrawn from that island. Later in the morning, on board the "Centurion," off New York, he sent to Clinton "a description List of the different buildings &ca. on Governors Island. . . ." The "Convalescent's Hospital" appears to be the principal building on the list.—Pub. Papers of Gov. Clinton, VIII: 320–21. "

James Hearn conducts an "Eating-House and Cook-Shop" in Maiden Lane "at the Sign of the Chequers, near the Fly Market," which he announces is to be called "Hearn's Porter House." De- "

1783 Dec. 3 parting from the usual tavern method, Hearn advertises that he has adopted a plan "whereby any person may eat of a variety of dishes for his dinner, if he pleases, or have a plate cut off one joint at a small expense."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 3, 1783.

" Shepard Kollock begins the publication of a weekly paper called The New-York Gazetteer, and Country Journal.—Early Newspapers, II: 423; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431. See Ja 5, 1784.

4 Washington bids farewell to his officers. At noon, "the principal officers of the army in town assembled at Fraunces Tavern, to take a final leave of their illustrious, Gracious, and much loved Commander, General Washington. The passions of human nature were never more tenderly agitated than in this interesting and distressful scene. His Excellency having filled a glass of wine, thus addressed his brave fellow soldiers: 'With a heart full of love and gratitude, I now take leave of you; I most devotedly wish, that your latter days may be as prosperous and happy as your former ones have been gracious and honorable.'

"The words produced extreme sensibility on both sides, they were answered by warm expressions and fervent wishes, from the Gentlemen of the Army, whose truly patriotic feelings, it is not in our power to convey to the reader. Soon after this scene was closed, His Excellency the Governor, the Honourable, the Council and citizens of the first distinctions, waited on the General and in terms most affectionate took their leaves.

"The Corps of the Light Infantry was drawn up in a line, the Commander in Chief, about two o'clock, passed through them, on his way to Whitehall, where he embarked in his barge for Powles Hook. He is attended by General Le Baron de Steuben, proposes to make a short stay at Philadelphia, will thence proceed to Annapolis, where he will resign his Commission of General of the American Armies into the hands of the Continental Congress, from whom it was derived; immediately after which, his Excellency will set out for his seat, named Mount Vernon, in Virginia, emulating the example of his model, the virtuous Roman General, who, victorious, left the tented field, covered with honour, and withdrew from public life, otium cum dignitate."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 6, 1783; The Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, III: 101; The Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 348, 336; Winsor, VI: 747. See also L. M. R. K., title "Whitehall Ferry," III: 944; and descrip. of Pl. 167-b, III: 850.

The Salem (Mass.) Gaz., D 18, 1783, reports the event with the following additional paragraphs: "The respectable body convened on this important occasion, comprised the courageous soldier, the invaluable patriot, the sincere friend to the interests of society. Deeply impressed with a stedfast sensibility of his Excellency's amiable manners, and conspicuous virtues, an earnest anxiety to acknowledge them was minutely legible thro'out the whole meeting, and exercised the nicest feelings of human nature.

"An affection so laudable and sincere on the part of the community, could not be enhanced by the highest finished eloquence; yet it must in strict justice be allowed, that they received his Excellency's concise and characteristic address with undescribable emotions of admiration and unfeigned esteem; and replied to in animated terms, which reflect the highest honour on men vying with each other to express their veneration for so dignified a commonwealth, and its illustrious founders.—His Excellency the Governor, the attendant officers of state, and many citizens of repute, gave the most conspicuous proofs of their regard for the General's true merit, in a sincere and affectionate farewell."

James Thacher, M. D., enlarging upon the foregoing account of the farewell at Fraunces Tavern, said of Washington: "Having drank, he added, 'I cannot come to each of you to take my leave, but shall be obliged to you, if each of you will come and take me by the hand.' General Knox being nearest, turned to him. Incapable of uttering, Washington, in tears, grasped his hand, embraced and kissed him. In the same affectionate manner he took leave of each succeeding officer. In every eye was the tear of dignified sensibility; and not a word was articulated to interrupt the eloquent silence, and tenderness of the scene. . . ."—A Military Journal (1823), 422–23.

5 In a letter to Lafayette, Washington stated that on Dec. 5 the harbour of New York "was finally cleared of the British flag."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), X: 347.

6 "We are informed that their Excellencies the Commanders in Chief of the British fleet and army, in America, with the last division of troops on board, have left Staten-Island on their passage to England. General Sir Guy Carleton, Dean Poyntz, Esq; Postmaster-General, Brook Watson, Esq; Commissary-General, William Smith, Esq; and a number of Gentlemen were passengers in the Ceres frigate, commanded by Captain Hawkins. In the Cyclops frigate, by Captain Christian, were Hugh Wallace and James Jauncey, Esquires, and many other Gentlemen."—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 6, 1783. Cf. Penn. Packet, D 12, 1783. Dec. 6

" The Whig members of the Episcopal Church (Trinity), meet at Simmons's Tavern, and adjourn to meet in the long room of the Coffee House.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 10, 1783. John Simmons's tavern was on the n. w. corner of Wall and Nassau St. (see 1770, O 8), and the "Coffee House," at this time run by Cornelius Bradford, was on the s. e. corner of Wall and Water Sts.

7 Rev. John H. Livingston, D. D., after serving the Reformed Dutch Church in Poughkeepsie since Aug. 6, 1781, resumes his pastoral work in New York.—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4309; Demarest, Hist. of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, 97; Jour. Presbyterian Hist. Soc. (1917–8), IX: 355–67. Services are resumed by him in the Dutch Church in Garden St.—Disosway, The Earliest Churches of N. Y., 28–29. This church had not been occupied and damaged as the other churches had.—De Witt, Discourse, 41–42. The North Dutch Church, where he formerly presided, was not reopened for worship until Dec., 1784 (q. v.), and the Middle Dutch Church until July 4, 1790 (q. v.). See also N 18, 1776; and Memoirs of Rev. John H. Livingston (1829). In 1810, Livingston became president of Queen's (now Rutgers) College, at New Brunswick, N. J.

9 Gov. Clinton issues a proclamation requiring the senate and assembly to meet at the city hall, on Tuesday, Jan. 6, 1784.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 13, 1783.

11 In accordance with Washington's proclamation, issued at Poughkeepsie on Nov. 16, this Thursday is celebrated as a "Day of Public Thanksgiving, for the final establishment of American Independence, and the long desired restoration of Civil Government, in the blessings of an Honourable Peace." Sermons are preached "at St. Paul's, by the Rev. Mr. Moore; at the Chapel, by the Rev. Dr. Rogers; and at the Old Dutch Church [in Garden St.], by the Rev. Dr. Livingston." The clergy of other congregations also were heard.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 13, 1783 (where the texts on which their sermons are based are printed); DeWitt's Discourse, 41–42.

See A Discourse [by Israel Evans] delivered in New York before a Brigade of Continental Troops, and a number of citizens, in St. George's Chapel, Dec. 11, 1783, the day set apart by the U. S. in Congress, as a day of public thanksgiving, for the blessings of Independence, Liberty and Peace. (N. Y.: John Holt, 1783). See also The Divine Goodness displayed in the Am. Revolution: A Sermon preached [by John Rodgers] in N. Y., Dec. 11, 1783. Appointed by Congress as a day of Public Thanksgiving, throughout the U. S. (pub by Samuel Loudon, N. Y., 1783). A copy of the latter work is in the John Carter Brown Library, Providence (Cat. No. 2998); the author was chaplain to Gen. William Heath's brigade, and afterwards a member of the council of safety.

13 Holt prints a page-long ordinance, presumably of recent date, which has been passed by the council that governs the Southern District of this state (see O 23, 1779), regarding the holding of elections within this district. It provides that the election which is to be held in New York County to choose senators and assemblymen shall be held on Dec. 29 next in the city hall.

The inhabitants voting for aldermen and other city officials shall hold their election on Dec. 15 at the following places:

In the East	Ward, at the			"Coffee-House"
" " South	"	"	"	"Exchange"
" " North	"	"	"	"City-Hall"
" " Dock	"	"	"	"House of John Frauncis"
" " West	"	"	"	"Cape's Tavern"
" " Montgomerie	"	"	"	"Market, in Peck's Slip"
" " Out Ward	"	"	"	"Bull's-Head Tavern."

The act requires, further, that persons elected shall take the "Oaths of Office and Allegiance, prescribed by the Laws of this State;" and that the act of March 27, 1778, to regulate elections, shall apply in regard to prohibiting Loyalists from voting or holding office, unless they have returned to their allegiance to the state in accordance with any proclamation issued by the state or Gen. Washington.—Ind. Gaz., D 13, 1783. See, further, D 15.

" The name of Holt's newspaper, recently called The Independent New-York Gazette (see N 22), is changed, with its fourth issue, to 1783 Dec. 13 The Independent Gazette, or the New-York Journal Revived.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440. See, further, Ja 8, 1784.

15 The council which governs the Southern District of this state (see O 23, 1779) passes an ordinance supplementing that published on Dec. 13 (q.v.) concerning elections; this sets in motion again the municipal government of New York City, which was suspended during the British occupation. It provides that it shall be lawful for the aldermen and assistants, so elected, "to hold, use, exercise and enjoy, until the Legislature shall further provide, all and singular the rights, powers and authorities, which were at any time before the commencement of the late war held, used, exercised, and enjoyed, by the body-corporate, heretofore incorporated by the name or style of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, by virtue of the charter of incorporation to the said body corporate, and the laws of this State: And that the said Aldermen and Assistants shall, at their several meetings, elect, from among themselves, a person to preside at such meetings.

"Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the said Aldermen and Assistants, to hold a Mayor's Court, or General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, within the said city. And provided further, that it shall not be lawful for the said Aldermen and Assistants, to grant, convey, or alien any of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, of the said body-corporate, except to demise the same until the first day of May next.

"And be it further ordained, That it shall be lawful for any and every two of the said Aldermen to exercise the duties, powers, and authorities, by law appertaining to the office of Wardens of the Port of New-York, until further provision shall be made."—Ind. Gaz., D 20, 1783.

In accordance with the ordinance published on Dec. 13 (q.v.), the election of seven aldermen and seven assistants is now held.

On the next day, these officials were sworn in before the secretary of state.—Ibid. They comprised the common council, whose engrossed minutes begin Feb. 10, 1784. Some activities of this board prior to that date are summarized in the introductory pages to the first volume of the printed minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: xiv. The first record of their financial transactions occurs on Dec. 23 (q.v.).

16 The council which governs the Southern District of the state (see O 23, 1779) passes an ordinance "for preventing intrusions on forfeited lands, and giving remedy in cases where possessions are tortiously withheld from persons who removed from the southern district, on the invasion thereof in 1776." It empowers the commissioners of forfeitures for this district, or any one of them, to take possession and have charge of all the lands and tenements forfeited to the people of the state. If such custody is refused by any person in possession, seizure may be made by the commissioner, and proceedings taken before the chancellor or a justice of the supreme court, "upon the statutes of forcible entry and detainer, in like manner, as near as may be, as is provided in behalf of purchasers of forfeited lands in and by an act of the Legislature, entitled 'An Act for the amendment of the law directing the sales of forfeited lands.'—Passed the 7th day of October 1780." These proceedings are further described, as well as the duties of the commissioners therein.—Ind. Gaz., D 20, 1783.

17 A "considerable number of the Whig Inhabitants of this City and County" meet at Cape's tavern in the evening, and nominate candidates for senate and assembly. A committee is appointed "to have the same printed in hand-bills, and the public papers."—Ind. Gaz., D 20, 1783. Whig sentiment is at once strongly prevalent in the Ind. Gaz.

" "Probate Office, Is held at No. 56, Smith-Street where proper attendance will be given daily from ten till two o'Clock."—N. Y. Jour. & State Gaz., Mr 18, 1784 (in archives of Am. Institute, New York). See D 23, 1784.

18 The first dancing assembly since the evacuation was announced on the 13th to take place on this evening at Cape's Tavern.—Rivington's N. Y. Gaz., D 13, 1783. It is now postponed until the 23d.—Ibid., D 17, 1783. On Dec. 24, James Rivington advertised that he had on hand, "For the Dancing Assembly," the following articles: "White Dancing Gloves for Gentlemen, Ladies and Gentlemens elegant Stone and Gilt Shoe Buckles, Silk Stockings, Fine Shoes, first London Manufacture, Dress Swords, Elegant London Cock'd Hats."—Ibid., D 24, 1783.

Dec. 23 Washington surrenders his commission to congress at Annapolis.—Jour. of Cong., IV: 318.

" The first item of expense under the newly organized city government (see D 15) bears this date. It is entered in Journal A, 1783 to 1794, Chamberlain's Office, now preserved in the comptroller's record-room; and has been printed in the M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 743 (Appendix C). See, further, D 26.

24 A New Yorker writes: "Ever since the British forces quitted this city, the government has paid a particular attention to the establishing a well regulated police, for the well governing of the city; and the repair of all the public edifices is the next grand object.

"A Dutch frigate of 20 guns, La Bellona, which brought over some families to settle, lies off the town. The Congress will certainly fix this as the seat of American government."—London Chron., Ja 27–29, 1784.

" Coennrad W. Ham publishes a notice that he is advised by the attorney-general that the act of the provincial legislature of April 3, 1775, "to prevent the exportation of unmerchantable flour, and the false tareing of bread and flour casks," is in full force as a law of this state.—Ind. Gaz., D 27, 1783.

25 Webster and M'Lean change their paper from a weekly (see N 17) to a semi-weekly.—Early Newspapers, II: 421; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 441.

26 By order of the "Aldermen and Common Council," Thomas Randall, president of that body, publishes their resolution requiring that after Jan. 2 every one who intends to keep a public house or to sell liquors at retail, shall obtain a license. Agreeable to an act of March 8, 1773 (q.v.), Abraham P. Lott is appointed commissioner of excise.—Ind. Gaz., D 27, 1783. See, further, F 3, 1784.

" The second entry in the city's Journal A (covering the chamberlain's accounts after the Revolution) is a payment "by Warrant from Alderman Randall President of the Common Council dated 26th Instant." The entry shows Randall to have been the first to hold this office in the city government as organized on Dec. 15 (q.v.). This and a few later entries have been printed in M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 743 (Appendix C). They show frequent change in the office of president.

27 An essay signed "A Whig" strongly condemns Tories, particularly Rivington, of whom it states: ". . . he is a dealer in curiosities, and is himself a greater curiosity than is to be found among all the Bijoutirie in his shop. . . . The sudden transition of Mr. Rivington from his most excellent Majesty's printer, to being a republican printer, and several other circumstances, has given cause of suspicion to many, that he is still a printer to the British court, and a secret emissary."—Ind. Gaz., D 27, 1783.

31 With the issue of this date (No. 758), Rivington's newspaper (see N 22) ceases publication.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 487.

A letter from New York, dated Jan. 1, 1784, states: "Yesterday [Dec. 31] Rivington, who has had the audacity to continue his obnoxious publications was waited on by General John Lamb, Colonel Willett, and Colonel Sears, and forbid the prosecution of any farther business in this city; in consequence of which, he has discharged his hands, and obeyed the order. To the joy of everyone in the United States, Jemmy Rivington's political existence terminated last Wednesday, the 31st ultimo."—Penn. Packet, Ja 15, 1784. See also N. Y. Jour. & Gaz., My 6, 1784.

1784

— J. F. D. Smyth, an English traveller who visited New York during the British occupation, wrote, in a published account of his travels: "Amongst the multitude of elegant seats upon this island there are three or four uncommonly beautiful, viz. Governor Elliot's, Judge Jones's, 'Squire Morris's, and Mr. Bateman's.

"And opposite upon the Continent, just above Hell-gates, there is a villa, named Morrisania, which is inferior to no place in the world for the beauties, grandeur, and extent of perspective, and the elegance of its situation."—Smyth, A Tour in the U. S. (London, 1784), II: 376.

— In this year, Gen. Steuben, having resigned his commission, returned to New York, "where he first rented a country house in the middle part of the island. It belonged to Mr. Provost, better known at the time as the 'ready-money Provost,' . . . and was situated in the present Fifty-seventh street, in Jones's Wood. . . . It was called the 'Louvre' by its proprietor."—Kapp, Life of Steuben (1859), 578. "Poverty soon compelled Steuben to give up his dismantled and deserted residence, and to surrender the 'Louvre.'

1784 His old friend and aide-de-camp B. Walker, who had married in the — meantime, and taken a house in Maiden Lane, . . . nearly opposite its junction with Liberty street, invited him to stay with him. When Walker afterwards removed to Courtland street, Steuben engaged rooms in the present Fulton street, at a Dr. Vaché's, and took his dinners at the celebrated boarding-house of the Misses Dabeny, in Wall street, nearly opposite Hanover. Having lived there a year or two, he went to the house of a Dr. Tillory, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Wall street, till he finally, in 1791, took a house opposite Saint Paul's Church, the present [1859] 216 Broadway, which he occupied down to his removal to Steuben, in 1794."—Ibid., 580.

— Soon after the revolution, David M. Clarkson erected a residence on the east side of Broadway between Leonard and Franklin Sts.—the first improvement in that block. He had married the daughter of the last proprietor, Madam Margaret de Peyster, who used the pasture-land for its original purposes. This was a portion of the original Kalckhook, south of the Van Cortland's property. Clarkson's house was about 30 ft. wide and two storeys high; it stood 50 ft. back from the street, and was surrounded by a large garden extending along the present Leonard St. to about the line of Elm St. Mr. Clarkson, after residing here some years, sold the whole property to Rufus King and John Lawrence for $30,000. Its extent was about 160 ft. on Broadway and 380 ft. deep. In 1808, King and Lawrence partitioned the lots between them. A map of the property, with the above description, is given in Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 595.

— In this year, the Jewish burial-ground (New Bowery near Oliver St.) became the place of sepulture of the Congregation Shearith Israel.—Sanford, Superior Court Rep., IV: 102. See Ag 23, 1728.

— Strong feeling is prevalent against the Society of the Cincinnati (see My 10, 1783), due to misgivings that the order may develop into an hereditary military nobility.—Winsor, VII: 219; McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., I: 167 et seq.

— There appeared, in this year, from the press of Samuel Loudon A Letter from Phocion to the Considerate Citizens of New-York, On the Politicks of the Day. The author was Alexander Hamilton. "At the close of the Revolutionary war, the popular feeling against the tories was so strong that it was next to impossible for them to obtain justice. At this time Hamilton rendered them great service, . . . in the Letters of Phocion."—Ford, Bibliotheca Hamiltoniana (1886), 9. They were replied to by "Mentor" (Isaac Ledyard).

— There was published in Albany, in 1860, Names of Persons for whom Marriage Licenses were issued by the Secretary of the Province of New York, previous to 1784.

— A few original rough notes of Trinity vestry minutes, from 1784 to 1787, are preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Jan. The common council publishes an ordinance requiring the in-
1 habitants to provide themselves with fire-buckets, at the expense of the landlords. A fine of 40 shillings is to be levied for every chimney on fire; six shillings for neglecting to supply buckets, and ten shillings for delaying over 48 hours in returning them after a fire, either to the owner or to the city hall.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 1, 1784.

" "John Francis, At the Sign of his Excellency General Washington," has removed from No. 39 to No. 2 Dock St.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 1, 1784. See Ag 25, 1785.

5 By order of the common council, there is published a section of the existing law against storing more than 28 lbs. of gunpowder at one time in any house, store, etc.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 5, 1784.

" The New-York Gazetteer, and Country Journal is changed from a weekly (see D 3, 1783) to a tri-weekly.—Early Newspapers, II: 423; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431. See Jl 27.

6 In obedience to the governour's proclamation (see Ind. Gaz., D 13, 1783), the senate and assembly convene in New York City. They continued to hold sessions here until April 21, 1787, when they adjourned to meet at Poughkeepsie on Jan. 1, 1788 (q. v.).—Assemb. Jour. (1784), 3; ibid. (1785), 3; ibid. (1786), 3; ibid. (1787), 3, 179; Senate Jour. (1784), 3; ibid. (1785), 3; ibid. (1786), 6; ibid. (1787), 3, 103.

8 Holt's paper (see D 13, 1783) becomes a semi-weekly instead of a weekly.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440; Early Newspapers, II: 424.

" Verdine Elsworth (see Je 6, 1763) announces that he has opened "a House of Private Lodgings, and a Livery-Stable," at No. 19, Maiden Lane.—Ind. Gaz., Ja 8, 1784. For Elsworth's activities prior to the Revolution, see Je 6, 1763, Addenda. Jan. 8

In a letter, dated "Jan^{y} 12th 1783" (error for 1784), from Col. Ben Walker to Gen. Steuben, it is said: "On my arrival here [on Jan. 11] I did not find the city so peaceable as I wished—the violent party had stopped Rivington's press [see D 31, 1783] and I yet doubt if he and some others will be able to stay—yesterday he got a violent beating in the street."—Steuben Papers, Vol. X (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. His assailant appears to have been Nicholas Cruger, who claimed to have suffered during the war, when a prisoner in New York, by Rivington's references to him in his newspaper at that time.—Ind. Gaz., Ja 22, 1784. 11

Congress ratifies the treaty of peace with Great Britain (see S 3, 1783).—Jour. of Cong. (pub. 1823), IV: 323–26; Winsor, VI: 747. It issues a proclamation announcing the signing of the Definitive Treaty.—Ibid., VII: 167. See also Ap 9. 14

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "to proceed at once to repair the North Church, and place it in a neat and proper condition."—De Witt's Discourse, 42. 15

The large ice-house near the river, "back of the Burnt Church" (Trinity), is offered for sale.—N. Y. Packet, Ja 15, 1784. "

The following assize of bread is ordered by "the Aldermen and Common Council:" "A loaf of Bread of superfine Flour, at 4os. per cwt. to weigh 2 lb. 9 ounces, for One Shilling." The order is signed by "Daniel Phoenix, Clk."—N. Y. Packet, Ja 19, 1784. 16

The confiscated property of William Bayard is advertised for sale. It includes Hoboken, "Weehacken," and Bull's Ferry. The first of these is described as "That well-known and valuable place and farm called Hobocken, opposite to the City of New York, . . .; containing 275 acres of salt meadow, about 225 acres of upland on the island, and 57 acres of mountain woodland . . . an healthy and elegant situation, having the City of New York in full view." The second is "The place or farm known by the name of Weehaken . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ja 21, 1784. See also Ag 16. 20

Gov. Clinton having issued a proclamation on Dec. 9 last for convening the legislature in the city of New York on Jan. 6, several members met on that day; but, a sufficient number to proceed to business not appearing, the house adjourned from day to day until this day, when a quorum being present, the business of the first meeting of the seventh session began. Those representing the city and county of New York were Marinus Willet, John Lamb, Henry Rutgers, Isaac Sears, John Stagg, William Malcom, Robert Harpur, Peter Van Zandt, and Hugh Hughes. John Stagg was the only one of these absent. Gov. Clinton's message to the assembly contained the following clause: "While we survey the Ruins of this once flourishing City, and its Vicinity; While we Sympathize in the Calamaties which have reduced many of our virtuous Fellow-Citizens to Want and Distress . . . how ought our Hearts to overflow with Love and Gratitude to our adorable Creator, thro' whose gracious Interposition, Bounds have been set, and probably forever, to such scenes of Horror and Devastation . . . our Ports so long withheld from us, are at length open to all the World." A "Council of Appointment" is chosen at this meeting.—Votes and Proceedings of the Assembly, 3–10. 21

The executors of the will of Gerardus Hardenbrook, Sr., announce the intended sale at public vendue on April 15, of "That noted and valuable lot of land in the Out ward of the City of New-York, fronting the Bowery road; containing in breadth in front and rear 75 feet and in length on each side 120 feet, on which is erected the Tea-Water Works, and two dwelling houses. The tea-water well is supplied by never-failing Springs; the goodness of the Water and the emoluments arising from vending the same in the city are too well-known to need any encomiums."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ja 23, 1784. For many years, the water from the Tea Water Pump at Park Row was considered the only good spring water for household purposes.—L. M. R. K., III: 976. The pump was again offered for sale on Ag 15, 1788, and F 9, 1793 (q. v.). For complaints against it, see Ag 19, 1784 and Ag 25, 1785. 23

"Whereas the traffick of White People, heretofore countenanced in this state, while under the arbitrary controul of the British government, is contrary to the feelings of a number of respectable Citizens, and to the idea of liberty this country has so happily established: And whereas it is necessary to encourage emigration to this country, upon the most liberal plan, and for that purpose a number of Citizens of this state, have proposed to liberate a cargo of Servants, just arrived, by paying their passage, and repaying 24

1784 Jan. 24 themselves by a small rateable deduction out of the wages of such Servants.—Such of the Citizens of this state, as wish to encourage so laudable an undertaking, and (if necessary) petition the Legislature for a completion of their humane intentions, are requested to meet at Mr. Day's, the sign of the Hyder Alley, the lower end of King-street, this evening, at six o'Clock."—Ind. Gaz., Ja 24, 1784.

30 Gov. Clinton transmits to the legislature, at New York, the proclamation of congress of Jan. 14 "announcing the Ratification of the definitive Articles of Peace and Friendship, between these States and his Britannic Majesty, and enjoining a due Observance thereof."—Assemb. Jour., 7th sess., 22.

" "That elegant and spacious house and lot of ground, now in tenure of William Walton, Esq; situate in St. George's Square, the upper end of Queen-Street, near Peck's slip," is offered for sale by "the Widow Cornelia Walton, Cherry St. No. 41 near the Ship yards."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ja 30, 1784 (at N. J. H. S.); Ind. Gaz., F 12, 1784. The house was taken by the Bank of New York, which occupied it on June 9, 1784 (q. v.).

" John Holt dies.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440. See also Paltsits, John Holt, Printer and Postmaster. Holt's paper was continued by his widow (see F 5).

31 The assembly passes a recommendation that the state treasury be removed to New York as soon as convenient, the legislature to agree to provide for the expense of removal and the rental of an office here.—Assemb. Jour., 7th sess., 21.

Feb. 2 The claim of the descendents of Anneke Jansen to the lands formerly known as Dominie's Hook (see L. M. R. K., III: 965), now part of the estate of Trinity corporation, is again renewed by publication. A verdict was given in the supreme court in 1762 in favour of Trinity. The adverse claim made by the descendents was under an original grant by Van Twiller in 1636.—N. Y. Packet, Supp., F 2, 1784. See, further, My 20. For earlier references to this subject, see Ap 19, Jl 20, 1638; Ap 23 and 25, 1644; Jl 4, 1654; Mr 24 and 27, Jl 10, 1667; My 25, 1668; F 10, 1670; Mr 9, 1671. See also The Anneke Jans Bogardus Farm, by Stephen P. Nash (prepared and printed for the use of the Church, N. Y., 1896), as well as Trinity Church Pamphlets; Collected for the Corporation in 1857.

4 Cadwallader Colden, Richard Harrison, David Colden, John Watts, and others beg the New York assembly to remove the sentence of banishment against them, but it is refused at this time.—Flick, Loyalism in N. Y. during the Am. Rev. (1901), 165, citing MS. transcript . . . of Books and Papers . . . of the Am. Loyalists, I: 345. On May 12, an act of the legislature gave a special permit to 27 loyalists to remain in the state.—Laws of N. Y. (Greenleaf), I: 127–59.

5 On petition of the common council, Gov. Clinton appoints James Duane to be mayor of New York.—See Jones's "Memoir of Duane," in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), IV: 651; Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 547. See, further, F 7.

" John Holt having died (see Ja 30), his widow, Elizabeth Holt, uses her own name in the imprint as publisher of The Independent Gazette; or the New-York Journal Revived.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440. See F 19.

7 The first mayor after the Revolution, James Duane, meets with the common council. At a special meeting of the "Aldermen and Common Council of the city of New York," at the house of Mr. Simmons (innholder), Alderman Broome, the president of the board, reads a letter from James Duane in which Duane informs them that the council of appointment has conferred upon him "the Mayoralty," and that he has, this morning, received Gov. Clinton's commission under the seal of the state. He adds that, although it has been usual with his predecessors "to give a public entertainment on the investiture of the Mayoralty," there is so much want and distress prevalent that he presents 20 guineas instead toward the relief of suffering in the various wards of the city.

"James Duane, Esq; having been introduced into Common Council, did, in the presence of his Excellency the Governor, his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Aldermen and Common Council convened—take the oaths of abjuration and allegiance to the state, and the oaths prescribed and directed to be taken by the charter." On motion, it was ordered that he be requested to take the chair "as Mayor of this Common Council." He was accordingly conducted to the chair by Alderman Broome, the president. Marinus Willet is appointed high sheriff for the city.—N. Y. Packet, F 9; Ind. Gaz., F 12, 1784.

Feb. 7 The Massachusetts Bank is chartered.—McMaster, Hist. of People of the U. S., II: 30 (note).

9 The court bell in the city hall is to be rung daily at a quarter to ten for the meeting of the legislature.—N. Y. Packet, F 9, 1784.

10 The assembly passes "An Act to establish the Rates of Wharfage and Cranage in the City of New-York" (Assemb. Jour., 32); also "An Act to lay a Duty of Tonnage on Vessels, for defraying the Expence of the Light-House at Sandy-Hook."—Ibid., 33.

" The common council meets "at the House of John Simmons Innholder."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 1. It continued to hold meetings at Simmons's house until March 25, when it met at the "State House" (city hall). On April 1, and thereafter, the place of meeting was referred to as the city hall.—Ibid., I: 18, 21.

" Robert Benson submits to the board a commission, under the great seal of the state, appointing him clerk of the city and county of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 1. On Feb. 17, it was ordered by the common council that the late clerk, Augustus Van Cortlandt, deliver to him all the books, records, papers, seals, and other things pertaining to the office.—Ibid., I: 3.

" The "Exigencies of the City" require that the arrears of rents and quit-rents, which are many, shall be collected as soon as possible. It is ordered by the common council that the treasurer make such collections without delay.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 1. Many petitions came to the board asking for abatement of rents and quit-rents, for various reasons; a committee was appointed on Feb. 24 to consider these cases.—Ibid., I: 5–6. For report of this committee, see Mr 2.

" Richard Smith is paid for labour and materials for the repairs to the city hall. The mayor's warrant for this payment is numbered "N° 1."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 1.

11 Washington's birthday is for the first time celebrated, the 11th rather than the 22d of Feb. being the day so honoured at this time.—Hist. Mag. (1869), V: 134, citing N. Y. Gazetteer, F 11, and Ind. Gaz., F 12, 1784; Penn. Packet, F 17, 1784. For explanation of change of date, see F 11, 1732, the date of his birth.

12 Proposals are published for establishing a bank in New York City. The banks of Venice, Amsterdam, London, and Philadelphia are cited as examples. The last mentioned, "though in its infancy, has not only given great profits to its proprietors, but has supported and created a system of credit extremely advantageous and necessary to their trade and revenues." The name proposed for the bank is "the Bank of the State of New York;" and the amount of capital, 750 shares at $1,000 a share. It is further proposed "That each subscriber shall pay one third part of his subscription in cash, on the day the directors may require it;" and "That for the other two thirds, landed security shall be given by mortgage, or conveyed in trust." The purpose is "that landed security be always pledged for the credit and support of the bank." Various other provisions for the government and operation of the bank are included in these proposals. Subscription books are opened at No. 6 Wall St. by Stephen Sayre and John Stephens.—N. Y. Packet, F 12, 1784. For further development of the plan, see F 23, 26; Mr 15; My 1; Je 7 and 9.

" The mansion-house of the late John Beekman in Maiden Lane is advertised to be sold at auction between the 5th and 10th of April.—N. Y. Packet, F 12, 1784.

13 Over 30 former merchants of the city, lately returned from exile, address a petition to the legislature, stating that, on joining the American cause, they had supplied the agents of congress with goods on credit for the use of the army, and with large sums of specie; that they have received paper money, although of depreciated value, in payment of old debts. They have become public creditors to nearly the amount of their respective estates, having "disdained to take advantage of public calamity, or to practice the base acts of monopolizing and forestalling." They now press their claims "from a knowledge that the present resources of this state enable it to do justice to its suffering citizens."

They further observe "that the property of those who, by their wicked devices, had prolonged the war and multiplied distress, should repair the losses occasioned by such unnatural conduct, and the more so, as this property, if disposed of for the purpose of a general fund, will unavoidably tend to enrich men who have not suffered in the contest, and many of whom have been preying on the vitals of the state, without having contributed to its support or defence. . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 639–41. The original draft of this petition was sold by Henkels, Phila. (item No. 451) on 1784 April 21, 1920. This was followed by a supplementary petition, of Feb. April 20, stating other reasons for the desired relief from the state.—

13 Ibid. (1858), 641–42.

" The assembly concurs in the senate's resolution that the governor be requested "to give Orders for applying the Pickets which surround the Fort and Battery, or such Part thereof, as in his Opinion can be spared, for the Use of the Poor of this City."—Assemb. Jour., 7th sess., 37. See also descrip. of Pl. 44, I: 348.

17 Peter de Reimer is permitted to erect and keep a public scale near Whitehall Slip for weighing hay.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 2.

" The common council appoints Isaac Stoutenburgh, Jr., a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 2.

19 The Independent Gazette; or the New-York Journal Revived again becomes a weekly (see Ja 8). The last issue of the paper with this title was that of March 11, 1784.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 440. See Mr 18.

21 A large number of citizens and others apply by petition to the legislature (on Feb. 21 and 28), requesting that one of the Episcopal churches in New York may be allotted to them for worship and a minister supported for their benefit from church funds. These are persons who were in the pay of the British during the Revolution, refugees from other states who came to New York during the war and are liable to penalties if they return home, persons who held commissions under Gt. Britain in the Revolution or were active in privateering against the U. S., foreigners and strangers not citizens of this state, members of other religious congregations, minors, persons who were inimical to the liberties and independence of the U. S. during the war, and "reputed Whigs." The original drafts, memoranda and copies of signatures of this petition are preserved by the N. Y. H. S.

22 The "Empress of China" sails from New York for Asiatic waters, the first American vessel to venture into those seas. She carried the flag which was adopted in 1777.—Ind. Gaz., F 26, 1784; Progress of N. Y. in a Century, by Stevens (1876), 46. She returned May 11, 1785 (q. v.).

23 Gentlemen of New York are requested by a public notice to meet on Feb. 24 at the Merchant's Coffee House, to consider a plan for establishing a bank on liberal principles, the stock to consist of specie only.—N. Y. Packet, F 23, 1784. Cf. F 12, and see F 26.

24 Richard Varick, having produced a commission "under the Great Seal of the State" appointing him recorder of the city and county of New York, takes his seat in the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 4.

" The "carmen" of the city, in a petition to the common council, state that they are informed that the board is "about to issue an ordinance" to prohibit the carmen from using "Cars with Iron-shod Wheels and directing that wooden wheels be used in their Place, from a Supposition that the former are more injurious to the Pavement than the latter." They explain why they believe the wooden wheels will injure the pavements more than iron-shod ones, and add that "none but Iron shod wheels are made use of in the Sea Port Towns of Europe and America." They ask that such wheels be continued in use here.—From the original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "Read Feb^{y} 24th 1784 & referred to the Committee appointed to revise the late Ordinances." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 4; but see Mr 28, 1787.

" The common council orders that one of the rooms in the jail be prepared for the reception and employment of "lued and disorderly women."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 5.

26 The principal merchants and citizens meet at the Coffee-House, and, with Alexander M'Dougal in the chair, agree to proposals for establishing a bank. A committee is appointed to receive subscriptions.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 1, 1784. This became the Bank of New York.—See My 1.

" A humorous item in a newspaper of the day states that a gentleman, astonished to find that, "by a coalition of parties, the expence of travelling in the Stages from Elizabeth-Town; Newark, &c. to Philadelphia, is raised," intends to set up "an Eerial Conveyance, from New York to that city, on the new invented system of Messrs. Montgolfier. . . ." This, it is added, may, with perfect propriety, be termed a "Flying Machine" (which is the name of the stage); yet, desirous of preserving as much antiquity as possible, will be called, "Pacolet's Horse Revived." This, he says, "will set out from the City-Hall, on the second of April next, . . ."—N. Y. Packet, F 26, 1784.

Mr 2 The following resolution, passed by the senate on Feb. 25, is adopted by the house: "Whereas on the late Invasion of the City of New-York by the troops of his Britannic Majesty, the Bells of the State House, Churches, and other public Buildings of the City of New-York, were taken down and removed to New-Jersey; and afterwards, the United States in Congress assembled, ordered the Said Bells to be removed to the public Works belonging to them at Carlisle, in Pennsylvania, to be cast into Field Pieces for the Use of their Armies. Mar. 2

"And whereas it is represented to this Legislature, that no Use hath been made of the Said Bells. The Delegates of this State are further instructed to move the United States in Congress assembled, to give the necessary Orders, for causing the said Bells to be returned to this City, for the Use of the public Edifices to which they belong."—Assemb. Jour., 7th sess., 60. See My 3.

" The common council appoints a committee "to report an Estimate of the Losses this Corporation have sustained in consequence of the late War," and to prepare a petition to the legislature "praying that a part of the forfeited Property within this City may be granted and applied to the use of this Corporation to enable them to defray the heavy Expenses incident to the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 8.

" The committee on arrears of rents reports on several petitions. The principal question involved in some of these cases is the amount of rent due the city for the war period. For example, John Lockhart shows that "during the War he was compelled to pay the arrears of Rent of a Corporation House at Pecks Slip to certain officers appointed by the british Government in this City and that his property had been seized and carried off." The committee states "that arrears of Rent are due to the Corporation from many meritorious Persons who have taken an active & decided Part in the Causes of their Country & suffered all the Inconvenances of Exile and the loss of all their Property; that many other Persons well affected to the Cause of their Country (Lessees to this Corporation), who left the City in the year 1776 have from Poverty and other unavoidable misfortunes been obliged to return within the British Lines before the Peace took place and have been prevented from occupying their Habitations and deriving any advantage from their leased Estates because of their attachment to the American Cause, but upon Condition of their paying Rent to the Vestry or Mr. Smyth their Treasurer." In none of these cases, the board decides, would it be equitable to exact rents from the lessees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 8–11. No abatement was allowed, however, "to any Person or Persons whomsoever" who were grantees of the city, for rents which became due "previous to the first Day of May 1776 or subsequent to the 25th Day of November last."—Ibid., I: 14.

" The engineer of the fire department recommends, among other things, that a certain number of men be allotted to each engine and each hook and ladder company, according to its size and situation. "Finding it Difficult to have the City Alarmd for the want of the Large Bells," he recommends "that Seven Speaking Trumpets be Provided & lodge at M^{r} Skates & that So many of the watchmen be Sent of[f] through the Streats of the Different Wards, to Sound the Alarm whenever Nesescity Shall Require it."

"That Orders be Sent to the Different Sex[t]ons of the Churches where Bells Now are, to be Rung amediately whenever Such alarms Shall be heard.

"That the Teawater Men be put under Proper Orders & Regulations to Attend with their Carts & Bring Water as Long as Shall be Nesescery."—From the original report, in metal file labelled "Filed Papers 1700–1800," city clerk's record-room.

" The common council passes "A Law for the due Observation of the Lord's-Day, called Sunday;" "A Law to prevent Strangers from being a Charge to this Corporation;" "A Law to appoint Surveyors for this City;" "A Law for the better preventing of Fire;" "A Law for Marking of Bread;" "A Law for Regulating Negro and Mulatto Slaves;" "A Law to regulate the Office of Gaugers of Liquors, and Packers of Beef and Pork;" "A Law for regulating the Lying of Vessels in the Docks and Slips of this City, and ascertaining the Rates to be paid for the same;" and "A Law to prevent Hawkers and Pedlars." The full text of these laws was printed in the N. Y. Packet from March 8 to 18 inclusive.

3 Anthony Van Dam, the first secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, writes from Bermuda to Henry Remsen regarding "several necessary alterations that would [should] attract the Eye of the public in rebuilding that part of the City destroyed by Fire in 1776." See Vol. I, p. 371. His letter, of over six large, closely-written pages, gives particulars of conversations Van Dam has already had with friends on the subject. The following portions of this important topographical document, hitherto unpublished, are given in full from the original. Van Dam states:

1784 Mar. 3

"The object in view for the West Ward was to have a freer and more desirable access into the City from Greenwich Road, so farr as the Church Corporation could go to accomplish this design was to widen the Streets from the North River to Broadway. There are a few of the Church Leases unexpired that may in some measure defeat this purpose if the tenants are refractory. But I do apprehend if the City Corporation or Legislature views these improvements as candidly as you and I can, there will be no difficulty in gratifying the Lessees for their supposed loss.

"To make you better acquainted with what is wished to be pursued, I have copied part of the Map of the City (upon a large scale) that I took an opportunity of showing you at my house in some of your visits before my departure. Where it is observable that Partition—Veasey—Barclay—Murray—Warren—and Chambers Streets were originally only 40 feet wide—All leases granted since 1778 in these directions leave the streets 65 feet wide, where it is already and hereafter must be taken off, is shaded in the map with Green. In conversing with some of the Governors of the Colledge they appeared averse to the intended alteration where it interfered with their Land, contending that if an equal quantity was taken off each side of the Street it would have been more just. I showed them that there was the like loss of ground to the Church in the two Streets leading from the broad way upon which they are bounded. Upon Murrays street they have granted leases near the River confining the street to its original breadth of 40 feet, But on Barclay street in a late lease or two, they admitt that to be 65 feet upon my plan. If means are not pursued to continue Murrays Street the breadth proposed the object must be defeated that will otherwise give an air of granduer to it.

"Neither Barclays — Robinsons — Murrays — or Chambers Streets are yet paved. When the Corporation thinks proper to order it to be performed, It will be an ornament and of peculear use to foot passengers that 10 or 12 feet be allotted on each side for that purpose when 40 or 45 feet will remain for Carriages. The cart way in each street to be raised in the middle in the form of a very flatt arch. The use of this is to prevent Carts and Carriages from locking one another as they meet or pass—When Canals or gutters are in the middle to convey the water accidents often happen of the above described nature from neglect or carelessness of the drivers.

"Again the attention of the Corporation will lead to direct that the desent shall begin immediately on the broad way, that the draft of Carts or Carriages may be equal in all parts of these Streets leading from Greenwich Street, thereby avoiding that great evil so very discernable in those to the southward of them.

"It is observable that Crown Street—Cortlandt Street and Dye Street are rather narrow, and their length is about 300 paces from the Broad way to the River. An addition can be made of 15 feet at an Easy purchase of a Strip of land that belongs to the widow Shaw, laying in the rear of the Lotts between Cortlandt and Dye Streets formerly a ropewalk. All the injury that it can produce is to effect the two Corner Houses, built or to be built on the south side of that street. But in order to extinguish fires that may hereafter happen when Houses are erected on these Streets I have endeavored to prevent (and with some success) Houses being built in the direction of Church Street which you will observe in the map is shaded yellow. A Mr. Ward had purchased two Lotts of the widow McAdam who discovered the reasonableness and great utility that would be derived to the publick readily assented to erect his buildings to answer so desirable a purpose, in an hope that he would be recompensed for his loss of Land by the generous Public—Labor my friend to have Church Street continued through the three blocks to Crown Street . . . it is an object well worth the public attention. The purchase of the Ground to be laid into an intended street will not come very high, and if there are not Funds. —publick security with Interest may be adopted.

"From Samuel Ellis's new buildings to the northward of the Market to Peter Mesiers former front the street was originally only 40 feet wide. Trinity Church Vestry began to widen Greenwich Street at Ellis's Corner to 66 feet which is continued through their Lands. It is to be wished that the City Corporation would continue the Street to the southward, the same breadth, even to the flat rock Battery. To do which it will appear at first sight to effect in a high degree the landed estate of Peter Mesier's Family—John Thurman—Peter Rutgers—Samuel Ellis's and Nicholas Roosevelt's hiers by continuing through their Property—But on a little reflection it is obvious to discernment that by closing the passage that formerly was occupied as a street nearer the River and placeing the street in lieu thereof to commence at Abraham Mesiers corner and extending it to the corner of the Range of the street back of Trinity Church, it will take but little more ground than was formerly alloted to go round the Docks as it was called, and even if there be any lack of soil for what the proprietors surrender for the street, the City Corporation will doubtless extend their grants into the River to their utmost bounds to make a compensation. Mar. 3

"In laying out the water lotts to be made Land, belonging to the Church and Colledge corporations to the southward of Chambers Street, It will appear upon the Records of the City Corporation that the water lotts they granted to those Corporations were similar to those that appear in a block of the Map to the westward of Skinner's distilery in which an useless street is discribed—And it was as absurd to lay down each lott with a Bevil. To remedy that inconvenience and disagreeable appearance, it was thought proper by the committees of the Colledge & Church corporations to make them more uniform and they have adopted a more eligible plan as described in a block by red lines in the front of Cap Robert Dales buildings where the building lotts on the west side of Greenwich Street and fronting Hudsons River only are out of Square. All the water lotts to the southward of Roosevelts Estate are unimproved to the extent of their Grants and therefore with facility may be regulated by the plan; where the desired alterations are designed the lines are marked with red ink.

"It is very remarkable that from Thames Street (at the bottom of which there is a spacious slip 100 feet wide & near 300 feet into the River) untill the Battery—there is not a Cartway into the City —distant one from the other 1600 feet. If only one street should be thought proper to be opened for the accommodation of the Public, a lane, opposite to Verlatenberg will be the properest, because it is in the center and at equal distances from these here discribed. And the purchase of Mr Lambart Moore's and that in the rear of his will be the most elegible to lay upon a Cartway. If it is alledged that the high Bank will prevent it. The answer is that the proprietors of the water lotts will necessarily require all the Bank to fill up the water to be made land. Their Grants it is supposed restricts the proprietors to improve the lotts as is usual in a certain time and that period it is supposed nearly expired. Besides which it may be also proper that the land opposite Mr. David Johnson's House and another Robinson's Street to the southward of Trinity Church should be widened.

"Prevent as much as in you lays the water lotts to the westward of the Market on the North River from being rented on building loans [?]; they ought to be reserved for the Market Boats, whether the Market is continued where it is or that the broad way remains established.

"A reform is much required in Stone Street; it was anciently about 20 feet wide and latterly few or no reputeable Inhabitant chose to reside in it—On the North side the lotts in general extended to pettycoat lane; if it is again rebuilt upon the same foundations of a narrow street no man that hath a desire to live in some degree desireable will erect a good habitation there. But it will rather be filled with Hutts or buildings of little consequence. To remedy which, if each proprietor surrenders 25 feet of his front there then will be a loss of the two corner lotts only, to compensate the proprietors of the said two lotts. Those on the south side may be assessed to pay the value thereof. And it cannot be considered that those on the North side suffers any diminution by the surrender when it is so evident that their estates will be rather improved. For reputable Inhabitants of that Street when made 45 feet wide will covet to reside therein when it is open—airy—and admits the kind influence of the Sun. Were it possible to regulate the two southern streets that are parallel to this now described it would prove useful . . . to the occupiers. Pettycoat lane is only mentioned; it must take its fate.

"While I am removed at so great a distance from your Metropolis, I cannot reflect with unconcern on the singular advantages that may be derived to the order and splendor of its buildings—every disagreeable object that can possibly be removed which may hurt the eye of the Citizen, or particularly of so many strangers that will naturally resort to your City is wished to be corrected. I have

1784 Mar. 3 pointed out such only as be effected with little expence from the Scituation of the Premises—Should wisdom predominate and they are adopted shall think myself well recompensed for the little pains I have taken to promote the design that must ultimately fall to the share of you and your dissendants

"Be pleased to recollect that I pointed out to you a most lovely scituation capable of the highest Improvement to enlarge the City. I mean upon Mr. Rutger's and Mr. DeLancey's Land. It is the most beautiful Site that can possibly be discribed upon the Island. I hastily drew some rude lines upon one of Ratzor's maps left with Mr. Pintard. The proprietors of lotts on Rutgers Ground may surrender them upon the plan that was laid down by Marschalk, which is too much confined as to the breadth and direction of the streets. You will discover that I have laid down a street from Peter Earls to Byvanks; some part takes in the River where it interferes the City Corporation will demand a small rent, which the proprietors in front may well pay. Or if they surrender some of their lotts to be laid into the streets where will be the impropriety of granting the water lotts to be made land in lieu thereof [?] I see none and where the public are benifitted why not meet each other half way [?]."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 11, city clerk's record-room.

Anthony Van Dam, the author of this survey and opinion, served as one of the port wardens of New York for ten years or more prior to the Revolution.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 745, 785, 819, 825. He was one of the merchants transacting business in Dock St. in 1775–6, his trade being principally confined to wines and liquors.—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), 35. The charter of the Chamber of Commerce, dated March 13, 1770, shows him then to be secretary of that body.—See Laws of N. Y. (1784), Chap. 30. He was also a member of the general committee of one hundred, chosen May 1, 1775.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 600. In 1786, his place of business was at No. 13 Nassau St.—City Directory. He died in London in 1807.—Sabine, Loyalists of the Am. Rev., II: 377.

Henry Remsen, to whom the letter was written, appears to have been the Remsen of the fifth generation, known as "Henry the Whig" before the Revolution, and "Henry the Patriot" afterwards. He was one of the committee of 100 (see Pl. 43, Vol. IV).—Hamm, Famous Families of N. Y., II: 77.

For report of the commissioners on laying out streets in the burnt part of the city, see Mr 29, 1785. See also Je 9, 1784.

8 The following notice is published: "For Sale, that agreeably situated Island, known by the name of Blackwell's Island, On the East River, about four miles from this city. It is without exception one of the most healthy situations in this state. It is remarkable for the number of fish and fowl that is caught there in the different seasons. There is on the premises, two small Dwelling Houses, a Barn, Bake and Fowl House, Cyder Mill; a large Orchard, containing 450 of the best grafted fruit trees, such as Newton & golden pippins, spitsinburghs, peirmans, bow apples, pears, peaches, plumbs, cherries, &c. There is a number of the best stone quarries, ready cleared to begin breaking immediately; and the subscriber has a complete set of quarry tools, with all his farming utensils and stock to dispose of at the same time. The Island abounds with running springs of most excellent water. The above contains 107 acres, eight of which are salt meadow, and the whole has been considerably improved with manure, and in good fence. Any person inclining to purchase the whole or half of the said Island, may be further informed by enquiring at Mr. Joseph Hallet's, No. 204, Water Street, New York, or on the premises of James Blackwell."—N. Y. Packet, Mr 8, 1784.

For an historical account of Blackwell's Island, see Mr 25, 1685.

"But apparently nothing came of this offer to sell the Island, and the reason for offering it may be judged from a subsequent notice in the newspapers of 1785 which states that James Blackwell is an insolvent debtor and all his estate was assigned to James Hallett and Joseph Stringham as assignees, who requested all creditors to produce their accounts before September 1, 1785, on which date a settlement would be made and that on April 20, 1785, the Southwest part of Blackwell's Island with two small houses, 'barn, bake house and cyder mill,' an orchard, stock and farming utensils, household and kitchen furniture would be sold at public vendue. On the same day Jacob Blackwell offered the north-east part of the Island for sale, both parts completing the whole Island."—N. Y. H. S. Bull., July, 1921, citing N. Y. Packet, Mr 10, 1785. In spite of all these circumstances and offers for sale, the island remained in the hands of the Blackwell family. See, further, Ja 22, 1794. Mar. 8

The common council passes "A Law relative to the admission of Freemen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 12. It was published in full in N. Y. Packet, Mr 18, 1784. Any one who was born in this city, or who has served "a regular apprenticeship of seven years with the same," may be admitted as a freeman on payment of certain fees for a certificate, after being sworn and registered.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 239. 9

Cornelius Bradford, of the Merchants' Coffee House, publishes another notice (cf. N 10, 1783): "To prevent the many disappointments that daily happen to returned citizens, or others, enquiring for their friends, connections, or those they may have business with; the subscriber has opened a book, as A City Register, alphabetically arranged, at the bar of the Coffee-House, where any gentleman now resident in the City, either as a house-keeper or lodger, or those who may hereafter arrive may insert their names and place of residence. The said Register will always lay open at the bar of the Coffee-House, by which means the disappointments so frequently happening to those who enquire or are enquired after will be prevented. [signed] Cornelius Bradford."—N. Y. Jour. & State Gaz., Mr 11, 1784. This was the Merchants' Coffee House, at the s. e. cor. of Wall and Water Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 979. See My 11, 1786. 11

Mangel Minthorne petitions the common council for reimbursement for his expenses in altering his house "by reason of the digging out the Street leading from the Goal to fresh-Water agreeable to an order of the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 13–14. It has not proved possible to identify this street with certainty; cf. Collect St., in L. M. R. K., III: 997; Pls. 99 and 174, Vol. III. "

". . . a Sedan Chair will constantly attend, from 10 o'Clock in the Morning till 12 at Night, at the Sign of the Free-Mason, in Wall-Street, nearly opposite the Coffee-House. Only one Shilling for a Turn will be required."—Ind. Gaz., Mr 11, 1784. "

Mrs. Maria Farmer, a daughter of Abraham Gouverneur, and grand-daughter of Jacob Leisler, presents to the state senate, through its president, "an accurate portrait of . . . Christopher Columbus, taken from an original painting, anno 1592, and which has been in her family upwards of 150 years."—Senate Jour.; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1880), V: 456. The gift is accepted, and the senate orders that it be placed "in their convention room."—Penn. Packet (Phila.), Mr 23, 1784. On March 28, 1827, a resolution was passed by the senate that the picture be removed from New York City, and "put up in some suitable place in the Senate Chamber."—Senate Jour. See N 5, 1827. The one now in the city hall is a copy.—See N 19, 1827. 12

The following are elected officers of the Bank of New York: Alexander M'Dougal, president; Samuel Franklin, William Maxwell, Robert Bowne, Nicholas Low, Comfort Sands, Daniel M'Cormick, Alexander Hamilton, Isaac Roosevelt, Joshua Waddington, John Vanderbilt, Thomas Randall, and Thomas B. Stoughton, directors; and William Seton, cashier.—N. Y. Packet, Mr 15, 18, 1784. 15

The common council passes "A Law for altering and directing the Uses of the public Seals of this City," and orders that it be printed in one of the public newspapers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 16. It requires that the "City Seal," the "Seal of the Mayor's Court," and the "Seal of Mayoralty" (see N 4, 1735), be altered in the following manner: "That the device, on the said seals respectively, in representation of an Imperial crown be defaced, and that instead thereof, the crest of the arms of the State of New York, that is to say, a representation of a semi globe, with a soaring eagle thereon, be inserted, and that the Mayor be authorized to cause the said seals respectively to be altered accordingly." The uses of the three seals, as specified in this law, are the same as those directed by the law of Nov. 4, 1735 (q. v.).—N. Y. Packet, Ap 8, 1784. See, further, S 1. 16

Nicholas de Peyster, in a petition to the common council, states that he "is Proprietor of a Peice of Ground of fifty feet in Breadth along the East River in the Out Ward of this City, lying to the Eastward of Beekmans Dock;" that, in front of this ground, "some short Time before the Commencement of the late War," he "obtained a Grant of the Right to the Soil under Water from high to low Water and two hundred feet into the said East River;" and that he "run out and finished in front of his said Ground a compleat and well built Warf or Dock of Wood Earth and Stone, almost to the Extent of the said two hundred Feet," which cost him at least "

1784 Mar. 16 £260." He further states "That in the late War while this City was in the Possession of the Enemy, the whole of the said Warf was by the British taken away to ballast their Shipping and otherwise destroyed so intirely that nothing now remains but the vacant Beach on which it had been erected;" and that, "altho frequent Application was made for the Purpose to the British," he was "never able to procure from them any Consideration or Recompence for his said Warf." He therefore asks that the quit-rents, due to the city on his grant of the water lot, be remitted.—From the original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "Read 16th March 1784 & referred to Aldn Broome Randall & Ivers."

" An ordinance is passed "for the speedy and effectual cleansing of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 16. The full text was published in the N. Y. Packet, Mr 18, 1784.

" John McComb is appointed one of the city surveyors, in place of Mr. Bancker.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 15. This was the father of John McComb who, in 1802 (see Mr 24, 1800), became one of the architects of the city hall. The elder McComb died in New Jersey in 1811 in his 77th year; so, doubtless, his experience contributed to the practical knowledge which his son displayed as master builder. See articles by Prof. John C. Van Dyke and Edward S. Wilde in Rutgers College Pubs., No. 14, which is entitled The One Hundredth Anniversary of the erection of Queen's Building, Rutgers College, June 23d, 1909 (pub. by the college, 1910). See also descrip. of Pl. 75, I: 460–67.

17 William Smith, late chief justice of New York, but at this time residing in England, presents a memorial to the commissioners "Appd by Act of Parliament for enquiring into the Losses & Services of the Ameran Loyalists." It reads, in part:

"Being a Son of one of the Kings Judges and a Native of the Province of New York and many years in the profession of the Law, and ever since the year 1767 a member of His Majestys Council and having been constituted Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and one of the Council to the several Commissions issued since 1778 for restoring peace to that Country—I presume that it cannot be necessary to trouble your Board at this day with any Declaration of my Principles on [or] the History of my Conduct in the late Contest which has so unhappily terminated in the rent if not in the ruin of the British Empire.—

"If nevertheless witnesses should be desired upon the Question of my Fidelity to the Crown or my attachmt to the general Interests of the Empire give me leave Gentlemen to refer you to Lord Dunmore Lieutenant General Tryon and Lieut General Robertson who were Governors of the province and to Lord Carlisle, Mr Eden and Govr Johnston the Commissioners of 1778 and to Sir Henry Clinton and Sir Guy Carleton the Commanders in Chief.—To these I can add other respectable Characters of this Country some of whom by a long Confidential Correspondence are able to shew you by what Principles I have been actuated and to what Councils I recommended for preventing the War, and when it had commenced to Guard against the fatal seperation it has effected. . . .

"The annexed Estimate will shew, as much as, in the singularity of my Case, ought to be the subject of your Consideration. I must not tender to you as others do a Computation of the value of my whole Estate real and personal. The Usurpation did not proceed against me to Attainder nor against my property to Confiscation and in the prospect that my Countrymen will neither be so unjust nor entirely regardless of the Definite Treaty—I flatter myself that tho at present secluded from my Funds and cast upon the Bounty of Great Britain for support this distress will continue only until the present ferments have had time to be composed.

"I am affected by two of their Laws—the one passed in June 1778 and the other in July 1782.

"Under the first I was expelled from the interior Country into the British Lines for refusing an Oath to abjure the Kings Sovereignty and its sanctions are the double taxation of my Estate and upon being found in the Colony the perpetual Imprisonmt of my person, with the Confiscation of the profits of my real Estate for Life and the whole personally for ever.—

"The other Act prohibits me, as well as the other Loyalists that were within the British Lines from recovering any of our Debts.—

"If these Laws are never to be repealed, my Condition is indeed to be deplored, but in the hope already suggested I cannot bring the whole of my real and personal Estate into Account for Compensation—I certainly ought not."—American Loyalists. Audit Office Transcripts, XLIV: 607–10.

Mar. 17 The legislature passes "An Act to remove Doubts which may have arisen respecting the Charter Rights of the Minister, Elders and Deacons of The Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New-York, in Consequence of the late Invasion of this State." It recites the fact that the charter granted by King William III, and signed by Fletcher on May 11, 1696 (q. v.), was suspended by the Revolutionary War. This act therefore declares that the charter and all the "estates, rights, powers, authorities, liberties, privileges, franchises, preeminences and immunities thereby granted and confirmed," which were held and enjoyed by the church on April 19, 1775, by virtue of the charter or by virtue of any act of the legislature of this state while this was a colony, shall continue in full force and efficacy; "notwithstanding any non-user or mis-user thereof, or of any part thereof," between April 18, 1775, and the date of this act (March 17, 1784). The ministers, elders and deacons who, because of their adherence to their country's cause, were compelled by the British army to leave the city, or those who have returned since the evacuation, shall be deemed to hold these offices, respectively, until others shall be appointed or elected in their stead, according to the charter. The charter contained a clause giving power to the minister, elders, and deacons to raise money "for repairing, amending and enlarging the church and steeple, belfrey, cemetery or church-yard," etc. As this power never was exercised, and the present minister, elders, and deacons are willing to surrender it, the act provides that it shall not hereafter be exercised, but shall be abrogated and repealed.—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 9.

" Elizabeth Holt changes the name of her paper (see F 19) to The New-York Journal, and State Gazette.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448. See F 17, 1785. 18

23 The common council passes an ordinance "for paving the Streets and for preventing Nuisances within this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 17. The full text was pub. in the N. Y. Packet, Ap 8, 1784.

24 The surviving governours of King's College present a petition to the legislature, which states: "That the greater Part of the Governors of the said College have since the commencement of the late War died out or departed this State whereby a sufficient number of Governors cannot be convened for the carrying on of the Business of the said College agreeably to its Charter . . .

"That many Parts of the said Charter are inconsistent with that Liberality and that Civil and Religious Freedom which our present happy Constitution points out—and that an Alteration of that Charter in such points as well as an Extension of the Privileges of the said College so as to render it the Mother of an University to be established within this State would tend to diffuse Knowledge and extend Literature throughout this State."

The petitioners add that they submit the charter to the legislature for revision, "so as to render it more adequate to these important Ends," and asking for confirmation to the college of "such Estate as was unquestionably appropriated to its use." The signers of this petition are Leonard Lispenard, Jno. Livingston, Wm. Walton, Sam. Bayard, Jr., Geo. Clinton, Rich. Morris, Jas. Duane, Gerard Bancker, Egbert Benson, J. H. Livingston, Sam. Provoost, John Rodgers, and John Morin Scott.

James Duane, a state senator, promptly introduced a bill, entitled "An Act for establishing a University within this State."—Pine, King's College and the Early Days of Columbia College (1917). See, further, My 1.

25 Sixty cartmen are admitted as freemen.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 19. This was perhaps due to the need of employing them in large numbers in cleaning and repairing the city. On March 30, forty-three others were admitted; on April 6, thirty-five; on April 15, thirty-five; on April 22, nine; on May 11, fifty-four, etc.—Ibid., I: 20, 21, 23–24, 27, 31, 35, 43, etc.

29 The legislature passes an act appropriating "Governor's or Nutten Island" for the use of the governour until the legislature shall otherwise order. The governour is to have charge of Fort George, and other fortifications, and public works and buildings within the city erected for military purposes on lands belonging to the state, and shall give orders to secure and preserve them. The commissioners of forfeiture are to assign to the governour any one of the forfeited houses which he may select for his residence, except those assigned to the use of the secretary. The house of William 1784 Mar. 29 Axtell, on the west side of Broadway in the West Ward, now vested in the state by his attainder, is appropriated for the use of the secretary for the period of two years from April 30th. It shall be his residence, and the place of deposit for the archives and records of the state.—Laws of N. Y., 7th sess., chap. 12. The Axtell house was the second one above Vesey St. See Pls. 68–b, Vol. I; 85, 100, 108, Vol. III.

30 The ministers, elders, and deacons of the "United Presbyterian Congregation" (the Brick Church), represented by John Rodgers, petition the common council for a remission of rents, now in arrears, due to the city under the grant from the city of February, 1766, whereby the congregation acquired the lot of ground in the North Ward on which to erect a new church, subject to an annual rent of £40. The church was built and the payments to the city kept up with difficulty "untill some short time before the War." The petition recites the abandonment of their property during the war, and its use by the enemy; the loss of their parsonage house in the fire of 1776, and the present poverty of members of the congregation, formerly in affluent circumstances. The congregation now has "no real property from which they can raise an Annual Revennue, nor have they one Shilling at Interest, so that the repair of their Churches, and the Support of the Gospel among them, must wholly depend on private Subscriptions and Voluntary Contributions."

They are "the more Encouraged in this application, as they are informed that the Corporation of Trinity Church, now hold, and for many Years past have held a great part of their Burying Ground, under the Grant of this Corporation, without being subject to the payment of any Rent; and that the Corporation of the low Dutch reformed Church hold a Piece of Ground in Montgomery Ward by a Grant of a later date than that made to your Petitioners at least three times as large as that held by them, subject to the Annual Rent of Seventy pounds . . ."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Read March 30th, 1784. & referred for future Consideration;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 20–21.

Apr. 1 The common council pays for appraising pickets for fuel for the poor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 22.

2 The executors and administrators of Alexander Colden, late surveyor-general of the colony of New York, are empowered by an act of the legislature to deliver to the surveyor-general of the state all the papers, books, maps and records appertaining to the office. —Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed., 1784), chap. 14.

6 The legislature passes a law allowing all religious denominations to be incorporated, thus placing all churches upon an equal footing. —Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 18. This act afforded relief from the injuries which had so long been sustained, for want of charters, under the oppressions of the provincial government. In May, the Presbyterian congregation met, and, agreeably to the provisions of the act, became a body corporate under the style of "The First Presbyterian Church in the City of New-York."—Miller, Memoir of the Rev. John Rodgers (1813), 248.

" A law is passed by the legislature authorizing Isaac Stoutenberg to sell forfeited estates in New York City or King's County to the amount of £20,000, in order to raise money for the "public Exigencies."—Laws of N. Y., 7th sess., chap. 20 (printed by Eliz. Holt, 1784). See also the Confiscation Act of Oct. 22, 1779. For the sale of the lots of De Lancey's Bowery estate, 1784–7, see Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Am. Rev., II: 540–59.

9 George III ratifies the Definitive Treaty (see S 3, 1783; Ja 14, 1784).—Winsor, VII: 168.

12 The villa occupied by Stephen N. Bayard, just above the two-mile stone and fronting the Bowery Lane, is advertised for rent.—N. Y. Packet, Ap 12, 1784. For an account of this estate, see L. M. R. K., III: 948; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 611.

13 The New York legislature passes "An Act to remove Doubts concerning the Corporation of the Chamber of Commerce, and to confirm the Rights and Privileges thereof." This changes the name of the institution to "Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York," and confirms to it all the powers and privileges enjoyed under its royal charter. The law also provides that the chamber shall meet "in the great-room of the building, commonly called the Exchange, situate at the lower end of the street called Broad-street."—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 30.

14 It is ordered by the common council that the lower part of the exchange be used as a public market-place; and that necessary repairs be made to the bridge at the exchange.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 24. See My 14, Jl 28.

Apr. 14 The common council grants a petition of Adolph Waldron for a continuance of his lease of the ferry from N. Y. to Brooklyn, which he hired on May 1, 1776, but which he was compelled to abandon during the war while serving as captain of a troop of light horse which he raised. He expresses willingness to bear the property losses suffered in abandoning the ferry, and gives an inventory and valuation of the former contents of the Brooklyn ferry-house, etc. These included 9 negroes (valued at £622:10), 15 horses, 5 "Riding Chairs with Harness," 1 sulky, 1 stage wagon, 9 boats with sails and oars (valued at £280), 2 milch cows, wine, porter, gin, 5 spinning wheels, various kitchen utensils (including "1 Large Oyster Roaster"), various tools, household furniture (including "fiddle-back" chairs), 1 speaking trumpet, 4 compasses, china, etc. There is also enclosed with his petition an itemized account of his labour and expenses from Nov. 26, 1783, to April 6, 1784, consisting largely of repairs on the old ferry-boats, amounting in all to £46:3:4.—From original MSS. in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room; and M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 26.

" The common council orders the issuance of a warrant on the city to pay John Simmons £61:13:4 "for his Acct for Expences attending the Corporation meeting at his House during the last Winter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 27. At this time, taverns were still used by the city, as in the early English colonial period, for public business, for committee and other meetings of the common council, and for special entertainments, as instanced by the taverns of Walter Heyer, and of John Simmons.—Ibid., I: 276, 385.

17 The legislature passes "An Act for making such Alterations in the Charter of the Corporation of Trinity Church as to render it more conformable to the Constitution of the State."—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 33. The corporate name was not changed until March 10, 1788 (q. v.).

20 The act of 1693 "for settling a Ministry," and several other similar acts of later years, including the act of 1700 "against Jesuits and Popish Priests" are repealed.—Laws of N. Y., chap. 38.

Father Farmer, a Jesuit who ministered to a Roman Catholic congregation in Wall St., secretly, before the Revolution (see 1776), now came boldly to New York to look after the remnants of his flock, and found eighteen communicants. Mass was celebrated in hired halls and in the embassies of the French and Spanish legations in 1784 and 1785. Regarding the further activities of Catholics, see Eccles. Rec., III: 1450–51.

" The first meeting of the Chamber of Commerce under its revived charter (see Ap 13) is held. John Alsop is elected president, Isaac Sears, vice-president, John Broome, treasurer, and John Blagge, secretary. The following statement is drawn up:

"The Arbitrary and Tyrannical conduct of Great Britain toward the late Colonies (now States of America), having been such as to Compel the People of these States to Have recourse to Arms for the Defence of their Liberty and Property, and the Invasion of the State of New York having driven the Inhabitants of the City to the cruel Necessity of leaving their Houses and Property and to retire into the Country, the Exercise of the Rights and Privileges of the Chamber were, in Consequence of the War, suspended from the Third of May One Thousand Seven hundred and Seventy-five to the Sixth of July One thousand Seven hundred and Seventy-nine [error for Je 21, 1779, q. v.], When a number of the Members Assumed the Exercises of the Powers contained in their Charter, under the Patronage of the British Commanders—and the Influence of the Chamber having been Manifestly directed to Aid the British in Subjugating these States—A number of the Members and other Citizens, on their return to this City, taking into Consideration the State of the Chamber and being advised by Council that the Charter of the said Chamber had been forfeited and lost by reason of the Misuser and Nonuser of the same, They thought it most advisable to petition the Legislature for a Confirmation of the said Charter."—Bishop, A Chron. of 150 Years. The Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., 1768–1918, 39–40.

22 The butchers and neighbours of the Fly Market being "desirous of covering the Slip at the lower end of said Market & extending the said Market over the said Slip to the Bridge across the same to make Room for the Country People who bring Produce thereto," a committee of the common council is appointed "to superintend & direct the addition to be made on the said Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 29. The committee reported on May 12 (q. v.).

1784 Apr. 22 The common council appoints a committee "for altering and laying out & keeping in Repair the public Roads in the Harlem Division of the Out Ward."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 29.

23 The vestry minutes of Trinity Church, beginning with this meeting, are regularly introduced with the words "At a Meeting of the Corporation of Trinity Church of the City of New York" (conformable to the amended charter, doubtless), instead of "At a Meeting of the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen, etc." —Trin. Min. (MS.).

24 John McComb, in a bill for materials and work done at the "Exchange," the "Old City Hall," and the "Execution House," between April 24 and July 10, charges the city £33:14:11.—From original bill in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 61.

26 "Resolved That the Committee on Leases be empowered to hire a Dwelling house for the Rector [Rev. Samuel Provoost] for the ensuing year at such Rent as they can agree for."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

29 Two executions take place "in the fields."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ap 30, 1784 (in N. J. H. S.)

30 The Rev. John H. Livingston, D. D., Henry Remsen, and others, in a petition to the common council, state that they "have procured a person, of whose capacity they are sufficiently satisfied, to open a grammar school for the instruction of youth in the English, Latin, and Greek languages;" that, "at present, there is not any convenient building, or room to be procured in this city for the purpose of Such a School." They ask the common council for the use of "the late library-room in the State-house," for a school-room, "until a university be established, or so long as the same may be spared from other public uses."—From original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read April 30th 1784 granted during the pleasure of the Corporation;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 30. See Mr 16, 1785.

" Thomas Arden and others residing near the slaughter-house, in a petition to the common council, complain of it as a great nuisance, and ask that it be removed. Richard Dean, in another petition, offers proposals "for erecting a Slaughter House on his Estate at the North River." The board defers consideration of the petitions.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 30. Dean's petition (the original of which is preserved in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room) shows that "for many Years past" the slaughter-house "has been extremely Offencive to many of the Inhabitants of this City." He proposes, if the board approves, "to build a Slaughter House without delay, at the Back of his Distillery, over the North River, where will be every conveniency for keeping it perpetually sweet and clean, for the lower parts of the Building will be cleansed twice a day by the Tides, and the upper he will convey Warm Water to from his Distillery by means he will institute for the purpose." He also says he will provide a yard for cattle, and employ a man to keep the building clean. He adds that "the Cattle can be brought to this Place, without passing thro' any part of the Town, by the Greenwich Road, and can be landed at his Dock from New Jersey, which may probably be an Incouragement for more Cattle to be brought from that Quarter, than has hitherto been done, arising from the want of a Conveniency of this Kind." He asks for the exclusive right to keep a slaughter-house for 31 years. See further action on My 12.

" A city ordinance is passed to regulate the public markets and to prevent the forestalling of provisions. Every day except Sunday is appointed a public market day, from sunrise to sunset. The public markets are to be held at such places as the common council shall from time to time appoint.—N. Y. Packet, My 3, 1784; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 30.

May 1 The legislature passes "An act for granting certain privileges to the college heretofore called Kings College, for altering the name and charter thereof, and erecting an university within this State." All the rights, powers, etc. heretofore vested in the corporation of Kings College are vested in "the Regents of the University of the State of New York." Regents are named, and another one shall be appointed by the clergy of the various religious denominations of the state. These regents are to choose a chancellor, vice-chancellor, treasurer, and secretary, from their own number. The powers and property vested in the regents are defined. Their powers in the matter of founding schools and colleges in any part of the state are stated. Religious bodies are permitted to institute professorships, and power is conferred on the regents to grant degrees, "as well in divinity, philosophy, civil and municipal laws, as in every other art, science and faculty whatsoever as are or may be conferred by all or any of the universities in Europe." May 1

This act also provides "That the college within the city of New York heretofore called Kings College, be forever here after called and known by the name of Columbia College." Nothing is said in this about changing the device or the words in the college seal.—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 51; Pine, King's College and the Early Days of Columbia College (1917), 17–20. See, further, Ap 13, 1787. For fuller history of the Regents, see N. Y. Times, Mr 2, 1913 (Part V, p. 14). See My 5.

Alexander MacDougall, president of the Bank of New York (see F 26), advertises for the subscribers to this bank to pay in the first half of their subscriptions on June first to William Seton, the cashier, at No. 67 St. George's Square.—N. Y. Jour., My 6, 1784. "

Congress directs that the commissary of military stores or the person in charge of the public stores at Carlisle, Pa., "deliver to the order of the corporation of the city of New-York, the bells which have been taken from the churches and other public edifices in the said city, if any such bells remain in his possession."—Jour. of Cong. (pub. 1823), IV: 395. See Mr 2. 3

"The Post-Office is removed from No. 38, Smith-street [see N 28, 1783], to No. 4, Queen-street."—N. Y. Packet, My 3, 1784. See My 12, 1785. "

At a meeting of the Whig Society in the long-room in the Coffee House, it is resolved that an ordinance should be passed for removing from this state "certain Cha[ra]cters of influence, who have uniformly manifested an inveterate opposition to the liberties of the people." It was agreed that such removal would not be repugnant to the treaty of peace with Gt. Britain.—N. Y. Packet, My 20, 1784. "

The legislature passes an act to appoint commissioners to settle and adjust any differences which may arise between the proprietors of certain lots in the city of New York, the buildings whereof were burnt in the year 1776, and for altering the streets which heretofore were laid out adjoining to such lots.—Laws N. Y. (1784), chap. 56; ibid. (1786), chap. 50; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 126. See My 14. 4

The legislature passes "An Act to prevent the bringing in and spreading of infectious distempers in this State." It designates "Bedlow's" Island as a place of quarantine, or such other place and for such time as the governour, or in his absence the mayor, of New York, may direct.—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 57 (1 Greenleaf, 117, 144). "

At a meeting of the "Regents of the University of the State of New York" (see My 1), Gov. Clinton is elected chancellor; Lieut.-Gov. Van Cortlandt, vice-chancellor; Brockholst Livingston, treasurer; and Robert Harpur, secretary. The treasurer and secretary are instructed to "demand and receive from the late Treasurer and Clerk of the late corporation of the College called King's College, and from any other person or persons," all records, books, and papers, and all property of whatever kind" lately belonging to the said late Corporation." Committees are also appointed to supervise the repair of the college building (see O 14), to report by-laws, to devise a proper seal, to take measures for the recovery of moneys due the college, and to engage instructors "for the term of twelve months."—Hist. of Columbia Univ. 1754–1904, 61. See My 15. 5

The city is in debt on its bonds to the extent of £18,271. For detailed summary of these obligations, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 511. 8

Congress commissions Franklin, Adams, and Jefferson to make treaties of commerce with European powers. Franklin reached Philadelphia, on his return, on Sept. 14, 1785.—Winsor, VII: 233. Regarding Adams and Jefferson, see F 25 and Mr 10, 1785, respectively. 12

The legislature passes an act providing for the appointment of seven commissioners to dispose, at private sale or public vendue, of all the heretofore unsold confiscated estates.—Laws of N. Y., 7th sess., chap. 64 (printed by Eliz. Holt, 1784). "

The legislature also enacts a law "to preserve the freedom and independence of this State." As there are persons "holding principles inimical to the Constitution," and citizens of this state "entertaining sentiments hostile to its independence," who have "taken an active part in the late war in opposition to the present government," it is deemed "improper and dangerous that such persons should be suffered to hold . . . any such office or place "

1784 May 12 of trust within this State." The act defines and classifies persons adjudged guilty of misprision of treason, with certain provisos relating to minors, the insane, and persons whose property is attached. These are forever disqualified from voting or holding office, there being exceptions in the case of persons who have acted through fear or under compulsion, but who have been friends to the freedom and independence of the U. S. Certain persons named in the act, including Henry Van Dyck, Cadwallader Colden, John Thurman, Richard Harrison, and others, may remain within the state without molestation.—Laws of N. Y., ed. of 1886, chap. 66.

" At a "Court of General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace," the grand jurors recently delivered a presentment against the slaughter-house near the Fresh Water Pond, as a nuisance, and the court adjudged that it should no longer be used. Richard Varian, the butchers, and neighbours of the slaughter-house now petition the common council that the slaughtering of cattle be continued there. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 32. They deny that it is a nuisance, and remark "that the real Motive of M^r^ Deane [see Ap 30] is upon the Face of the latter too evident to be misconstrued." A petition of the butchers, also dated May 6, states that this slaughter-house has been established many years; that they have "been precluded from Killing Cattle at any other place to the Southward thereof;" and that "they have purchased and built Houses in the neighbourhood of the said Slaughter House for the Convenience of carrying on their Business." They add "That the Situation of the said Slaughter House is very Convenient, being near the Bowery Lane where Droves of Cattle are usually brought, and should the same be removed such Measure will effectually prevent them from reaping the Advantages they expected," etc. They ask that the building may not be removed.—From petitions (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), the last named being endorsed "read May 12^th^ 1784." The common council appoints a committee to obtain the advice of counsel, and report what measures the city may properly take.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 32. For report of this committee, see Je 9.

" The common council adopts the report of a committee on the state of the Fly Market (see Ap 22), and orders that the "Market on the southeast side of Water Street [be] extended to the Bridge across the lower end of the Slip near the ferry Stairs. . . . And that the Market thus extended be covered in the same Manner as the lower end of the said Market now is."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 33. See Je 26, 1788, and Ag 22, 1796; L. M. R. K., III: 958; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

" Payment is made for "Windsor chairs for the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 34; see also ibid., I: 22.

14 In accordance with the act of May 4, 1784, the common council appoints five commissioners to adjust differences that may arise between the proprietors of lots where buildings were burned in 1776, and in connection with the altering of streets in the burnt district. They are Peter Van Brugh Livingston, Leonard Lispenard, Abraham Lott, Henry Remsen, and Gerard Bancker.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 36.

" Robberies, thefts, and other violent breaches of the peace have become so alarming that the common council decides to give the care and direction of the bridewell to commissioners, the object being that "the idle wicked and dissolute Persons in this City (most of whom were left behind on its Evacuation by the British)" may be confined and kept at hard labour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 35. Thirteen commissioners were named on May 26.—Ibid., I: 39.

" A warrant is issued to advance to John McComb £30 on account of repairs which he is making at the exchange bridge.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 36. See Ap 14, Jl 28.

15 At a meeting of the General Society of the Cincinnati, held at the City Tavern, Philadelphia, Gen. Washington is elected president, Gen. Gates vice-president, Gen. Knox secretary, and O. H. Williams asst.-secretary.—From catalogue of the Sturges sale at The Anderson Galleries, Jan. 16, 1923, describing the original MS. journal of the proceedings (item No. 56).

" The Regents resolve to institute a grammar school at Columbia College, and appoint William Cochran to be master thereof. A committee is also chosen to conduct the examination of candidates for admission to the college.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 62; Moore, Hist. Sketch of Columbia College, 66. For the rules and regulations of the college, see Statutes of Columbia College in N. Y. (1785). See My 17.

May 17 De Witt Clinton is admitted to the junior class of Columbia College. He is the first student to enter the institution under its new name.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 62. He graduated on April 11, 1786 (q. v.). The college had been closed to students since April 6, 1776 (q. v.), when it was converted into a barracks for troops. During the war it was also used as a hospital (see Je 4, 1776).

18 The vestry of Trinity Church resolves "That the Committee of Repairs do forthwith employ Workmen to pull down the remaining Part of the Tower of Trinity Church, and to enclose Trinity and Saint Pauls Burying Grounds."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Je 15. See also descrips. of Pl. 49, Vol. I, and A. Pl. 8, Vol. III.

The vestry further resolves "That such Persons as have Leases yet unexpired, or Lots now enclosed in Saint Pauls Burying Ground [see S 17, 1781] be allowed to chuse in Lieu of them any vacant Lots of equal Dimensions of the Church Estate, except those fronting the Broad Ways:—and for which this Corporation will grant them Leases for the term yet unexpired at the same Rent as those they now have."—Ibid. The resolutions of this important vestry meeting were published in full in N. Y. Jour., Je 17, 1784 (which is preserved in archives of Am. Institute, N. Y.).

19 The following announcement is published: "The heirs and other representatives of Annie Bogardus, widow, deceased, are requested to attend at Cape's Tavern, on Saturday next, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, on business of high importance, relative to the lands called Dominie's Hook, in this city, which formerly belonged to her. New York, May 19, 1784."—N. Y. Packet, My 20, 1784; Nash, Anneke Jans Bogardus (1896), 71. See also F. 2; and Mr 18, 1788.

21 Phillip Minthorne, in a petition to the common council, states that "in the Year 1776 he left this City on the Approach of the British Troops, & retired with his family into the Jersies;" that "when he so left this City he was a regularly appointed Weigh Master, that his scales stood in the street at the Back of the Stables of Cape's Tavern;" and "that these scales were removed during his Absence into the Jersies to the Forge Yard at the North River, where they now stand." He asks that he be again appointed a weigh-master, "with permission to erect his scales on the Ground [where] they formerly stood."—From original petition (in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read May 21^st^ 1784 & the prayer granted." This petition is typical of several from returning refugees and soldiers, seeking reinstatement in their former employments, or seeking release from the payment of quit-rents on grants of land made to them just prior to the war.

" The committee on docks and slips reports that Old Slip is in a ruinous condition, and likely to become an intolerable nuisance. They recommend "that a Block about eight feet in width thrown across the Slip about fifty five feet below the Edge of the Bank & the intermediate Space filled in" would largely remedy the fault, and that, to make this effective, the street fronting the slip should be paved "with a gradual Descent from the Corner of Duke Street down to the aforesaid Block." A committee is appointed to execute these plans.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 37–38.

" The common council contributes £150 toward digging down Cortlandt Street, so that the descent will be easy, and that water from Broadway may be led into the North River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 37.

" Marinus Willet, sheriff of the city and county of New York, protests to the common council against the insecurity of the "Goal." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 38.

25 A letter of this date from New York was published in a Halifax newspaper, describing a "mob" that, some time before, had met in the Fields at New York and passed resolutions that "every tory or person suspected of toryism should be banished from the state." On their way to the city hall, they met a couple of British officers, whom they placed on a cart and carried about "to the no small joy of the benevolent and humane whigs, as well as of every lover of peace and good order." The "two Miscreants" were rescued by the governour, who "went attended by some of the Council and others of the lower class of people," and the mob was thus "deprived of the unspeakable pleasure of seeing a taring and feathering match." This much of the account is evidently written in a semi-jocular vein. The two men thus handled by the "mob" were "Capt. Hely or Healy, and one Capt. Moore, a gentleman from Canada, who is now here on public business." The letter, which evidently was a political squib, was reprinted in a New York paper a month

1784 later "to show with what rancorous malignity certain characters in May this city propagate slander and falsehood."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Je 25, 25 1784 (in N. J. H. S.).

" The common council orders that a "middle road" be laid out between the Post Road and the Bloomingdale Road, through the Common Lands.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 145, 199. This was long afterward called the Middle Road, although occasionally mentioned in the records and elsewhere as Manhattan Avenue, a designation never formally adopted. See L. M. R. K., III: 1005.

26 Col. Matthew Clarkson is authorised by the Regents to go to France and the United Netherlands to solicit benefactions for the University of the State of New York, and to purchase "such philosophical apparatus for the College [Columbia] as Dr. Franklin, Mr. Adams and Mr. Jefferson, Ministers of the United States, should advise."—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 63.

" The common council gives Aaron Gilbert sole charge of the city watch. He is required to "make strict enquiry into the Character & Conduct of all the Watchmen and . . . discharge such as shall not produce the most satisfactory Proofs of their sobriety diligence and integrity and employ in their stead Citizens of established good Characters." He is to "direct the Watch to make their Rounds in silence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 40.

27 "It being represented that great Numbers of dead Bodies have been interred in the Burying Ground adjoining Trinity Church during the war and that Graves can now with difficulty be dug without obstructions from Coffins or human Bones that therefore many dead Bodies are placed within three feet of the Surface of the Earth whereby the health of the inhabitants of this City is evidently endangered, Therefore

"Resolved That no Funerals be permitted in future in the burying Ground of Trinity Church except where families have used particular Burial Places therein for this some time past and except in the different vaults already built."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The vestry also orders "That Mr [William] Elsworth the Fire Engineer of this City be permitted to build a house for a fire engine on such Part of Saint Pauls Burying Ground as the Committe of the Repairs shall think proper."—Ibid. See S 2.

June An ordinance is passed prohibiting the use of iron-shod wheels
2 after Aug. 1.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 41. See Mr 28, 1787, Mr 11, 1791.

7 Simeon King announces to "his friends and the public that he has opened a Tavern at the sign of the Indian King, No. 110, Water-street, the noted place formerly called the Royal Punch House [see Jl 1, 1780]; he has a pump which affords a constant supply of the coolest water in the city, and equal in flavour to the Tea-water pump . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Je 7, 1784.

8 The vestry of Trinity Church, because of its enormous debt (about £18,000), and the expenditures due to the destruction by fire of Trinity Church, the rector's house, the charity school-house, and the fences of the burying grounds, decides "that a number of lots of ground, belonging to this Corporation, situate to the southward of Chamber-street, be forthwith sold at public auction, in fee." The committee on leases, after examination of the various lots, is to report which should be sold and which leased. The members give notice of the days on which they will consider applications for the lots.—N. Y. Jour., Je 17, 1784 (in the archives of the Am. Institute, N. Y.).

9 The Bank of New York is opened in the old Walton house, at 67 St. George's (Franklin) Square.—N. Y. Packet, Je 7, 1784. The house was known also as 156 Queen St., and subsequently as 326 Pearl St. In 1787, the bank moved to No. 11 Hanover Square, and in 1796 purchased the house and lot at the north-east corner of William and Wall Sts. In the following year the house was demolished and a bank building erected.—Domett, Hist. of the Bank of New York, 1784–1884. The bank was incorporated in 1791.—Laws of N. Y. (1791), chap. 37. See also descrip. of Pl. 72-b, I: 458.

" The commissioners appointed by the act of May 4 to lay out the city in the burnt district recommend that Cortlandt and Crown Sts. be widened, and that Greenwich St. be continued southerly to the Battery, agreeable to a plan proposed by Anthony Van Dam. The common council orders that the city surveyors survey, stake out, and regulate the streets accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 45–46, 47. For Van Dam's plan, see Mr 3.

" The committee appointed on May 12 in connection with the removal of the slaughter-house reports that it is intolerable to the neighbourhood, and may be prejudicial to health; that it ought June to be removed "to some place near the Water & that they would 9 recommend Corlears Hook;" that, if Mr. Bayard will undertake it, he ought to be given the remainder of his lease without charge, but if he refuses the city should purchase a lot in that locality, and the revenue from the slaughter-house collected for the use of the city. This is agreed to by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 44. See, for further action, Jl 1 and 21.

From this date to Oct. 27, John McComb received in various " payments £1,085 for repairs to the bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 46, 53, 56, 61, 66, 69, 72, 81, 90, 97. On Nov. 11, he was granted £400 toward finishing the building, and on Dec. 8, he received £150 more.—Ibid., I: 99, 106. He was paid £150, on March 16, 1785, for more repairs to the bridewell, and on Sept. 23, £187:6:9 for the same purpose.—Ibid., I: 125, 170. See Ag 13.

A proposal of Elias Burger is agreed to by the common council, 10
"to lay a Block across Beekmans Slip—Six feet at the Bottom & five feet at the Top, Timber Iron, filling up with Stone compleat, Workmanship & all Charges included at twenty Shillings per foot." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 47–48. On Aug. 26, Burger was paid £100 for this work.—Ibid., I: 67.

Stephen Dolbeer announces that he has "Revived" the Blue " Bell Tavern at Fort Washington, "where he hopes for the continuance of his former customers."—N. Y. Packet, Je 10, 1784. This tavern stood on the Post Road, at about the present 181st St. The L. M. R. K., III: 977, locates it on the west side of the Post Road, disproving the statement of O 12, 1753 (q. v.); but erroneously states that it is shown on Pl. 87-b, Vol. III.

The walls of the burned Trinity Church, which have been a 15 menace to the locality, are being thrown down. The church is to be rebuilt as soon as possible.—Ind. Jour., Je 16, 1784. This was not done, however, until 1788 (q. v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 49, I: 362.

Mayor Duane reports to the common council a plan "for the 16 future Management of the Alms House and the Bridewell or House of Employment," which he and the commissioners of the bridewell have agreed upon. The report recites that, as a result of the war, the number of the poor maintained at public expense has greatly increased, and that the annual tax to be assessed for their sustenance has become burdensome and in danger of being oppressive. Also, since the evacuation of this district by the British, "the tranquility of the Inhabitants hath been disturbed by an idle and profligate Banditti who continue to rob and steal . . . and by other abandoned Vagrants and Prostitutes whom the ordinary Process of Justice hath not awed nor reclaimed." It is conceived that only the discipline of the "Bridewell or House of Employment," vigorously administered, will be effectual to correct and restrain "those shameful Enormities." But the "Alms House and Bridewell or House of Employment are at present in the immediate Government of the Mayor Recorder & Aldermen (the former in conjunction with the Vestrymen and the latter in conjunction with the Assistants or Common Council Men);" and these magistrates are so incumbered with "the multiplicity and weight of affairs" (the dispensation of justice, regulating the police, and managing the revenues) that they cannot extend the degree of care to "either of the said Institutions" that their importance and the public good demand. The mayor and commissioners of the bridewell therefore submit a plan of management to remedy these conditions, and this is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 48–50.

The Mutual Hook and Ladder Company (volunteers) is organ- " ized. It went out of existence in September, 1865. The six volumes of its original MS. records are preserved in the city clerk's library, room 357, Municipal B'ld'g.

The alteration of "the Street called Golden Hill or John Street" 23 will cause damages for which two petitioners ask compensation, but the common council decides that no relief can be given.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 52.

The common council agrees that the city will purchase of Mr. " Bayard the materials of the slaughter-house; and it is ordered that the commissioners of forfeitures of the Southern District be applied to "for a Piece of Ground of about three acres said to be in possession of John Delancey to be used as a Penn for the Slaughter House to be erected at Corlears Hook," and that a treaty be made between this corporation and such person as shall be willing to construct a slaughter-house at Corlear's Hook on a five years' lease.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 53.

The repaired Brick Presbyterian Church on Beekman St., 27

1784 June 27 which was used by the British as a hospital for prisoners, is re-opened for services. The repairs cost £1,300. Since Evacuation Day, the congregation have worshipped alternately in St. Paul's and St. George's (Episcopal) churches.—Knapp, A Hist. of the Brick Pres. Church, 76.

30 Christopher Miller petitions the common council, in behalf of himself and others, for the use of "the room over the Exchange" for the instruction of their sons in "the Manual Exercise & Military Evolution," having procured "a very capable and expert person to teach them."—From the original MS. in metal file No. 7, city clerk's record-room. Granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 54. This room became in 1790 (q. v., F 1) the first meeting-place of the U. S. Supreme Court. See S 1.

" A bill of Daniel Phoenix, of this date, for "1 Ensign . . . £4:10—," for the use of the corporation, bears the endorsement "Acc^{t} for a Flagg—filed 21st March 1787."—From the original bill in file No. 9, city clerk's record-room.

July 1 There is published, by order of the mayor, a notice, dated June 28, that "The public Slaughter-House having been presented by the Grand Jury as a dangerous nuisance, is ordered to be removed to Corlaer's Hook, there to be rebuilt over the water." The notice calls for proposals for leasing it, the new buildings to be built at the expense of the lessee.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 1, 1784. See Jl 21.

5 The annual meeting of the Society of the Cincinnati is held at Cape's Tavern. Toasts are drunk. The following officers are elected for the ensuing year: Alexander MacDougall, president; Gov. Clinton, vice-president; Philip van Cortlandt, treasurer; Nicholas Fish, assistant-treasurer; James Fairlie, secretary.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 8, 1784.

9 Roger Morris having been attainted, the commissioners of forfeiture sell his property "in the Out Ward of the City of New York on the Heights commonly called Haerlem Heights containing One Hundred and fifteen Acres," to John Berian and Isaac Ledyard for £2,250. The deed was recorded on Aug. 13, 1792.—Liber Deeds, XLVII: 451–52. The Roger Morris house had been erected in 1765 (q.v., My 13). See My 23, 1785.

12 Peter Maverick advertises that "he takes in Engraving at No. 3, Crown-street, next to the old Quaker-Meeting."—N. Y. Packet, Jl 12, 1784. Cf. N. Y. Gazetteer, Ja 11, 1785. See Mr 16, 1786.

20 A committee of the congregation of the "Wall St. Church" is formed to solicit contributions for "rebuilding or repairing the old Presbyterian Church."—Proc. of the Trustees (Session Book) of the First Presby. Church. The whole of the interior had been destroyed during the war, and nothing but the walls and the principal timbers of the roof were left.—Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers (1813), 249. The work of rebuilding thus commenced was completed in June, 1785 (q.v.).

21 James Blanchard having offered to undertake "the removal or building of the Slaughter House at Corlears Hook," the common council appoints a committee to treat with him. The proposed terms included a provision that he pay Mr. Bayard the appraised value "for the materials of the old House to be made use of by M^{r} Blanchard as he shall think proper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 59. See Jl 1; also L. M. R. K., III: 962.

" It having been suggested "that a Continuation of a certain Street in the West Ward called Lombard Street until it falls into Crown Street would conduce much to the convenience Health & Safety of that part of the City," the common council orders that the committee which has been appointed to direct the digging out of Cortlandt Street "suggest the matter to the Commissioners for regulating the Streets in such Parts where the Buildings have been destroyed by fire during the Late War."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 60.

" The common council agrees to defray the expense of building a "Breast Work" across the slip at Dey St., as in the case of Old Slip and Beekman's Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 60, 67.

" Evert Bancker is appointed city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 59.

27 The New-York Gazetteer, and Country Journal (see Ja 5) becomes a semi-weekly.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431. See D 7.

28 The common council orders "that when the proprietors of the lots in Cortlandts Street commence paving the said Street that the following rule be observed, viz: That the street be highest in the middle and that there be two Kennels or gutters, for carrying off the water, on each side near the front of the lots."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 62. July 28

" For "flagging &^{c} at the Exchange," the common council authorizes payment of £47:2:6; and for carpenter's work and materials at the exchange bridge and exchange, £40:17:5.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 62.

29 Rev. John Christopher Kunze, "late senior minister of the Lutheran Churches in Philadelphia and Professor of Oriental Languages in the University, who is appointed the Lutheran Minister of the Trinity and Christ Churches in this city," arrives in New York.—N. Y. Packet, Ag 2, 1784. The two churches had been united, on Jan. 6, under the name of "The United German Lutheran Churches in the City of New York." All services were held in Christ Church (corner of Frankfort and William Sts.) because the Lutheran Trinity Church, burned on Sept. 21, 1776 (q.v.), was never rebuilt.—Kretzmann, The Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 30. It seems that when the old church on Broadway and Rector St. was burned, its walls being of stone, were left standing, and the building, though never used thereafter by the congregation, was rented for business purposes (see My 30, 1791 and S 6, 1792). See also Mr 22, 1790.

" Trinity vestry fixes the pay of two assistant ministers, Uzal Ogden and Rev. Benjamin Moore, at £200 each per annum, at the same time appointing a committee to raise this sum by subscription.—Trin. Min. (MS.) in N. Y. H. S.

Aug. 4 Lafayette arrives in New York from Havre in the packet ship "Courier." The next day, "he was invited to a splendid entertainment, where the officers appeared in their uniforms, which had been long cast aside, but were now resumed in honour of the occasion. . . ." He passed a few days in New York, and departed for Philadelphia.—A Complete Hist. of the Marquis de Lafayette, by an officer in the late army (1826), 156–57. Lafayette came to America to see Gen. Washington and to greet his companions in arms after the declaration of peace. "He was received everywhere by the people with cordial demonstrations of friendship and attachment. Having spent some happy days amid the delightful surroundings of Mount Vernon, whither he was conducted by General Washington, who had gone to Richmond to meet him, he revisited Williamsburg, Yorktown, and other points of interest in the Virginia campaign; he stopped at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston upon his journey through the Middle States and New England; and he sailed for France from New York on the 25th of January, 1785."—Charlemagne Tower, Jr., The Marquis de La Fayette in the Am. Revolution, II: 467–68, citing "Voyage aux Etats-Unis en 1784," in Mémoires, Correspondence et Manuscrits, II: 95–107. Cf. D 14.

12 Trinity corporation offers a large number of lots for sale. These are in Broadway, Partition, Vesey, Greenwich, Barclay, Robinson, and Murray Sts.—N. Y. Packet, Ag 12, 1784.

13 A committee is appointed "to confer with the commissioners of the bridewell [see My 14] relative to the employing of Persons (confined therein) in levelling &c the Ground about the public buildings in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 64. Vagrants housed in the bridewell were frequently employed for similar work during the years following.—Ibid., I: 173, 317, 341, 476. For another kind of employment, see D 3, 1788.

16 The first of several parcels of land in the Bowery estate of James de Lancey is sold under the New York act of confiscation. Other parcels were sold throughout 1784, '85, and '86, the total receipts being $234,198.75. The commissioners of forfeitures were Isaac Stoutenburgh and Philip van Cortlandt. This estate, formerly in the "Outward," comprised one-third of what became the 7th, the whole of the 10th, nearly all of the 11th, the whole of the 13th, and nearly a fourth of the 17th, Wards of the city, with a water-front of over a mile on the East River. The mansion-house was "a large, double, brick edifice, with extensive grounds and a drive leading to it under large trees." It "fronted the Bowery, and stood back nearly on the line of First [the present Christie] Street, and between De Lancey and Rivington Streets." On 1st St. stood Mr. de Lancey's racing stable, and in 2d St. a paddock for the horses, and near it a private track to train them. "Orchard Street is so named from the large orchards on that part of the farm. Evert Byvanck held the part at Corlears Hook or 'Crown Point,' . . . on a long lease for ship-yards, etc., and on Little Division, now Montgomery Street, was Degrashes' Rope-walk."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y., II: 540–59, with map opp. p. 558. See also a map of the De Lancey property, in colours, in MS. Div., N. Y. P. L.

1784 Aug. 16 "The names of some of the streets on the map have been changed. 'Fisher' is now Bayard St.; 'Pump' is now Walker St.; 'Eagle' is now Hester St.; 'Bullock' is now Broome St.; 'De Lancey's Square,' or 'The Great Square,' as it was often called, which extended from Grand to Broome, and from Third to Essex, was, unfortunately for the future of the City, cut up into lots by the commissioners and sold, money, not health and beauty, being then desired. 'First' is now Christie St.; 'Second' is now Forsyth; 'Third' is now Eldridge St. No streets were laid out through the blocks where Allen and Ludlow Streets now are. From Arundell Street to the East River no streets were laid out, all being farm or meadow land.

"On the highest part of Grand Street was 'Mount Pitt,' about two acres, the town-house and gardens of Judge Jones . . . built by him on land given to . . . the Judge's wife [Anne], by her brother, James de Lancey, in 1765, . . . It was sold in 1785, under the Act of May 12th, 1784, by the Commissioners of Forfeiture, to Morgan Lewis, for £970, or 2,425 dollars. The house was removed to an adjoining street, and remained till late in this [the 19th] century. The name was given in honour of William Pitt, afterwards Lord Chatham, of whom Judge Jones was a great admirer, and is still perpetuated in the street now called Pitt Street."—Ibid., 544–45.

The De Lancey estate included a 30-acre farm at Bloomingdale. This was sold under the same act, on Oct. 19, 1784, to John Somerindyke, and became known as the Somerindyke Farm. It extended from the south-west angle of Central Park to the North River.—Ibid., 544. See Jl 27, 1785.

In the archives of the N. Y. H. S. is a manuscript entitled: "Abstract of the Names of all purchasers of Confiscated property in the Southern District [New York City] who have been delinquent in their payments, and distinguishing the particular property on which the deficiency of payment arises."—MS. filed with "New York MSS., 1761–1800."

17 "The Mayor, in the judicious charge which he delivered to the grand jury, at the late quarter sessions, recommended to their attention the riot and disorder which prevailed in the South ward of this city." The jury then "went to each house and made a minute enquiry into the number of inhabitants, the manner in which they got livelihood, and such other circumstances as occurred from the appearance of the place." The result was "a presentation of the evident necessity there was for proper steps being taken to suppress the numerous receptacles for the vicious and abandoned, in that part of the ward which passes under the denomination of—Canvas-town. Bridewell is fitting up as a school for the reformation of manners!"—N. Y. Gazetteer, Ag 17, 1784.

On Sept. 30, the sheriff demolished several of these houses, an indictment having been preferred against them "as forming a public nuisance." The news report of this compares it with the fate of Troy.—Ibid., O 1, 1784. See, further, Ag 26, 1785.

19 A newspaper correspondent "recommends to the attention of the magistrates a nuisance generally complained of in this dry, warm season. A number of people assembled round the pond [Fresh Water] from whence the tea-water is raised, and wash their dirty linen. . . ."—N. Y. Packet, Ag 19, 1784. See also ibid., O 25, 1784, and De Voe, Market Book, 267. See, further, Ag 25, 1785.

24 A three-story brick house at No. 5 Hanover Square, formerly occupied by the late Henry Cruger, is advertised for sale. The lot is about 25 feet wide, and extends 150 feet "to the Sloat, on which is a commodious Brick Store."—Ind. Jour., Ag 25, 1784.

26 The common council receives a proposal of Henry Rutgers for opening a road through his land along the East River to the new slaughter-house at Corlears Hook.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 65–66.

" The common council decides that the extensive repairs which the markets required, "by Reason of the Ruinous Condition in which they were found on the Evacuation of this City by the British Troops," should not be paid for out of the market fees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 67.

Sept. 1 In accordance with the city ordinance of March 16, 1784 (q.v.), Mayor Duane submits to the common council "the Mayoralty & the Mayors Court Seals," altered as there specified. The board examines and approves them, and ordains that they "be adopted as the public Seals of this City & that the old Seals be broken by the Clerk in presence of Mr Mayor." They are accordingly broken.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 69–70. The bill of Andrew Billings, for £15:10, for making the new seals, is approved for payment.—Ibid., I: 69. The original bill, dated Aug. 30, shows the following items: For "making and Engraving the Greate Seal of the Corporation," £7:9:4; ditto "the Seal of Mayoralty," £6:10:8; ditto "the Seal of the Mayors Court," £1:10:0.—From the original bill, preserved in file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See also Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y., 58–59.

Impressions of the new city seal, and the seal of mayoralty, are shown in ibid., Pl. 4, and fully described, pp. 59–62. The same seals, from the Paulding collection in the N. Y. H. S., are also reproduced in Wilde's Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and State, Pl. 26, and mentioned on pp. 63 and 65.

Sept. 1

" The common council passes an ordinance for regulating the public slaughter-houses within this city, and providing that after Sept. 10 no one shall slaughter neat cattle at any other place than "the public Slaughter House lately erected at Corlaer's-Hook." The law regulates the fees to be charged by the keeper "for the use of the said slaughter-house, pen, penfold, and the tackle and furniture thereto belonging."—N. Y. Packet, S 6, 1784.

" Thomas Turner petitions the common council for the use of the room in the exchange for teaching dancing and fencing, but is informed that the room has been disposed of for other purposes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 69. See Je 30.

2 John McComb presents a bill of £35:7:2 "For Building an Ingine House at the rear of the Burying Ground, Belonging to St Pauls Church" (see My 27).—From the original bill in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. It was paid Oct. 27.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 97.

3 "To Be Sold At Public Auction, on Friday, 10th of September, at Twelve o'clock, at the Coffee-house, That spacious, well built Freehold Estate, situate in Great Dock-street, well known as Frauncis's Tavern.

"The premises are extensive and admirably well contrived for a Hotel or Tavern, the cellars are capacious and good; the upper Rooms large, convenient for company, and the attick story well adapted to the uses of a numerous family; its vicinity to the New-Market, and the probability that new and elegant houses will soon be built in that part of the city, must considerably add to the value of the Estate. Though so famed and well contrived as a Tavern, it has the peculiar advantage that it may be readily converted into two separate houses, at a very moderate expence. Further particulars may be known prior to the day of sale, on the premises, or of Viner Van Zandt, No. 202, Water-Street."—N. Y. Gazetteer, and Country Jour., S 3, 1784 (in N. J. Hist. Soc.). See Ap 4, 1785.

8 John van Alen exclusively is permitted by the common council to "occupy the Ferry across the North River from the Corporation Wharf to Hoboock;" in "acknowledgment of their Right," he is to pay the city 20 shillings per annum.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 70. See also "Hoboken Ferry" in L. M. R. K., III: 942.

" The inhabitants of Chatham St. and Tryon Row petition the common council that the "building lately erected for the execution of Criminals may not be placed near their Houses." It is ordered that the building be removed and placed "between & on a Range with the Alms House & Goal."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 71. The building in which the gallows stood is described as "a gaudily painted Chinese pagoda."—N. Y. City in 1789, p. 16.

11 It is ordered by the common council "that five respectful Addresses from this Corporation be presented with the freedom of this City in Gold Boxes, one to his Excellency, the Governor, one to his Excellency General Washington—one to the honble John Jay Esqr one to the honble the Marquis Delafayette, & one to Major General Baron Steuben."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 73. See S 14 and 20, O 2 and 8, and D 2.

" Inhabitants in the vicinity of Old Slip are permitted by the common counsel to make, at their own expense, a public walk of flag-stones, eight or ten feet wide, in the middle of the street leading to the slip from the south side of Dock St., and extending to the north side of Water St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 75.

" Payment is made for 2,825 loads of dirt for filling the Old Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 75.

14 "The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty" (the common council) present to the Marquis de Lafayette an address; also the freedom of the city enclosed in a gold box. He expresses his delight at the "triumphant restoration of the American flag." An "elegant entertainment" is given in his honour by the mayor, aldermen and merchants of the city at Cape's Tavern, at which are present, also, the generals and field officers of the army now in 1784 Sept. 14 town, the clergy of all denominations, "and a very numerous assemblage."—N. Y. Packet, S 16, 1784; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 73–74, 76–77.

17 "Resolved That the Committee of repairs be requested to employ workmen to finish immediately the Cupaloe on the Tower of S[t] Pauls Church."—Trin. Min. MS. For the completion of the steeple, see D 1, 1794.

20 In accordance with the resolution of Sept. 11, the common council approves of the draft of an address and a certificate of freedom of the city to be given to Gov. Clinton.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 77–79. They were presented to him on Sept. 22, and the governour's reply was entered in the minutes at the next meeting of the board.—Ibid., I: 79.

" Alexander Marie Quesnay advertises that he proposes to open "an Academy for the tuition of the French Language, Dancing and Drawing, in this City, on the 1[st] of October, next, at No. 32, Broad-street, being the large house of the late Lord Stirling, which will be genteely repaired for the purpose."—N. Y. Packet and Am. Adv., S 20, 1784. On Nov. 16, he published an address "To the Citizens of New York," in which he said, in part: ". . . Many branches of education, common in Europe, are wholly unknown, or slightly attended to, in this country; and in the circle of polite arts, to accomplish a youth, you have heretofore been under the necessity of sending them to Europe. . . ." He outlined the plan of his academy, and solicited patronage.—N. Y. Gazetteer, N 16, 1784. On Dec. 3, he elaborated this fully as an "Academy of Polite Arts."—Ibid., D 3, 1784.

21 The tri-weekly heretofore called The Pennsylvania Packet, and General Advertiser is changed to a daily, with the name, The Pennsylvania Packet, and Daily Advertiser. It is published at Philadelphia by John Dunlap and David C. Claypole. This was the first daily paper printed in America.—Evans, item Nos. 18721 and 18722. For the first New York daily, see F 23, 1785.

22 The governour having called a meeting of the senate and assembly to be held on Oct. 4, the clerk of the senate, Abraham B. Bancker, states in a letter to the common council that "the Senate Chamber is very unfit for the Reception of that Honorable Body, by reason of the Roof of the City Hall being in so ruinous a Situation as to Admit the Weather into the very Senate Chamber, and even the Supreme Court Room, that the Judges were under the necessity of leaving their Seats." He indicates the need "of Ordering the Necessary Repairs to render the same Comfortable to the Legislature as well as Judicial Powers of the State."—From original letter in metal file No. 10, city clerk's record-room. The letter was read Sept. 4, and the common council ordered that "the said Chamber & the Roof of the City Hall" be repaired and put in order.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 81.

24 Chief-Justice Morris having delivered to the mayor two presentments made by the grand jurors of the court of oyer and terminer, one against Kingsbridge and the road in its vicinity, and the other against the hulks of vessels lying at Beekman's Slip and at the west pier of the Albany Basin, these are read in common council, and it is ordered that David Waldron be road-master for the Harlem Division of the Out Ward, and that he cause the road complained of to be repaired without delay.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 80.

" A committee of the common council is appointed for laying out and regulating streets through a piece of ground owned by Henry Kip and others near "Kalck Hook."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 81. For the location of Kalck Hook or Calck Hook, see L. M. R. K., III: 965; descrip. of Frontispiece II, III: 540; and Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 550, 562.

Oct. 2 The draft of an address to the Hon. John Jay from the corporation of the city is approved by the common council, and is entered in the minutes, with a draft of a certificate giving him the freedom of the city, in accordance with the resolution of Sept. 11 (q.v.). These were presented to Mr. Jay on Oct. 4, and his reply entered in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 84–87.

7 Elias Burger presents a bill for £80 for building a wharf at Peck's Slip, 80 feet long and 5 feet wide.—From original bill in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. This was paid on Oct. 27.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 97. Burger also built a bulkhead across Catharine Slip, and repaired Coenties Dock.—Ibid., I: 106.

8 Mayor Duane submits to the common council the draft of an address to Baron Steuben, and a certificate of his freedom of the city, in accordance with the resolution of Sept. 11, and these are approved by the board and entered in the minutes. They refer to Steuben's military services in the Revolution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 87–89. These were presented to him on Oct. 11, and his reply is recorded in full in the minutes.—Ibid., I: 91–92. Oct. 8

" Horse-races are advertised to take place on Oct. 11, for a purse of £100, at the "Maiden-head course, back of Mr. Delancey's late mansion house, in the Bowery."—N. Y. Gazetteer, O 8, 1784. Races were held there in 1785 and 1786 also.—See Ind. Jour., J 15, O 26, 1785; N. Y. Gazetteer, N 4, 1785; N. Y. Jour., Jl 6, 1786.

14 ". . . The regents of the university, in the month of May last [see My 5], appointed committees for repairing the edifice in this city now called Columbia College, employing instructors, and the admission of students.—These repairs are in much forwardness, many chambers being already finished for the reception of scholars; instructors are employed, and several students already admitted."—N. Y. Jour., O 14, 1784.

Talmage Hall advertises "that he has erected a genteel stage-waggon with four good Horses, in order to convey ladies and gentlemen and their baggage, in one day and an half, from New-York to Stratford ferry, seventy-four miles, which compleats the whole line from Richmond, in Virginia, to Boston, as there are waggons erected on every other part of the road. It will set out from Cape's Tavern in Broadway, New-York, every Monday and Thursday mornings, precisely at Five o'Clock; breakfast at Montaney's, Fort Washington."—N. Y. Packet, O 15, 1784. See My 23, 1785.

22 The city's petition for a piece of land near Corlear's Hook for a slaughter-house yard is read in the assembly and referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 14. In this petition, the common council states that they "before the late war established a public slaughter house on the Lands of Nicholas Bayard Esq near the fresh water in the Outward . . .; That after the Evacuation of the said City by the british Forces it was found that the cleansing and keeping in order the said slaughter house had been neglected during the war, and that in other respects its situation was found inconvenient and injurious to the Health of the Citizens as well as to the Farmers . . .; That the grand jury for the City and County of New York for these Reasons presented the said Slaughter house as a common Nusance and . . . the slaughter house was by Judgement of Court in due form of Law ordered to be prostrated." They further state that they "have since caused a new Slaughter house to be erected over the water at Corlaer's hook in the East River in the Outward," the soil below high-water mark of the said river being vested in the city. They now petition for the grant of a small lot of land, adjoining the new slaughter-house, formerly belonging to the estate of James de Lancey, whose attainder vested it in the State. As a special plea the petition adds: "In Consideration therefore of the great Injuries and Losses which your Petitioners have sustained in the Course of the late war; of the great Expenses which they have been put to and are daily incurring for the Repair of their Docks Wharfs and publick buildings; of a great and encreasing debt which they owe at Interest; and of the large Remission of Quit rents which they found themselves bound to make in favour of their fellow citizens who had been in exile and were impoverished by the calamities of War," etc.—From the original petition, in metal file No. 10, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1830), I: 96.

26 Benjamin Palmer petitions the assembly for payment for his services in superintending the building of a bridge over Spuyten Duyvel Creek, near Kingsbridge.—Assemb. Jour., 18.

27 Christopher Colles, in a petition to the common council, states that in 1774 (see Ap 22, 1774) he proposed erecting water works for £18,000, and the common council accepted the proposal (see Jl 21, 1774) after inquiring into its practicability. He "erected a Reservoir capable of containing twenty thousand hogsheads of water; dug, walled cover'd & completely finished a well of thirty feet diameter at the inside, from which he pumped by means of a steam engine which he also erected, Two hundred gallons of water, fifty two feet high perpendicular per minute, into the said reservoir" (see Mr 11 and Ap 17, 1776). The work executed cost £3,600, of which amount the city has advanced £3,000, leaving a balance of £600, of which £150 is due "to different artificers for work," and £450 to himself. He now petitions for the sum due him.—From original petition (in metal file No. 10, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read Oct[r] 27[th] 1784." It is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 96. Colles presented a more

1784 urgent petition on July 20, 1785 (q.v.), and was granted some money
Oct. on account. For a proposal to revive the project of supplying the 27 city with water, see Mr 24, 1785.

29 Thomas Ivers and others petition the assembly to be relieved from paying rent for houses in New York during the period of the British occupation; granted.—Assemb. Jour., 27–28.

Nov. John Bailey, in a bill of this date, charges the corporation £10
8 for "making the Iron Work and hanging the fire Bell," and for "one smaller Dº." The bill was audited April 5, 1785.—From the original bill in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room.

10 The Black Friars Society is founded for charitable and social purposes, and holds its meetings at the "Friary," No. 56 Pine St. —Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 116.

11 The name of The New York Packet. And the American Advertiser is changed, in the issue of this date, to Loudon's New-York Packet. —Early Newspapers, II: 426; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 474. See, further, My 16, 1785.

13 The state senate concurs with the assembly in a resolution "that the delegates from this State to Congress be instructed to inform that honorable body, that if Congress should think proper to remove to this city, this State will endeavour to make their residence agreeable; and that proper accommodations for transacting the general business, and for the entertainment of the members can be easily provided."—Assemb. Jour., 44, 50.

14 Bishop Samuel Seabury is consecrated at Aberdeen, by three Scottish bishops, as first bishop of America.—Wilson, Mem. Hist., IV: 625. The Episcopal character of Bishop Seabury was later questioned by Dr. Provoost of Trinity Church.—Dix, A Hist. of the Parish of Trinity Church, II: 104–5. See My 5, 1785.

17 Evert Bancker, Jr., is paid by Trinity Corporation 16s. for "making a plan of the Church lotts Between the Broadway and Church Street, and Veasey & Barclay Street and a representation of the Vineyard and the Commons for Mr Bleecker."—From the original receipted bill in N. Y. H. S.

18 The legislature passes an act for the establishment of a custom-house at New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1784), chap. 6. It was established at the lower end of Wall St.—N. Y. Packet, D 30, 1784. For earlier locations, see 1674; Mr 13, 1745; Jl 14, 1752; My 1, 1769; and for later locations, see Mr 10, 1790; S 1, 1798; My 1, 1799; S 16, 1803; D 2, 1816; My, 1834; My 1, 1842; S 30. 1863. See also L. M. R. K., III: 974.

22 The assembly adopts the following resolution: "Whereas all lands vested in the King of Great Britain, while it [N. Y. State] was a Colony, is now vested in the people of this State. And whereas it is conceived, that certain lands in the City and County of New-York, formerly called and known by the name of the King's Farm, and the King's Garden is now the property of the State, which was by law sequestered for the use and benefit of the Governors of the late Colony, for the time being; and the said Governors respectively were prohibited from leasing or granting the said lands for a longer period than their respective continuance in office. Therefore, Resolved that a Committee be appointed to examine the laws and records of this State, concerning the premises, and to make report thereon."—Assemb. Jour., 66.

25 The first anniversary of Evacuation Day is celebrated. "In the morning the bells of the different churches rung bobs, double bobs, and bob major's. The Thirteen Stripes were triumphantly displayed on the greasy Flag-staff at Fort-George. . . . An elegant Entertainment was prepared at the City Tavern. . . . In the evening the houses of the Whigs were most beautifully illuminated. . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, N 26, 1784 (in N. J. H. S.).

26 The legislature passes a law to amend the act of May 1 (q.v.) which established the "Regents of the University of the State of New York." This names 33 additional Regents, fixes nine as a quorum, authorizes the clergy of each denomination to choose one of their number as a Regent, and advances £2,552 for the use of Columbia College.—Laws of N. Y., 8th sess., chap. 15. For further changes in the law, see Ap 13, 1787.

" The legislature passes a resolution "That the Monument by the United States in Congress assembled ordered to be erected to the Memory of Major General Montgomery [see A. Ja 25, 1776], be erected in the City of New York at such particular Place as the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the said City in Common Council convened shall appoint."—From MS. copy in city clerk's record-room; Assembly Jour., 8th sess., 76; and Votes and Proceedings of the Senate, Nov. 26. See also 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 641–51, and Mr 21, 1787.

Nov. 26 The legislature passes "An Act to compel the Payment of the Arrears of Taxes, for enforcing the Payment of Fines and Amerciaments," etc. It was printed (4pp. folio) in New York by Holt, the state printer. One of these handbills is preserved in N. Y. P. L.

" "Agricola," writing to the proprietor of the Packet, recalls "a 29 plan for embellishing and planting the Fields, which was proposed about fifteen years ago." He suggests that Mr. Loudon start a subscription "to plant and fence in next spring that triangular spot." He also suggests that it be named "Washington's Mall," and "that in the middle a handsome obelisk should be erected, with a sun dial on one side, and whatever other inscription the public might think proper on the other." He adds: "Every well-policed and governed town should be kept clean, . . . have public fountains of good and wholesome water, and several public walks."—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, N 29, 1784.

Dec. The North Dutch Church is again opened for service.
— "On account of the impoverishing influence of the war, and the expenses that were otherwise necessarily incurred, the Middle Church was suffered to remain in its condition, laid waste for the present."—De Witt, Discourse, 42. See 1788. For the opening of the Middle Dutch Church, see Jl 4, 1790.

2 In accordance with the resolution of the common council of Sept. 11 (q.v.), the mayor submits to the board the draft of an address from the corporation of the city to Gen. Washington. This is approved and entered in the minutes, with the draft of a certificate of his freedom of the city. It is ordered that they be engrossed and presented by the mayor to Washington at Philadelphia.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 100–2. Instead, they were sent to him at Mount Vernon.—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, My 9, 1784. For his reply, see My 2, 1785.

3 The common council resolves "that certain Lots belonging to this Corporation situate near the Corporation Wharf at North River be sold at publick Vendue to the highest Bidder."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 103–4, 105. Eight of these lots "near the bear [Hudson] Market" were sold on February 24, 1785, for £2,879:8. —Ibid., I: 118, 123–24.

7 The title of The New-York Gazetteer, and Country Journal (see Jl 27) is shortened to The New-York Gazetteer; the paper is made an eight-page quarto, with page numbers, and a new volume numbering is adopted.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431; Early Newspapers, II: 423. See Mr 8, 1785.

14 The "Marquis de la Fayette" (see Ag 4) arrives in New York from Trenton with Monsieur de Caraman (a Knight of Malta and captain of dragoons) and Monsieur de Grandchain (captain of the frigate "La Nymphe," now in the harbour). Lafayette and De Caraman, after a tour of the United States, are returning to France.—Ind. Jour., D 18, 1784. See also D 21.

" A committee reports to the Regents that the annual income of Columbia College is about £1,000. It recommends the establishment of various professorships in the four faculties of arts, medicine, law, and divinity, and the appointment of a president, a secretary, and a librarian.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 63–64. The president was chosen on My 21, 1787 (q.v.).

15 The commissioners of forfeiture convey to Marinus Willett property on Willett St., bounded south by Grand, and north by Bullock (Broome) St., extending half way through the block to Sheriff St.—Liber Deeds, CXCII: 563. It was still in possession of Willett in 1798; although, on July 1, 1796, when advertised for rent, it was described as "The House and Lot at Corlear's Hook called Cedar-Grove, and lately occupied by Col. Willet."—Am. Minerva, Jl 1, 1796. See also L. M. R. K., III: 1002 (Willett St.).

16 In a letter to the editor, Mr. Loudon, a "Citizen" writes the following "retrospective view of the city and the circumstances attending it for this nine years past." He observes, among other things: "It is well known that our fears and apprehensions of oppression, and our struggles against the torrent of tyranny began in 1774, and before; our minds were distracted between hope and despair, embarrassments accumulated, and the contemplation of our future situation and that of our posterity, engrossed all our attention; and of course, as is always the case, the lesser objects gave way to the greater; laws and government were in a manner suspended. Some confusion took place, and from this period the police of the city was neglected. . . . At the approach of the British army in 1776, almost every friend of his country left the 1784 Dec. 16 city. . . . The troops of the King of England possessed themselves of the city, and were well inclined to do every ill; . . . the profligacy of their manners and the nature of the warfare, emboldened them to the commission of every crime, abuse, cruelty, rapine and murder. . . . In a few months the most elegant part of the city was laid in ashes, and what was formerly an ornament now appears a pile of ruins. Dirt, filth, and stench filled the houses and streets; there was daily exercised a shameful and wanton abuse of the houses and property of the exiled, which was meanly and spitefully increased . . .; the quays, wharfs and streets were suffered to go to ruin for eight long years, the morals of the remaining youth, and the manners of the grown-up, were made worse if not ruined by an intercourse with the debauched young men of that army; the city revenue was dissipated, and turned to private account, the places of worship and other public edifices, were converted into goals and hospitals; the dead were not suffered to rest in their graves, the burying yards were laid open, and public roads made through them. Close on the eve of an approaching winter, with an heterogeneous set of inhabitants, composed of almost ruined exiles, disbanded soldiery, mixed foreigners, disaffected tories, and the refuse of a British army, we took possession of a ruined city. Under these circumstances, much was to be done, much was expected, and not only the eyes of our sister-states were turned towards us, but those of Europe were fixed upon us. The ground was to be tread with caution; many, important and various were the objects; almost unsurmountable were the difficulties, uninformed by precedent or example, coolness, firmness, depth of judgment, profound knowledge in all laws and politics were necessary to guide the deliberations; charters were to be changed, laws altered and assimilated to our new constitution, and made consistent with the fundamental principles of our new Empire, without infringing the rights of the citizen; good order and regularity were to take the place of anarchy and confusion, the city was to be cleansed of its filth, lighted, and paved, rubbish and ruins removed, public buildings repaired, the port and ferries regulated; all this and much more was to be done, without a shilling revenue, or scarcely means to procure it. . . . Let any man of observation and candor go through the city, view it in its present situation, and compare it with what it was when we took possession of it, and when he considers the slender means hitherto in the city's power, he will pay that tribute of applause the magistrates so richly deserve; let him attend the markets, and be pleased at the good order maintained; let him visit the goal, poor-house and bridewell, and be perfectly satisfied with the neatness and internal economy."—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, D 16, 1784.

21 Lafayette embarks on the "Nymphe's" barge at the Whitehall stairs. He was conducted thither by Gov. Clinton, Generals Green, Webb, and Lamb, the consul of France, Col. Fish, many other brother officers, "and a vast concourse of citizens." As the barge passed the Battery, he was saluted with thirteen guns. Some little time after he stepped aboard, the frigate saluted the American flag with a Continental salute, which was returned by the artillery of the fort.—Ind. Jour., D 22, 1784.

" Aaron Burr has removed from No. 3 Wall St. to a white house (No. 10) at the corner of Nassau and Little Queen Sts.—N. Y. Gazetteer, D 21, 1784.

22 Arguments in favour of New York, "as a place most happily suited to the reception of Congress," are published in The Ind. Jour. of this date.

24 Congress, in session at Trenton, after debating the subject of the permanent site of buildings for use of the federal government, stands adjourned to meet in the City of New York on Jan. 11 next, where the sessions are to be held "until the buildings aforesaid shall be ready for their reception."—Jour. of Cong. (ed. of 1801), X: 18–23; descrip. of Frontispiece I, III: 538. See F 11, 1785.

27 The mayor informs the common council that congress has resolved (see D 24) to meet in New York on January 11; he refers also to an invitation given to congress by the legislature (see N 13), and indicates the propriety of offering congress "such Parts of the City Hall or other public Buildings belonging to this Corporation as they should deem necessary & best suited for their accommodation." It is resolved to make such offer, and that the mayor be requested to communicate this resolution to the president of congress. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 107–8; descrip. of Frontispiece I, III: 538. See Ja 14, 1785.

28 Emery and Newman, from London, advertise that they "have taken a store at No. 16, on the Dock, near the Fly-market, where they propose forthwith to establish a Shot Manufactory, Also the Plumbing Business." Among the articles mentioned for sale are: "Water Pipes, with ornamented cisterns;" "Water Closets for ships, and from top to bottom of a house, with pipes for conveying water," also "Leaden pumps," etc.—N. Y. Gazetteer, D 28, 1784. Dec. 28

30 "Mt. Pleasant," formerly called "Vauxhall" (see Je 14, O 25, D 27, 1773), is advertised for sale. A picture of it is shown. It is a three-story house, with the longest assembly-room in the city. The garden contains more than 20 lots of ground.—N. Y. Packet, D 30, 1784. It was this house which was occupied by Maj. James of the Royal Regiment of Artillery when it was attacked and its contents destroyed by the Sons of Liberty on Nov. 1, 1765 (q. v.). See Je 11, 1789.

1785

— Luigi Castiglioni, an Italian traveler, who was in New York from 1785 to 1787, later published an account in Italian of his visit to the United States, which contained the following statements with reference to this city: "In the Hall of Congress are the portraits of Louis XVI and of the Queen, his wife, which were presented by the King to the United States.

". . . Every house has a number; the streets are paved with stones, and have their names upon the angles, and are lighted up at night.

"For the convenience of merchants there is a coffee-house, which serves instead of an exchange, where they take all the gazettes of the country, London and Paris, and carefully register the vessels that enter or leave the port. . . .

"The inhabitants are about twenty-two thousand, and although in the new Legislature there is no distinction, they may nevertheless be divided into four classes. . . ." These are described, the first being those possessed of "manners."—From Viaggio negli Stati Unite dell' America Settentrionale fatto negli anni 1785, 1786, e 1787 da Luigi Castiglioni (1790), I: 175–83. Portions of this work were published, in translation, in the N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 8, 1829, and the editor made the following interesting observation regarding the portraits of Louis XVI and his queen: "These paintings, executed, we understand, by Wurtmuller, a painter of merited distinction continued to ornament the Senate Chamber in the Capital [after its removal to Washington] till the British troops fired the building during the late war [of 1812]. The portrait of Marie Antoinette was entirely consumed, but that of Louis XVI was but partially injured. It was removed into a lumber-room in the General Post Office, and afterwards disappeared, it is said, rather mysteriously. These portraits were full length, and executed in a most masterly style."

— About this year, the Dyckman house, at the corner of Broadway and 204th St., was built. It was presented to the city in 1915. For a history and description of the house, see 21*st Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 197–201; also 22*d Ann. Rep.* (1917), 459–84.

— A "Plan of the Commons belonging to New York," by Casimir Th. Goerck, C. S., bears this date. This early survey of the Commons was evidently the basis of the same surveyor's well-known "Map of the Common Lands," dated March 1, 1796, and reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 9-b. The earlier survey is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 9-a.

— In this year, Alexander Anderson made a small sketch of Lispenard's Meadows from a point in Broadway which was afterwards the site of the St. Nicholas Hotel. The original, which was reproduced and described in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), opp. p. 442, is now in the author's collection.

— In the spring of this year, an "Associate Presbyterian Church," commonly called the "Seceders' Church," the first of the name, was formed by the Rev. Thomas Beveridge.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches of N. Y., 212. See 1787.

— In this year, Christopher Colles memorialized the legislature on the subject of the establishment of a canal to connect the Mohawk with the Hudson. This was the beginning of the enterprise which culminated in the opening of the Erie Canal in 1826.—Progress of N. Y. in a Century, by Stevens (1876), 51.

— At this time, Robert Fulton was a miniature painter, residing at the corner of Walnut and Second Sts., Philadelphia.—City Directory, Phila., 1785.

— Between 1757 and 1785, Trinity Corporation granted at least

1785 — 30 leases of various pieces of their property. These 30 indentures are preserved in the N. Y. H. S.

Jan. 3 John Jay, who is about to build a house "on the East side of Broadway near Verlettenbergh," writes to Mayor Duane asking if the corporation intend to lower the street so as to "render the streets leading from it to the River practicable for Carriages." He states that the proprietors of lots in Broadway, "from near the Church to the bowling green," are especially interested in the subject.—From the original letter, in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room. The common council orders that the letter be taken into consideration with the report of the commissioners for regulating streets in the burnt part of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 109.

6 Isaac Sears petitions the common council "relative to his Right to part of the Ground whereon the Bridewell is erected." It is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 108. The petition was reported favourably on June 20 (q. v.). He acquired his interest in this property on Feb. 3, 1770 (q. v.), and erected the fifth liberty-pole there.

7 Trinity vestry adopts a design for "a house suitable for the Rector," and resolves "that measures be forthwith taken for carrying the same into execution," and proposals published in the newspapers.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

8 The president of congress (Richard Henry Lee) and several members "of that august body" enter New York "under a discharge of cannon." They are met at Whitehall by Gov. Clinton and other gentlemen, and, "after the usual ceremony," are conducted to the governour's residence in Queen St.—N. J. Gaz. (Trenton), Ja 17, 1785. The governour's residence was opposite 234 Queen St., between King St. and the Fly Market.—N. Y. Jour. & State Gaz., Ja 13, 1785 (in archives of Am. Institute, New York). For view of the house, see Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 446.

10 John Moore (see Ap 19, 1776), who was employed "in Building the New Bridewell and Procured all the Materiels therefor in the Mason way By Order of the Honorable the Corporation" previous to "the Late war," petitions the common council for payment.—From the original petition in city clerk's record-room. On Jan. 29, this petition was referred to the committee of accounts, and, on March 7, payment of £210:12:3 was ordered to Moore "for Mason Work & Labour on Building the Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 112, 120.

11 Congress meets, "agreeable to their appointment," in the senate-chamber in the city hall. On Jan. 13, six states were represented, and other members were daily expected "to complete the house, when they will proceed to business." No business was transacted until Jan. 17, except passing on the credentials of members.—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, Ja 13, 1785; Jour. of Congress (ed. of 1801), X: 25–26; M. C. C. (MS.), VIII: 216.

14 Mayor Duane communicates to congress the resolution of the common council of Dec. 27, 1784 (q. v.), which offered congress "such parts of the city-hall, or other public buildings . . . as Congress shall deem necessary. . . ." On Jan. 18, congress passed a resolution expressing their "just sense of the attention" which the common council "have manifested to the interest of the federal union, in the offer they have made of such of the public buildings in the city as may be necessary for the transaction of public business; and [stating] that they accept the several apartments in the city-hall, the whole of which (except the court and jury rooms) will be necessary for the session of Congress, and the accommodation of their officers."—Jour. of Cong. (1801 ed.), X: 26; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 113–14; descrip. of Frontispiece I, III: 538.

17 Richard Henry Lee, president of congress, writes from New York to Thomas Lee Shippen: ". . . She [his cousin, Peggy Livingston] promises to come to see me often when I get in the [congressional] Presidents House, which will be this week, having hired Mrs [Walter] Franklins house in the street where little Peggy lives—It is a very elegant House, and provided with every accommodation. . . ."—The Letters of Richard Henry Lee (1914), II: 322. He had not yet moved in on Jan. 20.—Ibid., II: 324. The Franklin house, at No. 3 Cherry St., became Washington's residence when he was inaugurated president.—L. M. R. K., III: 949.

19 The Marine Society provides "one of the most elegant entertainments, given in this city" to Richard Henry Lee and all the members of congress in town at this time. Mayor Duane and a number of other gentlemen of distinction are present.—N. J. Gaz. (Trenton), F 7, 1785.

Jan. 20 Samuel Ellis, of No. 1 Greenwich St., "at the North River, near the Bear Market," advertises for sale "that pleasant situated Island, called Oyster [now Ellis] Island, lying in York Bay, near Powles Hook."—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, Ja 20, 1785.

A summary of references in the Chronology and elsewhere to this island yields the following information respecting its history and various names. Its aboriginal name, as given by Schoolcraft, was "Kioshk," or Gull Island. Schoolcraft's names and interpretations, however, are not always trustworthy. A court record of Dec. 6, 1661 (q. v., and Pl. 50, Vol. I), calls it "Oyster Island." There were three so-called "Oyster Islands,"—Bedlow's, Ellis, and a small island near them, now a submerged rock.—See Ap 20, 1676, Addenda, Vol. IV, and cross-references there cited.

In the first statute to define the territory of New York County, passed Nov. 1, 1683 (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 121), the island which we know as Ellis Island was not included: "The Citty & County of New York, to containe all the Island commonly called Manhattans Island, Mannings [Blackwell's] Island, and the two Barne [Randell's and Ward's] Islands, the Citty to bee called as itt is, New York, and the Islands above specifyed the County thereof."

Soon after, this island was known as Dyre's Island. William Dyre and Mary, his wife, by deed dated April 23, 1686, conveyed to Thomas Lloyd certain lands "without the North Gate of the City of New York" (see Ap 23, 1686, Addenda, Vol. IV), "And alsoe A certaine Island Scituate and lyeing in Hudsons River to the Westward of Manhattans or Yorke Island And north of Bedloes Island Comonly called or Knowne by the name of Dyre's Island or Oyster Island. Containing by Estimation about Six acres be the same more or less."—Liber Deeds, XIII: 202.

The second statute to define the county of New York, passed Oct. 1, 1691 (q. v., and Col. Laws N. Y., I: 267), refers to it thus: "The Citty and County of New Yorke to containe all the Island comonly called Manhattans Island Mannings Island [Blackwell's] the two Barne Islands [Randell's and Ward's] and the three Oyster Islands [vide supra] Manhattans Island to be called the City of New Yorke and the rest of the Islands the county."

During the Revolution, it bore the name "Bucking Island."—See O 19, 1776, citing the Howe War Plan, Southier's Map, etc. The meaning of this name has not been discovered during the present researches, nor has the name been found in the text of contemporary letters and journals. It was used, however, not only on contemporary maps, but also long after the name Ellis Island became familiar. It appears thus in the Revised Statutes of the State of New York, chap. 2 (2d ed., 1869), V: 310, wherein New York County is defined as follows: "The County of New-York shall contain the islands called Manhattan's Island, Great Barn [Ward's] Island, Little Barn [Randell's] Island, Manning's [Blackwell's] Island, Nutten [Governor's] Island, Bedlow's Island, Bucking [Ellis] Island, and the Oyster Islands [probably error for Island, there being only three Oyster Islands of record, two of these being Bedlows and Ellis Islands,—vide supra]; and all the land under water within the following bounds: beginning at Spyten Duyvel Creek . . . to the East river or Sound . . . then across the North river so as to include Nutten Island, Bedlow's Island, Bucking Island, and the Oyster Island, to the West bounds of the state. . . ." For further references to these boundaries, see Hoffman's Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of New York (1853), Appendix, pp. xix–xxi.

Although the island belonged to Samuel Ellis prior to 1785, as appears by the advertisement first mentioned, in which he offers it for sale, its ownership from 1686, when William Dyre conveyed it to Thomas Lloyd (vide supra), to 1785, when owned by Ellis, has not been successfully traced in the present research.

The earliest mention found of Samuel Ellis is in a copy of a "Pole List for an Election for Assembly," dated Feb., 1761, printed in Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 319. No wills or letters of administration appear of record either here or in New Jersey, to aid in preparing his genealogy or his title to Ellis Island prior to 1785. In 1784, he was a butcher of Manhattan.—DeVoe, Market Book, 315–16. At the time of his death, in 1794, he still owned the island. His will, dated July 4, 1794, probated July 12, 1794, and recorded June 13, 1810, in Liber Wills, XLI: 235 (N. Y. County), contains the following provisions (selected), transcribed from an exemplified copy recorded March 12, 1831, in Liber Wills, D: 131, in Hackensack, Bergen Co., N. J.:

"Item. I do give and bequeath unto Catherine Westervelt, the 1785 Jan. 20 wife of Daniel Daniel [sic] Westervelt of the City of New York, Weaver, the use rents issues and profits of all those four certain lots of ground now held by me by lease from the Corporation of the Episcopal Church in the City of New York . . . [two lots on Greenwich St., and two on Second St., Manhattan, are here described].

"Item. I do give and bequeath unto the child that Catherine Westervelt is now pregnant with, should it be a son, Oyster Island, commonly known by the name of Ellis Island, with all the buildings and Improvements thereon. Should it prove a daughter, then in that case, she comes with the rest of the children for an equal proportion of the above mentioned Lots left to the children of the said Catherine Westervelt. It is my wish that the boy may be baptised by the name of Samuel Ellis. . . ." The child of Catherine Westervelt was a son, who, however, did not live long. Letters of administration were issued to Catherine, dated March 25, 1800, and recorded in Letters of Admin., VI: 238 (N. Y. County), referring to her as the mother of Samuel Ellis, an infant who died possessed of property.

There is also a deed, made by Samuel Ellis Ryerson (the son of Samuel's daughter, Elizabeth Ellis Ryerson) and Rachel, his wife, to John A. Berry, dated Dec. 24, 1806, and recorded for Joseph Strong, April 1, 1820, in Liber Deeds, CXLV: 432, in which the consideration is $3,200 for the island and for property on Manhattan. This recites that, as Samuel Ellis, by his will, left Oyster Island ("commonly known by the name of Ellis Island") to the child of Catherine Westervelt, etc.; that the child was a son, and became seized of the island, but died before he came of age, whereby the island went to the surviving children of Samuel, namely Elizabeth Ellis Ryerson and Rachel Ellis Cooder (later Kingsland). The deed conveys "All that certain Island commonly known by the name of Oyster Island, situate lying and being in Hudsons River or the Bay of New York opposite to the City of New York and between the said City and the Bergen Shore and near to a certain Island called Bedlow [sic] Island."

On Feb. 15, 1800 (q. v.), the legislature ceded Ellis Island (called "Oyster Island" in the act), with Bedlow's and Governor's Islands, to the United States.

The name "Ellis I" is found on Simeon de Witt's map of the State of New York (1802); on the "Atlas of New York" of 1838, on David H. Burr's map of 1839, etc.

" In spite of the state law prohibiting the return of Tories, several have entered the city. Last week, one Peter Totten, who had been an officer in the militia under the British, and had retired to Nova Scotia, was seized in the streets "by a spirited citizen," and released only on condition that he leave town in five minutes. He complied, thereby avoiding the penalty of the law, which was perpetual imprisonment.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 20, 1785.

24 Christopher Colles advertises a course of evening lectures in physics at "the Court Room, in the State House."—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, Ja 24, 1785.

27 The "Civil Officers under Congress" are published, as follows: Charles Thomson, secretary of congress; Benjamin Banks, assistant; John Jay, minister for foreign affairs; Henry Remsen, Jr., deputy; Joseph Carleton, secretary in the department of war; James Milligan, comptroller of the treasury; Michael Hillegas, treasurer; Joseph Nourse, register, and John D. Mercier, auditor of accounts; Rev. Mr. Jons and Rev. Mr. Provoost, chaplains; John Dunlap, printer; Robert Patton, messenger; Matthew Harrison, private secretary to the president.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 27, 1785.

" Henry Rutgers advertises his house at Corlear's Hook for sale.—N. Y. Jour., Ja 27, 1785. See Pls. 109-a and b, Vol. III.

29 Benjamin Benson petitions the common council for a lease of "about 15 or 20 acres of the Common Lands North of the Saw Kill."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 112.

Feb. 3 The Chamber of Commerce holds a banquet in the Merchant's Coffee House in honour of Washington and the members of congress.—N. Y. Packet, F 7, 1785.

" Several tenements and lots in Bowry-Lane are advertised for sale, including: "1. Eight Lots of Ground, at the south corner of St. Nicholas-street, whereon stand the snuff-mill and the tenements occupied by Oliver Hobbs and Herman Chapell, together with the house in which said Hobbs lives.

"2. Those ten Lots of Ground with the improvements north of where the windmill lately stood; occupied by Mr. Wilmot. . . ." —N. Y. Jour., F 3, 1785 (in archives of Am. Institute, New York).

Feb. 3 An "Air Balloon, thirty feet high, to which will be affixed a gallery and boat," is being constructed at an academy in New York. The expense, amounting to about $500, will be met by subscriptions.—N. J. Gaz., F 21.

7 It is resolved by congress, in session at New York, "That Joseph Carleton, secretary in the war-office be, and he is hereby directed to remove the books and papers belonging to that office, to this city, as soon as the measure can be effected.

"That the post-master-general be directed to remove on or before the 21st of March next; and that the officers of the several departments of the treasury now at Philadelphia, be directed to remove on or before the first of May next, the books and papers of their respective offices to this city."—Jour. of Congress (1801 ed.), X: 33.

10 & 11 Congress appoints Gen. Schuyler, Gen. Dickinson, and Robert Morris "Commissioners, under the Ordinance passed at Trenton in December last, for laying out the Federal Town and erecting the Federal Buildings."—Ind. Jour., F 26, 1785.

12 Trinity vestry takes into consideration "the late alarming proceedings of the House of Assembly of this State respecting the title of this Corporation to the Church farm and Trinity Church burying ground formerly called the Kings farm and Garden." A resolution is passed "That the Minutes of the House of Assembly of the 7th instant relative to the title of the Church Estate be referred to a Committee and that they be directed to prepare a Remonstrance to the Honble the House of Assembly against the dangerous Precedent of the Legislative authority passing an opinion, in cases of property, which by the Constitution of this State, can only be cognizable in a Court of Law, and praying to Shew Cause why the same should not appear on their minutes."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See F 24.

14 Richard Henry Lee writes from New York to Patrick Henry, governour of Virginia: ". . . Both countries [Great Britain and the United States] have been to blame [since the restoration of peace], and transgressions against the terms of peace were on each side coeval, so that whilst we charged them with removing the slaves from New York, they pointed to the violence with which their friends were every where treated, with the detention of their debts, and with actions here brought against those who possessed houses in this city whilst it was in their power by the fortune of war. . . ."—Letters of Richard Henry Lee, II: 333.

17 The name of The New-York Journal, and State Gazette (see Mr 18, 1784) is changed to The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448. See Mr 3.

18 Extracts from the proceedings of the "Society for promoting the manumission of Slaves," recently organized, are published to inform the public regarding the text of its constitution, the names of officers (elected on Feb. 10), etc. John Jay is president.—N. Y. Gazetteer, F 18, 1785 (in N. J. H. S.). The first quarterly meeting was scheduled for May 12.—N. Y. Gazetteer, My 10, 1785 (bound in same volume). See also The Picture of N. Y. (1807), 113.

23 William Morton and Samuel Horner change their paper (see Ap, 1783) from a semi-weekly to a daily. They alter the title to The New York Morning Post, and Daily Advertiser.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 464. This was the first daily newspaper in New York. For the first New York paper established as a daily, see Mr 1.

24 The corporation of Trinity Church presents a petition to the senate, asking to be permitted to be heard in opposition to the report of a committee of the assembly, which, on Feb. 7, declared that the title to the land formerly known as the King's Farm and Garden "was of right, before the revolution, vested in the King of Great Britain, and now belongs to, and is of right vested in, the people of this state." At the same time the corporation presents a memorial and remonstrance to the assembly, stating briefly Trinity's title to this land, the ground of the objection being that the assembly committee made its report without consulting the trustees of Trinity corporation on the subject.—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, F 28, 1785. An unsigned tract of 34 pages in reply to the remonstrance was published the same year. It is entitled Some Remarks on the Memorial, etc., and is addressed to the assembly. It is reprinted in full in the N. Y. H. S. Collections (1870), 341–72.

25 John Adams is appointed minister to England.—Winsor, VII: 233.

Mr 1 Francis Childs begins the publication of The New-York Daily

1785 Advertiser.—Early Newspapers, II: 417. Cf. Brigham, A. A. S.
Mr 1 Proc. (1917), 396–97. See S 20.

– 3 From this date until June 23 (q.v.), Eleazer Oswald published The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser (see F 17, 1785) for Elizabeth Holt.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448.

8 Burying the dead in vaults beneath either of the Presbyterian churches (the Wall St. Church and the Brick Church) is forbidden by the church authorities of this denomination.—Proc. of the Trustees, First Presbyterian Church.

" The New-York Gazetteer (see D 7, 1784) becomes The New-York Gazetteer, and the Country Journal.—Early Newspapers, II: 423; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 431–32. See Ag 14, 1786.

10 Jefferson is appointed minister to France.—Winsor, VII: 233, and authorities there cited. Windsor says (p. 235) that "Jefferson's career in France was characteristic. He lost no opportunity to inculcate his principles of free trade. . . ." His activities as a whole, as outlined by Winsor, indicate a purpose to establish international good will on a basis of practical reciprocity in physical benefits. Among the specific things mentioned, "He conferred with the political mentors of the coming French Revolution, and wrote to Jay to induce the shipment of American flour for the starving Parisians."

11 Trinity vestry passes a resolution "That M^r Duane one of the Church Wardens be authorized to purchase of M^r John Leake his large dwelling house and lot of ground at the Corner of Nassau and Fair Streets for the use of this Corporation, . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It also resolves "That the Committee of repairs be directed to examine the Cisterns and Belfrey of S^t Pauls Chappel and that they cause such repairs to be made as they may think necessary."—Trin. Min. (MS.). On May 13, the committee reported that the cisterns on the roof of St. Paul's "should be boarded or shingled in the same mannner as the rest of the rooff."—Ibid.

16 The schools in the city hall (see Ap 30, 1784) "greatly disturb Congress," and the common council orders that Mr. Riggs and Mr. Grahams remove their school immediately.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 124.

24 Samuel Ogden, in a petition to the common council, states that "the late War hath totally ruined, The Fire Enjine, and Water Works, which were errected for the purpose of Supplying this City with Water" (see Ap 17, 1776). He offers, at the expense of himself and his associates, to "erect and Establish a Fire Enjine, at or near the Place where the former one was Built, which shall supply the Resorvoir with 144,000 Gallons of Water per day," and to conduct the water in pipes through the streets, at such compensation as may be agreed upon.—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read April 5^th 1785 & committed to Ald. Broome Ald. Nielson Mr. Phoenix;" see also M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 129. The committee made a report on Feb. 6, 1786 (q.v.).

27 "The French embassy was transferred to New York, and with it the chaplain and his entire chapel furnishings. On the 27th of March, 1785, Barbè Marbois wrote: . . . 'The establishment of the Legation chapel at New York will give the Catholics of that city all the spiritual aid that they can desire.'"—Shea, Life and Times of the Most Rev. John Carroll, 266; Eccles. Rec., III: 1451. See, further, Ap 30.

29 Mr. Jay, the secretary for foreign affairs, having accepted for his use as an office "the Room above the Common Council Chamber, instead of the said Chamber," the board directs that it be fitted up agreeable to his directions.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 127. It appears doubtful whether Mr. Jay occupied quarters in the city hall.—See the New York directories, and extracts from his journal, cited in Mag. Am. Hist., June, 1880, p. 466.

" The commissioners for laying out the streets in the burnt part of the city report to the common council their proposed plan of alterations. It is approved by the board so far as it relates to the regulation of Broadway, New Street, and Verlettenberg Street with its continuation to the North River. This decision was repealed on May 20, 1785.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 126–27, 142. See also Mr 3, 1784.

" The ferries from Whitehall to Staten Island and Elizabethtown Point having been put up separately for sale at public vendue, Gosen Ryerson is awarded the ferry to Staten Island for three years at £20 a year with stated conditions; the one to Elizabethtown Point goes to Thomas Twigley for the same term at £60 per annum.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 125–26; see also L. M. R. K., III: 943–44; Pl. 174, Vol. III. Mar. 29

A ship intended for the London trade, named the "Governor Clinton," the property of John Franklin, is launched at the shipyards on the East River.—N. J. Gaz. (Trenton), Ap 18, 1785. Apr. 1

On recommendation of a congressional committee, to which had been referred a memorial of "Samuel Frauncis," congress resolves: "That the secretary of Congress take a lease from Samuel Frauncis for his house, now occupied by the public, for the term of two years, at the rate of eight hundred and twelve dollars, and one half of a dollar a year. [Cf. Ap 23.] 4

"That a warrant be drawn in favor of the said Samuel Frauncis, for the sum of sixteen hundred and twenty-five dollars, on account of the said rent, and to discharge a mortgage on said house.

"That in consideration of the singular services of the said Samuel Frauncis, and of his advances to the American prisoners, the sum of two thousand dollars be paid to the said Samuel Frauncis, on account of the loan office certificates in his hands, and that they be delivered up and cancelled."—Jour. of Cong. (printed by Dunlap, 1785), X: 107. See, further, Ag 25, 1785; Mr 14, 1786. Fraunces himself had not yet returned to New York as a tavern-keeper.—See My 8, 1788. See also descrip. of Pl. 167-b, III: 850.

A committee advises the Regents to publish a plan of the tuition and discipline in Columbia College and an address to the public "explanatory of their Institution, representing the losses of Columbia College and the deranged state of its funds, and requesting the aid of the public by voluntary subscriptions to carry their plan into full execution." It also recommends an application to the legislature for a grant of aid "by a tax on marriage licenses or any other mode they may think proper."—Hist. of Columbia Univ. 1754–1904, 64–65. The plan of tuition and discipline was published as The Statutes of Columbia College in N. Y. (1785). "

The legislature passes an act granting to Isaac Van Wyck and others the sole right of running a stage between New York and Albany on the east side of the Hudson River. Two stages are to be provided, for passengers and baggage, each stage to proceed at least once every week from the respective cities.—Laws of N. Y. (1785), chap. 52. See Ap 17. "

It is ordered by the common council that the ground in the rear of the bridewell be used for a garden for the bridewell and almshouse, and that the stables and other buildings there be removed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 128. 5

The legislature passes "An Act to appoint the place of holding the Supreme Court of Judicature of this State, in future, and to prolong the terms thereof, and for other purposes therein mentioned." Certain times are designated when terms of court are to be held in New York and Albany respectively. The clerk's office is to be held in New York, and a deputy clerk is to be appointed for Albany. Court documents are to be removed every six months to New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1785), chap. 61. 7

John Franklin and other inhabitants of Montgomerie Ward and the Out Ward petition that several sunken lots in "the Meadows," which are filled with standing water, may be raised, as they are a menace to health. The owners are required to fill these lots, and cause the streets in front of them to be paved. 15

The common council also orders that the aldermen and assistants of these wards be a committee to regulate Roosevelt, James, Catharine, and Rutgers Sts.—M. C. C. (1784-1831), I: 132–33.

The common council appoints a committee to estimate the expense of widening Greenwich St., "to the Southw^d of M^r Mesier's . . . to the flat Rock at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 133. An expense of £7,000 was reported on April 20.—Ibid., I: 134. "

Isaac van Wyck, Talmage Hall, and John Kennedy advertise that, in addition to the Boston stage (see O 15, 1784), they have "erected Genteel Stage Waggons" to run twice a week from New York to Albany (see Ap 4). "They will leave Cape's tavern, New-York, and Lewis's in Albany, Monday and Thursday Mornings, precisely at five o'clock, and return Wednesdays and Saturdays." They believe their exertions to repair the roads, the "elegance of their waggons and horses, and the pains taking to establish good houses of entertainment, with the very moderate price of four pence . . . per mile, for each passenger who shall be allowed to carry 14 lb. of baggage, will induce the public to give every encouragement possible to their undertaking."—N. Y. Packet, Ap 17, 1785. See, further, Je 23. 17

1785 Apr. 18 Richard Henry Lee writes from New York to George Washington: ". . . War or peace in Europe, hangs yet in doubtful balance; both parties arming with assiduity, and nothing determined upon. Mr. John Adams, is sent plenipotentiary to the court of London, and Mr. Jefferson is the minister at Versailles, Dr. Franklin having leave, at his own request, to retire." . . .—Letters of Richard Henry Lee, II: 349.

20 A committee of the common council having reported on July 13 that "a Powder Magazine can conveniently & safely be placed on the Corporation Ground at Inchlam Bergh to the West of the middle Road & to the north of the Farm of the late Benjamin Nicoll Esq^r," it is ordered that it be erected there, and a committee is appointed to report a plan for the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 153, 159. By December the building was ready for use.—See O 5 and 14, D 14 and 21.

23 "Samuel Fraunces, late of the City of New York, innkeeper, but at present of the County of Monmouth, New Jersey, farmer, and Elizabeth his wife," sell Fraunces Tavern to "George Powers, butcher, of Brooklyn" for £1,950.—Liber Deeds, XLII: 414.

The later transfers of the property were as follows: George Powers sold it to Dr. Nicholas Romayne, April 30, 1795, for £2,200.—Ibid., LIV: 144. Dr. Romayne in turn sold it to John S. Moore, June 24, 1800, for $6,250.—Ibid., LIX: 68. He kept it only a short time, selling it June 22, 1801, to Thomas Gardner, for $7,500.—Ibid., LX: 439. It was then described as bounded "north by Pearl street, formerly Dock street." In the division of the estate of Thomas Gardner, it fell to his son John Gardner. He left two daughters, Mrs. Malvina Kettletas, and Mrs. Jane McCarthy. In the division of estate it fell to the latter, who afterward married Count de Dion."—Pelletreau, Early N. Y. Houses, 112–13; L. M. R. K., III: 978; Historic Buildings now standing in N. Y. erected prior to 1800, 20. See, further, Ja 6, 1789.

28 A newspaper of the day remarks, in a humorous article, "We hear the Town of Rockaway [Long Island] was illuminated a few Evenings ago, on receiving the news that the Seat of Government was to be removed to that Place next Session. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ap 28, 1785.

30 A letter is read in the common council from Mr. St. John, "Consul of his most Christian Majesty the King of France & Navarre," requesting that the Roman Catholics of the city may be permitted to meet in the exchange until their church can be finished. It is ordered that he be informed that the exchange was injured during the war, and cannot sustain any great weight. The assembly lately conceived they were in so much danger in two instances "when a concourse of people were collected" that they removed to another place for security. It is believed "these Facts will probably render the Exchange ineligible to the Roman Catholic Assembly as a Place of public Worship And that M^r Mayor be requested to represent the same to his most Christian Majesty's Consul."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 137.

A leading historian of the Catholic Church relates the following sequel of this incident: "The one to whom the Catholics of the great city owe most is Hector St. John de Crêvecoeur, Consul-General of France. . . . In their name he applied in April 1785, to the city authorities for the use of the Exchange on Broad Street, a building then entirely unoccupied; but the Common Council refused to permit the Catholics to assemble there on Sunday. St. John de Crêvecoeur resented the act as an indignity to himself and the Catholic body. Roused by him, the Catholics of New York resolved to secure ground and erect a church. A law had been passed for the incorporation of religious societies, and, under its provisions, St. John de Crêvecoeur, José Ruiz Silva, James Stewart, and Henry Duffin were incorporated on the 10th of June, 1785 [q. v.], as 'The Trustees of the Roman Catholic Church in the City of New York.' There was some difficulty in obtaining a site, but during the summer Father Whelan, guided, it is said, by Mr. Silva's judgment, bought a lease of five lots on Barclay Street extending to Church. A carpenter's-shop standing on this ground became a temporary church building for the Catholic body on New York Island. In August, Trinity Church, which owned the fee, encouraged the little flock of Catholics by agreeing to sell them the reversion on easy terms, and more than fulfilled the promise."—Shea, Life and Times of the Most Rev. John Carroll (1888), 266–67; Catholic Encycl., XI: 21 (title "New York"). See, further, O 5, 1785.

" Nicholas Ray, of London, in a letter to the corporation of the city, offers "his Services in purchasing the Iron Work and other materials" necessary to repair the ruins wrought by the two great fires that occurred in New York during the war. The common council passes a resolution that thanks be sent him "for his benevolent Intentions," but that "the deranged State of the Corporation Revenues in consequence of the heavy debt contracted by their predecessors in office previous to the late War is such as to prevent their acceptance of his kind offer."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 136. Apr. 30

" The common council directs the chamberlain to advertise for proposals "for sinking & build^g a Pier in the North River opposite the Lots lately sold near the Bear Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 138. Daniel Phoenix, acting for the corporation, advertised on May 23 for bids for "sinking the blocks and building the bridges, to compleat the Bason, near the Corporation Dock, at the North river."—N. Y. Packet, My 23, 1785. Elias Burger offered to build the wharf and bulkhead for £200, and the common council accepted the proposal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 146. See D 28.

" The common council orders that a public pound be kept by Richard Varian at the Bulls Head Tavern in the Out Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 137.

" Wm. Dodge receives £8:8 "for work at the Bridewell fence," and Embree and Shotwell (see F 14, 1789) £119:11:6 "for sundries at the Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 138.

" Anthony Post is paid £260 for repairs to the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 138. This is one of many payments for this purpose at this period, due to its poor condition (see S 22, 1784), as well as its expected occupation by congress (see D 22 and 24, 1784).

May 2 The mayor transmits to the common council Washington's reply to the board's address of Dec. 2, 1784 (q. v.). It is entered in full in the minutes, with the order that the address and answer be published.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 139–40. Washington's letter is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., but remains the property of the city.—See N. Y. H. S. Quart. Bull., I: 38 (Jl, 1917). See also Addresses of the City of N. Y. to Geo. Washington, with his Replies.

5 The announcement is published in New York that Bishop Seabury of Connecticut, "the first personage consecrated for the government of the Episcopal Church in North America," is on his way from London to New London, his residence, after having been consecrated Nov. 14, 1784 (q. v.).—Loudon's N. Y. Packet, My 5, 1785. Regarding the validity of his consecration by the Bishops of Scotland, see ibid., O 31, 1785. The first ordination conducted by him in the state of New York was that of John Lowe, a Virginian, on Nov. 3, in St. George's Church, Hempstead, L. I.—Ibid., N 10, 1785.

" Capt. Andrew Moodie reports to Gov. Clinton the number of pieces of ordnance remaining at Fort Washington, Fort Tryon, the "baveer gate," and Fort George. For facsimile of his returns, see Man. Com. Coun. (1858), opp. p. 480.

11 The "Empress of China" returns from China to New York. She realized a net profit of $30,727, or twenty percent on the capital invested.—Stevens, Progress of N. Y. in a Century, 46. On May 19, Samuel Shaw, the commercial agent for the owners, wrote to Mr. Jay, the minister for foreign affairs, describing the voyage. He referred to this as the "first vessel that has been fitted out by the inhabitants of the United States of America, for essaying a commerce with those of the Empire of China." The ship "is about 360 tons burthen, built in America, and equipped with 43 persons, under the command of John Green, Esq." She sailed from New York, Feb. 22, 1784 (q. v.), and arrived at Canton on Aug. 30, 1784. She left Canton Dec. 27, and returned by way of the Cape of Good Hope to New York, where she arrived May 11, 1785. Mr. Jay laid Mr. Shaw's letter before congress, which expressed "a peculiar satisfaction in the successful issue of that first effort of the citizens of America, to establish a direct trade with China."—N. J. Gaz. (Trenton), S 26, 1785; Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, III: 144–49.

On this voyage, the "Empress of China" brought over three services of table china marked in Canton with the insignia of the Cincinnati; one of these, more elaborately decorated than the others, Mr. Shaw presented to Gen. Washington, and one to Gen. Knox. The third is still in the possession of his descendants.

Richard Henry Lee, writing from New York to James Madison on May 30, said: "The American enterprise has been well markt by a short and successful Voyage made from hence to Canton in China—The Chinese were kind to our people and glad to see a new source of Commerce opened to them from a New People, as they called us—The Europeans there were civil but astonished at 1785 May 11 the rapidity of our movements, especially the English—I fear that our Countrymen will overdo this business—For now there appears every where a Rage for East India Voyages, so that the variety of means may defeat the attainment of the concurrent end—A regulated & useful commerce with that part of the World . . ."—Letters of Richard Henry Lee, II: 366.

12 At the Coffee House in New York the first quarterly meeting of the Society for the Manumission of Slaves is held. Of this society John Jay was the first president, and he wrote much on the subject. —Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, ed. by Henry P. Johnston (N. Y., 1891), III: 185.

" The post-office is removed to No. 8 Wall St.—N. Y. Jour., My 12, 1785. See O 5, 1789.

13 A resolution is passed by Trinity vestry "That the Committees of repairs and Pews be directed to view the South door of S^{t}. Pauls Chappel and report the practicability of shutting up the same, and making in lieu thereof a large elevated Pew with two smaller ones on each side similar to the Governors and the two Pews adjoining, so as to make both sides of the Church uniform. That they likewise report the practicability of Converting the South West Window of the Church into a door for the Gallery Stair case: of altering the pews in the South Gallery: of having an Aile through the middle of the same with square Pews on each side and of lathing and plaistring the lower Belfry and that they report thereon . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Mr. Rutherfurd, of the committee on leases, requests the opinion of Trinity vestry "whether Partition and Vesy [sic] Streets on the Church farm should be laid out at the width of 58 or 65 feet;" he represents "that in the original plan drawn by M^{r} Marschalk the Streets were laid down at 40 feet wide and the Houses built accordingly, that after the great fire of 1776 in which all the houses in both Streets were destroyed: the then Managers of the Church estate determined to make each Street 25 [65?] feet wide which determination this Corporation have since approved of, but that the fence around the burying ground of S^{t} Pauls Church has been placed in such a manner as to make the Streets only 58 feet wide instead of 65 and that graves have been dug and Vaults built contiguous to the fence so as to make the removal inconvenient and disagreeable to many and that in the lower part of the Street the City Surveyor has laid out several lots on a line with the burying ground fence on which several houses have been built and some of them with brick." The vestry, taking these facts into consideration, and reflecting "that the removal of the houses and the burying ground fences would be attended with many inconveniences and perhaps be impracticable," pass a resolution "That this Corporation do recede from their former determination with respect to the width of Partition and Vesy Streets and that the width of said Streets in future be 58 feet each."—Ibid.

16 The name of Loudon's New-York Packet is changed, with the issue of this date, to The New-York Packet.—Early Newspapers, II: 426; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 474.

20 Congress passes its first act relative to the disposal of Western lands.—Winsor, VII: 533, citing a bibliography of source material on this important national question.

23 An advertisement informs the public that Talmage Hall "having taken the elegant House on Haerlem Heights [the Roger Morris house], of Isaac Ledyard, Esq. [see Jl 9, 1784]; for the accommodation of his eastern and northern stages, has been also at a very considerable expence, in furnishing it for the accommodation of Ladies and Gentlemen from town, as well as Gentlemen travellers—He has provided himself with ready and obedient servants, and the best fare the country and town affords.

"Parties from town, and travellers, may be served with Breakfasts, Dinners, Suppers, Relishes, Tea, Punch, &c. at ten minutes notice. He keeps the choicest liquors, and promises that his guests shall have the most prompt attendance. He has provided also genteel lodgings, stabling and pasture.

"The Octagon room is very happily calculated for a turtle party, and his guests shall have for deserts, Peaches, Apricots, Pears, Gooseberries, Nectarines, Cherries, Currants and Strawberries in their seasons.

"The want of a genteel house of entertainment in the neighbourhood of the town, has been a very common complaint; the subscriber has made this as much so, as his money and taste would possibly allow; and humbly hopes for the encouragement of the public."—N. Y. Packet, My 26, 1785. See Mr 13, 1788.

May 30 Joseph Corre announces that at "the Confectionary and New-York Hotel," 52 Smith (William) St., he supplies "anything in the Confectionary way." He also has "genteel rooms" for lodgers. Besides serving "Ice Creams" every day, he deals in pickled oysters, portable soups, etc.—N. Y. Packet, My 30, 1785. A year later, Corre became proprietor of the City Tavern at the present 115 Broadway.

June 1 The work of rebuilding the Wall Street Presbyterian Church is completed at an expense of between $6,000 and $7,000.—Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers (1813), 249. The interior finishing and roof cost £2,000; the cupola, columns, rear and fences cost £500. —Proc. of the Trustees (Session Book).

9 Henry Kennedy announces that he has taken "the well-known Mead House, the sign of the two friendly brothers, late in the occupation of Mrs. Montanye, situated in Great-George's Street, between Murray and Warren streets." He has supplied himself with an abundance of mead and cakes, which "cannot fail to prove inviting to the Fair Sex; who, as a further inducement, will again be pleased to point out to themselves the very eligible and romantic situation of the Gardens."—N. Y. Packet, Je 9, 1785. It was at No. 317 Great George St., near the bridewell.—Ibid., D 26, 1785. John Amory, and later John Kirk, had been innkeepers here after Mrs. Montagnie.—See S 17 and O 22, 1781. See, further, F 6, 1786.

10 An act of incorporation is secured for the "Trustees of the Roman Catholic Church of the City of New York." This was accomplished through the efforts of the French consul, Hector St. John de Crèvecœur. An unexpired lease of lots at the south-east corner of Barclay and Church Sts. was bought from Trinity corporation on which to build a church.—Catholic Encycl., XI: 21 (title "New York"). See also Ap 30 and O 5.

13 A subscription is soon to open for erecting an organ in St. Paul's Church.—N. Y. Packet, Je 13, 1785.

20 A petition of "Isaac Sears of this City Merch^{t}" is read in the common council, "setting forth that he, by certain Indentures of Lease & Release duly made & executed by Thomas Arden & Mary his Wife Dated the 2^{d} & 3^{d} Days of feb^{y} 1770 became & still stands seized in fee simple of the Parts & Shares divided & undivided of the said Thomas Arden in all that certain Piece of Ground situate in the City of New York bounded Westerly in front by the Broad Way Southerly by the Green commonly called the fields Easterly by the Ground belonging to this Corporation & occupied with the Poor House & Northerly by other Ground of the said Corporation of which Piece of Land John Harris the Elder was seized at the time of his Death—That the said Petitioner actually paid for the s^{d} Piece of Ground the Sum of Eighty Pounds . . .; That the Bridewell is erected on Part of the said Ground & the said Petitioner is willing to release the same to this Corporation on their ordering him to be paid the said purchase Money of eighty Pounds with lawful Interest.

"Whereupon it was agreed by the Board to accept of M^{r} Sears's Offer & Ordered that the Clerk prepare a Deed accordingly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 145. The release was delivered Oct. 19, 1785 (q.v.).

" The commissioners of the almshouse present to the common council a plan "for enclosing the Ground commonly called the fields," and it is resolved that they may proceed with the execution of the design.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 144. Such enclosure may be said to mark the beginning of "the Park."—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 548, 560. See also descrip. of Pl. 54-b, I: 416. See, further, Ag 24, 1818.

" The common council having received petitions for leases of the Common Lands, it is ordered that one of the city surveyors lay out the vacant lands belonging to the city, between the Post and Bloomingdale Roads, into lots of about five acres, numbered, and "leaving a middle Road between the said two Roads."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 145; Black, Municipal Ownership of Land, 25–26. See also D 21.

21 There is advertised to be held "in the Garden of the Academy in Broad-street," on June 23, "A most elegant Exhibition Of the Small Italian Shades, Where a variety of Scenes . . . will be exhibited. . . .

"An addition of a Fort, which will answer the salute of several vessels passing by. The engagement of the ships shall last until one of them is entirely dismasted and sunk; after which the Conquerer shall re-enter the harbour, and be saluted by the Fort. The Sea shall be represented in motion.

1785 June 21 "The large Chinese Shades shall exhibit a great variety of scenes of the most pleasing aspect; and in some of them the actors will vault a prodigious height up and down.

"Then will be a grand Illumination, upon Pyramids, to prevent any kind of accident by fire.

"A Grand Band of Music will perform in the Garden, during the whole time; and the Dancing Room opened. . . ."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Je 21, 1785 (N. J. Hist. Soc.)

22 The first convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the state of New York is held in New York City.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 624; Dix, A Hist. of the Parish of Trinity Church, II: 103.

23 The proprietors of the stage-wagons that ply between New York and Albany (see Ap 17) advertise to make the journey in two days, leaving Cape's tavern every Monday and Friday morning. They mention several stopping-places for the run. The fare is reduced from four to three pence per mile "during the continuance of good roads."—N. Y. Packet, Je 23, 1785. This schedule was altered, Aug. 23, to run the stages three times a week; that is, to leave each terminal on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and return Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.—Ibid., Ag 25, 1785. Again, on Oct. 3, for "the ease of the Passengers," the trip from New York to Albany was to be performed in three days, leaving Monday and Thursday; and the four-cent-per-mile charge, "agreeable to Act of Assembly," was restored.—Ibid., O 13, 1785.

" Elizabeth Holt resigns the proprietorship of The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser to Eleazer Oswald (see Mr 3) and Andrew Brown. The new publishers change the name of the paper to The New-York Journal, or the Weekly Register.—Early Newspapers, II: 424; Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 448. See Ja 18, 1787.

28 Notice is published that, after July 1, the "tea-water men" will supply water at "six-pence per hhd."—N. Y. Gazetteer, Je 28, 1785 (in N. J. H. S.).

July 6 The standard of the American dollar (to contain 375 64/100 grains of silver) is established as the unit of United States currency.—Winsor, VII: 70. For a history of coins and currency in New York, see Wilson's Mem. Hist., IV, chap. 10; Crosby, Early Coins of Am. (1875), 289. See also Chronology, IV: 972–73.

11 The French church steeple is struck by lightning.—N. Y. Packet, Jl 14, 1785; M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 152.

13 It is ordered by the common council that Catharine Slip be filled up from the middle of Cherry St. to the bulkhead at the public expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 152.

19 Edward Meeks submits a bill to Trinity corporation amounting to £83:19:4, for the cost of an iron fence which he has set up around the churchyard. The items include "Iron Bars and pikes for fifty four pannel;" also "52 Tulips."—From the original bill in N. Y. H. S.

20 Christopher Colles, in a petition to the common council, urges prompt settlement of demands which he has made upon the board, "on account of a matter which he flatters himself will be of considerable importance to the public in general, & to the City in particular, as well as private advantage to himself." He states "that his distresses are of such a poignant nature, as compel him to request some, ('tho small,) yet present assistance."—From original petition (in metal file No. 8, in city clerk's record-room), endorsed "read & filed 10th Augt 1785 £100 to be advanced to Mr Colles;" M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 160. See N 23.

21 The president of congress, at the request of that body, having written on July 20 to the mayor that the debates of congress are frequently interrupted by the passing of carriages, and that congress desires to order that chains be provided for preventing such interruptions during their daily sessions, the common council expresses its willingness that chains be drawn across the streets from the north-east, south-east, and south-west corners of the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 157; Letters of Richard Henry Lee, II: 376.

27 The commissioners of forfeiture, on attainder of James De Lancey, sell his land between 57th and 70th Sts., 6th Ave. and Hudson River, to John Somerindyke.—Book of Forfeited Estates, 78. This property became known as the Somerindyke Farm. Cf. descrip. of Pl. 36-b, I: 279. See also Ag 16, 1784.

Aug. 1 The common council orders that the vacant ground back of the barracks be used for the burial of the dead from the almshouse and bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 158.

2 Morgan Lewis purchases "Mount Pitt" from the commissioners of forfeiture, the original owner, Thomas Jones, having been attainted.—Liber Deeds, XLIII: 36. Lewis advertised it for sale on Feb. 24, 1786 (q. v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 62, I: 439; L. M. R. K., III: 951; and 1767. Aug. 2

An item of New York news states: "A Correspondent, says he has hopes, to flatter himself and all the friends of the Drama, that we shall once more have the benefit of that pleasing amusement in this city, and that foreigners of distinction and others may no longer complain of our want of public entertainment; he is surprized at the insolence of the Tory gentry, who it seems in order to ingratiate themselves with some of the citizens are using their influence, however inconsiderable it may be, to prevent any performances of that kind, but it is to be hoped, that those gentlemen, who have shared all the perils of the war, and braved danger in its most ghastly forms, will not by the intrigues of those designing and insignificant characters be deprived of partaking of the enjoyments which that innocent and rational amusement affords."—Penn. Jour., Ag 13, 1785. See Ag 12. 10

A description of the frequenters of the Battery walk, on a Sunday evening, is published.—N. Y. Jour., Ag 11, 1785. 11

The John Street Theatre is opened "by Messieurs Hallam and Allen, after a long absence from a country, where former residence and attachment have entitled them to the distinction of citizenship. The entertainment of the evening, which received unbounded bursts of applause from a most polite and numerous assembly of both sexes, was an admirable collection of moral characters, happily selected (by the judicious taste of the managers) from the most accomplished works that Europe has produced, and were displayed in a manner that bestowed the highest honour on the performers; and to the reflecting mind gave the finest lessons of instruction, pleasingly blended with amusement."—Penn. Jour., Ag 17, 1785. The entertainments thus begun, announced as a course of lectures commencing with a prologue and ending with a pantomime, were given by only a small part of the American Company.—Ireland, Recs. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 65, where the date of reopening is given erroneously as Aug. 24. Having been encouraged by the public, the regularly installed managers, Hallam and Henry, brought the main body of their performers to New York in the autumn and began a season of legitimate drama on Nov. 21, 1785 (q. v.). See also Ag 24 and S 20. 12

"Veritas," in a letter to the press, observes "that it is a general complaint that in this great city and its environs there is not any spot where its inhabitants can take exercise for health and amusement. . . . The size and consequence that this town must one day arrive at, ought strongly to impress the necessity of attending to this object. In this view the Battery naturally presents itself as a subject capable of vast improvement; were the margin of this ground laid out with judgment, planted with a row of trees, and furnished with seats, from whence we could admire the beauties of one of the finest harbours of the world. There is also another space of ground, which calls loudly for the hand of improvement—now a public nuisance, from which the inhabitants are infested during the summer season, with continual clouds of stinking dust. The ground I mean is the Fields.—This place laid out with judgment and taste, would become a blessing to the inhabitants of New York, and an ornament to the city." He describes the methods in vogue in Great Britain and Ireland for obtaining plans for public improvements. —N. Y. Packet, Ag 15, 1785. 15

The city treasurer, Daniel Phoenix, having submitted a "Representation" relative to an allowance for his services, the common council orders "that five Per Cent be allowed the Treasurer, for the whole time of his being in Office, in full Compensation for his ordinary as well as extraordinary Services relative to the ordinary Revenues of this Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 163–64. The original "Representation," thus briefly alluded to in the minutes, is a review of "what was formerly the practice with respect to the County business." It states: 17

"The Chamberlain had Under his Direction the Care and Collection of the Corporation Revenues only. The Taxes were paid into the Hands of the Church wardens who were Chosen Annually by the freeholders, and were properly Church officers, appointed in Consequence of an Act of Assembly Granting a Support to the Ministry in this City. The whole of the Taxes were paid into their Hands, and they had the Laying out of the money appropriated to the Support of the Poor House, which was the most considerable part of the Tax.—The Water & Lamps & Roads was paid into the 1785 Aug. 17 Hands of the City Treasurer by those Gentlemen. No Specific Salary or Commission was Assigned them for this Business, they derived their Emolument from the profits made on the Supplies, and Surely no person Can say they derived no benefit from their appointment. This is not Consistent with reason, nor can it be supposed That They Should Devote so considerable a part of their time to the public Gratis. I can Assure the Board that those Gentlemen Considered the Business as Profitable and worth their Attention for I can Speak with Confidence, as I have the Information from the first Hand—even the Gentlemen themselves—that it was worth between 3 & 400 pounds, and I believe it may be Concluded that they did not mention the Extent of their profits. The money for Watch & Lamps was paid out of the City Treasury by an order of Common Council, and on this the Treasurer had a Commission. I am well informed from a Gent. who was a Member of the Board in M^r^ Crugers day That he was allowed 5 pc^t^ on that money for which I could produce the Testimony of Gent. of unexceptionable Character.

"At present all public Monies are paid into the City Treasury, and are Subject to the order of Com Council. The Business of this office is Increased beyond any former time, and the Disorderd State of the Corporation affairs, on the Evacuation of this City, has renderd it Still more Arduous, So that the person Executing this office Must of Necessity devote a Very Considerable part of his time to the public in order to do Justice to his appointment. The amo[unt] of Corporation Revenue in a Common Year is about £2800. Of this it may be Supposed to fall Short by Remissions & Losses £150, Which will reduce it to £2650. This Sum at 5 pc^t^ is £132–10– for which a Sett of Books are to be Kept—Accounts to the amount of near 450 to be drawn out and the amount of revenue above mentioned to be Collected from as many different persons,—An allowance Scarcely Sufficient to Compensate a Clerk.

"Besides this there is the business of the Taxes—The Accounts are to be Kept with the Collectors of the different wards & Districts —Settlements to be made under the Inspection of a Committee of this Board—and the Sums appropriated to be Carried to the Credit of Each Respective Account, can it be in reason Supposed that all this Business can be done without an allowance, Surely not.

"The office of Treasurer is an appointment of Great Trust and under its present Circumstances rendered more Important. It has been the practice of the Corporation to appoint persons of Respectability & Credit, who only can Give Such Security as will Justify the appointment, but is it worth the attention of any person to undertake all this Business for so Inconsiderable a Sum As the Allowance for Corporation business is So Small it remains with the Board to make Such allowance out of the Publick monies as Will make it worth the Labour and Attention it requires. It appears from an Act of Assembly which has been mentioned that an allowance was formerly made of 6^d^ in the pound to County Treasurers, and it Can be proved that John H Cruger was allowed 5 pc^t^ on the Publick monies paid into his hands by the Church wardens—Ad to this That So Long Ago as the time of Comt [Comptroller] Depeyster it appears from the old Books that he was allowed the Same Sum of 5 pc^t^ on the Taxes of this City—

"Can any Gent^n^ then Consider it Unreasonable that an Adequate Compensation Should be made for those Services at the present day—The board have Thought it Necessary to advance the price of Cartmen and others in their Laws for regulating the prices of their Services, and does not the Circumstances that Induced them to make those advances in their Case, Exist with respect to the Treasurer." He asks, in closing, an allowance "of 2 pc^t^."—From the original MS., in city clerk's record-room.

" The "old Magazine in the Fort," which measures 28 by 48 feet, is found to be "perfectly safe & convenient & that by a little airing will be very Dry."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), I: 162. It is evidently intended for temporary use while the new one at "Inchlam Bergh" is being built.—See ibid., I: 153, 159.

24 An item of New York news reads: "On Friday last [Ag 19] Messrs Hallam and Allen, the gentlemen who for some time past have entertained the town with their agreeable, humourous, and moral lectures [see Ag 12] paid into the hands of the commissioners of the Alms-House, One Hundred Dollars towards the maintenance and support of its indigent inhabitants. When the talents and labours of the ingenious are employed, as well to reform the manners as to the benevolent purpose of softening the rigors of misfortune, and feeding the poor and needy, they certainly deserve not only encouragement, but applause."—Penn. Jour., Ag 27, 1785. For the attitude of the common council toward such donations, see O 14. Aug. 24

